Personal.

Florence Mackenzie.—The address is—Hon. Sec., Central Branch Sunbeam Mission, Eastwood, Weston-super-Mare. Helen C. Gregory.—The new quarter began at No. 92. Am glad you are starting again. Dora Marples.—Try and do the right number of questions next week; perhaps they will not be so difficult. Minnie Giddings.—You may continue till you are twenty. Nina Coote.—It was intended for you, but the paper was signed Edith in pencil at the end, and there was no signature besides. Eva Browne.—Very glad you are joining. You did not finish answering the first question. Alice E. Crang, Sarah Evans, Violet Combes, Mary Beck.—Very glad you are joining the Searcher. Answers must reach me not later than the first post Thursday. Harold Cheesman.—I quite understand why you have to give up, and wish you every success in your examination. Perhaps another time you will be able to join again. Philip Unsworth.—Yes, you must do the questions set for your age. If you take extra care in your writing perhaps you will get a star. Agnes Jones.—It was because there were so many papers done better than yours. Your writing is not quite so good as it might be. Emily Sloan.—You are eligible until you are twenty years of age.

Juvenile Offenders.

We receive these into our Boys' Homes at an average rate of 500 annually, although we have no endowment or Government grant, and depend upon the gifts of the charitable public. We seek to eradicate evil inclinations, and to lead these young wrong-doers into paths of virtue and honesty. We know that already many lads whose influence was decidedly bad have now become influential for good.

There is on the part of judges and magistrates a growing tendency to mingle mercy with justice, and to extend to first offenders a chance to retrieve the past. The work of reclaiming the young offender is naturally not easy, and would not be, even if we had ample funds at our disposal. We need—and that immediately—means with which to feed, clothe, and shelter young lads who, unaided, must drift into a criminal career, and who, if dealt with in time, can become good and useful men.

West Marylebone Mission.—The Lisson Grove district has been described as "the Whitechapel of the West End," and it is one of the poorest and most irreligious districts to be met with in London. During the last few months there has been an awful increase of drunkenness, there being no less than seventy-one cases of "drunk and disorderly" at Marylebone Police-court in one morning alone about a week ago. For over fourteen years the workers of this mission have been seeking to care for these people by spiritual and temporal efforts, with many tokens of the Divine favour. But there are hundreds of people whom we have never seen in our hall, and who have never been seen in any other place of worship. We have now arranged for a band of voluntary Christian workers to visit from "house to house" and room to room through the entire district, if possible, every week, with illustrated Gospel books and papers. To give this campaign a good start we are hoping that the Lord's stewards will help us by sending at least £100 at once, to enable us to purchase literature and provide free meals.—James Sprunt, Superintendent, Dauntless Hall, Lisson Grove, N.W.

Women Workers in Conference.

The National Union of Women Workers has held its annual conference at Croydon during the past week. Amongst the most pronounced leaders have been Mrs. Temple and Mrs. Creighton, the wives of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London. These ladies spoke happily at the opening meeting on Tuesday week. Mrs. Francis Rye, in a paper on "The Early Training of Children under the Poor Law," protested vigorously against shutting crowds of children in huge buildings, and insisted on the evils of the system. Other well-known lady workers took similar ground. At the afternoon sitting "The Medical Aspect of Temperance" and "The Methods of Attacking Temperance" were discussed, under the presidency of Lady Battersea, the speakers including Lady Biddulph, the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke, and Mrs. H. J. Wilson.

On the second day Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, read a paper on "The Work of Lady Visitors in Long-Sentence Prisons." Having observed that all women sentenced to penal servitude became inmates of Her Majesty's prison at Aylesbury, which was, strictly speaking, the only long-sentence female prison in this country, she said that the governor, lady matron, and chaplain had in their several capacities assisted her to the utmost of their power, but assistance on discharge must be undertaken from without to be effectual. The recognition of individuality was perhaps the greatest relief that could be offered to the convict. The sound of the Christian name—perhaps long unheard—the inquiry for husband or children, letters read and discussed, plans for the future forecast, all those were tokens of a new and unexpected sympathy. Again, the most important point in connection with prison visiting was the question of assistance on discharge. Prisoners must, if left to shift for themselves, drift back into evil, for without a character respectable employment was hopeless, and the struggle to obtain it, if entered upon, was soon abandoned. The visitation of convict prisons, though quiet and unproductive as compared with some other spheres of labour, should nevertheless be carefully organised and permanently established as a necessary branch of Christian work.

A long discussion ensued, in which Miss E. Bartlett, Miss Townsend, Lady Vincent, Lady Battersea, and Mrs. C. H. Mallett took part. The afternoon sitting was devoted to the consideration of "The Better Organisation of the Nursing Profession."

At the Friday conference Mrs. Fawcett moved a resolution on impurity in the British Army in India, supporting it in a vigorous speech. This gave rise to an animated conversation, and finally the resolution was agreed to. A discussion followed on a proposal that the meetings should no longer be opened with prayer, but it was pointed out that, while all who work for others are welcome, the Union was formed on a religious basis, the proposal was therefore lost.

Inns of Court Mission.

The Lord Chancellor opened last week the Inns of Court Mission Institute for Working Men and Boys, 45 and 46, Drury-lane, W.C. The institute is intended to form the headquarters of the Inns of Court Mission, which has been established by certain judges of the High Court and leaders of the Bar, and which will work on the plan of the Oxford Settlement at Bethnal Green. Mr. Justice Bruce is the chairman of the committee, and Rev. H. G. D. Latham has been appointed the warden. There are at present about 100 members of the institute, which is entirely unsectarian.

Mr. Justice Bruce said the object of the Mission was to enable barristers and law students to make the acquaintance of the large number of men and boys who were living and working in the immediate neighbourhood of the Inns of Court and in some way to render their lives happier and brighter.

The Lord Chancellor, who was accorded a warm welcome on rising to declare the institute open, said that without reference to politics or creed they should recognise the fact that each was responsible, not only for his own life, but for the lives of those among whom he was cast. He had no doubt that this Mission would do much to bring about this result, and give incalculable advantages to the working-men for whose benefit it had been established.

Girls' Guild of Good Life.

On Tuesday week Hoxton Hall, the centre of this useful society, was crowded on the occasion of its twelfth annual meeting and prize distribution. The Guild was formed in 1885, and has now upon its books 427 members who are over thirteen years of age and total abstainers. Three thousand two hundred and twenty-one girls have passed through the Guild during its existence, and many have started homes of their own with much better ideas of domestic economy and how to make their husbands comfortable than if they had not belonged to the Guild, which is a veritable manufactory of "good wives for working men." To keep the numerous classes going, there is a body of some seventy workers, of whom quite thirty have been trained as members of the Guild, and are now helping their younger sisters as they themselves have been helped. The classes cover all the varied aspects of domestic requirement and physical, moral and mental development, and have produced a marked improvement in the dress, manners, speech, and ideas of the members who have maintained their attendance. An extensive visitation system exists, and during last season 1,674 visits were paid by the registrar and visiting committee.

Mr. Frederick Sherlock, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fyfe Stewart, Mrs. E. W. Brooks, and other friends took part at the annual meeting in addresses and the distribution of prizes to the girls, the Mandoline Band, the "Social Circle" Choir, and the gymnastic class successfully illustrating their particular excellencies. The receipts for the year have been £116, which nearly cover the expenditure. Information regarding this useful work may be had of Mrs. J. T. Rae, 17, Darenth-road, Stamford Hill, N., who will also gladly welcome subscriptions.

Friendless and Fallen.

Much encouragement has accompanied this work of mercy among young women and girls, and recently the results of the labours of former years in several instances have come to light. One forms a remarkable instance of reclamation and conversion, which, if told in its fulness, could not fail to awaken thanksgiving to the God of all grace for the wonderful display of his power in "saving to the uttermost." A quarter of a century has elapsed since this young woman was first admitted to one of the Homes, and although it has been reserved for other workers in a distant land to reap the fruits, yet the executive of this Institution, who were the first to receive her, and by whom she was instructed and watched over for many years, rejoice that their share of the labour has not been in vain in the Lord.

Another instance is that of a young woman who, seven or eight years ago, was in one of the training homes. She has been in service ever since she was placed out, and has recently happily married. Both she and her husband are members of the same Christian church, and are workers together in the Christian Endeavour movement. It would not be difficult to multiply instances of this kind, with varying circumstances, if space allowed.

Like most societies, these Homes for the Friendless and Fallen have experienced a falling off of support during this year, and especially during the autumn months, when contributors were away. The Society has also had to undertake the rebuilding of one of its laundries on account of the dangerous condition of the old premises. Those who desire further particulars of the work should apply to the secretary, Mr. William J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, N.W.

Billingsgate Christian Mission.—Friends of the excellent work carried on among the men employed in Billingsgate Market will find much to interest them in the nineteenth annual report. The debt on the building is being extinguished by degrees, but on this head there will not be contentment until the incubus is altogether lifted. In addition to the special work of the Mission, there are some general efforts, including a Sunday evening service for housekeepers and residents in the neighbourhood. The hall is also used for meetings in connection with the Christian Police Association and the Postal Telegraph Christian Association. Copies of the report may be had from the hon. sec. of the Mission, Mr. Alfred Walters, 6, The Corridor, Billingsgate Market, E.C.

The Evangelistic Field.

OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.

THE large number of members of the Open-air Mission, who assembled at the autumnal gathering of the association at Exeter Hall last week, must have been encouraging to all who are interested in the work. Prebendary Webb-Peploe gave his address on Luke v. 5: "At thy word I will let down the net." It was shown that there is no such honour as those attending being a slave to Christ, by being about the Lord's business. As preachers they shared that business with their Lord. A man who possesses the Gospel and does not give it out is a thief. At the same time it is not always easy to do this; and a man may pass a hard judgment on himself or on others.

The speaker went on to describe the gentleness of the methods which Christ adopted while preparing his followers to work. They were not taken into full employment all at once. There were many steps by which the disciples progressed to become Christ's servants. The first word is, "Come and see." Many who come to open-air services are only listeners; it is needful to be tender with such. They must all be ready to catch men when they are wrong. Christ was always tender in his treatment of people. When the Lord gave gifts to men they were "the unsearchable riches of Christ." The opening of Luke v. showed the turning-point—the deep experience of personal failure. Peter was the first man to fall at Christ's feet. They had to become conscious of indwelling sin and to realise the perfect Christ. They must be content to let the Lord use them as He could use the weakest instruments.

Mr. Webb-Peploe gave some personal experiences. When he began his ministry in Herefordshire he thought what was done would have to be done by the power of preaching, but two of his first converts taught him better. In the case of one old woman it was a verse from a psalm which carried conviction, and in the case of another the reading of "Rock of Ages." He learned a useful lesson. Let them give their best to Christ, live a real life, and they would have the crown of life and glory.

The need of open-air preaching was never more apparent than now, and the committee of the Mission ask for increased support. At Epsom a member of a gang of housebreakers was convicted of sin, and on his telling his "pals" what had occurred they fled from the town, and the family of a house they had planned to rob missed their visit. In another case a man who had come to interrupt a service was also reached, and became quite a changed character.

VILLAGE MISSIONS.

The spiritual condition of the villages, and the way in which the Gospel may best be made known in rural districts, was referred to on Monday by Mr. J. E. Taylor, of the Bucks Evangelistic Mission, at the Central Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street. This county mission, which has been so greatly used of God in Buckinghamshire, is now holding an organised and special two-hundred-days' Gospel campaign in various towns and villages. The people walk miles to hear the Word. God has been giving great blessing, and in some cases whole families have been converted. Many have been led, by means of house-to-house visitation, to attend these meetings who have scarcely ever heard a clear Gospel before, and it is wonderful to see how often such people break down at first hearing of the story of Divine grace.

Among the most effective agencies in this village evangelisation has been the distribution from door to door of Our Village Evangelist, a little monthly issued by the Mission, containing Gospel papers, and, in addition, articles by Bishop Ryle, which have proved of great service in reaching those who are blinded by false teaching. Many in the villages are wholly ignorant of and indifferent to spiritual things. Others who take some thought as to religion are frequently ensnared by High Church ideas. Hence the importance of the distribution in the villages of clear testimony, from one likely to be accepted by "church people," on fundamental truths. While the dissemination of the Gospel among the unsaved, that men may be won to Christ, is the grand object sought after, barriers have often to be removed, and erroneous ritualistic teaching is not seldom the greatest of all hindrances. It would be well that Christian workers should bear this in mind.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Many hearts are overflowing with praise to God for the wave of blessing experienced in Liverpool through the labours of Mr. Charles Inglis during the past fortnight. God had greatly used his servant on the south side of the city, and hearts were filled with expectancy, but everybody has been surprised to see the crowds coming to Wesley Hall night after night, especially when the city is busy with municipal and other elections. The work seems to have been very deep; scores of people have left their pews without being personally invited, and have gone into the inquiry-room and decided for Christ. Many men have been brought to a decision, including a number of young men and lads. Some of the scenes in the inquiry-room will not be forgotten. One young man, who was under the deepest conviction, said, "I cannot be saved unless I give up these bad books," and taking some out of his pocket he threw them away, and accepted Christ. A woman who had been completely hardened, after listening to the Truth for twenty years, was completely broken up, and so wrought upon by the Spirit of God that she cried aloud for the Lord to save her. A man who had been a great drunkard, and who had not attended a place of worship for years, got saved, and already there is a wonderful transformation in his home.

Mr. Henry S. Smith, who has been connected with the Evangelisation Society for the last ten years, and is at present engaged in a three weeks' mission at Vine-street Mission Church, Manchester, sails on Saturday on a visit to America. He hopes to conduct a series of missions, beginning with a united mission in Garfield, N.J.

Mr. Clegg has conducted a three weeks' mission at the Free Church, Marazion, Cornwall, and many have come out boldly for pardon.

A successful mission has been conducted by Mr. Newton Jones at Upton Chapel, Lambeth-road, S.E. The children's meetings were well attended, and were much enjoyed by both teachers and scholars. The meetings for senior scholars and adults were equally successful. Many expressed their anxiety to find the way of salvation, and teachers and workers have been much cheered and encouraged.

Mr. Rowland Edwards has concluded a fortnight's special mission in Dingwall. Many were awakened and several professed conversion. Christians have been greatly edified and encouraged.

A Free Church Campaign.

[By Our Own Representative.]

ON Sunday last was inaugurated the season of special services in which the Free Churches of Bristol are uniting. This anxiety on the part of a large section of the Church of Christ to bring the Gospel before the masses is one which we should like to see emulated in many other cities and towns. Among the objections and criticisms hurled by an ungodly world against professing Christians stands foremost the charge of division and mutual jealousy. A united front, such as the Bristol churches are showing, is a forcible answer which must be heard, an influence that will be felt, whose effect in the near future cannot but be seen.

No fewer than sixty-eight churches of ten denominations are contributing their forces to the movement, which aims primarily at deepening the spiritual life of their own congregations, and through them at reaching the careless throngs for whom the Gospel has but little attraction, and in whose lives Christ has no place. The speakers are the ministers themselves, aided by such members of their congregations as are suited to the work of proclaiming the "good news." Every day this week, except Saturday, are held an early prayer (8.30 a.m.), Bible reading (11.30), "half-hour" for men and women in business (1.30 p.m.), and an evangelistic service (8).

The city is divided into districts, or centres, in each of which two or three of the largest chapels are set apart, the ministers co-operating with heartiness the goodwill born of earnest purpose to extend the kingdom of God in the hearts of men.

The services I attended on Sunday were at Redland-park and Highbury, of which Revs. Urijah and Arnold Thomas are respectively the pastors. In the former Mr. George Clarke pressed home the privileges of a mission, and its attendant responsibilities, in practical lessons suggested by Deut. xxxii.; at the latter Mr. Thomas chose as his subject the orceful text, "What shall it profit a man if he gain he whole world and lose his own soul?" "A rame without a picture" was his illustration of the olly of the man who devotes all his attention to the development of the lower nature, and ignores the higher instincts of spiritual life.

The whole movement has been preceded and is accompanied by earnest prayer, and herein lies its strength. There are many of our readers whom weak health debars from active service; let them join in supplication for the meetings being held, up to and including Monday next, that a great outpouring of blessing may come upon this effort to win souls for Christ.

Requests for Prayer.

For a three weeks' mission at the Bible Christian Chapel, St. Just, Penzance, commencing Nov. 14.

For a mission at Teston by Rev. H. H. Dibben, rector of Brierley Hill, Staffordshire, Nov. 20-30.

For special services to be held (D.V.) in Gilford Hall, Sandymont, near Dublin, by Rev. Newman Hall.

For a united mission at the Town Hall, Uxbridge, to be held by Rev. G. M. Smith, from Nov. 22-29.

For an eleven days' mission in Gallatown, Kirkcaldy, N.B., by Mr. John Climie, commencing November 14.

For special services for young people in Dalston Congregational Church, conducted by Mr. Josiah Spiers, Nov. 15-26.

For a four days' mission to be held at St. Thomas' Church, Edinburgh, by Rev. C. Musgrave Brown, from November 20 to 24.

That the Lord may give wisdom to those in command of the forces in India, and for peace to be soon restored on a firm basis; and that the Gospel may be very soon preached all over India.

United prayer is requested for the Divine blessing upon Rev. John McNeill's London Mission, January to April or May, 1898, that the hearts of Christians may be drawn out in stronger desire for the manifested unity of the Lord's people and for greater power in seeking the conversion of the unsaved; that the preacher may speak in the power of the Holy Ghost; and that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be magnified.

For blessing on missions, amongst others, now being taken by agents of the Evangelisation Society, in—

Lound, Alexander Clark; Newton Heath, J. Whiting; Blofield, F. Tarrant; Paddock Wood, J. H. Cooke; Handsworth, H. Collins; Coventry, W. Taylor; Liversedge, F. Holmes; Edinburgh, T. Canning; Wick, H. Church Parochial Mission Society. — The following Missions have been arranged for November. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers. Rev. W. Hay-Aitken, Nov. 13-29, Kings Langley, Herts; Rev. Norman Bennet, Nov. 15-25, Drumsa; Rev. W. St. Hill Bourne, Nov. 6-16, Rudstone, near Bridlington; Rev. W. Bryan Brown, Nov. 6-16, Marton, Blackpool; Nov. 20-29, Clarence Memorial, Llandudno; Rev. S. R. Gambie. Nov. 6-15, St. Aldate's, Gloucester; Rev. T. E. Cleworth, Nov. 21-28, St. Vincent's, Edinburgh; Rev. J. P. Cushing, Nov. 6-15, St. James's, Gloucester; Nov. 20-29, All Saints', Belfast.

Praise.

For the very blessed work now going on at the Wesleyan Church, Sithney, Helston.

For definite blessing on special services, conducted by Mr. Y. H. Roberts, of the Evangelisation Society, in the Mission Room, Hazelbury, Plucknett.

The Golden Rule, the organ of the Y.P.S.C.E. in America, is about to change its name, and will in future be known as The Christian Endeavour World.

Coastguard Book and Letter Mission.—Having undertaken the oversight of the above Mission, I should be glad if ladies or gentlemen who are sending packets and letters to men throughout England and Scotland will kindly let me know whether on the whole they are able to keep in touch with the men whose names they have on their lists? Also if any have withdrawn from the work without giving notice? Some fresh workers are greatly needed to send monthly packets of books, etc. Anyone willing to do this may communicate with me.

Miss M. A. Gripper.

Obituary.

MR. CHARLES J. LEAF.

By the death on Thursday last, at the age of seventy-four, of Mr. Charles John Leaf, the temperance cause has lost a faithful ally and a liberal supporter. He became an abstainer at Streatham about thirty-eight years ago, chiefly through the influence and example of Rev. Stenton Eardley and Mr. Samuel Bowly; and his two surviving sisters, well known for their benevolent efforts at Streatham, Norwood, and Eastbourne, who became abstainers about the same time, have never wavered in their attachment to the cause. On the suggestion of Mr. Leaf, the National Temperance League initiated in 1861 a special effort to reach young men in City warehouses and offices, the movement being inaugurated by a great meeting in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House. That meeting led to far-reaching results, and it is interesting to note that a similar gathering, with the same specific object in view, was held in the Guildhall only a few hours after Mr. Leaf had passed away.

MR. JOHN R. HALL, NEWPORT.

This honoured worker fell asleep in Jesus on the 28th ult., at Newport, Mon., at the age of seventy-four years. Born in Glasgow, he was trained by godly parents, and early made a profession of being a Christian, but, as he often said, like many others without knowing the reality of conversion to God. He was afterwards brought to real faith in Christ, and sought earnestly to serve the Lord in connection with the Congregational Chapel at Jamaica-row, London. Later on he went to Newport, where he was in business as a ship-broker. In 1871, during the visit of the late Rev. Robert Aitken, of Pendeen, to Newport, when God was pleased graciously to do a mighty work amongst saints and sinners, his spiritual life was intensely quickened. Such were the fresh unfoldings of Christ to his soul that he shortly afterwards left business and gave himself entirely to the Lord's work.

Leaving Newport, where he had already been greatly used of God in the salvation of souls, he worked with the late Dr. Donald Fraser in the West of London. Afterwards, going to Stratford, he settled down to what he had always looked upon as the work which God most greatly blessed in his hands. There he became a centre of much blessing, and the Saturday night meeting at his house was a scene of many manifestations of the Spirit to saved and unsaved.

In the year 1885 he returned to Newport, and took up work amongst the young in connection with the Y.M. and Y.W.C.A.'s, and he gathered around him a band of young people whom he loved to designate as "Daniel's Band." He also did a deep spiritual work amongst the policemen of the town and district, having a Bible class once a week with them, and God used him to the salvation of many in the force. He was a man of one Book and one aim, and his special usefulness lay in his aptitude for personal dealing with souls, and when once he was brought closely in contact with any person he never so long as it was practicable lost touch with such an one.

His influence was world-wide, and he endeavoured to keep up a correspondence with all to whom the Lord had in any way used him. He knew neither sect nor party in the Church of God, but loved and endeavoured to serve all "them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." He was essentially an under shepherd who fed the Church of God, and it may truly be said of him that he has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, he kept the faith, and he has entered into his reward.

Our Soldiers and Temperance.

A soldier says, in a private letter from Pietermaritzburg: "Our regiment is under canvas here on the side of a desolate mountain, with only field-service scale of canvas (which means just half enough), and things are not at all comfortable. We have no place for a temperance hall, and a lot of our 'fair weather' teetotalers have fallen off. But still we have a good number who have held out.

"The canteen is the only place that has any attraction here, and of course the men crowd into it; and this is not to be wondered at, as they have no other retreat. Ten men sleep in one little tent, 18ft. by 12ft., and no light after the sun goes down, nothing but two blankets and the red dusty ground; whereas if they go into the town they have the same kind of public-houses as at home. So it is not so bad still to have over thirty members."

Letters to the Editor.

CYCLING ON SUNDAY.

Dear Sir,—The pressing importance of this question to so many of your readers demands, I think, something more than what is said upon it in your current issue. Many of us, while heartily endorsing all that Dr. Clark puts forth, have no qualms about using our bicycles on Sunday when we are able thereby to avoid employing others to transport us where duty calls us, or to economise time and strength by using them where we would otherwise feel it right to go on foot. I think a Christian cyclist, on duty bent, should on Sunday wear his or her Sunday clothes. This would often obviate a wrong judgment.

The definite opinion given by Dr. Clark refers only to cycling for pleasure on Sunday, and I feel entirely with him that under ordinary circumstances such a practice would hardly be consistent with the ideal set before us of being "in the Spirit on the Lord's Day," and of devoting it entirely to rest and special service for Him.

But the second question in the minds of so many is of still greater moment, Will it tend to lead others astray? Until the expediency and lawfulness of cycling on Sundays under certain circumstances becomes generally recognised, as it is rapidly becoming recognised, there may be some fear of its having this effect, but only in the minds of those who have decided that cycling on Sundays is, under any circumstances, wrong. I, myself, have been chided for carrying a walking-stick and not an umbrella to church on Sundays, "because it looked like going for a walk." Such manifestly erroneous ideas must in time give way, and Christians at least should learn not to condemn from appearances only.—Yours faithfully,

Budgett Meakin.

GOVERNMENT AND MORALS.

Dear Sir,—I am devoutly thankful that you are keeping the subject of the evil counsels which have prevailed in India before your readers. The young and delicate daughters of our land are allowed freely to become contaminated by terrible representations of evil at the play and in books which are not withheld from them, and enervating and most hurtful glamour is often thrown over those sins which make of no effect the most sacred ties of our earthly life.

But when it comes to exposing evils which a "Christian" Government is promoting, to the terrible injury of the flower of our young manhood, then everything must be covered up that can offend modesty or a refined taste. But, to quote from the Daily News, "It is sometimes necessary to discuss in public matters which every decent man would gladly put out of sight if he could."

Some few years ago a young man went to India from a bright English home because he could not settle to anything but a soldier's life. Pure in thought and life, it was with infinite surprise and horror that he found not merely snares for his feet, but snares carefully arranged and provided for him by his own Government. Thank God he came back unscathed to pour into a mother's ear the dreadful knowledge which had been opened up to him.

Will not the Christian mothers of England arise from their sleep and with one heart and mind refuse consent to their sons going into the Army? A young man went into the American Army during the struggle between the North and South. He was sent home wounded. His mother asked if he would return to the Army if he recovered? He replied, "No; I would willingly give my body for my country, but I cannot sacrifice my soul."

CHRIST AND RITUALISM.

Dear Sir,—From your Notes and Comments in a recent issue I gather that the Bishop of Salisbury in a recent sermon, referring to our Lord's ministry in the Temple and the Synagogue, has said, "That He took part in both seems to me to be a justification for having two kinds of service in the Christian Church, one with more of ritual and sacrament, the other simpler and sacerdotal."

Does the bishop mean to imply that our Lord took any part whatever in the Temple ritual? Such an idea is foreign to Holy Scripture. Jesus Christ was of the seed of David, of the tribe of Judah, "of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood," "from which tribe no man hath given attendance at the altar." (Hebrews vii. 14, 13.). Moreover, He never entered the Temple, by which we mean the Holy place and the Holy of Holies; for again we read, "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands" (Heb. ix. 24); and, as a matter of course, He would have been stoned to death for intruding where none but the descendants of Aaron were allowed to minister. And when we read of his having gone up to the Temple and taught, or of his driving the buyers and sellers out of the Temple, we are compelled to believe He went no further than the Temple courts, where all Jewish worshippers had free access. His ministry, whether in the Temple courts or in the synagogue, had nothing to do with ritual.

Any argument, therefore, for sacerdotalism or sacramentarianism, based upon the vain imagination that our blessed Lord took part in the Temple ritual falls to pieces in view of the Scriptures I have quoted. Those of us who believe that our Lord is the completion of all Jewish type and ceremony, and that the thought of sacrificial priesthood in this age is an insult to his sufficiency and supremacy, rejoice that now we "have a High Priest over the house of God" (Heb. x. 21), "a great High Priest, that is passed into the heavens" (Heb. iv. 14), and are in need of no repetition of his great sacrifice, or of any human priest to intrude between us and our ascended and glorified Lord.—Yours truly,

James E. Mathieson.

Irish Notes.

Rev. John Good has held a successful ten days' evangelistic mission in the Methodist Church, Newtownards; and a similar mission has been held by Rev. M. J. Lewis in Castlereagh-road Methodist Church.

A very interesting missionary conference has been held at Borrisokane, the Archdeacon of Killaloe presiding. The meeting was largely attended, several friends having travelled long distances in order to be present.

A meeting has been held in Duncairn Presbyterian Church, Belfast, to bid farewell to Mr. Wm. Mulligan and Mr. R. B. Mawhinney, who are proceeding to India in connection with the Jungle Tribes' Mission. Addresses were delivered by Revs. H. Montgomery, Wm. Park, Dr. Greig, and Right Hon. Thos. Sinclair.

A Methodist Guild for Biblical Study has been formed in Ireland. The course includes the study of the texts of the Hebrew Bible and the Greek Testament, together with questions concerning grammar, criticism, and exegesis. A council of leading ministers has been appointed, and these have given the project their cordial approval.

Be Kind.

Be kind; thou knowest not how soon
The cloud may rise upon the heart,
And all the light and warmth of noon
In bitterness and storm depart.

Be kind; thou knowest not the load,
Unseen, that weighs thy brother down;
Nor how his spirit kept the road,
And bare the cross and won the crown.

Be kind; thou knowest not the night—
The starless night of dark remorse;
Thy way was ever in the light,
Thou couldst not steer a doubtful course.

Be kind; thou knowest not the name
Of him made neighbour by his need;
And yet, I think it was the same
Who bade thee clothe, and warm, and feed.

Be kind; for Christ Himself was kind,
He spent his years in doing good;
And they who follow Him shall find
The Father's will their daily food.

Howard T. N. Ussher.

Harrod's Stores Christian Mission.—The eleventh anniversary of this business house mission was held on Tuesday, October 26. Mr. R. Burbidge (president) being unable to be present, his place was filled by Mr. Alderman Newton, J.P. The secretary (Mr. W. Morgan) read an encouraging report of the work. Addresses followed by Alderman Newton, Revs. W. Muncaster, and C. A. Fox; who insisted on the practical side of Christianity, showing that true Christians were the stamp of men needed in business as elsewhere.

Advance on the Congo.

THE Southern Presbyterian Church of the United States carries on mission work in the Congo, and in Brazil, China, Japan, Korea, and Mexico, Dr. Snyder, of the Congo Mission, has been in London during the past week on his way back to his station at Luebo. He and his wife were invalided home last year; since then Mrs. Snyder has died, and the bereaved husband is returning alone to his distant post. Mrs. Morrison, writing from Luebo in June last, says:—

We are all longing for the speedy return of Dr. Snyder. The people on the station seem to be much endeared to him. Our prayer is that some additional workers may come with him.

At a meeting of the missionaries, held a few days after my arrival, we decided, after seeking the Spirit's guidance, to open two new stations as soon as possible. Before my arrival Mr. Verner had opened a station for himself at Ndombe, on the south bank of the river, and three days inland. I trust that a great and good work will be done there.

It was also decided that Mr. Sheppard and I would try to reach Lukenga's town, with the view of our putting a station there as a central point from which to work in the great Bakuba tribe. Mr. Sheppard seemed providentially the man to go to open the mission. He has been there, is known along the road, and speaks the language. He and I have made a trip into the edge of the country, to try to find out the prospects of our being able to enter the confines of the tribe, and more especially to know whether we would be granted admittance to the town itself. I am quite sure we can go within three hours of the capital; then we may have to wait.

The old Lukenga chief (Mr. Sheppard's friend) died about a year ago. His nephew has come to the throne. In the meantime there has been much disorder, confusion, and even bloodshed throughout the confines of the whole tribe. The friends of the old king have been all killed or driven into exile, and a new people and a new régime have come in. We have hopes that now shortly much of the confusion will end, for the king will put on the crown (which consists of putting a feather in his hair), and the "palaver" will be finished.

I find the mission work on this station (Luebo) in what I regard as a most flourishing condition, due, in great part, to the faithful labours of the past. To-day the chapel was crowded to its utmost capacity, many standing at the doors and windows. It was built only last summer, but we shall certainly be compelled to have a larger one, and that soon. This was communion day. Six professed Christ, and were baptized, having previously been examined and instructed.

Evangelical Church of Italy.

THE twenty-third General Assembly of the Evangelical Church of Italy was held recently. The opening sermon was preached by Signor Lenzi, of Palermo, from Acts i. 8. Thirty-three churches were represented by fifty-two deputies.

Three new churches were accepted, as the first fruits of the working of God's Spirit all over the mission. Quite a number of fine young men are entering the field; this is a good token for the future, as they have been practically trained in the work. Deputies addressed the Assembly from the Free Church of Scotland, the Congregational Union of England, and other churches abroad and in Italy, while a large number of most interesting letters were read from sister churches in various lands.

Since the Assembly we have lost by death one of the best ministers, Signor Mazzetti, of Naples, a bright, intelligent, and active pastor, who had got an entrance to the cultured classes, and for whom a new church was being got ready. So the workmen pass away, while the work of the Lord goes on.

The reports read at the Assembly from all parts of the mission formed excellent cheer to me, at the beginning of my forty-first season in Florence, and must rejoice all the friends of Italy.

Progress in North China.

AFTER ten years' service in China, Mr. A. H. Bridge, of Wei-chen, in south-west Chihli, now home on furlough, writes:—

"It was in November, 1893, that, accompanied by a native preacher on an evangelistic tour in the country east and north of Tehuen Teh Fu, with a view to ultimate settlement somewhere near the Fu Yang river, I first struck Wei-Chen, otherwise called Wei Chia Chuang. Early in January, 1894, we took possession of two houses. One I fitted up for personal residence, with a room for domestic chapel, and in the other, being more conveniently situated, with a room opening on to the street, suitable for street chapel. I opened a dispensary. We have never had the least difficulty or trouble with the people of the place. During the first few weeks of settlement, on market days, we were sometimes annoyed with a rowdy crowd besieging the street door, but they were always people from a distance up to nothing more than a lark, and always good-naturedly dispersed after they had had their fun of viewing the foreigner.

"A few successful dispensary cases soon spread a good report, and patients from far and near flocked daily to the dispensary, where they heard the Gospel preached, and were relieved of some of their sufferings. The average daily attendance while open has been about forty. A few in-patients have from time to time been entertained and benefited, though want of accommodation has kept us from doing this, the most successful part of medical mission work, due justice, and patients who have been obliged to stay for hospital care, have generally dwelt outside, in inns on the street near by, or in neighbours' houses.

"Tracing the beginnings of much of the existing work to-day, I find that the interest which led to spiritual results has often resulted in the first place from the impression caused by the treatment of the sick. While flocking around us seeking people have heard of the Great Physician, and in many cases not in vain. The present work in Ch'en Ts'uen, with its bright promise, was started through the efforts of a man who was first influenced while seeking medical help in the Dispensary. The beginnings of work among the women in Nan-Ho is the result of the conversion of a woman while staying a month in our limited hospital-room, having her partially-lost eyesight restored her by a minor operation. Occasionally the Dispensary has been closed for a time, for want of sufficient drugs; and it has not been open now since July, 1896, for the same reason. A fresh stock is wanted, but there are no funds.

"We have quite a number of adherents to-day who, after repeated hearings in the street chapel, were there first led to intelligent decision, and cast in their lot among us. The people of Wei-Chen have had the additional advantage of nightly meetings and classes according to the seasons of freedom from pressure of agricultural works at various times of the year. Fairs, markets, and any occasion of public assembly in surrounding villages have been taken advantage of by the selling and distribution of Scriptures and tracts and preaching. But the systematic working of villages around, which we have always longed to take up, has not yet been realised owing to inadequacy of native staff. Since March, 1896, the women have received help which they much needed by the coming of a Bible woman, kindly supplied by Rev. W. H. Rees, of London Mission, Chichou. Some who were already won have been strengthened and led on, others caught in the Gospel net, and the regular attendance of women at services in our central station brought up to an average of about thirty, while outside stations have likewise been helped in this particular.

"During 1896 we baptized twenty converts, bringing the total of baptized from commencement up to thirty-two. Nominal inquirers number 600 odd. About 300 of these we regard as hopeful cases, that is, we have no reason to doubt but what they are being delivered from the bondage of centuries, and are being led into the liberty of the Kingdom of Christ. Of the rest it is difficult to say more than that by regular attendance at the various services they are learning something of the truth.

"The district we embrace is a large one, and thickly populated, we have inquirers in seven Hsiens (counties) situated in the Prefecture of Shuen Teh and District of Chao-Chow. As a sort of appendage to the mission, the school for blind, with from eight to ten scholars, has existed since April, 1894. The system used is that adapted from the Braille, by Rev. W. H. Murray, and used in his school for blind in Peking. During 1896 we have made an attempt to introduce an industrial branch—having in view the desirability of placing the blind lads, after a few years' schooling, in a position to earn their own living. There is urgent call for a boys' school to give a Christian education to the boys of converts."

Since this report was written, the work has made rapid advances. Communications to Mr. Bridge may be addressed to the care of Mr. F. W. Pigott, 3, Gayton-crescent, Hampstead.

The Famine in India.

WE have received a letter from Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, of The Bombay Guardian, acknowledging contributions from our readers. He says:—

"The £50 received for relief of famine distress has been entrusted for use (with other sums given to The Bombay Guardian Famine Fund) to thirty different missionaries, some of whom have several stations. The closing of the Government relief works has in many places thrown an additional number of poor creatures (who cannot get work in their villages) upon the charity of the missionaries. We may anticipate that the most acute form of distress will be over by the end of this year, although it will take a long time for the people to regain their former position."

DEAR SIR,—The plague has reappeared in Poona, and is causing much distress in the city. I had to attend to some sick people and to make arrangements for the removal of those for whom it would not be advisable to remain in Poona. This, together with the other duties, kept me very busy. I thank you most gratefully for the generous donation of £92 5s. 6d., which your readers sent for the support of my famine girls. You will be interested to know that there are nearly 300 famine girls in my charge at this time. I want you to pray for the salvation of my new children. I am glad to say that some sixty of these dear girls have accepted the Lord Jesus as their Saviour, and are showing signs of a real change of heart by their conduct. Please pray for me also, that I may be kept very close to the Lord, and follow Him in all things.—Yours, in the Lord's service, RAMABAI.

Shurada Sadan, Poona, October 15.

DEAR SIR,—Still there is a cry of distress from hundreds of thousands in India. Some of the most important crops will not be reaped till December. Multitudes of small proprietors have nothing, and, as many landlords are ruined, the labourers can often get no employment. Months ago, I fear, their last anna was spent, and they have nothing wherewith to buy food or clothes.

One mission centre is relieving 2500 a day. Several are relieving hundreds who are altogether dependent on them. Government relief has, for the sake of economy, been stopped while there was great distress, and so some missionaries have actually more on their hands than before. Most of them say the distress in their district must last for some months. According to our latest information between 7000 and 8000 orphans have been taken. For them, buildings, teachers, food, clothes, and industrial appliances are needed. For these alone in the first year, £40,000 to £50,000 would be required, but there are still thousands more who ought to be taken in.

I fear many, many orphans have not been saved because the overworked missionaries shrank from incurring fresh responsibilities in addition to the heavy burdens under which they are staggering. I have not alluded to the large sums needed to start in life again those who have lost all. May I say, as to clothes, it is better to send money to be spent in material; the missionaries can make it go much further, and give employment to native weavers who are in want. RADSTOCK.

Spain.—The work of the Reformed Churches of Spain and Portugal was the subject of an address given recently at Dover by Rev. Edward C. Unmack, organising secretary of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society. Instances of conversion which the speaker had met with in his journeys in Spain were related, and a most encouraging feature is the formation of a Y.M.C.A. at Oporto under the auspices of Rev. James Cassels, which, after a short existence, has a membership of ninety.

November 14.

"Paul's Ministry in Rome."—Acts xxviii. 17-31. Golden Text.—"I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth."—Rom. i. 16.

PAUL did not wait to commence his work of preaching in Rome until his appeal came before Nero. He did not know whether the Jews at Jerusalem had sent any charges to be brought against him by the Jews at Rome, and it was needful that he should discover this before his appeal was heard. He was allowed a large measure of freedom, although constantly chained to a soldier. The lesson goes on to-day without break from last Sunday. Note—

I. Paul introducing himself to the Roman Jews.—He could not go to them, so they must come to his hired rooms. By his address, "Men and brethren," he makes himself one of their number. He pleads his innocence of any crime against the laws or customs of the Jews. Yet by those of Jerusalem he had been handed over to Roman authority (17). The latter, finding him not guilty, would have set him free (18). But the Jews wanted to get him back from the Court of Cæsarea to the Sanhedrin (for what purpose we have seen: Acts xxiii. 10-24), and it was to avoid this, and not because he had a guilty conscience, that he appealed to Cæsar (19). He tells them that he wanted to forestall any reports that might come from Jerusalem by showing that he was in chains for the hope of Israel—proclaiming the Messiah which their nation had expected for centuries (20). But Paul had no need for fear. No evil reports made in Judea had been sent to Rome (21). Moreover, they were anxious to hear Paul on this new sect. Probably some of their own synagogue had gone to form it, but they gave little credence to the story, for there had been several false Messiah's preached before. This sect, like many others, had been condemned everywhere, but Paul was an intelligent, widely-read, well-born Jew, and from his lips they were willing to hear what he thought (22). Mark, we should always be ready to receive new light on the Truth wherever it comes from. Don't think that you know everything. We may be taught "out of the mouths of babes and sucklings." Narrow-minded people are always dark-minded, because they refuse all light except that which comes through their own small chink.

II. Paul persuading the Roman Jews.—They fixed a time when they would come again, and they spent a whole day in discussion. Paul brought forth many things out of the law of Moses and out of the writings of the prophets which could refer to no one else but Jesus Christ. We believe in Jesus as the Saviour of the world, therefore we are not so dependent on the prophetic writings about Him. but to the Jews it was the all-important question. The Messiah was foretold—the mode of his entry into the world—the kind of character He would be (Isaiah 50, etc.) and his death and resurrection. John sent from prison to ask "Art thou He that should come?" and the Jews wanted an answer to this question. The suffering, righteous Christ was a King, and the reign of love which He established was the "Kingdom of God" which should be revealed from heaven.

The result of this conference was that some of them were convinced, but they were divided among themselves (24). When Paul saw this he gave them

III. The warning of Isaiah (25-28).—The prophecy was very likely not intended to refer to this particular people alone. The words—like all other warnings of the Spirit of God—are true for all lands and all time. Isaiah spoke of a class of deaf, hard-hearted men who heard with their physical ears and saw with their physical eyes, but they could not penetrate to the spiritual meaning of the things they saw and heard. Paul says: "If you reject the things I have shown you to-day you are caught up in this great class." We do not like to belong to a bad class. We want to be in good company. Emphasise the fact that every boy is qualifying for some class of men, good or bad, and as to which we shall belong to depends upon ourselves. God will divide us up one day with unerring judgment. The salvation of God was preached to Gentile, and while the Jews to-day are a scattered people clinging to their dead forms, the Gentiles are spreading the knowledge of the despised, crucified Christ throughout the whole earth (28).

IV. Paul a prisoner for two years.—That one sentence contains volumes. His rooms were open to all, and to all who came he preached the kingdom of God. It was during this imprisonment that he wrote his letters to Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Philemon, and others. Paul's life, like that of his Master, was full of hard work. The busy people in good deeds make the world better.

The Y.M.C.A.

GLASGOW UNITED Y.M.C.A.

THIS flourishing organisation has attained to the venerable age of seventy-three, and its annual meeting, held lately in the great St. Andrew's Halls, showed every sign of unimpaired vitality. The immense building was crowded in every part. The present honorary president of the Association, Mr. W. A. Campbell, was in the chair, and was supported by a large array of ministers and other active friends of the work. In some most helpful words the Chairman told of spiritual work done in the city by the members of the Association. He made the truly remarkable statement that every hundredth person in the city and suburbs (taking the united population as 800,000) is a member of the society.

The report submitted by Mr. W. M. Oatts, general secretary, revealed many grounds of encouragement and thankfulness. The following is a brief summary:—At 30th June, 1897, the membership numbered 8430 young men. Connected with the Association there are 231 branches, with an average weekly attendance of 4178 young men and 1057 young women. Connected with the Association there are 1081 Sabbath-school teachers, 2315 evangelistic workers, and 154 young men preparing for the ministry or mission field. The work of the Association is divided into four branches—viz., spiritual, educational, social, and physical. Fifteen separate committees arrange the work. During the past year a large evangelistic meeting has been held every Sunday evening, and services are conducted on Sabbath afternoons in nine lodging-houses. The Association has maintained a missionary in China for several years. It has also supplied a bursary to enable a young man to study at the university. There are 2767 students enrolled in the various educational classes, and the Y.M.C.A. magazine has maintained a circulation of 5000 copies. Eighteen thousand eight hundred and thirty-four volumes were issued to 2036 readers from the various libraries during the past year. The new institute on the south side was opened on 9th September, and the Y.M.C.A. Club in Bothwell-street was formally opened on 7th September. The income for the past year was £8737, and the expenditure £8737, a friend of the Association kindly making up a deficiency at the close of the financial year.

A special feature of the meeting was a highly suggestive and stimulating address by Rev. Hugh Black, of Edinburgh, on "Friendship," largely based on some passages from the Book of Proverbs. The Fisk Jubilee Singers effectively rendered many of their touching and beautiful slave songs, and the gathering was altogether a very enjoyable one.

The Young Men's Club, which was formally opened early in September, is now approaching completion, and will be a really splendid addition to the forces of the Association. Besides magnificent public rooms, restaurant, etc., all furnished in first-class style, it will have 200 comfortable bedrooms, which will be at the disposal of business young men in the city on very reasonable terms. Some twenty young men are already resident on the premises. The appointments of the building are so fine in every respect that the young men in Glasgow who are fortunate enough to become residents, need not envy the wealthiest devotees of clubland. Doubtless they will appreciate to the full the provision made for their comfort and well-being. We wish all the other great cities and towns throughout the empire would follow suit.

It may be added that the club is by no means intended to add one more to the many charities of the city. It has been founded and will be maintained on commercial lines, with a capital of £35,000. We understand there are still a few preference shares for allotment, bearing a maximum interest of £5 per cent. Application for these should be made to Mr. W. M. Oatts, 70, Bothwell-street, Glasgow.

BRIEF NOTES.

At a social meeting held by the Hawick Association, to inaugurate the winter's work, Rev. George Davidson gave an address on the advantages of Y.M.C.A. work in large towns.

The Anglo-American Association, Paris, is experiencing great spiritual blessing. The membership is rapidly increasing, the meetings well sustained, and associates are deciding for Christ and entering into active participation in the religious work.

The secretary of Dublin Association, Mr. William A. Boyd, has been very ill for the past month, but he is back again at his duty. A very successful winter session has been started, with an increase of over 140 men since they got into their new building.

By invitation of the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, the York Association held a meeting in the Mansion House on Friday evening, Canon Machell, the president, occupying the chair, and the speakers being Mr. Henry Whitwell and Mr. C. J. Dymond.

The North-western District Union held its annual conference at Wigton. Mr. P. Thompson, of Keswick, presided over the morning session. In the afternoon the Conference was largely attended, and a number of suggestive papers were read. A public meeting was held in the Market Hall in the evening.

At a bazaar held at Oxford by the Y.M.C.A., with a view to raising £1,500 required on the building fund, earnest words were spoken on the work of the society. Mr. Souttar, M.P., presided, the Countess of Jersey opened the bazaar. The association has now 1000 names upon its books, who are actively interested in the work of the association.

The annual conference of the Eastern Counties District Union of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Lowestoft on the 28th ult., under the presidency of Canon Garratt, of Ipswich. An excellent report was presented by the secretary, Mr. H. B. Arnold; and the proceedings were successful and encouraging in an unprecedented degree. Mr. W. A. Shann presided in the evening over the annual meeting of the Lowestoft Association.

Delegates from associations at Cardiff, Newport, Swansea, Neath, Abergavenny, and many other places assembled at Hereford on October 28th, for the autumn conference of the South Wales District Union. In the morning and afternoon, Mr. W. H. Godwin presided, and papers upon "The Difficulties of the Work in Small Towns" and "The Foreign Extension Work of the Y.M.C.A." were characterised by much that was interesting. A crowded public meeting took place at the Corn Exchange in the evening, when addresses were given by Rev. Glym Davies and Messrs. E. Fennell and W. H. Hills.

In the Midlands, two important District Union Conferences took place last week, the first on Tuesday at Nottingham, and the second on Wednesday at Walsall. Both drew together large and representative gatherings of delegates. At the North Midland Conference the Mayor of Nottingham, Mr. Alderman E. H. Fraser, J.P., Mr. Alfred Haley (of Wakefield, president of the District Union), and Mr. Councillor John Wright (president Nottingham Y.M.C.A.), took part, together with several secretaries of Associations in the district, who read short papers upon various departments of work. In the evening the annual public meeting of the Nottingham Association took place in the Mechanics' Hall, where a large audience assembled. Sir George Williams occupied the chair, and the principal speaker was Archdeacon Madden, who delivered an address to young men. The Midland Conference was presided over by Mr. H. J. Allcroft, and later Sir George Williams presided, in the Temperance Hall, over the anniversary meeting of the Walsall Association. On Thursday evening following the conference, the annual meeting of the Birmingham Association was held in the Town Hall; while preceding it on Tuesday evening, the anniversary of another important association in the district was celebrated—that of Hanley—where the Archdeacon of London addressed a large audience, over which Mr. Robert Heath presided.

Guernsey, Y.W.C.A.—Special meetings in connection with the Y.W.C.A. have been held in the Market Hall, Guernsey, by Miss A. R. Habershon. "The Tabernacle and its ministry" was the subject of the afternoon Bible reading, which were illustrated by a model of the Tabernacle on Saturday afternoon. There was a large gathering of children, who showed by their quiet attention how interested they were in the model and its teaching. Every evening the attendance was very good, and on Sunday evening the hall was crowded to its utmost limits, many being obliged to stand. A very interesting meeting was also held illustrating the different departments of Y.W.C.A. work by means of lime-light. Addresses were also delivered on the Lord's second coming. These meetings were greatly valued and largely attended. The Mission closed with a praise meeting, when many gave testimony.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Children's Treasury. (T. Nelson & Sons. 1s.) A good shilling's worth, with little tales, verses, and pictures such as the tiny ones delight in. The chromo cover is very attractive.

The Sunday Magazine is an attractive monthly, making a bright and readable volume. There are stories in abundance, including Rev. S. Baring Gould's "Perpetua." Several well-known ministers contribute papers on "Answers to Prayer"; and there are also many descriptive sketches and Biblical studies. "Sunday Evenings with the Children" is a good feature. There are many illustrations, also highly finished tinted plates. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

Good Words, edited by Dr. Donald Macleod, is a companion volume, well-written, and fully illustrated. There are biographical sketches of much interest, also historical, scientific, archæological, and social papers. The Sunday Readings, by the editor, form a valuable department, and William Canton's "Bits about Books" are always readable. The Dean of York writes on "The Crowning of Monarchs." There are several stories, the principal one being "Wayfaring Men," by Edna Lyall. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.)

The Zenana; or, Women's Work in India. Vol. IV. (Partridge. 2s. 6d.) The volume of the periodical of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission. The daily experiences of the lady missionaries among their secluded sisters of the East provide abundant material, and it is admirably utilised by the editor. Few can read these fresh, earnest letters from India, illustrated with photos and scenes, without feeling how sorely such labour is needed, and how faithfully our representatives among Indian women are doing the work of the churches.

Chirruppee. By E. Boyd Bayly. (Hodder & Stoughton. 1s.) Just the thing for the wee folk. It is hard to say whether they will find the story of the village bellringers by the author or the quaint illustrations by Ursula Wood the more attractive.

Philip Melanchthon: The Wittemberg Professor and Theologian of the Reformation. By David J. Deane. (1s. 6d. Partridge & Co.) A capital outline, for the general reader, of the life of the intimate friend and companion of Martin Luther. There are a number of illustrations.

Daily Thoughts for a Year from the Letters of Samuel Rutherford. Selected by Eva S. Sandeman. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier). These thoughts are gems. They have been gathered with spiritual judgment, and the result is a volume which many will prize very highly.

The Story of Jephthah and other Poems. By A. W. Thead. (Digby, Long, & Co. 2s. 6d. net,) A collection of poems, chiefly on Bible themes. The longest, dealing with Jephthah's vow and its sad consequences, suggests a fresh explanation of the reasons which led to the utterance of this rash vow.

The Friends' Quarterly Examiner for October. (1s. 6d. West, Newman & Co.). Among the excellent contents of this number are a sketch of Samuel Prideaux Tregelles, the well-known Biblical scholar, and a paper describing and contrasting the Keswick Convention with the Scarborough Summer School.

Four Knockings. By E. S. Elliott. (6d. and 9d. (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling; Partridge & Co., London.) Miss Elliott's recent call home lends peculiar interest to this reprint of one of her telling Gospel issues, one which already has been, and doubtless will yet be, blessed to many readers.

Perpetua. By S. Baring Gould, M.A. (Isbister & Co. 6s.) A graphic tale of Christian life in Nimes, early in the third century, that is to say in times when shame and death were the portion of confessors of Christ. It is charmingly written, and to many young minds will come as a wondrous revelation of the fearless endurance and firm faith of these primitive believers.

What is Sin? Sermons preached before the University of Oxford. By Joseph McCormick, D.D., vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury, and Canon of York. (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) In every respect an excellent little work. The preacher has read and thought to real purpose of that "abominable thing" which God hates. The sermons are essentially practical, and being free from technical or controversial terms, they should be widely read by Christian workers.

The Wrestler of Philippi. By Fannie E. Newberry. (Christian Commonwealth Publishing Co.) What it cost, in primitive times, to be a Christian finds fresh illustration in this stirring tale. Here we see Pagans groping after light, the Gospel truth, dimly understood, but courageously held, and persecution to the death calmly faced alike by stalwart men and fragile women. It is well that our young people should be made familiar with the stern experiences of these early believers.

Chronicles of the Parish of Taxwood. By the late J. R. Macduff, D.D. (3s. 6d.). One of this gifted writer's early books has been re-issued—a series of sketches of characters as found a generation back in a country parish. Those who have lived in some northern village will find themselves among familiar friends, portrayed with quaint shrewdness and gentle satire, photographing, as it were, the rugged strength and simplicity which marks so frequently the Scottish peasantry. The book is aptly illustrated.

Faith and Social Service. By George Hodges, Dean of the Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. (Gardner, Darton, & Co.) A striking study of present-day problems from a Christian point of view. The subjects show the range of the book—The New Forces, Indifference, Doubt, Poverty, Labour, Moral Reform, The City. The pages are both instructive and stimulating; and where, on points that are keenly controverted, we may not be able to follow the author, we cannot but allow his suggestive thoughtfulness, and be grateful for such a valuable contribution to an important department of literature.

For Remembrance: A Record of Life's Beginnings—Wishes, Prayers, Thoughts. Compiled by the Lady Laura Hampton. (3s. 6d. Longmans, Green & Co.) Here are three poetical excerpts for each day in the year, associated respectively with births, baptisms, and deaths, and illustrative of temporal, spiritual, and eternal life. Every other page is blank for the record of names "for remembrance." The extracts include many favourite lines, also gems that are less familiar, but some of them of rare beauty. The collection of them from many sources has obviously been a labour of love on the part of the compiler.

Ad Lucem; or, The Ascent of Man through Christ. By Rev. Algernon Barrington Simeon, M.A., sometime Warden of St. Edward's School, Oxford. (6s. Gardner, Darton & Co.). The author aims to give an "an outline of the history of God's dealings with men, and at the same time point out the continuity of man's progress towards his destiny." The book is in three parts, (1) The Revelation of God the Father, (2) The Manifestation of God the Son, and (3) The Manifestation of God the Holy Ghost. The plan is good, but the work is, in our judgment, sadly marred by the author's sacramentarianism, as developed in the third part of the book.

The Kingdom of Manhood. By Horace G. Groser. (Andrew Melrose. 3s. 6d.) Many young men are shy of serious books, but there is an art in addressing them, and this author has learnt it admirably. Wide and diversified reading appears on every page. The events in which young men are interested are used as illustrations of and incentives to higher things. The themes are such as Ideals, Enthusiasm, Discipline, Self-respect, Reading, and Friendships. The book is high-toned and purposeful, the spirit is Christian; nevertheless, we miss any definite statement of the highest of all ideals—a life consecrated to the service of God, the true crown of manhood.

A Clerk of Oxford. By E. Everett Green (5s.). This able writer, who has already enriched our young people's library with many telling and well-written stories, has achieved a distinct success in her new book. It is an historical tale dealing with the stirring times of the "Barons' war," and illustrating the life led by the poor clerks" of Oxford, whose licence to beg seems to have covered a good deal of irregular extortion, and, in some cases, even violence and robbery. The characters are forcefully sketched—some being singularly attractive and happily conceived. The weak king and Earl Simon are admirably portrayed. The book will win for itself a hearty welcome.

From The Sunday-school Union we have Martin Luther, by E. Velvin (1s. 6d.), a useful addition to "The Splendid Lives" series, giving in brief the story of the mighty reformer and his heroic stand for God and truth. The more our boys read such life-stories the better for the future. The Little Runaways, by M. Harriet M. Capes (1s.), is a simple nursery tale, prettily illustrated, and likely to please the little ones. Rob and His Rabbits, by Emma Leslie (9d.), sets forth the evil results of a boy's false start, and shows how he was saved from a downward course. Canterbury Waxworks, by Amy E. Miller, and Little Queen Esther (4d. each) serve well as reward books.

How to Obtain Fulness of Power. By R. A. Torrey, Chicago. (Nisbet. 1s. 6d.) The author's previous book on "How to Bring Men to Christ" is already well known as a plain and practical aid to Christian workers. Now addressing those who seek to serve Christ more fully, he deals with the deep longing so many feel for more power. Believing that the Bible teaching on this point is "not mystical nor mysterious," but "plain and straightforward," he devotes his pages to a close and careful study as to "What saith the Scripture" in regard to spiritual power. His expositions are clear, and his applications pungent. The little volume should prove invaluable to earnest seekers after fruitfulness.

The Gospel in the Fields. By Rev. R. C. Fillingham, vicar of Hexton. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The author has an ear for Nature's music, at the seashore, by the hedgerow, and on the garden path. He here allows us to accompany him in expeditions and rambles taken at all times and seasons; and after brief explanations he proceeds to derive Divine lessons from natural objects. It matters not whether the text is a snowdrop or a sunflower, a November fog or a glorious sunrise, the awakening year or August cornfields, Mr. Fillingham is always in the mood to interest us in the works of God, and to point out their spiritual teachings and suggestions.

Seven Years in Sierra Leone. The story of the work of William A. B. Johnson. By Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D. (3s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) The subject of this biographical sketch was a missionary of the C.M.S. in Regent's Town, Sierra Leone, from 1816 to 1823. He was a man of sound sense and great energy, and his work met with marvellous success. A memoir of him was published about forty-five years ago, but copies of it are now very rare. Hence, having been much struck by the story, Dr. Pierson determined to bring the facts before the present generation, and in this he did well. He not only writes a deeply interesting sketch of the devoted missionary, but in several appendices gives copious extracts from the original narrative. We trust this excellent piece of work will have many readers.

A Hebrew and English Lexicon to the Old Testament: Based on the Lexicon of William Gesenius. Edited by Francis Brown, D.D., with the co-operation of S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D. Part VI. of this great work takes us from the midst of words in Yod to the midst of those in Lamed, and thus includes the whole of those beginning with the intermediate Kaph, so abundant in terms of historic significance and doctrinal import. In the department of illustrative references this Lexicon is full beyond precedent, while analytical and descriptive details are given in amazing profusion. Naturally, this Lexicon is richer than those hitherto in use in etymological information and light from the cognates. (2s. 6d. each part. The Clarendon Press.)

English Church Teaching on Faith, Life, and Order, is the title of a manual published under the auspices of the Council of the National Protestant Church Union. It is in three parts, the first of which, on Faith, is by Canon Girdlestone, late Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford; the second, on Life, by Dr. Moule, Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge; and the third, on Order, by Rev. T. W. Drury, Principal of the Church Missionary College, Islington. Notes are appended on certain texts of Scripture that are frequently misinterpreted and misapplied, these being also from the pen of Canon Girdlestone, the general editor of the book. Needless to say, this is a sound piece of work. Those who desire a statement, at once true to the Evangelical position, and in terms of Christian charity, will find this book "the very thing." (1s. Charles Murray, 7, Paternoster-square).

The Motto Cards for 1898 issued by Raphael Tuck & Sons are chaste in design and artistic in execution. The smaller sizes are issued at one penny each, the larger at 2d.

The Gate into the True Life (Gal. ii. 20). By J. W. Kettle. (2d. Partridge.) A thoughtful booklet, showing self-sacrifice to be the first requirement of Christian life.

On My Five Fingers is the title of a booklet, by Rev. George Everard, giving "a thought for the New Year on God's free loving-kindness." This is a letter booklet for Christians to send to their pilgrim friends. (1d. Nisbet.)

On November 3 Messrs. Cassell & Company publish the first part of a cheap issue, in weekly parts, of the illustrated edition of Dean Farrar's Life of Christ. The text of this new issue is revised from the author's recent corrections.

The Scripture Question Calendar for 1898 (1d. Kaufmann) will be welcome to Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers for distribution amongst young children. There is a question for each day in the year, and a column in which to write the answer.

Bible Stars (1s.). How often on a wet day mothers want a pleasant Sunday occupation for young people. To meet this these "Bible Star" cards have been prepared. The texts, which have to be found and read, will, in many cases, be impressed on the child's memory, and never forgotten. "Bible Stars" contains a collection of the "Titles of our Saviour," and show the young people the number and the beauty of the expressions relating to the Lord Jesus Christ, which are to be found throughout the Bible. Word Teaching (1s. 6d.) is a simpler form of the same game for younger children. (Lewis Waterman, Bristol.)

Personalia.

Rev. Archibald G. Brown will begin his ministry at Chatsworth-road Baptist Chapel, West Norwood, on Sunday next. Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, Rev. W. Cuff and other well-known ministers will take part in the recognition services on the following day.

Rev. F. Ireland Jones, one of the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society, has resigned his post on account of ill-health. Before Mr. Ireland Jones joined the home staff in 1894 he was for eight years a missionary in India, where he was successively principal of the Calcutta Divinity School, superintendent of the Nadiya Native Pastorates, and secretary of the Calcutta Corresponding Committee.

Mr. J. Manton Smith, who has so long been associated with the Pastors' College as evangelist, has sailed for New York on an evangelistic tour in the United States and Canada. A farewell meeting was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, when Pastor Thomas Spurgeon bore testimony to the services rendered by Mr. Smith, who himself gave an account of his twenty-five years' missioning and of varied experiences in many parts and among many classes of hearers.

The Boys' Home, Stratford, Ont.

Mr. J. J. Kelso, superintendent of neglected and dependent children, during his stay in Stratford, Ont., paid an official visit of inspection to Miss Macpherson's Home. He expressed himself as highly pleased with the manner in which the institution is being conducted. The little folks are well attended to and are apparently happy and contented. Everything that is calculated to be for their good is provided, and the books were in perfect shape. Mr. Merry, the manager, seemed deeply devoted to his work and keeps a close supervision over the children he has located throughout the province. In many of the English Homes which Mr. Kelso has visited he marked the coolness with which he was received, the authorities thinking that it was an intrusion, on the part of the Government, to interfere in their affairs, and rather demurring at the idea of inspection, as though inspection could do the institutions any harm if they were properly conducted. This was not the case here, however, as he met with the heartiest reception at the hands of those in charge, and was shown the ins and outs of the whole institution.—The Beacon.

The North-East London C.E. Union held its third annual gathering at "The Lighthouse," Walthamstow, Rev. G. P. McKay presiding. The report presented by the secretary showed that thirty-six societies were now affiliated (an increase of ten), which have a membership of 1,816, being an increase of 530. These figures include ten junior societies, with a total roll of 385—an increase of six societies and 172 members.

Egham.—Messrs. Bastin, Beaney, Brett, Cannon, Clover, and Osborne, of the London City Mission, visited Egham again (this making the sixteenth visit of members of the Mission), and have held services in the Literary Institute, Egham, and mission-halls at Egham Causeway, Bishopsgate, and Stroud to tell of their work among the police, and in public-houses, hotels, coal-yards, etc., of London, thus awakening interest in the entire neighbourhood in the work in London. These visits have been blessed to many, Christians being strengthened and sinners converted. The Gospel is preached with no uncertain sound, and has again been proved the power of God unto salvation.

Sunbeam Mission.—The new annual report gives a cheering survey of the work of the Sunbeam Mission during the past year. Several fresh branches have been started, and many thousands of children and young people in all classes of life have been brought into touch with the Mission during the last twelve months. The special object of the Mission is to draw out the sympathies of upper and middle class children towards the very poor or suffering, paralysed and crippled children in our large towns. The members of the Poona branch are still supporting a cot in the Benares C.M.S. Hospital. The members of the Aberdeen branch are endeavouring to do the same, and a little cot labelled "Sunbeam Cot" has been placed in the children's ward of the Aberdeen Incurable Hospital. A large number of members have sent their little protégés to the country or sea-side, paying all expenses; and others have placed them in orphanages and training homes. In this and many other ways kind deeds are daily being done, and kind words are daily being written, and thus "Sunbeams" are shining in thousands of homes, gladdening and brightening the suffering lives of many little children. The treasurer and secretaries of the Central Branch are Admiral, Mrs., and Miss Mabel Battiscombe, Eastwood, Weston-super-Mare.

Society of Friends.

New Adult School premises have just been opened at Barnsley. A series of opening services has been very successful.

Alfred Wright, of London, has been visiting various meetings in Cumberland in Gospel work, and not a little blessing has been vouchsafed.

In a membership of 19,377 in Indiana yearly meeting there are only 103 non-abstainers and two who sell drink. No wonder such a body of Friends thrives and prospers.

Charles E. Gillett, of Oxford, has been travelling in Ireland in Gospel work, specially in the province of Leinster. Such visits are much valued among Friends there.

Various quarterly meetings held in different parts of England and Ireland, indicate an earnest awakening to the need of greater activity in the cause of spiritual truth, and of the evangelisation of the masses.

Wm. Hobson, of London, has just concluded two series of meetings, of about a week each, in Preston Patrick, and Grayrigg, near Kendal. Much blessing was felt, specially in the former. He is now at Allendale and Coanwood, in Northumberland, in similar service for the Master.

On the 21st ult., a conference was held at Liverpool to consider "The Society of Friends and Town Problems." Edward Grubb, M.A., read an able paper and dealt with different phases of the subject—viz., "Unhealthy surroundings," "Over-Crowding," "Model Dwellings"—and concluded with an earnest appeal for the enthusiasm of Christ and humanity. Several Friends took part in the discussion.

Salvation Army.

General Booth has decided to inaugurate large developments of the social operations in this country at a public meeting next month.

The result of the Self-Denial week held recently in Australia has amounted to over £25,000. This surpasses the sums collected in the same connection in Great Britain.

Commissioner Booth-Tucker has selected a site in California for the first colony in connection with his colonisation scheme, and hopes to transfer three hundred people thereto in the spring.

The month's work of the "Outriders"—mounted officers who seek to evangelise the scattered populations in the Western States of America—shows that 4100 people attended their indoor and outdoor meetings, and that the distance travelled was no less than 1115 miles.

Fallen Asleep.

At Doveleys (Staffs), Sir T. P. Heywood, Bart., aged 74, an earnest Christian and a liberal helper of church work—At St. Leonard's-on-Sea, on 23rd ult., Rev. F. B. Ashley, aged 86, late Vicar of Wooburn.—At West Wycombe, Mr. Jesse Lacey, for forty years an earnest worker.—At Hunstanton, on 25th ult., Mr. Francis Hewitt, ex-Mayor of Leicester, aged 65, for many years a Sunday-school and Christian worker.—In Glasgow, on Sunday, 24th ult., very suddenly in the railway subway, Rev. NOTES AND COMMENTS.

THE demand for the Paragraph Bible which our publishers send to readers of THE CHRISTIAN under certain conditions continues to be very large, and it is gratifying to know that the recipients are more than satisfied with the volume, and that expressions of appreciation are reaching them every day. Selections from these have been given from time to time. Some of those recently received we append herewith :—

From Barton-on-Humber :—"Am much pleased with the copy of the Paragraph Bible duly received. The print and binding are excellent."

From Worthing :—"The Bible is much handsomer than I anticipated, beautifully bound, with such a clear good type, and the references are so numerous that they cannot fail to be useful."

From Birkenhead :—"Am very pleased with Bible. As arranged it is a great help in studying."

From Donaghadee :—"A very handsome volume, and worthy of general attention by students of the Book."

From Costessey :—"It certainly is a beauty; it far surpasses my expectation. It is a very good Bible for home study, and I shall always use it. You can understand the reading better and are more able to grasp its meaning."

From Birmingham :—"I find it a great help."

Similar testimonies reach us from Cheshunt, Brighton, Manchester, Bridgwater, Wandsworth, Bristol, Bath, Eastbourne, Liverpool, Huddersfield, Brechin, Belfast, and other towns.

One of the conditions in connection with this special offer (see page 7) is that the copies of THE CHRISTIAN sent with the Bible shall be carefully distributed among those who may be induced to become regular subscribers. We are glad to know that this idea is commending itself to our friends. For instance, a lady writes :—

"We have been subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN for many years, and our mother before, when it was THE REVIVAL, and now, as an invalid and unable for any active work, I greatly value our weekly CHRISTIAN as bringing me into prayerful touch with work and workers, as well as giving me many a helpful paper on Bible subjects. So I shall gladly dispose of the copies sent with the Bible in the way you indicate."

Another correspondent says :—

"I shall do my utmost to distribute them to the best advantage, both for the paper itself, and also for missionary interest."

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor is leaving this country on the 24th inst. to return to China, viâ America. He will be accompanied by Mrs. Taylor and also by Miss Hanbury. The prayer meeting of the China Inland Mission on Saturday, 20th inst., will be held in the Mildmay Conference Hall at 4 p.m., and it will take the form of a farewell meeting for Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Taylor and Miss Hanbury.

On this side of the Atlantic as much interest almost has been taken in the election of the Mayor of New York as in the States themselves. We remember nothing like it; for whereas in the election of a President there may be a good deal of interest, it is partly political and selfish. There was an intense desire for the triumph of purity of election, and of municipal government, and there is a corresponding depression and sorrow because of the victory of Tammany Hall. The pain is, in one sense, all the sharper, because anything like a loyal determination to be free from the domination of this corrupt system would have been crowned with success. But then one asks, "Why did these people who divided the anti-Tammany vote not join on one man?" Whether they wanted it or not, they certainly took the sure way of aiding corruption. And for many a year, and in every way, the country, as well as New York will suffer for it.

Very serious news is to hand regarding the fate of many hundreds, if not thousands, of the foolish adventurers on their way to Klondyke. Winter has descended on them, and they will be bound to remain for months wherever they happen to be. Gold is cheaper than food in many places, and starvation stares multitudes in the face. In all Dawson City we are told there are not twelve tons of flour, and in Forty Mile City practically none at all. Never has the mad passion for gold been exhibited in a more pitiful and exaggerated form, and never is it likely to be visited with severer penalty. During the long arctic night that is falling on these luckless people, they will have ample opportunity to lament their foolishness and greed. The whole business is tragic, and sheds a lurid light on the extravagances to which human nature will sometimes go under the stress of a dominant passion.

Some magistrates are showing a questionable zeal in hindering open-air preaching. A gentleman, who is himself a justice of the peace in Maidstone, was summoned and fined for holding an open-air religious service within 22ft. of a public-house at Leeds, a village in the vicinity. The constable who acted in the case confessed that no one had complained of the singing. Though the bench convicted, they consented to state a case for the High Court, and the question will soon be decided once for all. The defence was that the local byelaw under which action was taken was an unreasonable interference with civil liberty. It seems extraordinary that any attempt should be made in these days to suppress the preaching of the Gospel in the fullest and most open manner possible. It is against the whole spirit of the times.

"That thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou." How this purpose and command of God condemns the heartlessness, too often the brutality, of masters of industry and mistresses of households! For the workman's sake the wheels and the hammers and the ploughs must cease to move on the day of rest. For the sake of the servant-girl, the slave woman, the spinning and the weaving and the cooking were to cease on the Sabbath-day. Men may doubt whether an old Jewish law is binding now on Christians, but the reason of humanity will never grow obsolete, "that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou."—N. Y. Independent.

There are few subjects that require to be more intelligently and earnestly dealt with nowadays than the responsibilities of the hours of leisure. There is a steady movement towards the shortening of the hours of work in almost all employments, which means a lengthening of the time at the disposal of the individual Meanwhile there are innumerable channels opening up for the disposal of these precious hours at the close of the day—good, bad, and indifferent. Books, evening classes, places of amusement, spheres of social and spiritual service—all these appeal to our choice. Our young people, we fear, are not adequately trained into a wise selection; they drift about from one thing to another, and drifting almost always leads to mischief and vice. There is an important educational duty that preachers, teachers, and parents should not neglect. So far, England has been largely made what it is by the hours of work; a century hence, it will largely be what its citizens make it in their hours of leisure.

Mr. Gladstone has written a letter to Dr. J. Guinness Rogers in acknowledgment of his volume of sermons, "The Gospel in the Epistles," in which he says: "Meantime, as the day of parting draws nearer, I rejoice to think how small the differences between us have already become as compared with the agreements." This testimony, from one who has spent a life of perpetual stress and conflict, and who in the late evening of his life looks back on the battle and forward into the eternal world, is eloquent of the binding and hallowing influence of religious faith. When once we forget our party cries, and look over our partition-walls, we realise what a great possession of truth and grace is ours in common with all who "love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity." In Him all true believers are one, and the closer they come to Him the clearer that oneness will become.

It is of great importance in these days when attempts are made to disparage the teachings of the Epistles, and to show that Paul is not of the same mind as Christ, to see clearly what position the apostle took up. He never fails to set forth the importance of all that Jesus did and suffered; but it was as a risen and glorified Saviour that Jesus had appeared to him, and therefore his eyes always turn to Him in the heavenly places. As an example: "It is Christ that died, yea, rather, that is risen again, who is at the right hand of God, who also maketh intercession for us."

According to an able leader in the British Weekly, the last ten years have seen a great advance in the position and influence of the Free Churches in this country. The present generation of preachers are not made in the massive mould of their chief predecessors, and many of them still deal more with the surface than the roots of life. But according to this vigorous writer, taking the Nonconformist preaching all in all, we are confident that it was never more thoughtful, never more earnest, and never more effective than it is to-day.

There is now a growing conscience in this matter. We heartily rejoice in this movement. "Moral preaching" is at a discount in these days, and preachers are learning that the way to draw and transform men's lives is by giving its true centrality to the Person and Work of the Redeemer as the one source of salvation.

Those naturalistic writers who lavish eulogiums on Jesus Christ as the most heroic character of history forget one vital contrast between Him and the greatest men who have had the power of swaying the lives of others. Napoleon, with that remarkable insight which characterised him, put it into a nutshell in words which he uttered after his final overthrow :—

I have inspired multitudes to die for me. God forbid that I should form any comparison between the enthusiasm of my soldiers and Christian charity; they are as different as their causes...I certainly possess the secret of that magic power which carries away other people's minds, yet I could never communicate it to others.

The key to this passage lies in the last words. Great men can only exercise this fascination and control by their personal presence. Jesus has conquered the world from the unseen world. Not till his bodily presence had vanished from the earth did He begin to enter on his wider empire. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto myself." This is the primary mystery of Christianity, and it cannot be accounted for except on the truth of our Lord's Divine nature and the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

The thirteenth centenary of the coming of Augustine to England with his papal doctrines and rites is to be celebrated by Rome by something more than pilgrimages and ecclesiastical display. England is to have another mission, says a member of the new order recently created at St. Sulpice for the conversion of this country to Rome. An active propaganda is to be carried on, and a special mass for our conversion is to be said every month throughout all the churches in France. We have no fear of the influence of a mass, even when said in every French church every month in the year. But what will the propaganda be like? Will it have open-air preaching? Not likely. Will it call at every door with an invitation to attend Romanist services? In a suburb of London a lady was lately distributing small books amongst girls. Let our friends be on the look-out, and let ministers seize the opportunity to enlighten their people.

Here is a specimen of the kind of thing that some High-Church clergymen teach the pupils in their Church schools. In this instance it is the Rector of Canton, Cardiff, who has supplied the teachers with a catechism, from which the following is an extract :—

Question.—Who alone is the true ruler of Christ's Church in this diocese?

Answer.—The Bishop of Llandaff.

Question.—How are we to know when men are true or real pastors?

Answer.—They must be priests or deacons ordained by the Bishop or Chief Pastor.

Question.—Are Dissenting ministers ordained?

Answer.—No.

Question.—Would it, then, be right to join any of their congregations?

Answer.—No; it would be very foolish and wrong.

It would be bad enough if this were done at private expense, but worse when it is carried on partly at the expense of the State. Nonconformists, for example, should not have to help to keep up a system which makes such an outrageous attack on their cherished religious principles.

Irish Roman Catholics are working hard for the endowment of a Catholic University, on the ground that because Trinity College, Dublin, is a mixed University, therefore it is really a Protestant institution. If this argument is valid, then it would be legitimate for each and all the religious denominations to demand a University of their own, to be carried on at the public expense. The idea is preposterous. In this country exclusiveness has been effectually done away with at our centres of learning, and anyone has a right to be educated at our Universities irrespective of class or creed. It would be a thoroughly retrograde step to endow a sectarian establishment in Ireland, and we hope the Government will be strong and just enough to refuse so unreasonable a request.

We cannot but wish well to the "Society of Reformers." It numbers some 380 members, drawn from various professions. They are men of good education, who on one occasion have broken the law of their country and have paid the penalty, but who now are seeking to rehabilitate their moral character. There are thousands of good men who have once sinned, and whose whole lives have been thus blighted. The horror of the thing is shown by the fact that even within the more hopeful circle of this Society no less than ten members have died by their own hand during the last twelve months, being no longer able to bear up under the scowl of an unsympathetic world. This is a sphere of work where the followers of Jesus should be of some assistance.

An evening paper has been calling attention to the military temper of our times as evidenced by the manner in which the present struggle is being carried on between masters and men. It has also pointed to the utterances of some of our public men, who insist on the necessity of our country holding foreign markets. Our newspapers are very generally combative, not to say aggressive, in tone, while the representatives of "the services" seem bent on driving us into conscription. Again and again has that word been heard lately. Unless we stand very firm, we shall be carried into this European vortex of militarism.

The manners of the rising generation do not always commend themselves to older people, and it will be good news to many to learn that the Children's Guild of Courtesy is enjoying increasing success. Many schoolmasters and teachers are joining heartily in the propaganda, and teaching its principles to their scholars. Every member of the Guild is asked to read the rules once a week, which aim at instilling thoughtfulness, courtesy, and unselfishness of behaviour. These rules indicate how to behave "at school," "at play," "in the street," etc Here is an example :—

In the street: Do not push or run against people. Do not chalk on doors, walls or gates. Do not throw stones or destroy property. Do not throw orange peel or make slides on the pavement. Do not make fun of old or crippled people. Be particularly courteous to foreigners and strangers. Everywhere: Be sure to say "please" and "thank you!" Always show care, pity, and consideration for animals and birds, and do not stand quietly by while others wilfully illuse them.

The public may not be able fully to judge whether or not the Aerated Bread Company underpays its waitresses, but it has a right to know why the shareholders at their meeting hissed down one of their members who wanted to have some authoritative information on the subject. He has since published an outline of the suppressed speech, which, in the interests of humanity and fairness, ought to have been heard. At the close of it he would have said :—

I suppose a certain amount of cowardice is to be expected from a body of proprietors who rather glory in the meanness of employing (or intending to employ, for the success of the scheme is not perfect) no girls excepting those who are being actually supported by their parents, and whose 10s. to 12s. a week is not meant to be a living wage, because they have something else to live on. Truly the girl who lives at home with her parents, and works for a wage which would mean starvation to a girl who has to support herself entirely on it, and thus keeps down the standard, has something to answer for.

Say rather the Company that employs her has a good deal to answer for. No doubt many a girl is really better off, physically and morally, living at home with a wage of 10s. or 12s. than supporting herself on twice that sum. But she and her parents, not the company, ought to benefit by it. And it may not be possible for competing companies to make any such rule. What then? The girl without a home in London must perforce receive the same wage. And if she cannot live on it, what then? Such questions should not have to be asked of a company whose dividend is over 30 per cent.

The paltry rewards and mean acknowledgments given to poor, honest people who have restored lost valuable property, are something to make one feel ashamed. "Thank you; you are a very honest boy"! was the acknowledgment recently of a man who had dropped a parcel containing £55 in gold, and to whom the boy returned it intact. The sorters at a London wharf, where dust and refuse are deposited, got for restoring cheques, in value from £3 up to £40, the mean reward of two or three shillings in each case. A dividend warrant, worth £27, obtained five shillings. A guinea was given to the finder of a demand note for £1000, and five shillings to the finder of a promissory note for £700. Evidently the owners of these lost moneys believe that honesty is its own reward. Why should they not regard their loss and the return of it as an opportunity of befriending the finders?

We were much pleased in passing through Germany the other day to meet with Herr Ernst Röttger, of Cassel, and to learn from him the large circulation of several evangelical and evangelistic periodicals. He gave us the following list :—Frohe Botschaft (or, Joyful Message) (ten copies for a penny); Sonntagsbote, 32,500 (2s. a year); Nachbar, 145,000 (ditto); Christenbote, 52,000 (1s. 7d.); Stutt. Sonntagsblatt 135,000 (ditto); Berliner Sonntagsblatt, 320,000 (ditto); Stöcker's Sermons, 125,000 copies.

We are glad to see that the East London Hospital for Children is to have a Convalescent Home. This great work has grown from a small seed. In the early sixties there was a sympathetic student of the London Hospital named Heckford. Noticing the slight attention paid to sick children in the poverty-stricken East, where children are regarded too often in the light of a curse, he in 1868 opened a hospital for them, and carried it on at his own expense. But as the work grew it became too much for his means, and he had to appeal to the public for help. He was on the verge of closing it at one time, but that very night some unknown person sent him £1000. Last year there were no less than 1496 patients. Now the small convalescents will be drafted off to "dear little Bognor" to complete the restoration which the hospital has begun. It is grand work this, done for the children.

We have heard before of cruel experiments being performed on lunatics in American asylums, but Professor Sanarelle goes a step further than this. He has been inoculating healthy human beings at the quarantine station in the Island of Flores with yellow fever poison. This is how he describes his result :—

The fever, the congestion, the hæmorrhage, the vomit, the headache, the jaundice, the delirium, the final collapse—in fine, all that conjunction of symptoms which constitutes the basis of the diagnosis of yellow fever—I have seen unrolled before my eyes, thanks to the potent influence of the yellow fever poison made in my laboratory.

We should think that the man who can look on and describe the effects of his own cruelty in this cold-blooded fashion is rapidly qualifying for a quarantine where he will be safely guarded from perpetrating such diabolical experiments even upon himself.

The Priest and the School.

ARE our Churches fully alive to the gravity of the present educational crisis? The Romanists and the Romanising clergy are determined to "capture" the schools for their own sectarian uses. Dr. Vaughan is fighting for "competent Catholic teachers for every Catholic child" at the cost of the people.

Cossey, a village in Norfolk with a thousand inhabitants, is the seat of a rich Roman Catholic family, and is supplied with the services of two Roman Catholic priests and three nuns. The only elementary day school in the place is a Roman Catholic one, "with nuns for its teachers and a Catholic management, headed by a priest." To this school, says Mr. Saxby, a Nonconformist pastor, "Church of England, Methodist, and Baptist parents alike must send their children for education." An appeal to the Education Department resulted in Mr. Saxby's being told that the accommodation being sufficient for all children, another school would be considered unnecessary, and therefore could not obtain the Government grant. A Nonconformist school stands in the village, but has been closed for years. A system of education which exposes children to such influences as are dominant in this Romanist school at Cossey wants reforming. Not the religion of the Board Schools, but that of the so-called Voluntary schools wants attention.

Representing the clerical party are "Catholic" candidates, "Church" candidates, "Definite Christian teaching" candidates—that is, sectarian candidates, primarily pledged to prefer some private or sectarian institution to the education of the young citizens of the Metropolis. In the interests alike of education and of justice we must oppose this.

The late C. H. Spurgeon said twenty-one years ago (as Dr. Clifford points out): "We have no doubt that you, in common with ourselves, have observed the growing audacity of the clerical party at the School Board. They no longer attempt to conceal their irreconcilable opposition to its policy, and their desire to arrest the noble work in which it is engaged...We have all been agreed from the first as to the necessity of keeping national schools free from sectarian control. This is what the London School Board has done. It has faithfully carried out the wishes of the constituencies by establishing a system of Biblical teaching which has proved to be effective without being open to the slightest suspicion of partiality...We would only add that, the present crisis is one of serious urgency, and is rendered all the more so by the fact that the party which is seeking ascendency on the Board is that which is seeking to undermine the Protestantism of the Anglican Church."

It is not, with us, a question of Moderate or Progressive, Church or Nonconformist—all we urge (as we do most earnestly) is that our readers, to whatever body of Evangelical Christians they belong, should arouse themselves and their fellow-voters, in view of the election on the 25th inst., to support those candidates who desire to maintain the "Compromise" which for twenty-five years has worked so well. Let us "retain the Bible, but keep out creeds and priests."

"Recent Facts on Armenia," by Rev. Krikor Behesnilian, is a thoughtful booklet on a subject which is still engaging many minds. In addition to a brief inquiry into the condition and prospects of Armenia, the pages tell of work done by Mr. Behesnilian and his wife for the alleviation of distress, and give some deeply interesting letters from the seat of massacre and persecution. (4d. From the Author, Exeter Hall, Strand). Mr. Behesnilian has also issued a financial report, acknowledging help received during the past two years from friends in Great Britain.

The Coming London Mission.

THE arrangements for the united four months' mission in London, to be conducted by Rev. John McNeill, are making satisfactory progress. We are glad to be able to state that the Mission will commence on Sabbath, January 16. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon and other ministers in South London have given Mr. McNeill a warm invitation to conduct a two weeks' mission in that district. The meetings are fixed to be held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle every evening (except Saturday) for twelve days, from Jan. 16 onwards. It is earnestly hoped that district visitors and other Christian friends throughout that populous neighbourhood will make the special effort known among the masses of the people as far as possible, so as to secure the presence of those not accustomed to attend any religious service.

On every week-day, except Saturday, during the same fortnight, Mr. McNeill will address noon meetings at the City Temple, Holborn-viaduct. These will be specially designed for business men who are able to spare an hour or part of an hour in the middle of the day. Dr. Joseph Parker and his deacons gave very ready and cordial permission to use the City Temple for these assemblies; Dr. Parker kindly agreeing to relinquish his own Thursday noon meetings during these two weeks.

Further arrangements for the succeeding weeks are being made, and will be duly announced. May we repeat the suggestion that all who are interested in this enterprise for the evangelization of our great city will be unremitting in prayer to God for a rich blessing on the work, and in preparatory effort of every possible and desirable kind.

The Filching of the Sabbath.

REV. Hugh Price Hughes spoke out very strongly last Sunday afternoon upon Sabbath observance. We hear a great deal about the eight hours' day, he said, and we are now in the midst of a most disastrous conflict, which turns partly on the demand of the working-classes for more leisure; but if men are going on fighting to the bitter end for an hour or two more on the week-day, what unspeakable fools they will be if they sacrifice the seventh day! Young men who spent all their Sunday mornings on bicycles, and all their Sunday evenings with Mrs. Chant in the Oxford Music Hall, are not likely to be of great service to God or man.

He disclaimed being "a puritanical Sabbatarian," and until now he had never discussed the Sunday question, but when Mrs. Chant appeared a few days ago in the Oxford Music Hall he was aroused. When such a woman as Mrs. Ormiston Chant, of all persons living, should have gone to give her episcopal blessing to a concert in the Oxford Music Hall on Sunday night he realised that what all the promoters of lectures and music on Sunday had always protested against was about to take place. There were four Sunday societies in London, and with one accord they emphatically declared that they protested against the opening of theatres and music-halls, and above all things they declared that nothing must ever be done on a "commercial basis."

Mr. Hughes then proceeded to discuss what he called the "dodging of the law at the Albert Hall and Queen's Hall by giving free admission, and then making people pay if they wanted to sit down, but pointed out that the concerts at the Oxford constituted a new departure indeed, because, in the first place, they were promoted by the manager of the place, and secondly, because the charges were not reduced to a minimum, as much as 3s. and 5s. being charged for the best seats. Whatever might be the case elsewhere, clearly this was a commercial undertaking for profit, which Lord Hobhouse's Bill would make absolutely illegal. If the Oxford was allowed to run a commercial business for its own profit, every theatre and music-hall in London must be allowed to do the same, and the deluge would be upon them. He protested in the name of the 150,000 people employed in this industry in London, that they ought not to tolerate so dangerous an innovation."

Before this issue reaches our readers, the decision of the Licensing Committee of the London County Council will have been made known.

Vested interests and shareholders' dividends are not the only things to be considered, and no decision of the Council will change the law, which is the only protection at present afforded to the already hard-worked members of the "profession." It is not so long ago that the following memorial to a select committee of the House of Lords was signed by upwards of 734 persons connected with the dramatic and musical professions against any alteration of the law:—

"We, the undersigned members of the dramatic and musical professions, and managers of halls, theatres, entertainments, concerts, etc., desire to express the hope that the law which prohibits the opening of places of amusement and entertainment for money payment on the Sunday may be upheld, so that the 500,000 persons employed in the amusement industry may be protected from the burden of Sunday labour."

This sufficiently indicates the feeling of those upon whom these innovations most heavily press. Those who are willing to use their influence against them, should communicate with the Secretary of the Lord's Day Rest Association, 13, Bedford-row, W.C.

DEAR SIR,—Permit me to add to your article of last week a few facts.

A well-known secular society, which used to arrange for one Sunday excursion, has recently organised, on an average, seven or eight on each Lord's Day. On one Sunday in June it took 20,000 people to one seaside resort alone.

It is also making prodigious strides during the winter months this season. Until recently it had one Sunday afternoon lecture, at Langham Hall; now it has secured six London town-halls, besides other buildings—in several of which the Gospel was formerly preached—and the Queen's Hall.

The question of the music-halls opening on Sunday evenings will be definitely settled at the licensing meeting of the County Council, about the 12th inst. A great number of "the profession" were said to be present at the recent concerts, and there is no doubt a big effort will be made to legalise the opening of these places on Sunday evenings somehow.

In the North of England things are as bad; in Newcastle-on-Tyne a syndicate has a number of halls running, open for professional "sacred concerts," at which, it is computed, at least 14,000 persons attend. The large Albert Hall at Sheffield is used for similar purposes; and some well-known brethren in the evangelistic world are saying, "We have ourselves to blame." The above two towns are typical of others. It appears that some of the P.S.A.'s in the North have engaged star artists of the professional world to sing for them, the result being the professional world have seen their way to earn more money on similar lines.

Is the Church of God alive to the position? How is she meeting this tidal wave of worldliness and Sunday desecration? Last Sunday week a well-known Nonconformist minister preached from the subject, "The Problems of Greater Britain": and this on Lord's Day evening. At Forest Gate a Methodist church was given over to the secretary of a trades union, who discoursed on "The Eight Hours Struggle" on the same evening. Surely, instead of the Church being sanctified by the Holy Spirit, it is being secularised by the spirit of the age.

The problem soon will be, "Whence shall we get our Sunday congregations?" See the tens of thousands who pour out into the country on Sunday mornings on bicycles. Look at the thousands who flock to a Sunday trades demonstration, whether in the Park or Trafalgar-square! Read the inscription on a banner I saw carried into the Park recently: "NO MASTER, NEITHER GOD NOR MAN."

Last Sunday week the Socialists in Trafalgar-square had a banner on which were the words: "WHETHER THERE BE ONE GOD OR THREE, NO GOD OR 20,000, WE WANT..." Are not these signs of the times? Surely God is concerned about these things! Are we?—Faithfully yours,

The Testimony of Jesus Concerning Himself.

BY DR. JAMES CULROSS.

NATHANAEL.

ONE of the earliest disciples of Jesus was Philip, a fisherman or peasant, of the town of Bethsaida. It is noted, "Jesus findeth Philip," which suggests a seeking, and not a mere lighting upon. In turn, Philip findeth Nathanael—and so the gathering goes on—and tells him, "We have found Him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." "Can any good thing come out of Nazareth?" asks Nathanael, giving voice to the repute in which Nazareth was generally held, and with a suggestion of incredulity in his tone. Philip simply answers, "Come and see." Jesus saw Nathanael coming to Him, and saith of him, "Behold, an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile!" What a simple and noble character! In calling him an "Israelite," Jesus describes him not merely as a member of the chosen people—as one might say a true Englishman—but as a man of prayer, a prince with God, a wrestler who prevails.

It is customary to apply the name to any simple honest man with nothing in him—"a perfect Nathanael." But the description, as used by Jesus, goes far deeper, and takes us back to that mysterious night of wrestling in the story of the ancient patriarch, when he went in Jacob and came out Israel. The ancient story is full of significance. Jacob had been many years an exile from his old home. His unscrupulous scheming had landed him in banishment; he is scheming his way back again.

The one thing he fears is the wrath of his injured brother Esau, from whom he had stolen the paternal blessing. He sent messengers to sound his brother, and they return with tidings that Esau is on the way to meet him accompanied with four hundred men. What can this portend? Is Esau still nursing his purpose of revenge? And will he now carry it out? The dreaded hour of meeting is fast nearing, and Jacob's apprehensions are excited to the highest pitch. He plans out the most prudent course to take, and sends his company across the brook Jabbok to which they have come, while he himself remains behind. It is night, and he is left alone, under the constellations of the Syrian sky, which fling their "quivering fire" on foliage and rippling stream.

Suddenly, without warning, he finds himself in the grasp of an unknown antagonist, and a contest ensues which lasts till daybreak. Years of shepherd hardihood had knit his muscles into those of an athlete, but he gains no advantage. Strength seemed matched with strength, and skill with skill, and all night long they wrestle together, apparently in silence, till the unknown assailant touches the sinew on which the wrestler chiefly depends, and at once Jacob is disabled, and his strength is gone. Having disabled Jacob, the unknown opponent says, "Let me go, for the day breaketh." But Jacob recognises that this is no mortal antagonist in whose grasp he is held. His self-confidence is gone, but like a helpless suppliant he clings to his conqueror and cries out with the boldness of all-conquering faith, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." Here is prayer in its nakedness—no petition which it is "proper" to present; no finely-turned phrase that charms the ear; no set of words that once burned and glowed in every syllable, but is now cold as the ashes of last year's fire; but the whole soul tense with eager purpose. "What is thy name?" and he answered "Jacob," heeler, supplanter, schemer, trickster. And he answered, "Thy name shall no more be called Jacob, but Israel: for as a prince hast thou power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." His acknowledgment of defeat is victory. It is to this night of wrestling that Jesus alludes when He calls Nathanael an "Israelite." Here is —his might in prayer. Nathanael's first feeling is of wonder. He knows that Jesus has described him truly, though they have never met before. "Whence knowest Thou me?" he asks in astonishment. And the Lord answers, "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig tree, I saw thee." What Nathanael was doing there we are not told. It was something secret, something possibly in which his Israel-character came out, and to which there had been no human witness—some solemn transaction with God, conducted, as he thought, in solitude and secresy.

THE BASIS OF THE MAN'S CHARACTER

But Jesus lays his finger on the thing; and Nathanael knows that Jesus has seen him, not only his attitud under the tree, but what was passing in his breast. He has looked into the region of his thoughts and emotions; He has penetrated with his glance into the depths and recesses of his being. One might have imagined that when Jesus described him as an Israelite indeed, a discerner of character may have read the man's character in his face; for character does reveal itself in the very lineaments of the countenance; or that he had known the manly reputation: or that He had made a fortunate guess, just hitting off the man's true character by what we call chance; but we cannot in any such way account for his words now: "Before that Philip called thee, when thou wast under the fig-tree, I saw thee." These words would show to Nathanael that he was in the presence of one who read his heart and history.

This knowledge is too wonderful for the man, and he instantly exclaims, "Rabbi, Thou art the Son of God; Thou art the King of Israel." How much meaning Nathanael puts into the names we do not know; but obviously he pronounces Him the Messiah. It is in this way that the Bible proves itself to me as the Word of God. It knows my secrets, as Coleridge expresses it, "more than all other books put together, finds me at greater depths of my being, and whatever finds me brings with it an irresistible evidence of its having proceeded from the Holy Spirit."

Nathanael is an Israelite "INDEED"—not in appearance and pretence only, but in reality. The man was surrounded by Pharisaic and Sadducean shams—was living amidst painted and hollow pretences; but he himself was true to the very core of his being—"an Israelite indeed."

An Israelite indeed, "in whom there was no guile." The first Israel had guile, and even that night of wrestling did not take it wholly out of him. Nathanael is an Israelite without the guile—simple, sincere, upright, true, with just such a character as a godly man should have. I believe all this is mentioned by the Evangelist, not because of the light thrown on Nathanael as because of the light which it sheds on the Lord. It shows Him to be the searcher of hearts, who needeth not that any should testify of man, but He knoweth what is in man.

"Because I said unto thee," Jesus adds, "I saw thee under the fig-tree, believest thou? Verily, verily, I say unto you (with allusion to Jacob's Bethel vision), Henceforth ye shall see heaven opened, and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of man." Recall the ancient story. Jacob has just fled from his home to avoid the revenge of his brother, who has threatened to take his life. Coming at sunset to Luz, with bitter recollections and dark forebodings, he prepares to spend the night under the open sky. Choosing a convenient spot, he arranges the stones of the place for his bed, and lies down to rest, tired, overworn, and heavy-hearted, with a stone for his pillow. Laid on his uncurtained couch, under the faint glimmer of the stars, and, shutting his weary lids, he speedily loses sense of the outer world. One of the last objects on which his eyes would rest in the starlight was the outline of the neighbouring hills, which, seen from that spot in profile as the strata crop out, appear like a mighty stairway rising toward the sky. The scene indeed is the "stuff" out of which his dreams are woven. In sleep it seemed to his tranced imagination as if a gigantic ladder rose from earth to the opened heaven, with angel forms moving up and down upon it, while God Himself stood above, benignant, gracious, and speaks in undeserved loving-kindness to the poor slumberer on his stony couch beneath, renewing to him the great promise made to Abraham and to Isaac.

This vision is what we see now under the Christian dispensation. Sin had apparently cut this earth off and sundered it from heaven. But now that Christ has come, here beneath is the earth from which sin has shut off the light, which it has saddened, desolated, cursed, whose Eden it has withered, whose primeval melody it has turned into a wail, and which it has sundered from the heavens. But looking upward, grace has opened these golden gates that sin had shut, and what we see now is an opened heaven above, a needy earth beneath, and Jesus Christ the medium of communication between the two. Through Him, the blessings of eternal goodness come down to men; through Him celestial visits and celestial visitants come down to earth; and through Him our prayers and praises and thanksgivings rise up to heaven. He is the Mediator between God and man, in whose person heaven and earth are re-united.

This low world, then, in which we dwell, is not cut off and sundered from the heavens. They are united in fellowship and love; and Jesus Christ is the Mediator. Through Him our prayers, our thanksgivings, our songs rise up to heaven; through Him heaven comes down to earth.

Women and Purity.—The November number of The Shield, the organ of the Federation for the Abolition of the State Regulation of Vice (17, Tothill-street, Westminster, S.W.), has a very powerful letter from Mrs. Josephine Butler addressed to the members of the Purity department of the W.W.C.T.U. in America, of which she is at present the president.

Invalid Ladies.—The annual report of the "Villa Helvetia" Home of Rest for Ladies at Mentone shows what is being done for fifteen invalid ladies. The Home is intended for young gentlewomen of limited means, or who have their livelihood to earn, and who are suffering from delicate health, or from the early stages of what might prove consumption, if not taken in time. It is not intended to offer a merely temporary alleviation to confirmed invalids, but to be the means, with the blessing of God, of restoring to active life those whose health is beginning to give way. There is one trying thing about all work, and that is the ever recurring need of funds. The sum paid by the ladies for their board being too small to cover the expenses, the balance must be raised. The Life that Wins.

The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he that is wise winneth souls. — Proverbs xi. 30 (Revised Version).

THE Revised version of this much-quoted verse supplies us with a profounder view of life than does the Authorised. According to the latter, the man who wins souls is wise—he is wise because he does such a thing, it is success in his enterprise which proves his wisdom. But the Revised leads us to a rock principle—the wise man will win souls—he will do it because he is wise—his wisdom is the leading force of his activity.

The two parts of the verse cannot be severed, and their joint issue amounts to this, that the life of the good man becomes a means of life to others—he is a tree of life, and by that life he wins men. The point is that it is the life of a man that "tells"—it is the sermon—it makes conquests. There are tens of thousands of people to-day in the Kingdom of God who took the first step in that direction in which Christ Jesus was manifestly reigning.

A person's life either enhances or discounts all his speeches and professions. The most perfect orthodoxy, the purest eloquence, the extremest enthusiasm, cannot outweigh the influence of a man's life whether it be good or bad. If the man's life be good and Christlike, then his creed and his enthusiasm glow with beautiful light; if, on the other hand, the life be bad while the creed is good, then the doctrine suffers shame and contempt.

It is easy to drive men away both from ourselves and the truth. It is easy to stumble them and cause them to question the reality of everything. But to win them! ah! this is the thing.

Behind the word "win" there is a history. Souls are astray, from God and from virtue. Some of them are uninterested in the highest things of life, and some of them are positively hostile. How are they to be restored? Not by whip, or rack or interdict, or force of any kind, for these things conquer but the body, and we want the soul. No! they must be won. It is a hunter's word—that word, "winneth." The man who lays his bait, and bides his time, and resorts to many schemes to entrap his prey, may teach us from his coarse ways some lessons in the higher and more merciful art of alluring men for God and his church. "Tact" characterises the sportsman, "tact" must characterise the man who would win shy souls for our Lord. And if "winneth" may also be pressed to indicate the art of a lover in gaining for himself the object of his affections, then we may again learn some lessons. Sterne's remarks on courtship may with propriety be lifted into a higher plane and serve as a lesson in soul-winning. "Courtship," says he, "consists of a number of quiet attentions, not so pointed as to alarm: not so vague as to be misunderstood." The application is obvious.

Now, we are to win men, and we are to win men by our lives. Let us proceed to ask further,

WHAT KIND OF LIFE IS IT THAT WINS?

This verse answers our question. First, the life must be really good. "Righteous" is a synonym for the sum total of all right relations; and in the Christian sense it indicates a person who is good because the righteous Saviour dwells in him and communicates his Divine life to him. Etymologically, the name God is only an abbreviation of our "good," for God is the Supreme good, and the "good" man is the one in whom God dwells. Transparency, sterling honesty, truthful speech, and generous action, all saturated with the Spirit of our Divine Lord—these make up the good man. And it is this that wins men. Mere professions of these things will not win; the things themselves will. When the Christ-life is allowed to dominate us utterly, penetrating into all the crevices of our nature, then shall we become living magnets, attracting men, not to ourselves, but to our Master.

Secondly, the life must be natural—it must be "fruit," that is, an inner life made manifest in an artless and consistent manner. It is quite possible for real goodness to catch a false glow from the lights which surround it, and thus convey a false impression. How many really entirely by the affectation of a special tone of voice which becomes at last the mark of a certain type of persons! Or, certain phrases are employed with annoying regularity, the only result of which is to irritate. Where real piety exists there is no need to resort to artificial ways or stilted speech. The more truly natural we are the better will it be for ourselves and for others. The life which enters into and dominates ours must be the life of our Divine Lord, but the mould into which it is poured must be our own. God never destroys any person's individuality. He sanctifies it. It is a fatal thing to try and model our devotion upon that of another life. What suits that other person will probably make us look ridiculous. We shall not win souls by an unreal life—the soul we seek will penetrate our disguise and avoid us. Be yourself, but yourself in God, and not in the habit of another man.

Thirdly, the life must be attractive—it is to be a tree of life, whose fruit is tempting. Attractiveness and naturalness are often divorced in real practice, for the attractiveness is superficial and therefore unnatural; but between themselves simply there is no real antagonism, for attractiveness is strictly only naturalness in the sunshine. Now we know many good people who are really good, and quite natural, but they are not attractive, and the reason is that they

DO NOT LIVE IN THE SUNSHINE.

Is it not the same with men as with trees and flowers? Their health and naturalness content you even in storm and shadow, but when the golden light of the sun plays upon them they become fascinating. Or, abruptly to change the figure, the difference between this man and that man inviting us to Christ is the difference between good hot food served up on cold plates, with dirty surroundings, and the same food presented to us in the most attractive way. It is the way in which we do our work that makes it repel or attract. And attractiveness is not simply a matter of temperament; the most sombre person may become bright and winsome if he or she lives in the light of the love of God.

Then, lastly, the life must be wise. It is easy to see how a combination of the first three qualities may fail of their object unless there is added to them this fourth—wisdom. For wisdom is the skilful manipulation of whatever powers we possess, so that they shall neither scare nor hinder souls.

Circumstances have to be considered, as also men's peculiarities. Our light may be strong, but the eyes of our brother may be weak, and we must be careful. An ill-considered word has frequently destroyed all chances of winning a man. Yet we must not be dismayed at the delicacy of our task, else we shall accomplish nothing at all. Thank God, there is one great holdfast presented to us. "He is made unto us... wisdom." And "if any man lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth liberally to all, and upbraideth not."

"IS MINE THE KIND OF LIFE THAT WINS?"

It may be, for in strict union with the "Tree of Life," each one of us may become a veritable tree of life.

We owe it to win men if we ourselves have been won. We owe it to our Lord, whose glory we must ever seek first. We owe it to ourselves in the way of gratitude. We owe it to men, who without Christ must perish. We owe it to the world; for every soul won for God means one channel of sin closed, and one other avenue of good opened, for God and men.

Soul-Winning.

Under the auspices of the Liverpool Town Mission, a very helpful conference on this subject was held on Saturday week, in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A., Mount Pleasant, Mr. Thos. Matheson presiding. Rev. H. W. Bainbridge, vicar of St. Chrysostom's, in giving the opening address drew special attention to the lessons to be learned from the account of the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch. Among other points the following are well worth noting: (a) The Man, Philip. (1) Full of the Holy Ghost (Acts vi. 5). (2) Freed from prejudice: he, a Jew, was willing to go even to Samaria. (3) In close communion with God (Acts viii. 26), and hence (4) ready for service "he arose and went." (b) His Method. (1) He took nothing for granted: "Understandest thou what thou readest?" There are no born saints. (2) He found out where the man was, and "preached unto him Jesus." (3) He put the sacrament or ordinance of baptism in its right place. The eunuch was moved and wished to be baptized. Philip spoke the straight, faithful word: "If thou believest with all thine heart thou mayest."

The other speakers were Mr. J. B. Rochfort, of the London Evangelisation Society; Mr. Peter Whytock, who for several years has laboured in the valley of the Congo, and Mr. Alexander Armstrong, superintendent of the Liverpool Town Mission.

This is the first of a series of such conferences to be held on the last Saturday of each month, and believers are requested to pray that each may be a season of help and refreshing. The subject for November is "Walking with God."

IN MEMORIAM.

Speak in tender tones her name,
Who of high and noble birth,
Rich in title, wealth, and fame,
Blest the poorest of the earth.

She who o'er the suffering bent,
With a mother's tender care,
Succour to the helpless lent,
Scattering sunshine everywhere.

She who from her high degree,
To the weak, the poor, oppressed,
Stooped with deeds of charity,
Breathing love and joy and rest.

She for whom sad tears are shed
By her royal crownéd kin;
She who others Christward led,
Lived and loved the lost to win.

She who has love's guerdon won;
She who heaven's Te Deum sings;
She who hears the sweet well done
Of the gracious King of kings.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

By PASTOR THEO. MONOD.

II.

IN the prayer which our Lord gave to his disciples the very first word is "Our Father." And that word is the keynote to the whole prayer. It sheds its tender light over every petition. "Hallowed be thy name." Whose name? The name of the Father. "Thy Kingdom come." Whose kingdom? The kingdom of the Father. "Thy will be done." Whose will? The will of the Father. In fact, Christ has taught us, not so much that the King is a father, as that the Father is a king. I do not think it is a distinction without a difference. I imagine that if you met upon the threshold of a royal palace the king's own child, he might say to you, "The king is my father." But it is more likely that he would say, "My father is the king." Our Father is King, and the will of the Father must rule the universe.

When Christ was about to leave this world He said, "I am not yet ascended to my Father: but go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and to your Father, to my God and your God." He said "My Father" even before He said "My God"; He said "Your Father" before He said "Your God."

How can we find the Father, then? "Through Him (Christ) we have access by one Spirit to the Father." "I am the Way. No man cometh to the Father but by Me." He is the way from the Father to us, and therefore the way from us to the Father. He is the way from heaven to earth, and therefore the way from earth to heaven. He is the ladder that first reaches down and then reaches up, leading us back to God. "Behold we have seen the heavens opened and the angels of God ascending and descending upon the Son of Man." Here, then, is

THE MISSION OF CHRIST.

He has come from the Father to lead us back to the Father; and no man can find the Father but by Him. If there were another way to God than Christ, who can imagine for a moment that God would have chosen—or even would have allowed—such a way as that to be opened, at such a cost? If that way was opened, it is enough to prove that there is none other.

Christ has come from the Father; He has taught us about the Father. What a blessed story; and an easy study, if we will but give time and thought and heart and prayer to it.

But teaching us about the Father was not enough. He has revealed the Father. "Believest thou not that I am in the Father and the Father in Me? He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." Therefore, when we study the character of Christ; when we get to know more of Him; when we not only listen to his words, but consider his ways, and what the spirit was that manifested itself in his sayings and doings under this or that circumstance—and that opens great vistas before us in the readings of the Gospels, does it not?—let us ask ourselves what the circumstances were; how we would have felt under them, and if we would have been likely to feel and do what Christ felt and did.

Take one instance. Christ and his disciples were over-weary with their work, and He said to them, "Come into a desert place and rest awhile." You remember the incident. When they reached the desert place "to rest awhile," they found that the great multitude had gone round the corner of the lake, and there they were again. How would any one of us have felt, going, say, for a few days' vacation, with tired body and brain, to find before us the very people we had just left? As to Christ, He was moved with compassion. He saw the multitude as sheep without a shepherd; so He taught them many things, and fed them too, lest they should faint by the way. That is the heart of Christ; that is the heart of the Father.

But that was not enough. He has reconciled us to the Father. He has done that which had to be done. The Father has run to meet us in the very person of Jesus Christ. And now we come to you as ambassadors for Christ, and we say: If God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing unto them their trespasses, we beseech you in the name of Christ, Be ye reconciled to God.

Having reconciled us to God, Christ draws us to the Father. The Father also draws us to the Son. Who of us, looking back to our earliest impressions, has not of the Father to the Son? And, again, the Son shows us the Father. Not only does He lead us, but He goes Himself before us. What is his coming into the world but a coming from the Father? What is his going from the world but a going to the Father? He does more. He not only goes before us, but He comes again from the Father. "Another Comforter"—not the same, and yet the same. "I will come to you"; and He comes in "the Comforter." He comes on a new mission, on a greater mission, on a better mission for us. "It is expedient for you that I go away." And now, at last, in the Holy Spirit, He fully unites us with the Father. His own prayer is answered. We have accepted and received the gift of God. We are one with the Father, with the Son, and with the Eternal Spirit. Meanwhile let us look at the Christ of God. Let us see Him glorifying the Father, while the Father glorifies the Son. "I have glorified Thee upon the earth; I have finished the work which Thou gavest Me to do. And now glorify thy Son, that thy Son may glorify Thee." Let this be our aim, our prayer, the one purpose of all our meetings—that we being united to Christ shall glorify Christ, and with Him glorify the Father, by the Holy Ghost.

Religion and Godliness.

THERE are five things that are disliked by those who are only nominal Christians—(1) holiness, (2) spirituality, (3) unworldliness, (4) sound doctrine, (5) unselfishness. Charles Kingsley drew a distinction between religion and godliness. A religious person may be a person devoted to a round of sacred services, and to a particular form of belief. He may be a religious Mohammedan, or Hindoo, or Roman Catholic, or Protestant. The Bible puts a prefix before mere religion, and calls that of which God approves "pure religion."

But the word "godliness" goes beyond external service, and that is the word the Bible uses to describe a true saint. External service does not provoke hatred; godliness always does. The hatred may be secret or open. It may take the form of indifference, coldness, contempt, ridicule, or it may be manifested in some cruel kind of persecution. No hatred is so bitter as religious hatred, and no hatred is so prolific in attempts to justify actions which are a disgrace to humanity.

CANON MCCORMICK.

Devon Colporteurs.—A conference was recently held in the Y.W.C.A. Institute, Torquay, of the colporteurs of the Christian Colportage Association for England, when the whole of the eleven labouring in Devonshire assembled, with one from Falmouth, Cornwall, and another from Dulverton, in Somerset, besides a number of ladies and gentlemen associated with the superintendence of the work in the respective districts represented. The audiences were greatly impressed by the reports of work given by all the colporteurs who were present.

Hungry Children. — The report of "The Children's and Invalids' Dinner Table" states that last winter 2912 dinners, 568 pints of beef tea, 1625 pints of rice milk, and 6929 gallons of soup were served to destitute children and adults, while 1922 tickets for free admission to the benefits of the dinner and soup kitchen were sent to the dispensaries and schools in the neighbourhood, to be distributed amongst the sickly and destitute. The dinner table is being reopened for the season. It is earnestly hoped that this excellent charity will be as well supported as heretofore. The treasurer and secretary is Lady Thompson, 35, Wimpole-street, W.

An Appeal for Our Soldiers.

By ELLICE HOPKINS.

I HAVE been so long laid aside, "dead but not buriable," to use Tennyson's expressive phrase, that I sometimes wonder whether there are any left to remember me of my many faithful friends among the readers of THE CHRISTIAN. And yet I know there are many who never forget those who have fallen in leading—not a forlorn hope. There are no "forlorn hopes" under our great Captain; but a hope full of immortality, not to be realised, like all immortal things, without strenuous endeavour, and even the laying down of life itself.

I feel sure, therefore, that there are many who will respond to an earnest appeal I make for funds to carry out White Cross work among our soldiers. We have all been much distressed at the revelations made with regard to our Army in India. Deeply as I am opposed to any re-enacting of legislative measures which only strengthen the evil cause, while patching up some of the evil results, I do not think, in view of the terrible moral problem presented, we are at liberty to take only a negative attitude of opposition to these measures, without seeing that the true moral means for are put in force. I am convinced that much of the evil among our soldiers arises from a careless acquiescence in low traditions that still obtain in the Service—from want of thought rather than from want of heart and conscience. For the most part, they have never received any teaching on the subject of purity, beyond that conveyed in filthy jests and coarse jocularity. I have known a White Cross paper come as a perfect revelation to a man, and wring from him that saddest of all cries, "Oh, that I had seen it sooner—before it was too late."

Now, here we can all work. The White Cross League has undertaken to spread good sound teaching, both by the living voice and the written word, through the length and breadth of the Army, if we will supply them with the funds. One of the secretaries, Colonel Everitt, is himself a military man, the other has been a great worker among soldiers, and is much beloved by them; they are therefore in touch with all the best agencies for reaching both officers and men. Both are excellent speakers. The papers they will circulate are powerful appeals, such as I have often known change the whole course of a lifetime. A gift of £5 will enable us to reach a whole regiment; a gift of 5s. will enable us to appeal to some 200 men. Only let us realise what we owe our soldiers. Their real work is NOT TO KILL, BUT TO MAKE ALIVE.

It is they who set us a high standard of duty, who make the whole nation alive with heroism in its performance, and set us the example of obedience unto death in our spiritual warfare. Would to God we were as faithful to our King as they are in the service of their Queen!

Take but that one incident in the heroic assault of the almost impregnable position of Dargai by the Gordon Highlanders, when their piper fell shot through both ankles, but immediately righting himself he sat upon the ground amid a storm of bullets, and only blew upon his pipes a louder and more triumphant strain, to inspirit his comrades as they rushed past him up those heights of death to victory. Which of us, when we have fallen or been wounded in our fight with the world's evil, have lost no time in weak laments over our own pain and inaction, but have thought only of inspiriting those who are still left to fight the battle and win the heights?

Surely men who are capable of such heroism as this, or the more passive and still more difficult heroism shown in saving the women and children in the wreck of the "Warren Hastings," are capable of rising from the level of the animal to the height of true manhood. Surely we shall not grudge them a thank-offering for the splendid example of devotion to duty which they set us, or refuse to stretch out our hands to save them from their worst enemies, as they are ready to lay down their lives to save us from our national foes. Communications can be made to me, at my address, 46, Eaton Place, Brighton, or direct to Col. Everitt, office of the White Cross League, 7, Dean's Yard, Westminster.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, November 14.

"I am their inheritance....I am their possession."—Ezek. xliv. 28.

THESE injunctions for the priests, the Levites, that keep the charge of the sanctuary, are full of suggestion to those who have been made priests to God and the Father. It is for us to enter into the Holy Place, to come near his table to minister unto his Father, and to keep his charge (v. 16), always remembering that we need the sin-offering whenever we approach God (v. 27). However holy a man becomes, as the revelation of God's perfect holiness breaks upon him, there is need to shelter beneath the blood that was shed.

But when these features of our ministry have been realised, we have a right to look on God as our inheritance and possession. How wonderful that in a deep sense we may obtain supplies of Divine help from our fellowship with God. To follow out the literal comparison of an inheritance would suggest that as the peasant proprietors of Palestine raised crops on their lands, so we may obtain by prayer and faith out of the very heart of God all things that are needful for life and godliness.

We can possess God as the flower the sunlight, as a babe the mother. All his resources are placed at our disposal. The seed cast into the ground immediately begins to take from earth and air the nutriment of its life, and we have the same power of deriving from the infinite fulness of God all that shall make us pure and strong and gentle. The unsearchable riches of Christ are ours, the fulness which God the Father has been pleased to make dwell in Him is ours, all the resources which have been placed at his disposal in his ascension and eternal reign are ours. Alas for us that we draw on Him so little, and fail to possess our possessions.

MONDAY, November 15.

"And so shalt thou do the seventh day of the month, for every one that erreth, and for him that is simple."—Ezek. xlv. 20.

A very touching provision is here. When the services of the newly constituted temple were in full operation, and the priests were performing the usual rites in all the pomp and splendour of their ceremonial on the behalf of all righteous and godly souls, there was to be special thought of the erring and simple; for these two characters a special offering was made. Perhaps the erring were too hardened and the simple too obtuse to bring an offering for themselves, but they were not forgotten. The blood of the sin-offering was to be placed on the posts of the house and the posts of the gate of the inner court, each seventh day of the month, on their behalf.

Whenever we draw around the altar of God, whether in the home or church, we should remember the erring and simple. Whenever a family misses from its ranks one erring member, its prayer and thought are more directed towards that one than to those that have not gone astray. Does not the child who is deficient in its intellect attract more loving care than those who are able to care for themselves? Can it be otherwise in God's Home? Is it not for Peter that Jesus prays? And in so far as we enter into God's mind, we, too, shall care for the ignorant and those who are out of the way.

There is one further thought. The precious blood of Christ has been shed for all. Erring and simple ones alike are included in the supreme act of Calvary. There is room for all such in the Father's House, a warm welcome and ample provision. Like Samuel's words about David, so Heaven speaks of the most inconspicuous members of the Divine family, "Send and fetch him, for we will not sit down till he come hither."

TUESDAY, November 16.

"And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth."—Ezek. xlvi. 10.

These are regulations for ingress and egress in the temple which Ezekiel describes, but we may be pardoned for finding a true and tender thought of the new relationship of Christ and his own.

We too go in, to find pasture within the precincts of the fold, to worship in the Holy Place, to get refreshment and strength, as when Jonathan and David met in the wood and strengthened each other's hands in God. On the Lord's Day specially we go in where the seraphim stand around the sapphire throne. But of what avail is it to go in, unless our Prince accompanies us? His presence makes the feast; his company is as sunlight to nature; to hear his voice, to feel the touch of his hand, to sit in his near proximity, this is the bread divine of life.

But there are times when we must go forth, we must leave the transfiguration mount for the valley. When we go forth, our Prince and we shall go forth together (R.V.).

He never puts his sheep forth without going before them. He never thrusts us into the fight without preceding us. If we have to take the way of the Cross, we may always count on seeing Him going first, though we follow Him amazed.

No ascent so steep that we cannot see his form in advance; no stones so sharp that are not flecked with his blood; no waters so deep that He does not wade by our side. It is always the Prince and the subject together.

WEDNESDAY, November 17.

"Everything shall live whither the river cometh."—Ezek. xlvii. 9.

The great need of the world is life. Not more intelligence or activity, but life, "and fuller"—life more abundant, life in full tide, the life which is life indeed, the eternal life which was with the Father, and was manifested to the world. Of that life, this river is the emblem. It issues from the throne of God. It ever tends to become fuller and deeper. It becomes finally too mighty to be crossed, and wherever it comes everything lives, even though it be in the sea of death.

The course of the river of the prophet's vision was due east, to the Arabah, a desert waste, and the Dead Sea, in whose dark brackish waters no fish can live; but as even these are smitten by the crystal tide, a wonderful change takes place—they are healed, and begin to abound with fish, and fishers stand beside it from Engedi to En-eglaim.

This has been the course of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Ever since the river of the water of life issued from the Cross it has been deepening and extending, bringing life and beauty into the waste and barren wilderness of the world. The transforming effects of the Gospel on continents and islands, on vast multitudes of men, can be compared to nothing less than the fertilising effect of a mighty river. Flow on, great sea of God, until all the Dead Sea of sin is swept away before thy beneficent waters!

But chiefly we want this more abundant life within us. Are there no Dead Seas, no marshes, no waste stretches of desert sands? Is there not urgent need that the lengthening out of our days should see a deepening of the river until it rise beyond our depths. We need the ankle depths of walking to be exchanged for the knee-depths of praying, and these for the loin-depths of perfect purity, and these for the length, depth, and breadth, and height of the love of Christ that passeth knowledge.

THURSDAY, November 18.

"The Lord is there."—Ezek. xlviii. 35.

Ezekiel has in view an ideal city; whether in any material form it is to be realised we must wait to see. But this shall be its prominent characteristic, that God will be there. A great voice will be heard out of heaven saying, "Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God Himself shall be with them and be their God."

There is comfort in this for the sorrowful, because where God is, there can be neither sorrow, nor crying, nor pain. God shall wipe away all tears from off all faces. No cypress trees line the streets of that city; no dirge intrudes upon the glad ascription of praise; no sob or groan is possible

There is comfort for far dissevered friends, for where God is, the centre and goal and home, all his children meet. Back from distant lands and spheres they come, home from the school where they have been taught, back from the voyage, back from the military camp, back from the tour of exploration. The gates stand open to admit to his heart, and that heart is the rendezvous of those who have come out of every nation and kindred and tongue, and people, never again to be parted.

There is comfort for the doubting and perplexed. Here, night often reigns over the heart of Thomas and the mind of Mary. Truly devoted souls grope by candle-light, and sometimes they walk in darkness and have no light, learning to walk by faith. But there all mysteries will be unravelled, all problems solved, every question answered; there will be no night, no need of sun or moon, for the glory of God shall lighten it, and the Lamb shall be the lamp thereof.

FRIDAY, November 19.

"And Daniel continued even unto the first year of King Cyrus."—Dan. i. 21.

Is that wonderful? It may seem so when you consider the uncertainty of Oriental politics, and the feverish haste with which favourites are raised to confidential positions and thrust back again to obscurity. In this very book we have glimpses of the virulence of hatred entertained in the court of Babylon towards Jews, and the mortification with which aspirants for the royal favour found it monopolised by Daniel and his friends. But we cease to wonder when we turn to chap. vi. 10, and discover Daniel's habit of kneeling upon his knees three times a day, praying and giving thanks to his God. Prayer is the secret of continuance.

To all deep lives there come moments of serious questioning: Shall I be able to hold out? Shall I always be able to withstand the virulent hate of my foes, and overcome the corruption of my heart? Will it be always possible to meet the strong and imperious demands of duty, and the appeal of those who look to me for help? Amid the changes that the years may bring, will it be possible to maintain my ground? Men are so capricious, events so fluctuating, the sea of human life so unstable. To all such suggestions there is but one reply—prayer is the secret of continuance.

Evening, morning, and noon, let us pray and cry aloud that God may hear our voice. Whatever the press of business, it must be made to stand aside till we have fulfilled this our highest obligation. The vine at Hampton Court has no doubt about continuing to bear its thousand bunches in coming years, since its roots have struck the ever-flowing waters of the Thames!

SATURDAY, November 20.

"Daniel made the thing known to his companions: that they should desire mercies of the God of Heaven concerning this secret. Then was the secret revealed in a night vision."—Dan. ii. 17, 18, 19.

This prayer-meeting, called hurriedly, must have been very intense. There was no knowing whether it might not be interrupted before it was through by the guards of the palace summoning the supplicants to die. These two or three were gathered in the name of God, in rooms which never before had heard his name. But when their prayers had been offered, such serene peace resulted that Daniel was able to sleep with the utmost composure, and his mind, like a mirror, received upon its placid depths the impression of God's thoughts. The apostle's words were thus anticipated, "Let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God that passeth all understanding shall keep your hearts and minds."

It is a test of prayer having attained its object, when the praying soul feels there is no need to wrestle longer, and the sweet assurance is borne in that God has received our supplication, and that further words are needless. This serenity of heart shows itself in the unruffled calm of the commercial man in a time of panic, in the quietness of the soul under provocation, in the stayedness of the heart on God, while storms sweep earth and sky.

England and India.—2.

IRRIGATING THE GODAVARI DELTA.

IN a former article we promised to tell the story of a remarkable and successful effort in diverting and utilising the waters of an Indian river, so as to bring fertility and plenty where there had been either devastating floods or decimating famine. The story is a most romantic one, but much too lengthy to be recorded here in any detail. All we can do is to give the main facts in outline. Those who desire to peruse the full narrative (and it is well worth mastering) can do so by procuring Mr. G. T. Walch's descriptive and historical account of "The Engineering Works of the Godavari Delta," published by the Government Press of Madras. It is from Mr. Walch's book that we condense the following statement.

The Godavari river is one of the great watercourses of India. It runs in a south-easterly direction across a large part of the Indian peninsula for a distance of nearly 900 miles, receiving large affluents in its course. About 60 or 70 miles from the sea it emerges from the hill country. Lower down it divides into two main branches, and these, with their offshoots, traverse the great and fertile Godavari delta, which has an area of about 2000 square miles.

Towards the middle of this century the vast district referred to had, from several causes, fallen into an evil case. The population had rapidly declined, and an able servant of the Madras Government, Sir Henry Montgomery, was sent to inquire and report. In 1844, he advised that the neglect of irrigation works, coupled with other causes, had produced the distress and the disappearance of people and prosperity. Being acquainted with the irrigation works constructed by Capt. (now General Sir) Arthur Cotton in the Tanjore district of the Presidency, Sir Henry suggested that this gifted young engineer should be instructed to examine the Godavari delta and inform the Government what could be done. Captain Cotton, after careful inspection, strongly advised that proper irrigation works would entirely change the conditions of the region, and that they should be at once proceeded with. After due consideration his advice was accepted by the directors in council with the governor, who sanctioned the expenditure that Captain Cotton deemed necessary for the construction of a dam or anicut across the Godavari at the top of the delta, where the river was nearly four miles wide. This was in December, 1846. Now began the like of which has perhaps never been known in the history of civil engineering. Fortunately, the materials for the construction of this dam were plentiful and close at hand; labour was also fairly abundant and cheap. The work was entered upon with spirit and proceeded apace, till Major Cotton, as he then was, about the middle of 1848 had to obtain sick leave, his strength being quite exhausted by unremitting toil and anxiety. His able lieutenant, Capt. Orr, R.E., was left in charge. Meantime additional estimates for the cost of completion had to be sent to the governing authorities. Heavy floods also came and swept away portions of the structure already made. The difficulties, indeed, were such as to discourage any but those who were firmly convinced of the ultimate success and benefits of the project. The works proceeded and progressed, and in the autumn of 1850 Col. Cotton was able to return to his post. He encountered many obstacles, both from excessive floods and from the opposition of those in power. But his dauntless spirit carried him forward, and in April, 1842, he was able to report the virtual completion of this gigantic barrier across the river. We cannot forbear from quoting one paragraph from the long report he sent in to the Government at the time. He said:—

Can we see this large and important work, calculated so substantially to promote the real comfort of a million of people, thus brought to completion through so many difficulties and contingencies, without heartily acknowledging the goodness of God with us, prospering us and bringing the project so far to a successful issue, notwithstanding the opposition it has experienced from quarters from which I had every right and every reason to hope for cordial and energetic support in carrying out a work of such unequalled magnitude in India, and calculated to be in every way so vast a public benefit? May we not hope that its accomplishment with the abundant effects which have already resulted from it to the district will lead to the adoption of such extensive works for the improvement of the country, and the promotion of the welfare of the people entrusted to our care, as will lead to an increasing appreciation of a Christian Government? There is nothing that the natives more thoroughly appreciate, after peace, than public works, and especially those that furnish them with water. And I cannot but trust that this is only the beginning of a series of works worthy of our nation, our knowledge, our religion, and the extraordinary powers God has been pleased to put into our hands. I say our religion; because I am sure it ought to lead us to do our utmost in every way to care for those who are thus committed to us.

This Godavari anicut was but the beginning. Canals were necessary for the conveyance to different parts of the alluvial plain of the water thus diverted. Of these further works we can only refer to one — the Gunnaram Aqueduct, which was carried over one of the minor branches of the river as it approached the sea. The erection of this built across a wide expanse of stream, was another triumph of skill. The difficulties encountered in its building, from the unstable nature of the river bottom, and also from freshets in the river itself, were very great. It is therefore with surprise that we read that from the commencement of the preparation of materials for the work, till the completion of all its forty-nine arches, only four months elapsed, and in another four months it was ready to have water passed over it. In any part of the world this would have been a noteworthy achievement; in an out-of-the-way part of the Madras Presidency, where machinery was almost unobtainable, and most of the skilled labour required had to be trained as the work went on, it was an extraordinary feat. This part of the scheme was carried out by Lieutenant (now General) F. T. Haig, well known to our readers; and his professional skill was highly commended by the officials. It is true that the celerity with which the thing was done ran up the cost considerably beyond the first estimate, but it is also clearly shown that the saving of time in bringing the aqueduct and its related canals into use realised a gain far beyond the excess of cost. As to the resultant

GAIN TO THE COUNTRY

from these important works, we cannot do better than quote from a Madras Government despatch, dated 1882, to the Secretary of State for India:—

The results achieved are extraordinarily good, and we consider that they reflect great credit on the officers who have been concerned in the inception and execution of this great system of irrigation. The annual surplus revenue, after paying all charges, including interest on the capital outlay of Rs.12,719,245, amounts to Rs.1,186,318, which is equivalent to a return of 9.33 per cent. If interest charges be not included, the annual surplus amounts to Rs.1,618,194, or 12.72 per cent. on the capital expenditure. These are the immediate financial results. The indirect benefits following on the creation of this large irrigated area cannot be similarly estimated in figures, but they are none the less substantial and enduring.

To this we would add that the value of the indirect benefits can be shown very palpably in figures. This same Government statement describes how the total revenue of the district increased from twenty lakhs of rupees to ninety-five—an advance of £750,000 a year, all certainly due primarily to the irrigation and navigation. On this point also we may quote the following conclusive words, written by an official twenty years ago:—

At the commencement of our rule this district constituted a portion of a neglected province; and at one time it was desolated by famine and misgoverned by the numerous landowners and their advisers. Since the introduction, however, of the admirable system of irrigation it has brightened and revived. Famine is unknown. The people are prosperous and contented. It is the garden of the great northern province. Its revenue, instead of being reduced, as it once was, to the verge of bankruptcy, is more elastic than it has ever been, its population has more than doubled, the material prosperity of its inhabitants is proved by their being better fed, better clothed, and better educated than formerly; its commerce has flourished, and its trade has developed to a marvellous degree; and it may confidently be asserted that it is in as peaceful, happy, and prosperous a condition as any part of Her Imperial Majesty's dominions.

Mr. Walch, in citing the foregoing, says it is as true to-day as then. "Still is famine unknown in the district, for famine in India is born of prolonged drought, from the effects of which the delta is secured by the abundant water poured over it by the Godavari." If this can be achieved in one corner of India, why not in other parts of the country where the same need exists, and where a water supply is available?

The Neglected Continent.

Senor Olsson, of whose plans we gave some particulars in August last, has entered upon his campaign in South America with great energy. Leaving New York with a party of young men in May last, their first stopping place was Panama; Mr. Clark was left at this point. Two other brethren were sent down the Pacific Coast to Ecuador and Peru respectively. Meanwhile, Señor Olsson continued his journey along the Northern Coast of South America to Caraças, the capital of Venezuela, where he tarried a fortnight, holding meetings, consulting with the Christian Alliance missionaries already there, and carefully re-organising the work. Before he left, the workers were distributed so as to occupy two stations, one at Caraças, and the other in the interior.

Mr. Olsson then passed on by way of Barbadoes and Trinidad to the city of Para, situated at the mouth of the great river Amazon, commanding the trade of the whole Amazon valley. He found himself immediately in touch with a true fellow-worker in the person of Mr. Nelson, a missionary unattached to any society, who has been labouring successfully at Para for the past five years, and has already established an excellent work and a strong native church. After prayerful conference with brother Olsson, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, united with the Christian Alliance Mission, have agreed to take charge of the proposed work along the Amazon valley, and among the Indians of that vast region.

Writing from Buenos Ayres, on August 16, Mr. Olsson says: "I have safely arrived after an absence from home of eighteen months. I was somewhat delayed going down the Brazilian coast, but the Lord's blessing has rested on me, and many doors have been opened for the blessed Gospel to be proclaimed to the nations and tribes of South America. Brother Cook, with a native helper, has gone to the savage tribes of the Cherentes Indians far in the interior, and brother Hathaway has gone to the Indians of Paraguay. I trust we shall have thirty missionaries at work this year. Two more arrived at Buenos Ayres last week from Ireland to work with us, and I hope to get a number of native helpers. One of our missionaries has reported souls converted in Peru."

Mr. Olsson is making preparations for a long, difficult, and dangerous journey into the interior, from which he cannot hope to return to civilisation before May of next year. Further particulars of the work and its needs may be had from Mr. H. S. Ridings, 31, Carson-road, West Dulwich, S.E., who will be glad of opportunities to address drawing-room and other meetings.

Naples.—In a recent letter Mr. Stephen Burrows says:—"Our mission efforts at Torre, near Pompeii, have alarmed the harpies who hitherto had a free hand on board British ships. These men and the Popish sisters see their craft in danger, and their coadjutors, the boatmen, have boycotted the colporteurs from Naples Sailors' Rest. The English colporteur, in this way, was detained until midnight on Oct. 27. No doubt the false miracle-working shrine at Valle di Pompeii causes the ignorant natives to be fanatical against evangelical work in the district. British Christians give sympathy to their persecuted brethren in China, Russia, and other lands; ask the friends in England to give us their prompt sympathy in enabling us to secure the mission ship St. Paul, so as to have our own boats, reading-room, and an English sailor always at hand."

THE LATE

Mrs. Colonel Urmston.

EARLY in September last there fell asleep in Christ one whose name was known to many of our readers, and of whom it may be truly said, "She hath done what she could." Harriett E. Hughes Urmston was the fifth daughter of the late Mr. William Hughes Hughes, formerly M.P. for the city of Oxford. At the early age of twenty-two she became the wife of Lieutenant Henry Brabazon Urmston, an officer in the Bengal Army, now a colonel on the retired list. To the godly training of a pious and devoted governess she owed, under God's blessing, many of those gifts and graces which enabled her in after years to become a "mother in Israel."

When, in 1850, she went out to India to join her husband her heart was already given to God. She entered at once upon her married life with a firm resolve to live and work for his glory and to stand up for Christ against the sinful pleasures and worldliness of Indian society. Within a few years she was brought in contact with earnest Christian men and women at Peshawar, and at the weekly Bible readings held at different houses her remarks were always listened to with much attention. This was the beginning of her great interest in missionary work, and the formation of the "Mission to the Afghans" was an epoch in her life. It was here, too, she first came into touch with the European soldiers and their wives. Her sympathies were at once drawn out, and she paid frequent visits to the European hospital with the view of giving the poor inmates spiritual help and consolation.

This was, however, but the beginning of a much larger sphere of work, which she carried on at Rawal Pindi from 1868 to 1874. During these years her evangelistic services were of a remarkable and far-spreading character. She so effectually lived down opposition that officers commanding regiments opened their large school and recreation-rooms, and hundreds of men and many women used to attend regularly to hear the Gospel. It would be impossible to describe the effect produced upon many of those stout hearts by these addresses. At first the meetings were only intended for the soldiers and their wives, but many of her own rank in life became regular attendants. Weekly meetings for the officers' wives were also held at the hill station of Murree during the summer months. She was a daily visitor at the women's barracks and hospitals. Her zeal, energy, and devotion knew no bounds; cholera outbreaks had no terrors for her, and she has been known to sit and pray with men sickening and dying from this awful disease, without the slightest alarm. At the close of every meeting she would invite those whose duty allowed and who wished to stay a little longer to do so, when ofttimes ten, twenty, or thirty seekers after God would remain for more personal dealing.

By permission of the General, she used to visit the military cells, and sit and talk and pray with some poor fellow who in a drunken bout had committed some terrible crime. The sentry pacing outside was often amazed to see her quietly speaking and praying with those prisoners awaiting trial. Occasionally after their conviction and removal to a distant military prison she received letters full of deep repentance, and thanking her in the most hearty way for her words and counsel. Scores of soldiers' letters attest the reality of those evangelistic efforts and meetings. Eternity alone will reveal how many were turned from the error of their ways to serve the living and true God.

The Temperance cause was strongly advocated by her at this time, and she had the satisfaction of persuading many a man to take the pledge, her own example adding weight to her arguments and advice; but she never gave a temperance address without bringing in the Gospel. Her ready pen was every now and then used in discussing social questions of the day in the public papers.

The year 1874 found Mrs. Urmston in Kashmir, where her husband was appointed to act as Resident at that native Court. Towards the close of the summer a dangerous illness prostrated her and nearly proved fatal, but the Lord had still work for her to do on earth. She returned to England by medical advice, and was never able to return to India without great risk to her life. Having settled for a few months at Southsea, which afterwards became her home for eleven years, she soon found opportunities for evangelistic work amongst soldiers, sailors, dockyard men, and female prisoners in the Portsmouth gaol, as well as amongst her own class in that fashionable watering-place. She obtained permission to visit the Dockyard during the men's dinner-hour, and there in the large dining-halls provided for the men she spent an hour twice or three times every week, speaking to them words of faithful warning and encouragement suited to their simple minds. Great blessing attended these gatherings. Not unfrequently she followed them up in their houses, and had the joy of seeing many turned from their drinking habits and beggarly homes to become sober, happy, God-fearing men.

She became a constant visitor at the late Mr. Henry Cook's Mission Halls, speaking to large crowds of red and black coats, with a good sprinkling of the town's poor and fishermen. On her way to these meetings she frequently went into the public-houses and invited soldiers and others to come out and join the meeting. She also became a regular weekly visitor at the prison in Portsmouth, spending from two to three hours in the cells with the female prisoners. She was permitted in after years to see some deeply interesting results of this work.

During her first year's residence at Southsea she was led to take part in some special services being held by the "Christian Mission," and frequently addressed large meetings. Similar gatherings were occasionally addressed by her at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End. Many instances might be quoted of letters reaching her from distant places, showing how the good seed sown in faith had sprung up and brought forth fruit. In those eleven years at Southsea Mrs. Urmston was frequently invited to address drawing-room and public meetings in behalf of the Zenana Mission in different parts of the country.

During the last ten years of her life she devoted herself more to the poor and sick in her own neighbourhood. Thus she laboured on to the last, full of joy, until it pleased God to lay her aside by a short and sudden illness of only a fortnight, and to take her to Himself. Several hundreds of letters since received attest the value in which she was held by both rich and poor. Truly, "the memory of the just is blessed."

The Famine in India.

Mrs. Bruere writes from Poona:—"In February last I wrote that I would take in famine children if the money came in. This I have done, and now we have over 100 girls and a like number of boys; besides these I took in fifty others who have died.

"I am now asking the Lord to lay it upon some heart to establish this work, so that if anything happens to me it may go on just the same. The majority of the children are getting on well, and all are being daily instructed in the Bible, and special efforts are made for their spiritual welfare."

Mr. J. Lampard, in his fourteenth Missionary Letter, from Nikkum Village, Baihir, Balaghat, C.P., writes: "The chief work of the past six or eight months has been famine work, i.e., caring first for the bodies of the starving multitudes about me. I have been compelled to establish a Mission Orphanage, which now has some twenty children. These have not only been rescued from starvation and in some cases from things that are worse, but are learning to know about, and I trust to love, Jesus, and may make us valuable helpers in the future. I propose to make the Orphanage an industrial one, the children spending part of their time in field or other work."

The Mission is entering upon an advanced stage, and a bungalow to serve as headquarters of the work is now a necessity. For this and establishing and maintaining the orphanage as well as covering other expenditure during the next twelve months, Mr. Lampard thinks at least £550 will be required.

Moravians in Lesser Tibet.—In the last "Moravian Quarterly," baptisms are reported from all three of the main stations of the mission, but the best news comes from Poo, where for long years the work has seemed like sowing on the flinty rock. Here there has been an evident outpouring of the Holy Spirit of God, especially among the poorer inhabitants. At Easter 14 adults were baptized, and there are more candidates under instruction. One or two less direct, but important, results of the Mission may be mentioned. A purer Tibetan is spoken around our stations. The people are learning to exercise more common sense and less dependence on superstitious usages in the pursuit of agriculture. Incidentally Mr. Ribbach mentions that the Roman Catholics are making strenuous efforts to gain a firm footing at Leh, and that whilst last year only one priest was stationed there, now there is a rumour afloat that nuns are coming as well.

Among French Priests.

MAY I add a few lines to your recent notice of the movement among French priests. The independent and bold position taken by the Abbé Bourrier at his examination on Oct. 20 by the Protestant pastors of Paris, prior to his ordination on Oct. 24, at the Temple de l'Avenue de la Grande Armée (formerly that of M. Bersier), and his fearless declaration of faith at the ceremony before the vast crowd of persons gathered together, has given a new interest to this movement, and has gained it the sympathy of many who before were indifferent or hostile. Men of all shades of opinion are asking whereunto these things will grow.

La Vie Nouvelle, of Oct. 23, writes:—"God will help you noble souls, valiant servants of Christ. All our sympathy, and all our prayers are with you. Whether you come to increase our ranks, or whether you remain outside of Protestantism, provided you do the work of God in a spirit of submission to his will only, and of faith in his love, you are on our side, and we are with you. And yet what a force for us, Protestants, what a rejuvenescence, if a strong current should form, bringing into our church all those men of conscience, inured by struggles within for the good fight without, these priests of God, with souls so courageous and intrepid!"

The Evangéliste writes: "Who knows if God is not reserving for M. Bourrier the work which M. Hyacinthe Loyson either could or would not do. Doubtless, warned by his predecessor, our new colleague has for this reason resolved to put the new wine of his evangelical convictions into new vessels."

On October 14 there appeared in one of the Paris daily newspapers a letter from one of the best-known of the Roman clergy of the capital to the Archbishop, giving in his resignation. And only these last days another priest and his brother in the South of France have also, from conscientious reasons, written to their bishop, that they seek in their salvation and their peace of mind. There are between forty and fifty former French priests who are now Protestant pastors or evangelists; but what is especially significant is that among the last converts are men of deep conviction, who have gone through untold anguish of spirit, men of gifts, and with intrepid spirit, against whom it is impossible for the Church of Rome to lift up the finger of scorn; men of individuality who are joining together in God, and are ready for some expected fresh development in the history of Christ's Church.

They have now their organ, Le Chrétien Français, and many are the communications which its appearance has led to. There is talk of a college or home, where these weary, stranded souls may find a haven of rest; where they may, by mutual converse, encourage each other; and where well-known Protestant ministers and friends may offer them the peculiar preparation they need for future work for the Master.

There exists in Paris an influential committee for raising funds and for helping on this important movement among the French priests. We are told that there is disorganisation among the Roman clergy in France. We are threatened by such a number of applications from priests, that with the means at present at our disposal it will be impossible to give the temporary help needed—the training so needed for one who has but just left the monastery or the sacristy to become a true preacher of the Gospel of Christ. Will our friends join us in much prayer that the Lord Himself will grant to these struggling souls the glorious liberty of his children, that they may know his service to be one of perfect freedom.

The Murder of German Missionaries in China.—Official intelligence has been received tending to confirm the report published by the Kölnische Volkszeitung, of the attack upon German missionaries in the province of Shan-tung. It appears that the mission station attacked was at Yen Chu fu. The missionary Nies is reported killed, and his companion (Ziegler) missing. A third missionary named Steinx is stated to have escaped. It is declared that on the receipt of the above intelligence the German Government gave orders for the adoption of the measures demanded by the situation.—Reuter.

The Central Morocco Mission.

THE annual report of this Medical Mission opens with an account of Morocco and its inhabitants, with a description of the famine distress. A statement is given of the basis and progress of the Mission. The dispensary is open daily. "In our general consulting-room our work is varied; while examining patients we have books lying on the table for anyone who cares to read; at the same time interesting conversations are going on which often end in lively discussions about the merits of the death of Jesus Christ. There have been 7301 patients attended to, 1800 of whom were visited at their homes. The work among the students during the year has been exceedingly cheering. Large numbers of New Testaments have been given away, which were highly appreciated and read with deep interest." More serious cases are received in the hospital, and among the patients good work has been done.

Itinerations were made last spring by Dr. Kerr and Mr. R. G. Steven into Bini Hassan, and it is stated that, "despite the difficulties, in general our work this year has been very encouraging. However willing the Jews may be to listen to the Word, they are afraid, as they are hemmed in by a circle who impose on them excommunication for the most trifling offences, even burying the refractory in the place where strangers are buried.

"Among the Moslems, more especially the officia class, this hatred has in no way lessened towards Christians. We were grieved the other day to hear that a poor and respectable Arab living outside Rabat was apprehended and sent off in irons to the Sultan, because he had let a piece of ground to a German merchant. We are in no way discouraged by the opposition, as it leads us to redouble our energy and faith in God. Amid all there are many open doors. We are anxious to open a station and hospital in Salee this coming year if possible."

More workers and an additional fully-qualified medical missionary are sorely needed. Two fresh workers, Mr. M. C. Taylor and Miss H. Harper, have been accepted. The hon. sec. is Mr. Grahame Wilson, 13, Royal-terrace, Crosshill, Glasgow.

A Visit to Bilbao.

I spent about three months at a seaside place near Bilbao this summer. The darkness and ignorance of the people in that neighbourhood is surprising indeed. The Virgin Mary might be a hundred different persons in Spain. In that population she is chiefly worshipped as "the Virgin of Begoña." Amongst her other virtues, this virgin is supposed to be a great friend of sailors.

I had a long discussion with a young lady one evening in her house. Shortly before my visit she had been to confession, and brought home a candle to burn to the Virgin of Carmen or the Virgin of Dolores—I forget which it was—whose image she had in her room.

I visited the parents of a little girl who had just died. I had several talks with the child's teacher, who admitted that Jesus was more than his mother. I hope and believe that she will henceforth, as much as she dares, teach her little charges about the love of Jesus, and not so many tales about the Virgin. The priests were watching me and the people; and before the end of my stay this poor young woman and her mother, both well-disposed persons, and ready at first to listen, hardly dared to speak to me if I passed them.

My landlady was liberal-minded, and allowed me to have meetings in the house. Several came from some distance, as well as some of the neighbours. We keep up a correspondence with some, and hope to go amongst them all again as the Lord leads. This is the second year of a short stay in that part of Spain, and we quite feel that the Lord has opened a door for work there for us, when the heat in Madrid makes it impossible for us to remain here.

The work in our hands in Madrid is growing; we have the joy not only of seeing more attend the meetings, but also fresh open doors for visiting, and cottage meetings in other parts of the city. Some take a real interest in God's Word who had before either never heard of it or had been much opposed to Protestants. To the Lord of the Harvest who has sent us here, and given us our work, we look for all supplies. The hon. treasurer is Mr. F. C. Brading, 8, Cavendish-villas, Bowes Park, London, N.

Chinese Bible-women.

THE Chinese Bible-women's Mission supports native Christian Bible-women in China. According to the custom of the country, the native women are not permitted to attend the ministry of a male teacher. Hence if the heathen women are ever to hear the Gospel, it must be by female workers going among them. In a statement on the importance of Chinese Bible-women's work, Archdeacon Wolfe, of Foochow, says:—

"Chinese women are the great upholders of idolatry, and are the chief hindrances to the spread of Christianity. Their gross superstition is only equalled by their intense ignorance. Not a ray of light, as a rule, is allowed to penetrate into their dark minds.

"The vast importance of teaching and gaining the women is seen when we consider, first, that they constitute nearly one half of the vast population—400 millions—in the Chinese Empire; and, secondly, that they have the sole care of the children who are to be the future generation of men and women, and instil into the youthful mind in its most impressionable period their own deep reverance for those superstitious systems of idolatry which exercise so great an influence and power over the Chinese mind.

"There are, I am happy to say, instances in which mothers have first been converted, and then were the means of bringing their entire families to Christ. Male missionaries can have little or no opportunity of dealing with the female portion of the population—hence the necessity of lady missionaries and native Bible-women. The latter, especially, when truly converted and carefully taught and trained for the work, are an indispensable agency in every mission for the teaching and evangelisation of the women. They can visit without let or hindrance, and tell the wonderful story of God's love. Moreover, these native Bible-women can enter fully into the feelings of their heathen sisters, and sympathise with them in their trials and difficulties.

"In Hok Chiang we have eight of these women at work, where, without exaggeration, forty or fifty are required. In this district there are over 2500 Christian women scattered among many towns and villages, who need much visiting and teaching, which can only be done by Bible-women taught by the Spirit of God. It is impossible for the most of these poor women with their crippled feet to walk long distances over steep and slippery pathways (there are no roads) to our places of worship, and the visits of these Bible-women, and those of the lady missionaries, are the only means of teaching them and helping them to live the Christian life."

A Bible-woman may be maintained for about four guineas a year. The quarterly record of the Chinese Bible-women's Mission, entitled "The Lamp of China," is full of deeply interesting information. Further particulars regarding the work may be had from the hon. treasurer, Mrs. Elborough Woodcock, 3, Buckingham-gate, S.W.

Bible Lands Missions Aid Society.—Readers who have recently contributed to the funds of this Mission will be glad to learn that, in the absence of Lord Kinnaird, Rev. W. A. Essery, hon sec., has just transmitted £700 from the Armenian Massacre Relief Fund to six mission stations in various parts of Asia Minor. These grants are specially devoted to the Massacre Orphans' Homes. The Society urgently needs a further £2000 in aid of the winter support required by these pitiable children.

"Let your Light so Shine."

BY G. HAY MORGAN, B.Sc.

ONE cold winter's night, when the bright stars were shining overhead and the wind was keen and frosty, I was waiting on Cardiff platform for the mail train to London. Pacing up and down the platform trying to keep warm, I passed several times the lamp-room, where the carriage lamps were cleaned and kept. There they were now all standing in rows on shelves, looking like a library of lamps.

I thought I heard a conversation going on between two of them. The one, whom we will call Mr. Goodwick, said to the other, Oily Dan: "I hope we shan't be compelled to go out this bitterly cold night. It's so nice and snug in here that it seems a perfect shame to drag us down against our will." "You're quite right, my friend," said Oily Dan. "I don't see why they should always put us on night duty, when the air is coldest and when all respectable people are fast asleep." But here comes the man with the lamp-carriage and the long stick, and down they are taken, lit up, and roughly banged into their proper hole in the train compartment. In a few minutes they are whisked away up to London.

On the morrow morning they travel down to Cardiff again—all black and grimy after their night's work, they find themselves once more in the familiar room waiting to be polished up before they are replaced on the shelf. Oily Dan, with a very husky voice (for he's almost choked up with soot), says, "My word, Mr. Goodwick, I'm very glad I went out last night, I was put in a first-class carriage. There was only one gentleman there, and he was so anxious to be alone that he shook hands with the guard. No sooner had the train started than he began pacing up and down the carriage, raving at the top of his voice; then glancing at some papers he held in his hand, he looked up at me and said, 'Capital light this lamp gives,' and shouted and stamped again. I grew quite frightened and thought I should be smashed. But this morning as I came down I heard men talking of the eloquent speech which the gentleman made in Parliament last night. The papers to-day are full of it. He wouldn't have been able to practise so well if I hadn't been there to give him light." Said Mr. Goodwick: "Well, you know, I'm not sorry I went out last night either, for I was put in a third-class carriage, and there was a woman there with a pale thin little baby. It must have been in great pain, for it cried so much. And the mother pointed to me, and told the baby to look at the beautiful bright light; and when it looked at me it stopped crying, and laughed and crowed enough to make the anxious mother laugh too. Yes, I'm very glad I was there to help that poor woman."

So, my dear children, God has given us each a lamp to light for Him. We must not hide it or put it out. Neither must we, thinking most of our own comfort, want to save ourselves trouble and cold, but let our light shine in the dark places. There so many who need a kind word, a helpful smile, and little bit of practical sympathy, and these things we all can give. In home, in street, and in school let your light shine for Jesus' sake, remembering Him who said, "Let your light so shine before men that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father who is in Heaven."

Jesus bids us shine with a pure, clear light,
Like a little candle burning in the night,
In this world of darkness we must shine,
You in your small corner, and I in mine.

What the Flowers Said.

"MOTHER, did you know that flowers could talk? I never dreamed of such a thing; but to-day Hester Joliffe got a bunch of heliotrope from one of the college boys, and I heard the big girls laughing at her and saying heliotrope meant 'I love you.' And when I asked what they meant, Hester called me a little goose, and asked me if I didn't know that every flower has a motto; she calls it the flower language, and she says, mother (here Sybil looked doubtful at her mother), she says if I come to her house this afternoon she will tell me what the motto is of all the flowers."

"I can tell you all the flower mottoes, daughter, after tea; but I do not want you to spend this lovely afternoon indoors; I can tell you a much sweeter way to make flowers talk than by their mottoes."

But mother would not tell what she meant till Sybil had washed her face and hands and eaten her dinner. "Now, daughter," she said, "if you take my shopping basket full of flowers to Miss Louisa Perry, away down in the village, and ask what the flowers say to her, you will find that they can talk like preachers."

The village was two miles away, and the spring sunshine was getting pretty hot, but under mother's Japanese parasol Sybil did not care for the sun, and Miss Louisa did seem glad to see her. The poor old woman had been paralysed, and could not walk a step from the big cushioned chair, where she was placed every morning by loving hands.

"What do the flowers say to me, dearie?" she said with a bright smile; "they say, 'Well, old lady, aren't you glad your heavenly Father made such pretty things for you to look at? And aren't you glad He made little hearts tender, and little hands kind, and little feet willing to bring them to you?'"

The Danger of Discouragement.

"You can't do it, you had better give it up," said one boy to another, the latter being busily engaged in untangling a knotty rope. "You have spent ten minutes now, and it has amounted to nothing."

"Ah, see," was the happily spoken answer, as the rope gave an inch. "Here is one tangle less, and the rest will be easier."

"You can buy a new rope for ten cents."

"Yes, but I want the satisfaction of accomplishing my task."

It is a sin to discourage those about you. There are those whom it may not affect, they have courage and go steadily on, while others turn listlessly aside, lay the task down as useless and hopeless, and live an idle or purposeless life.

Most of us know how much harder life is after having administered to us a bitter and uncalled-for dose of discouragement. It may not arrest us from our purpose, but it often causes us to go on with little heart or inspiration. On the contrary, who can estimate the good done by kind, helpful words? "That is good, but I am sure you can do better," said a teacher one day, as she examined the essay of a youthful aspirant. The boy returned to his seat, a bright smile lighting his face, the firm lines about his mouth indicating that what was expected of him he would accomplish. The simple words had a powerful influence over his life, and his ability became a surprise to those about him.

Thus it is that often a single word of encouragement is all that is needed to help us over the hard places in life. A young literary aspirant laid her pen down wearily one day. All inspiration seemed to have deserted her, the work seemed useless and unappreciated, and the profession already overcrowded. "No one cares to read what I write," she sighed. She picked up a paper, her eyes glancing carelessly down the columns, when she saw an article of her own, and a kind editorial expressing pleasure in happily written words. It was just the impetus she needed; she set to work with new hope and inspiration, and ever after there was force of truth in her words which made itself felt. Others believed in her, and they should not be disappointed.

It is the duty of every Christian to encourage and help. It seems to me there is no sweeter mission than to bring cheer into a life filled with discouragement. There are hindrances, difficulties which all must meet, but out of the hardest conditions blessings may come.—Christian Union Herald.

"The Christian Armour."—Eph. vi. 10-20.

Golden Text—"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."

THE Christian conflict is twofold: negative and positive, defensive and offensive. A cricketer has two duties to perform, viz., to guard his wicket and to make runs. He cannot make runs unless his wickets are safe. So the Christian has to guard his own heart from the onsets of temptation, and at the same time he has to do positive works of Christian charity and sacrifice. The world has not yet forgotten the heroism of Florence Nightingale, who went out with a band of ladies to nurse the wounded and dying in the Crimean war; and on this larger battle-field of life there are thousands who have become wounded and helpless in the terrible strife. We must go to these and bring light into their darkness, balm for their wounds, love for their loneliness, and hope for their despondency. The present lesson, however, deals with the defensive side of the Christian battle. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life." We must watch and pray, for if we keep the enemy out of our own fortress we shall be better able to do aggressive work outside.

His strength was as the strength of ten
Because his heart was pure.

I. It is a spiritual conflict.—"We wrestle... against principalities and powers," etc. (12). The "high places," or spiritual place, means the heart. The battle is internal. No amount of education, social order, or external restraining influence can subdue the passions of the heart. Against these is the first conflict of the Christian. We must fight against "principalities and powers" as they are seen in the public-house, the gambling-places, the resort of licentiousness; but the individual heart is the seat of war after all. Eradicate the cruel caustic craving for intoxicants from the heart of the drunkard, and your public-house would die a natural death. Every scholar has his particular besetting sin. This is the spiritual enemy to him, he must fight through life until it is conquered.

II. A spiritual armour.—"Loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness" (14). The former for bracing strength, the latter for protection. A lie is weakness itself. Doubly strong is he who is honest and true. How helpless is the soldier fighting for what he knows to be a bad cause. How vigorous is he when battling for Queen and home. The Christian soldier has right about him as a breastplate, "feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of Peace" (15). The basis of our fight is not the love of strife or quibbling criticism, but peace. God is love—all his punishments are for our good. He is never vindictive or revengeful. He hates the sin, but loves the sinner, and his Gospel has for its end reconciliation, peace. So this must be the footing on which we fight. "Shield of faith"—that is trust in God. The fiery darts which tempt us to doubt God's goodness, tempt us to succeed by the devil's methods, tempt us to grasp the pleasures of the moment rather than wait for the fulness of joy which is to be found in his presence—these darts are quenched by faith in God. "The helmet of Salvation." The hope of victory. Hard to believe in the midst of battle that we are going to win. God's salvation is complete and certain—as Christ conquered, so shall we.

III. A spiritual weapon.—The Word of God (17). Emphasise the need for careful study of the Bible. We must reverence not merely the paper and covers, but the principles contained in the book. Some soldiers go out to battle and leave their swords behind, as ornaments at home; no wonder they are defeated. Christ, in the wilderness, said, "It is written," "It is written," "It is written," and the devil left him. If we use our Master's weapon we shall achieve his victory.

IV. A spiritual victory through Christ.—"Praying always" (18). We often know the right and the way to do it, but we cannot use our knowledge. We are so weak. By prayer we become strong to fight the Lord's battle. Prayer is the electric wire by which God's power flows from heaven to earth. The bravest soldiers will be those who are always in touch with their inspiring Captain. "The arm of flesh will fail you, ye dare not trust your own."

The Bridge of Hope.

THE work of Miss Steer and her helpers at the Bridge of Hope, Betts-street, St. George's-in-the-East, has the full confidence of Christian workers and philanthropists. If more were known of the operations of the Mission, so compassionate and tender, so greatly needed and emphatically Christian in character, there would be less anxiety on the part of the management. It is difficult for outsiders to realise the sadness of rescue and preventive endeavours, or in any active sense to sympathise with those who are brought face to face with them. God has, however, greatly blessed the work of the Mission, and made gladness to commingle with sadness in the experience of the workers. It is this brighter side of things which may be realised in some measure by those who, in a spirit of Christian sympathy, help to cheer the toilers and to promote the cause they have at heart.

The nineteenth annual meeting of the Mission was held on Thursday last, and, as usual, was preceded by a sale of work, knitting, and other products of the Home industry; this was opened by Mrs. Watts-Hughes. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Walter Hazell, M.P., one of the trustees of the Mission. After a brief financial statement by the treasurer, Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., an address, in some measure descriptive of the work, was delivered by Miss Steer. It was gratifying in the extreme to hear her cordial acknowledgment of the services of her devoted helpers. The report which was circulated through the room was full of interest. We make a few brief extracts:—

"In work that is steadily carried on from year to year, without any attempt at startling departures, there is nothing to tell that makes for dramatic effect. But there is much that is far better. To-day alone we have had visit after visit from some of our former inmates, which have greatly encouraged us. One of these visitors was O. A. Ten years ago we helped her, and after doing well in the Home she was placed in service. Three years later she married respectably, and now in her own happy home, amid the glorious Welsh mountains, she is living a quiet, useful life. After an absence of seven years she has come to visit her sisters in London, and only allowed one day to elapse before seeking the Home, that she might thank us for the help given so long since.

"Another young woman we placed in a country situation nine years ago writes a bright, happy letter to say she is in the same place still, and hopes to pay us a visit soon. Yet another has continued seven years with one mistress; she was not one of the most hopeful girls, but she has persevered, and always speaks gratefully of the Home and its influence upon her life. Such as these come back as God's messengers to remind us that 'in his designs there is no haste.' It is we who are impatient of results. Throughout the year we have again had the help of the City missionaries for our Sunday afternoon service, held in our Mission Hall. It is a labour of love, often rendered, I am sure, at no little self-sacrifice, and it is help which we deeply appreciate."

Those who desire further particulars of the work in its depth and circumference should secure a copy of the report. While all departments are of great importance, that which affects the children, who are cared for in cottage homes at Chingford, is of special interest. Coming into the world with a heritage of disadvantage, these little ones are taken up in the arms of faith and kindness, and trained for useful lives and the service of God.

The speakers at the meeting were Revs. A. B. Boyd-Carpenter, Peter Thompson, and J. Morgan Gibbon, also Messrs. Percy Alden and Samuel Lithgow. Mr. Thompson grieved over the ravages of the drink traffic in East London, and saw little hope of an improved moral condition until that great evil has been grappled with. Also, he maintained, that as kinder thoughts are entertained of poor, deceived girls, severer measure must be meted out to the men who are parties to their corruption and ruin.

Dublin Medical Mission.—An interesting gathering was held recently at Dr. Henry Bewley's, when the council, committee, and directors of this Mission presented Dr. Long with a tangible mark of esteem on his leaving the Dublin Medical Mission for similar work in the South of Ireland. At the commencement of October, when Dr. Long left, the numbers attending the Mission fell off considerably, but they are now coming in as before. The workers have been cheered by many cases of conversion.

A Churchman's Notes.

THE many readers of The Christian who belong to the Church of England may like to accept occasional notes concerning the Church to which they are (in two senses) attached.

Those who were present last week at the meeting of the Clergy Home Mission Union will not soon forget the deeply impressive addresses of the Archbishop of Canterbury. In the course of his remarks Dr. Temple dealt with three points: Mutual help, as illustrated by John xiii.; Bible study as the one means of freshness and power in Christian work; and the leading of men to Christ, as the central and fundamental object of the ministry. The Archbishop's testimony to Christ, the Bible, and the Holy Spirit was clear and unmistakable, and a profound impression was made on the gathering by utterances which were so evidently the outcome of personal experience.

Sunday observance is now coming to the front for consideration and discussion. Nearly every recent Diocesan Conference has included it as a topic, and such debates must be of great value in "clearing the air," and calling attention to Scripture truth on the subject. No topic presses more urgently for careful, wise, and Scriptural treatment by Evangelicals inside and outside the Church of England. Our young people want clear guidance as to the Biblical teaching on this subject. Even such an article as that in last week's Church Times may be useful in showing what is not Scripture teaching. May Evangelicals soon give no "uncertain sound" on the Sabbath in the light of God's Word.

What a noble warrior for God is the Bishop of Selkirk, North-West Canada (Dr. W. C. Bompas), who has not been in England since his consecration in 1874. He is now taking active steps to provide for the spiritual necessities of the miners at Klondyke. He has despatched to the place Rev. Richard Bowen, who will conduct mission services and endeavour to erect a church and school there. The Colonial and Continental Church Society has made a grant towards the missionary's stipend, and the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has made the bishop some building grants.

In the annals of missionary enterprise no names will stand out more prominently as (literal) heroes than those of Bishop Horden, Bishop Bompas, and Bishop Young. Who can realise the hardships of life and work in those very northern climes?

The venerable Bishop of Liverpool still witnesses for God with all his characteristic energy of style and directness of meaning. His address last week at the Diocesan Conference was marked by all those features so well known through the bishop's inimitable tracts and books, and will rejoice the heart of all who love the truth. Long may Dr. Ryle be spared to bear his noble testimony for God.

The annual meetings of the C.M.S. Gleaners' Union at Sheffield last week were a very great success. Yorkshire, and Sheffield in particular, saw to that. Eighteen months more and, if God will, the centenary celebration will be on us, and though there is very much to encourage and cheer in the records of the first half of the three years' enterprise, some tokens suggest a warning against slackening energies lest the second year, so soon to close, may show a falling off as compared with the first year's work. From now until March there must be redoubled energies (and contributions).

Ordained in 1884 and a bishop in 1897. So runs the record of the Bishop-designate of Stepney (Canon Winnington Ingram). A distinct High Churchman, and not of the old school either, even Mr. Ingram's work at the Oxford House hardly merited so early an appointment to the Suffragan Bishopric of East London. One could name three or four East-end clergy, much his senior in years and experience, who have borne the burden (and what a burden it is!) of East London work for a much longer period. But these things are not always considered.

West Indian Islands.—Mr. J. H. Pusey, writing from Grand Turk Island, British West Indies, says that a small case of Bibles and copies of Psalms and Hymns, as used in Baptist churches, would be very welcome. He continues: "The Missionary Society having withdrawn from us, we are left to support our own work. Having lost last year's crop, our people are on the verge of starvation, and cannot do as they would, although they make great sacrifices to maintain a missionary worker."

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. JOSIAH NIX IN HUDDERSFIELD.

THE Wesleyan Chapel, Queen-street, Huddersfield, has been the scene of an awakening during the past fortnight. Special prayer-meetings were held, and the Lord has answered mightily. On Saturday, October 23, Mr. Josiah Nix conferred with the workers. After the meeting he met those who were to work in the inquiry room. He suggested that on "Early Closing" day an "At Home" should be held, to which the assistants engaged in the shops of the town should be invited. In response to Mr. Nix's appeal a member of the congregation volunteered to bear the expense of this idea; and a willing committee soon got to work, with the result that on Wednesday afternoon the "At Home" was held in the Assembly Rooms, and about 200 were present. Music enlivened the proceedings, and light refreshments were served during an interval. Mr. Nix very heartily welcomed all, and earnestly addressed the gathering. This happy idea resulted in nineteen inquirers after salvation and forty-nine total abstinence pledges. On Friday, Mr. Nix held a "Lantern Service," such as he has had in London; and in spite of most inclement weather the large chapel was nearly full. On Saturday at the Temperance service eighty-four pledges were taken. The men's meeting on Sunday afternoon, October 31, was a great success, many were "convinced" and "converted"; the same evening the chapel was crowded.

The whole mission, on each night of the ten days, and at every service, has been graciously "owned of God," and many souls have sought salvation at every gathering. A marked feature is the number of young men who have come out boldly.

REVIVAL IN LIVERPOOL.

The autumn season of golden sheaves and gathered fruit has had its cheering analogy in spiritual things in the city of Liverpool. Previous to the outbreak of revival in many parts of the city there was a growing and deepening spirit of prayer. Christians were drawn closer to God, and therefore closer to each other. The needs of the people pressed heavily on the Christian heart, and with wonderful unity believers were led to cry for "power from on high." In cottage meetings, private houses, public services, and in workshops God was pleaded with for "times of refreshing."

In addition to prayer, there was a ready and hearty willingness to work. Special missions were started in various parts, which were largely attended, and have been fruitful by much blessing. In West Derby, where Mr. B. F. Babcock carries on a large work, the Christians have been greatly stirred in their special efforts, and a good few blessed by the Gospel message. After a mission in Edinburgh-street, where Mr. Archer has been labouring, some fifty men and women were baptized at Sharon Hall. The town mission halls have largely shared in the revivals. In Ebenezer Hall, Everton, where Mr. Caple, missionary, is stationed, a good many found pardon and peace during the ten days' mission. Mr. Charles Inglis has been at work with the Wesleyans for some weeks past, and has been the means of gathering in many sheaves.

In Tillard-street Hall, Kirkdale, where Mr. James Gunn is the missionary, a most cheering and fruitful time has been experienced. The mission was started for ten days, but had to be extended, and a number have professed to have found the Saviour. In Netherfield-road Hall Mr. John Hogg, missionary, is having good foretastes of much blessing in store.

MR. W. R. LANE.

With a view of extending the usefulness of this well-known evangelist, a committee has been formed representative of all branches of the evangelical churches. Its chairman is Lord Kinnaird; treasurer, Sir George Williams; and secretary, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, S.E. Among the members of the committee are Mr. John Cory, Mr. T. A. Denny, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. Evan Hopkins, Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, Mr. Martin H. Stutton, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, Mr. J. H. Tritton.

The secretary will be glad to hear from any churches, or groups of churches, anxious to secure the services of Mr. Lane, whose present engagement with the Y.M.C.A. expires with the close of the year.

GOSPEL MISSION, BARRY DOCKS.

The anniversary of this Mission, held on Monday week, afforded evidence of the usefulness of such evangelistic organisations in an essentially working-class community like that at Barry Docks. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. W. Spurgeon at the Wesleyan Chapel, Barry Docks, the service being attended by one of the largest gatherings seen at an afternoon meeting in the town for a long time.

The anniversary meeting was held in the evening, when the hall was crowded. Mr. G. R. Coultas presided in the absence of Mr. John Cory. After an earnest address by Miss Oakley, of the Christian Police Association, Mr. William Dunn, a brother-in-law of the Mayor of Cardiff, concluded his successful week's mission at the hall with a temperance oration.

In reviewing the work of the Gospel Mission for the year, it is encouraging to find that there have again been remarkable cases of rescue and conversion, cases of drunken husbands who had deserted their wives and families, and also of women who had deserted their homes through drink. Many of these and similar characters have been reclaimed and brought under the influence of the Gospel Mission. Scores have signed the pledge. The object of the Gospel Temperance Mission at Barry Docks is to evangelise needy districts, to rescue drunkards, the fallen, and neglected children, and to render temporary aid in all cases of need. The superintendent is Mr. Gerald R. Coultas, Mission House, Barry Docks, South Wales.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

The Brothers Weaver have concluded a two weeks' mission in St. Clement's Free Church, Aberdeen. There was great interest and expectation in view of their visit on account of the work God did by their means in the city a year ago. The expectation has been fully realised. The attendance was large, specially so on Sabbaths and towards the close of the mission, when many were unable to gain admission. The result was that many hearts were moved and an entrance obtained for the King's message. Two meetings were also held among the fisher people at Footdee, and in consequence many from that quarter were in constant attendance all through the fortnight. Every evening some rose for prayer, and were afterwards spoken with in the inquiry-rooms. For the young men and women a Christian Endeavour meeting has been formed.

Mr. J. A. Smith, superintendent of Gordon Evangelistic Mission, Aberdeen, has conducted a fortnight's special mission in Kirkwall. From the commencement the spirit of unity was manifested, the ministers of the various churches heartily co-operating. God has blessed the effort to the gathering-in of souls to Jesus. An interesting feature of the mission has been the number of young men and women who, night after night, went into the inquiry room.

A three weeks' mission has been conducted by Mr. George Hunter, of Aberdeen, in the Mission Hall, Aston Clinton. Much blessing has been received during the mission. Christians have been strengthened, and built up, and many of the unsaved have professed Christ.

The Wayside Bible carriage, labouring under the direction of Mr. John McAuliffe, has returned home after a campaign of 130 days in 250 villages in Hampshire, Wiltshire, Sussex, and Surrey. Upwards of £100 has been taken, mainly in pence, from village people for copies of Scripture, Hymn and Gospel books.

Rev. John T. Vine has concluded a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. On the last Sunday night a number came out for prayer, some of whom found peace.

Rev. Fred. H. King reports a very successful mission at the Bow-road Church, conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford. Numbers professed conversion, and the church has been greatly refreshed.

Mr. Monro Collings recently concluded a week of special services at Longland's Hall, Sidcup. The work was encouraging throughout. Some of the workers were the fruit of Mr. Collings's labours on a former occasion. Much preparation had been made and prayer offered for this visit, and every evening during the mission the earnest addresses were used of God in great blessing to God's children as well as to the unsaved.

A most successful mission has been held at the Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth, by Mr. Charles Minor, whose lively and attractive manner with the men makes his meetings most interesting. He not only speaks, but he sings to the men, and draws out their love of music. Lieut.-Colonel Seton Churchill, who is now quartered at Fort Brockhurst, took the chair on the evening when Mr. Minor gave a lecture on Billy Bray. After the ten days' mission was over, the evangelist accompanied Mr. Sidney Smith to Southampton to meet the troopship Nubia, which was bringing home from India nearly 1000 time-expired men. Last Friday and Saturday, at the invitation of Lt.-Col. Seton Churchill, he visited Fort Brockhurst and conducted a Gospel temperance meeting among the men who were about to be discharged.

Mr. J. J. Smith lately held a ten days' mission in Crossgar, Ireland. Next he visited Sandy-row, Belfast, for twelve days; the hall was packed every night, and many professed conversion. The whole neighbourhood seemed awakened. Prayer is asked for blessing upon a forthcoming mission at Comber, near Belfast.

Mr. William Smith has conducted a three weeks' mission in Ballywalter, co. Down. The meetings from the beginning were large and deeply interesting, and a number of persons professed to have received blessing. On the closing night many stood up bearing testimony to blessing received during the mission.

A United Gospel Mission arranged by the Free Church Council of the Isle of Sheppey has been held by Mr. James Eyres in Sheerness. The mission opened on October 17, with three large meetings. The presence of the Divine Spirit was felt and fruit was gathered, with tokens of a harvest to follow. The first week's meetings were held in the Alma-road Congregational Church, and at each service there were decisions for Christ. Bible-readings were given in the Baptist Church in afternoons, which were largely attended and found to be helpful. The second week's meetings were held in the Wesleyan Chapel, and splendid audiences were gathered, and the power of the Gospel was proved at every service. Military and naval men, fathers and mothers, young men and women, senior scholars, and non-church goers found their way to the Saviour, each night being a time of rejoicing.

Dr. Munhall has closed a three weeks' campaign in Ottumwa, Ia. Most of the churches united heartily in the movement. The meetings were held in a large tent in the business portion of the city, and gave an opportunity for many hundreds, who do not usually attend church, to hear the Gospel presented. Much good has been accomplished, many having begun the new life.

Deliverance.

A BIBLE STUDY.

1. Is there deliverance from sin now?—Yes (Rom. vii. 24, 25; Titus ii. 14, R.V.).

2. Is there deliverance from the fear of death?—Yes (Heb. ii. 15).

3. Is there deliverance from the tyranny of law?—Yes (Rom. vii. 6; Gal. iii. 13).

4. Is there deliverance from this evil age?—Yes (Gal. i. 4).

5. Is there deliverance from every foe?—Yes (Luke i. 74).

6. Is there deliverance from fear and perplexity in service?—Yes (Jer. i. 8, 19; chap. xv. 20).

Herbert R. Francis.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland.—The following communication has been received by the secretary (Capt. J. Kearney White):—"The Private Secretary has received the Queen's command to thank the patrons, committee and friends of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland for the kind and loyal expressions of sympathy conveyed in their communication of the 2nd inst."

Alone in London.—A few days ago, at Marylebone Police Court, a well-spoken boy of thirteen years, named George Smith, was charged with being found destitute at Woodfield-road, Paddington. A police-constable stated that at one o'clock in the morning he found the boy asleep in a van. When awakened the boy said he had no home, and had been sleeping out in the streets since last May. Questioned by the magistrate, he said that his father and mother died about three years ago. They used to keep a farm at St. Blazey in Cornwall. Last January his sister—his only relative—brought him up to London; but she left him in May and went to America, and since then he had slept in the streets at night and kept himself alive by begging food from working men as they returned home in the evening. As the boy declared that he had no relatives in London, Mr. Curtis Bennett remanded him to the workhouse that inquiries might be made in Cornwall.

Bible Training Institute, Glasgow.

THE sixth session of the Institute was opened on September 1 with a full complement of students. There are thirty-nine young men and twelve young women in residence, and this number exhausts the accommodation of the present temporary homes at 1, Blythswood-square. In view of the fact, however, that the splendid new buildings of the Institute in Bothwell-street will be ready for occupation early next year, arrangements are being made for additional temporary accommodation, and all eligible candidates who may yet apply will be received.

The new buildings will give accommodation for about 100 male and fifty female students. Each student will have a comfortable bedroom, and there are ample conveniences of every description, including writing-rooms, libraries, and sitting-rooms in both departments. There are hydraulic lifts, the buildings are heated throughout with steam, and lighted by electricity. There are capacious dining-rooms, large and airy class rooms, and every appliance that can be suggested to promote the comfort of the students and staff, and contribute to the EFFICIENCY OF THE WORK.

The course of study embraces two sessions of ten months each, September to June. The first year is devoted to the books of the Old Testament, doctrinal studies, and a course of training in the preparation of addresses, conducting meetings, and dealing with inquirers. The second session is devoted to the Gospels and the New Testament epistles, with an additional course embracing Biblical theology, Christian evidences, critical theories, etc., etc.

Students are regularly engaged in Gospel work in the city. The churches gladly receive their help, and services are held in lodging-houses, the Night Asylum for Homeless Waifs, etc. In this way they receive a most valuable training for their future service. Some idea of the extent of the work may be gathered from the fact that during the two months since the session commenced the students have conducted over 370 indoor services with an aggregate attendance of 30,000 persons, and an equal number of outdoor meetings, with in most cases a still larger attendance. The work has been VERY FRUITFUL IN BLESSING.

The young ladies, in addition to the usual branches of Gospel work and district visitation, receive special training in connection with the Glasgow Medical Mission, and also at police-courts and prisons. They are thus brought into contact with every phase of human need and every variety of Christian work; this proves to be an admirable training for work either in the home or foreign mission fields.

The students come from all parts of the United Kingdom, and they go forth to all parts of the world. Fully half of those who have gone out are settled in home stations; the others are to be found in Africa (north, central, and south), in India, China, and the New Hebrides, and very favourable accounts have been received of their services. The fees for the course, including board and tuition, are only £20 per session.

In addition to the resident students there are a number of outside students attending the day classes, and also evening classes with an enrolled membership of over 300.

The last report of the Bible Institute is a very interesting document. It shows beyond doubt that the institution is meeting a decided need in Scotland, and is equipping many young workers for efficient and successful service in the Lord's vineyard. The best proof of this is the fact that applications during the past two years for the services of students who have passed their course of training have been much in excess of the supply. We trust there will be a large accession of students of both sexes when the splendid and finely-appointed buildings in Bothwell-street are available for occupation early next year.

STUDENTS' DAY AT THE NOON MEETING.

Every Wednesday the students are much in evidence at the noon prayer meeting in the Christian Institute, Bothwell-street. A representative of THE CHRISTIAN attended this gathering on a recent Wednesday, and was greatly gratified as well as edified. The much-esteemed superintendent, Mr. John Anderson, presides, and presents the usual requests for prayer. The greater part of the hour is taken up with two or three minute expositions from the students, which constitute a practical symposium on some selected theme. On the day of our reporter's visit the subject was "The Life of Faith." No fewer than fourteen brief contributions were made, setting forth in terse and clear phrase different aspects of this important grace and its bearings on the Christian life. The first speaker was Mr. Anderson's assistant, Mr. J. F. Arthur, and the last was the superintendent himself. One could not help being impressed by the generally earnest and intelligent treatment which the students gave to their special phase of the subject, though, of course, the comments were of varying degrees of excellence. Altogether, they seemed to be a very capable and purposeful band of young fellows. The whole formed a most praiseworthy variation of the customary routine of the noon prayer meeting.

Scottish Notes.

THE Free Church in Wick is much to be congratulated on securing for its pastor Rev. Joseph Traill, a graduate of Aberdeen University, and a very able preacher of the Gospel. He recently laboured for some months in Banff with great acceptance and blessing.

It is stated that at the Gowa station of the Scottish Baptist Industrial Mission in Central Africa fifty acres of land have been planted with coffee, some of which will bear fruit in 1898; it is hoped that a large quantity will be ready for the market in the following year.

Sabbath, November 7, was observed widely throughout the Presbyterian Churches of Scotland as "Children's Day." In all quarters of the country boys and girls from the Sabbath-schools and other organisations for the young were gathered into the churches, and special services held for their benefit.

The Railway Missions of Glasgow district recently held their annual meeting. The muster was large and enthusiastic. Among those who took part were Rev. D. F. Mackenzie (Langside Free Church), Mr. R. Nixon (general secretary of the Mission), and Mr. Malcolm Ferguson (Lanarkshire Christian Union).

At a meeting last Thursday of the Scottish Navvy Mission—Sir Archibald S. L. Campbell, Bart., of Succoth, in the chair—one of the missionaries (Mr. Ross, of the Talla Waterworks) spoke out strongly against the evil of allowing spirits to be sold from carts in the vicinity of such centres of work. The missionaries are looking forward to an interesting winter's work.

The announcement that Dr. John Smith, of Broughton-place, Edinburgh, has, in advance, declined the offer to be made to him of the pastorate of Marylebone Presbyterian Church, London, has given much satisfaction throughout Scotland. He is more and more recognised in all the churches as one of the leaders in aggressive work, and one whose addresses at conventions are much valued.

At the annual gathering, held last week, of the Police Aided Scheme for Clothing Destitute Children in Edinburgh, the chief constable, in submitting the report, said experience had taught him that the most necessitous cases were those where the parents had given way to intemperance. During the last season 264 children were completely clad, every case having been carefully inquired into. All the garments are stamped in such a way as to render it impossible to dispose of them.

Speaking last week at the jubilee meeting of the Sabbath Alliance of Scotland, the venerable Dr. Andrew Thomson said it gave him much satisfaction to think that the work of the Alliance was as vigorous as ever. Formed when railways were just in their infancy, the members had feared that the companies would regard the Sabbath as a part of their capital. This tendency had been resisted not without success, for such a thing as a Sabbath excursion train is yet unknown in Scotland.

The Gospel Temperance Mission in the Baptist Chapel, Duncan-street, Edinburgh, was resumed for the season a week or two ago, by a lecture on Palestine, by Mr. J. W. Moodie, illustrated by a large and beautiful panorama. There was a very large audience on Saturday last, when the pastor, Rev. Peter Fleming, lectured on his recent visit to France and Switzerland, with limelight illustrations. At these meetings many took the pledge and several have professed conversion to God.

Mrs. Bishop, the well-known traveller, gave several notable addresses in Edinburgh last week. At the opening of a sale of work in aid of a holiday home for the local Y.W.C.A., she urged very strongly the need for such homes for the benefit of young women in cities. Speaking at another gathering on "Women's Work in the Foreign Field," she said she was convinced that the ignorance of the women, and their adhesion to custom, constituted the crowning obstacle in the way of Christianity among the heathen. The work of Christianising them could only be done by women, more especially by medical women. The idea may be dismissed from the mind that the heathen are thirsting for the Gospel. It is exceedingly difficult to get them to take even a passing interest in it.

Irish Notes.

THE annual convention of the junior Methodist ministers was held in Sligo during the past week. Rev. J. Linahan presided, and preached on "Divine Power." The convention was largely attended and was most successful.

A ten days' series of evangelistic services has been held in Bailieborough by Mr. B. W. Jackson, Assembly's Evangelist, and a similar series has been held in Athy by Rev. C. H. Weir, Methodist minister. In each case much blessing was given.

Both Magee College, Derry, and Assembly's College, Belfast, have been opened for their winter's work. At the latter the address was given by Rev. Dr. Leitch, who chose for his subject "The Higher Criticism of the Bible," while in the case of the former the address was delivered by Professor Dickie on "Hebrew Prophecy." Both addresses were eminently orthodox and instructive.

An extensive missionary mission has been held in Dublin, in which twenty-one parishes participated. Meetings and services were held daily in twenty-five churches, and the principal speakers were Revs. W. J. L. Sheppard and C. D. Snell. The Archbishop of Dublin and Dr. Crozier, Bishop-Elect of Ossory, preached in connection with the proceedings, which were largely attended and very impressive.

Requests for Prayer.

For services by Mr. and Mrs. S. J. Alexander at Hull Bridge, Essex.

For an eight days' mission, Nov. 21 to 28, at the village of Bovingdon, Herts.

For special mission services at Fawkham and Shorne, Kent, Nov. 15 to 28.

For an eight days' united mission in the Town Hall, Uxbridge, Nov. 22 to 29, by Rev. G. M. Smith.

For special mission to men only by Mr. J. Crawford, in the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A., during the week of prayer for young men.

For the opening meeting of a series of Gospel meetings to be held every Sunday evening in Shaftesbury Hall, Margate.

For God's blessing on a mission to children at the Lighthouse, Bow, from Nov. 14 to 21, to be conducted by Mr. C. D. Smith.

For special services in Lisburn by William Smith, commencing Nov. 14.

For services to be held by Rev. W. N. Hall at Sandymount, Dublin.

Earnest prayer is desired on behalf of Miss J. McLean (sister of Miss Margaret McLean, Japanese Mission), a well-known worker, now lying in a critical state at Plymouth.

For blessing on meetings to be addressed by J. G. Alexander and C. D. Terrell, during November and December, in the West and South of France, chiefly in connection with the M'All Mission.

The week beginning Nov. 29 has been set apart as a week of special prayer for theological colleges. Divinity students have testified to the helpfulness of such a season of intercession in past years. All students of whatever faculty are asked to unite in waiting upon God that He may pour out the Spirit of Holiness upon those Student Volunteers who are to be in a special sense his ambassadors.

Praise.

For blessing on the Bible readings and addresses given by Mr. Monro Collings last week at Bexley Heath.

For many and direct answers to prayer, and especially after long waiting on the Lord, for much needed strength of mind, as well as of soul, during many seasons of mental depression and bodily weakness.

Obituary.

REV. DR. FERGUSON.

The death is announced of Rev. Dr. Fergus Ferguson, of the Evangelical Union Church, Glasgow, and chairman of the Congregational Union of Scotland. Dr. Ferguson had been ailing for some time past. For the last ten days his condition had been such as to cause serious anxiety to his relatives and friends, and though he seemed to rally somewhat at times, he passed away last week.

Dr. Ferguson, who was a native of Glasgow, but spent his young days in Hamilton, was born in September, 1824. He studied theology in the Congregational Hall under Dr. Wardlaw, but in consequence of doctrinal differences, he and eight other students, who shared his views, were not allowed to complete their curriculum there. He threw in his lot with Dr. Morison, and was ordained in 1845 over a church which had just been formed. He remained minister of the same congregation, and proved himself all through that long period an able, earnest, and a devoted minister. The congregation grew in numbers and in spiritual activity. Dr. Ferguson was instant in season and out of season. And he did not confine his labours to his own congregation. To every good cause he was ready to lend a helping hand; he was in the School Board, and the temperance cause specially owes him much. The strain of work impaired his health, and relief was sought in rest and travel; and then for some years a colleague aided him. But ultimately his health was re-established, and then on his colleague's finding another sphere he did the work of the church single-handed and with his early energy.

The Late Dean Vaughan.

At a memorial service in the Temple Church, on Sabbath last, Canon Ainger paid a high tribute to the memory of the late Dean Vaughan, as a very single-minded and unselfish teacher of Christian truth. The preacher said:—

Some of you may have seen quoted in certain papers an extract from Dr. Vaughan's last will and testament:—"In the prospect of death, a little nearer or further off, I wish to state explicitly that I have put my whole trust in the revelation of the Gospel. I believe in the forgiveness of sins as the foundation-stone of the Gospel, and commit myself humbly and hopefully to God in this faith for life, death, and eternity." The forgiveness of sins the foundation-stone of the Gospel—this faith was the foundation of his whole life's teaching. In these days, when every single item of a Christian's creed is ruthlessly criticised by the world, that it may be pronounced superfluous and thrown overboard, it is sometimes maintained, by way of Eirenicon, that that only one cardinal truth is really required to mark the dividing line between the Christian and the unbeliever, and that truth the Incarnation, the Deity of Christ. Dr. Vaughan would never, I am convinced, have accepted such conclusion. He knew that even an acceptance of the Incarnation might mean acquiescence in a mystery or a sentiment implying no actual power over the human will. He would have placed first in all teaching, as in his own dying confession, the forgiveness of sins; for that alone interprets, and therefore makes credible, the Incarnation.

Cockington, Torquay.—The undenominational mission work that was begun in Cockington twelve years ago has entered upon an extended career by the opening of a new hall. With the needful furniture the building will cost about £600, of which amount a considerable proportion has yet to be raised. In connection with the work there is a Home of Rest, "Sharon," which has been visited by a large number of Christian workers during the past twelve months. Mr. Levi Powell is the missioner.

Merchant Taylors' School Mission.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held in the great hall of the school on Tuesday week. The Mission, which has been supported by the school for the past seven years, is at Shacklewell, in the parish of West Hackney, and it comprises the religious and social activities associated with a "settlement." There was a good attendance of boys at the meeting, and the speakers were "Old Merchant Taylors." Rev. Dr. Baker, the head master, presided. Rev. A. J. B. Allerton, the missioner, gave an account of what is being done, and remarked that it was the only Mission that was being worked by a London public school in London.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Sunderland Association is in the midst of a membership campaign, and has already added 162 new associates to its list.

The Leeds Association has arranged for the preaching of over sixty sermons to young men in celebration of the Week of Prayer for Young Men, November 14-21.

The Penrith Association has revived its work and opened a new room for its meetings. Dr. Altham presided at the inaugural gathering, when addresses were given by Mr. J. C. Moor and Mr. W. M. Hudson.

The Hon. Henry Bale, M.A., the new Attorney-General and Minister of Education for Natal, is president of the Pietermaritzburg Association, and has been actively and closely identified with Y.M.C.A. work for many years.

Mr. Bell, travelling secretary of the Scottish Y.M.C.A. Council, has been in Orkney holding meetings at Kirkwall, Dearness, Stronsay, and Westray, besides visiting a number of the islands. More lately he has been in the Dundee district.

The Weston-super-Mare Association has celebrated its majority in a large and successful meeting at the Victoria Hall. Mr. Harrison's Bible-class now averages an attendance each Sunday afternoon of two hundred and thirty young men.

At the monthly meeting of the National Council on Friday, Nov. 5, under the presidency of Sir George Williams, arrangements were completed by which Mr. J. Stuart Holden (Corpus Christi College, Cambridge) will proceed, early in 1898, under the Council's auspices, on a tour of the principal centres of population in Egypt and Palestine for the purpose of stimulating Christian work amongst young men.

The Autumn Conference of the South Midland District Union was held at the Reading Association on the 3rd inst. After the morning business session the delegates were entertained at luncheon by the president of the district, Mr. Martin John Sutton. In the afternoon Mr. H. T. Pugh, of Reading, presented a paper, entitled "Impressions of the Glasgow Conference, and their application to our work."

The Bayswater Association report much encouragement in the work. During the past month the Friday evening meetings for the deepening of spiritual life have been much blessed. Last week Mr. G. H. Lord gave two pictorial lectures on the Holy Land. The rooms were crowded with young men from the big houses close by, who listened with deep interest to the lecturer's expositions of Eastern life as illustrative of Holy Scripture and as supplying fresh corroboration of its authenticity and accuracy.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the Hastings and St. Leonards Association was held on Thursday, October 28, Mr. M. H. Hodder occupying the chair, and Mr. Robert Burn giving the address to members and friends. A satisfactory report was read by the secretary (Mr. J. G. Green) showing increase of twenty-eight on the membership roll and the acquisition of some gymnastic apparatus for the use of members and associates. One of the most encouraging features in the report is the fact that the ninth member of this association has just been accepted by the C.M.S. for foreign mission work.

The Central London Association have arranged for a series of three meetings for men in Exeter Hall at the close of this month as a demonstration against the black trinity of evils, gambling, intemperance, and impurity. On Monday evening, Nov. 29, addresses will be given on gambling and betting by Archdeacon Madden, of Liverpool, and Dr. Joseph Parker. The Tuesday evening meeting on intemperance will be addressed by Rev. Silas Hocking, and possibly the Bishop of Newcastle, whilst at the closing meeting on Wednesday evening, December 1, dealing with impurity, the speakers will be Dean Lefroy and Colonel Churchill. Friends will be interested to learn that on being asked to take part in one of these meetings, Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone wrote as follows: "My old age and the incidents attending it entirely disable me from compliance with your kind and interesting suggestion. I much regret it, for the very important objects which you have in view command my warm sympathy."

The annual public meeting of the Birmingham Association, held in the Town Hall on October 28, was a practical example of the inter-denominational character of the work, the chair being taken by the Bishop of Worcester, and addresses given or part taken in the meeting by the newly-appointed Rector of Birmingham (Rev. A. J. Robinson), Rev. J. H. Jowett (of Carr's-lane Congregational Chapel), Rev. J. Jenkin Brown (Baptist minister), and Mr. E. Parkes, M.P., a well-known member of the Wesleyan body. A deeply-interesting account of work amongst young men in India was given by Mr. Reierson Arbuthnot, president of the Madras Association. The brief report which was read by the general secretary, Mr. Whitwell, showed that the numerous agencies had been actively carried on during the year with good results. Men had been led to Christ, some of whom are now working in connection with their churches, whilst the interest of others in foreign mission work had been greatly intensified, and in two cases members had left for the foreign field.

The Y.W.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Bromyard Association took place on the 26th ult., presided over by Mrs. Phillips, of Buckenhill.

At the annual meeting of the Leominster branch, in the Town Hall, an address was given by Miss Knight, of Hereford. Mr. H. S. Newman presided.

The Women's and Young Women's Christian Association have just held their fourteenth biennial conference at Montreal—a series of very interesting meetings.

The Montrose branch held their annual social meeting in the Memorial Hall, when Mr. Kydd, of the Y.M.C.A., presided. Miss Mudie, secretary, read the report.

A largely attended meeting of the Stirling branch was held in the hall of the Free North Church. Mrs. Chalmers presided. Fifty-seven names were added to the membership.

The 15th annual meeting of the Falmouth branch was presided over by Mr. N. Fox. A satisfactory report, presented by Mr. Downing, showed a membership of 150. Revs. W. Wood, C. A. Walkers, and others took part in the proceedings.

The Gipsy Hill branch held its annual gathering in St. Aubyn's Hall, when there was a large gathering. Mr. C. E. Tritton, M.P., took the chair, and spoke encouragingly of the work. Rev. E. A. Stuart next gave an earnest and practical address on seven mottoes suitable for a Christian life.

The new rooms of the Croydon Y.W.C.A., situated in High-street, are now open. At the inaugural meeting, Col. Wild, the treasurer, announced that the rent had been guaranteed for three years. The rooms will accommodate fifteen boarders. Rev. T. Waterman and Mrs. E. W. Moore addressed the meeting.

The Belfast Association held its annual meeting last week. The attendance was large. The Hon. Thomas Sinclair presided, and gave in his opening address an outcome of the history and of the work of the Association. Addresses followed by Mr. Charlton, Mrs. S. H. Smith, Rev. H. Montgomery, and others.

Last Wednesday and Thursday a sale of work was held at Bramboro' House Institute and Home, Great George-square, Liverpool. The sale was well attended, and the work displayed was of the most beautiful description. The proceeds, which were for the funds of the Institution, were most satisfactory, amounting to nearly £400.

Japan.—At a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in the Y.M.C.A. hall in Tokio, Japan, one of the most prominent characteristics of the speeches was an earnest desire for the speedy evangelisation of the Empire. Some intellectual influences that have been noticeable in the past were conspicuously absent, and there was an unusually deep sense of the need of spiritual life.

Hope Mission.—Since Christmas, 1893, Miss Martin has carried on the Mission commenced by Lady Hope in Nelson-square, Blackfriars. The good work has so extended by the blessing of God that it has become necessary to build larger and more convenient premises in Friar-street, Blackfriars. Memorial-stones were laid last week by Revs. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, and F. B. Meyer, Mrs. Buxton Brown, and Miss Martin, who is contributing £750 towards the cost. There is promise of a great work being accomplished among the teeming multitudes of that densely populated neighbourhood, especially the women and children.

The Band of Hope Jubilee.—A demonstration to celebrate the jubilee of the Band of Hope movement was held on Tuesday week at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The chair was taken by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon. The report showed that in the Southwark division there were 111 societies, eight for seniors and 103 for juniors. The returns from sixty-four of these societies showed a membership of 7252; and it was estimated that in the Southwark auxiliary there were altogether 12,500 members, the vast majority of whom were children under fourteen years of age. Mr. E. H. Pickersgill, M.P., said that the Band of Hope movement was of inestimable value to the State, because it moulded the minds of the children in habits which contributed to the welfare and prosperity of the commonwealth. Mr. Williams Benn expressed his deep interest in temperance work among the young. Rev. W. R. Mowll concluded with a vigorous temperance speech.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE RITUALISTIC CONSPIRACY.

IT is nothing new to style the Ritualistic movement a conspiracy, but it has hitherto been easier to use the epithet than to state in detail the many counts and grounds of the grave indictment. In Mr. Walter Walsh's new work* we have the case stated at length, and the charge abundantly proved; and it is difficult to read the story of duplicity without indignation and disgust—indignation that our Protestant status and liberties should be bartered away by the ministers of a Church which is Protestant in constitution; disgust that in their treacherous work these ecclesiastics should use secrecy and deceit and such-like dishonourable practices.

Mr. Walsh tells us in his preface that he wrote this book at the request of an eminent dignitary of the Church of England, noted for his liberality and breadth of religious views. His object has been to open the eyes of loyal Churchmen to what is going on beneath the surface; and, possessed of ample information and documents of fearful significance, he has been in a position to let his facts speak for themselves without undue argument or pressure. He says: "I have taken every pains to be fair towards those whose conduct and teaching I criticise. I would not willingly misrepresent them in any way whatever. It was my anxiety to be fair and accurate which induced me to adopt the plan of allowing these secret workers to tell their story in their own words, and, therefore, I have given full references and proofs for everything, taken from the writings of the Ritualists themselves. . . . It is a significant fact that secresy has largely characterised the Ritualistic movement, even from the first year of its existence, when it was known by another name. ...At present the Church of England is literally all working in the interests of the scheme for the corporate reunion of the Church of England with the Church of Rome. These secret plotters are the real wire pullers of the Ritualistic movement."

Of course Mr. Walsh has consulted the biographies and letters, already made public, of some of the principal actors in the Oxford movement, but these are by no means his principal authorities in the compilation of the volume of over 400 pages. The most compromising facts have been taken from the privately printed and confidentially circulated papers of the Ritualists themselves, from which Mr. Walsh has culled speeches delivered in the secret and semi-secret meetings of the various societies and fraternities, some of the speakers being men who now occupy high positions in the Church of England.

The Ritualistic Confessional (from the days of Pusey), and the Society of the Holy Cross (originated in 1855), are the subjects of chapters quite startling in their disclosures, and then we have the secret history of the abominable "Priest in Absolution" told for the first time. Other chapters deal with the Order of Corporate Reunion, Ritualistic Sisterhoods formed on Roman models, and the Confraternity of the Blessed Sacrament. This last organisation was formed in 1862, and included in 1894 no fewer than 1,682 clergymen and 13,444 men and women of the laity. It avowedly exists to promote,

ROMISH DOCTRINE AND PRACTICE.

After describing other societies having different names but like objects, Mr. Walsh writes on the Romeward Movement, and the teaching of the Ritualists, general and particular.

A careful perusal of this volume compels one to the conclusion which Mr. Walsh suggests, when, after describing the lawlessness of the Ritualists, he asks: "Does it not look as though the Romanizers were bent on upsetting all law and order within the Church of England, and producing a state of anarchy, solely in order that on the ruins may be erected the law and order of the Pope of Rome?" The cry for Corporate Reunion Mr. Walsh meets with the counter cry, "No peace with Rome!" This must be the watchword of Protestants, as they understand the Gospel, as they are obedient to Christ, and as they are mindful of their civil and religious privileges and liberties.

*THE SECRET HISTORY OF THE OXFORD MOVEMENT. By Walter Walsh. (10s. 6d. net. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.)

THE APOSTLE OF THE GENTILES.

The "labours abundant" of the great Apostle of the Gentiles have formed the theme of many a stately volume; yet the lessons are inexhaustible, as may be seen in Mr. Meyer's latest addition to his Biographical Series, Paul: A Servant of Jesus Christ. (Morgan & Scott. Price 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d., with nine original full page illustrations.) Here we have a study of the inner life rather than a history of events. The Apostle is viewed as he unfolds himself in his marvellous letters. With vivid touch the author portrays the eager lad, "a Hebrew of the Hebrews," a "son of a Pharisee"—proud of his race and religiousness—the intense student, the ardent persecutor. Then comes the epoch-making arrest on the way to Damascus, and the Divine summons to a new career which was henceforth to engross his devotion and energies. Deep as his longings may have been over his "brethren after the flesh," "the slave of Jesus Christ" is seen as accepting his evident call as "a light to the Gentiles." The review of "fourteen years'" labours, as given in 2 Cor. xii., affords material for an instructive chapter, leading on to a study of his journeyings many, with their countless toils and hardships, while "led in triumph in Christ" he finds all things work "for the furtherance of the Gospel." Thus, through "perils oft," the reader is led on to consider "Paul the aged: a prisoner of Jesus Christ." The final chapter is given to a brief glance at the circumstances under which his priceless Epistles were penned. The author has caught the spirit of his subject, and his fervent expositions are rich in deep spiritual lessons which must serve to stimulate and strengthen the faith and courage of every reader.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

The Silver Link (2s. Sunday School Union) has stories by C. N. Barham and Eliza F. Pollard; but it also has some solid reading. Among the latter may be mentioned articles on Assyrian antiquities by Edith Ralph, and a series on "Bible Precious Stones" by Agnes Hume.

Mothers and Daughters is a weekly paper dealing mainly with the home and its concerns—eating and drinking, dress and entertainment. There are, however, other features thrown in, and the volume containing the year's parts is a repository of wholesome reading, fully illustrated. Woman's interest is touched at a variety of points; and although not claiming a religious purpose, there are appreciative notices of great charities conducted by Christian men and woman. (5s. A. W. Hall.)

Great Thoughts from Master Minds. Volume ix. of the third series of this popular periodical contains the parts issued from April to September, 1897. In addition to the ordinary features, there is a series of papers on "Achievements of the Victorian Era," with portraits of some of the prominent figures of the time. The contents of the volume, as might be expected, are as varied in substance as in style; and the several indexes render the contents easily accessible to those who seek illustrative matter for sermons or addresses (4s. 6d. A. W. Hall, 28 to 32, Hutton-street, Whitefriars, E.C.).

Messrs. Service & Paton have issued a wonderfully cheap, but beautifully printed and neatly bound edition of Lord Lytton's classic story, The Last Days of Pompeii. (1s. 6d.)

Exeter Cathedral. By Canon Edmonds. With delightful illustrations by Mr. H. Railton (1s. Isbister & Co.), is an able and welcome addition to a most attractive series of hand-books.

The Older Brother. By Pansy. (Nisbet & Co.) A beautifully-told tale of devotion to duty and of due reward. "Pansy" is an adept, through much practice, at character sketching, and in this story she shines in that department.

Melissa's Victory. By Ashton Neill. (2s. 6d. Robert Culley.) Here we have an outline of the troubles of a young woman who turned Methodist against the wishes of her friends. Time, however, healed all wounds; hence a happy finish of a bright little story.

In Memoriam: Frederick Alcock Nixon, F.R.C.S.I. By Rufus Church. A brief record of the life and death of a distinguished surgeon, who was a member of Harcourt Baptist Church, Dublin. The booklet has been reprinted by request for private circulation from the Irish Baptist Magazine. (Belfast: W. W. Cleland, Great Victoria-street.)

Chronicles of the Christ. By Benjamin Bobbin. (1s. net. "Joyful News" Depôt, Rochdale.) In these quaint flashes of soulful warmth and wisdom, our ever-green friend Mr. Champness proves that he has drunk inspiration from an exhaustless theme. Men of very varied intellectual gifts have written about the life and character of Christ, and they will go on doing it till the end of recorded time. This small book with much in it is eminently one for the common people

Lady Rosalind; or, Family Feuds, by Emma Marshall, is a pleasant story. Feuds and intrigues, with abounding deceit, make tangles in the families of rich as well as poor. In this particular case Lady Rosalind was a true peace-maker, and her wisdom and tact wrought harmony in a domestic circle that was once sadly divided. (6s. Nisbet & Co.)

The Story of India. By D. C. Boulger. (1s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son.) We have here a most worthy contribution to the "Story of the Empire Series." The theme is a great one for so small a book, but within its compressed limits it is most admirably done. The editor of the series, Mr. H. A. Kennedy, furnishes a wise and judicious preface.

Steadfast and True: A Tale of the Huguenots. By Louisa C. Silke. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) A stirring story of Rome's persecuting work in sunny France in the seventeenth century. The pages are full of animation, many of the horrible things recorded being notorious facts placed in an imaginary setting. Such books warm the blood, and should nerve Protestants of the present generation to stand by their privileges and fight for their faith.

Clerical Types. By Rev. Hames Mann. (4s. Funk & Wagnalls.) The author says he has been observing his brethren in the ministry, and gives the result in these twenty smart sketches of as many types of clerics. They are keen and cutting, though on the whole kindly; now and then we think he exaggerates peculiarities, but he hits many a nail square on the head. Pastors generally may be recommended to read, mark, and inwardly digest the book.

Dr. Adrian: A Story of Old Holland. By D. Alcock. (6s. Religious Tract Society.) A powerful tale of life in the Netherlands in the days of William of Orange. It is a goodly book, by one who already has earned a high reputation as a writer on Protestant life and testimony in Roman Catholic countries; but it is safe to say that this latest work from her pen, full of sound teaching as well as powerful in descriptive writing, is equal to any of its excellent and useful predecessors.

Consecrated Work. By Dr. J. Elder Cumming. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) The life of holiness in its varied practical aspects is wisely and helpfully unfolded in these pages. After some chapters on the needful preparation for successful work, Dr. Cumming deals with different forms of consecrated service, public or private, and has many excellent counsels to give. He is able to speak out of long experience as a worker and a teacher, and younger disciples who would fain follow the Master closely will do well to consult their aged friend and fellow-servant.

Personal Friendships of Jesus. By J. R. Miller, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) The personal friendships of Jesus reveal many tender and beautiful points in his character, and these are admirably brought out in Dr. Miller's suggestive little book. Starting with the human-heartedness of the Lord, these studies deal with his relation to his mother, to individual disciples, and to the Bethany sisters. Finally, the author writes on Jesus as a friend. Many will prize this volume, the chaste get-up of which makes it as peculiarly suited for presentation purposes.

The Three Rylands. By Dr. J. Culross. (Elliot Stock.) This delightful chronicle, rescued from the annals of the past, furnishes an interesting example of Christian heredity. Father, son, and grandson were all earnest and devoted disciples of Christ—the first two as Gospel preachers, and the last as a writer and teacher. All were alike in their fidelity to Puritan theology, and each served his generation faithfully and well. They are good to read about, and the fragrance of their life and testimony will be perpetuated through Dr. Culross's sympathetic representation of the facts.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son we have cheap reissues, well illustrated, of four of Mrs. E. R. Pitman's popular stories. We trust that in this cheap form they will become more popular still. The titles are:—Florence Godfrey's Faith, a Story of Australian life; Life's Daily Ministry, a Tale of Everyday Service; My Governess' Life, or Earning My Living; and Garnered Sheaves, a book for boys (2s. each). They are a striking contrast to many modern stories, so much Gospel truth and teaching are mingled in an attractive and natural way with the narrative. It is a real pleasure to commend them.

ILLUMINATED CARDS AND CALENDARS.

FROM RAPHAEL TUCK AND SONS.

The publications of Messrs. Raphael Tuck and Sons are in great variety and artistically finished. Whether in cards, booklets, or calendars, this holds good, and really fine products of art are so graduated in price as to meet every degree of spending power. The choicest cards are in monotint on the finest paper, some expressing commonplace greetings, others with poetical excerpts. The platinotype panels are very pretty, some of them landscapes, others figures or objects of beauty. The Turner

Portfolio contains the two famous views of Venice after the pictures in the South Kensington Museum and in the National Gallery, reproduced in photogravure. In the great variety of these cards it is obvious that an endeavour is made to meet all tastes, and some of these tastes are far removed from our own. The calendars are of many kinds, all of them highly attractive. There are booklets, cards, and nursery books in abundance.

MILDMAY CARDS.

The new Mildmay cards for Christmas, New Year, and birthday seasons, are, as usual, chaste in artistic design, and such as will admirably meet the needs of Christian people. Among the best cards we would mention: "Among the Alps"—effective sketches, full of the characteristic beauty and form of the mountain tops, by E. St. B. Holland, with greetings and texts. (Six in packet, 1s. 6d.) "From Our Garden," folding cards with embossed edges. (Eight in packet, 2s.) "Everlasting Love" (Six in packet, 1s.); and "The Shepherd's Voice" (Six in packet, 1s.) There are several designs made up in packets of twelve for sixpence. Some of these bear Scripture texts, others verses of poetry. The motto cards for 1898 are very attractive, some costing one penny, others twopence each. Among the calendars are: "From Sunrise to Sunset," effective sketches of Alpine summits. (1s.) "Mildmay Stand Calendar," sunset on the Dent du Midi from Villars, Vaud (6d.). The artistic work has again devolved upon E. St. B. H. and E. L. The cards may be obtained from the Deaconess House, Mildmay Park, N.; the wholesale depôt is 46, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Rest in Heaven and other poems. Miss Smallwood has issued a few hymns printed in large type, and suitable for the aged and sick, and for Homes and hospitals. (Stevens, Malvern. Price 2d.)

Seeking and Finding Almanack, 1898. (Partridge and Co. 1d.) This arrangement of the daily texts leaves opportunity for personal search to supply chapter and verse, and many find this exercise useful by way of a Bible memoritor.

The Creation: Four Sermons preached in the Church of St. Mark, Regent's Park. By W. J. Sparrow Simpson, vicar. (Langley & Sons, George-street, N.W.). These discourses are plain but thoughtful, and deserve many readers.

Leaving Home: A pamphlet containing timely words, by Pastor H. A. M'Kenzie, to young women starting out for domestic service. These are earnestly warned against worldliness, frivolity, and temptation. (Pearce & Co., Putney. 3d.)

The Duchess of Teck.—Mr. H. Kaufman has published a finely-executed intaglio memorial card (price 6d.), with the latest life-like photograph of H.R.H. the late Duchess of Teck, and silver-blocked lettering with a favourite verse of Her Royal Highness.

Stammering, Stuttering, and other Speech Affections: Their causes and cure. By W. Abbotts, M.D., M.R.C.P., and S. The eighth edition of a useful little book by a doctor of special experience in treating impediments of speech. (1s. The Savoy Press, 115, Strand, W.C.)

Mr. H. L. Hastings's booklet, Remarks on the Mistakes of Moses, has been so widely circulated that the new illustrated edition bears on the title page the words "Third Hundred Thousand." This is a remarkable number of the well-known "Anti-Infidel Library." (4d. Marshall Bros.)

The Animals' Friend, a capital penny monthly, advocating the claims of the lower creation, now publishes a Children's Supplement (one half-penny monthly) which is admirably illustrated, and calculated to promote a kind interest in animals among our boys and girls. (G. Bell & Sons, 5, York-street, Covent Garden, W.C.)

Bible Chronology; From the Exodus of the children of Israel until the fourth year of Solomon. By J. J. Grinyer. (3d. Nister.) The author of this booklet aims to "reconcile" St. Paul's statement (Acts xiii.) regarding the 450 years with the 480 years era mentioned in 1 Kings vi. 1. To some these passages present no discrepancy; for such as have difficulty, there are various explanations. This is unquestionably well intended, but it might have been better in arrangement and clearer in statement.

BOOKS RECEIVED.

Personalia.

Mr. C. T. Studd is at present assisting Mrs. Crossley in the work of the Star Hall Mission, Manchester.

Rev. R. Murray Webb Peploe, son of the Vicar of St. Paul's, Onslow-square, has been compelled by serious illness to give up his work at Sheep Creek, Calgary, and return to England.

Dr. J. Thain Davidson has completed a forty years' ministry. In an address at Ealing, last week, he reviewed his varied experiences since beginning in 1855 to work among a few mill-workers at Blairgowrie.

Mr. and Mrs. Sankey propose spending the winter and spring in Egypt and Palestine, leaving New York on January 4 by ss. Normannia for Alexandria. They hope to spend the month of May in England and Scotland.

Mr. Alex. Donaldson, for many years a worker in the McAll Mission in Paris, and who has latterly been connected with the Edinburgh City Mission, has been obliged, owing to serious illness, to resign his post. His address is 21, Brompton-street, Edinburgh.

Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, Moderator Synod of the of the English Presbyterian Church, has left to resume his work at Swatow, China. Mr. Mackenzie first went to China in 1860, and he is now the senior missionary of the English Presbyterian Church.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, as our readers may recollect, has accepted the invitation of Mr. Moody to spend the months of January and February next in the United States. Meetings especially for ministers are being arranged in the larger centres of population in different parts of the States, extending as far west as Kansas.

Pastor Archibald Brown received a very cordial welcome on Monday evening by a great gathering of friends from far and near, at Chatsworth-road Baptist Church, West Norwood, on the commencement of his pastorate there. Mr. J. H. Tritton, M.P., presided, and gave an admirable little address. Mr. Brown entered on this fresh sphere of work under the happiest auspices.

Mr. Sidney G. Trist, widely known as the editor of The Animals' Friend, has been appointed secretary of the London Anti-Vivisection Society, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, W. For nearly six years he has been promoting the anti-vivisection cause by lip and pen, and his many friends in the medical and other professions are hopeful that he will wield a still greater influence in his new sphere. Those who desire information on the subject of vivisection should communicate with Mr. Trist at the address given.

Overcrowding in East London.

The following case of overcrowding which came to light last week illustrates the need of more careful supervision on the part of the authorities. During an inquiry into the death of a victim of a fire in Spitalfields, a victim stated that he found two beds, each occupied by seven or eight men, women, and children asleep in a room at the top of the house. The room was only 8ft. by 7ft., and the highest point was about 4ft. 6in.

This is bad enough, but the following conversation between the coroner and the jury shows a still worse condition of things:—A Juror: You will find that sort of thing all round the neighbourhood. The Coroner: What! fourteen people in one room? The Juror: I won't say that, but there is overcrowding all round. In one house close to me there are between thirty and forty people, and seven and eight in one room. The Coroner: We have special knowledge of this case, and I think we ought to communicate with the sanitary authorities. The question suggests itself, whether the sanitary authorities have a right to be ignorant of such facts. Do they not exist in order to make this state of things impossible?

Dartford Young Men's Bible-class.—This class began eleven years ago with nine young men, and now there are 306 members. Since then it has branched out in many directions. The lads' Bible-class has sixty-two members. The Juvenile Protestant Mission numbers 120, and the Sunday-school 302. The lectures have been very successful. The Sunday evening Gospel services have witnessed large congregations, and have proved a blessing to many. The happy Saturday evening meetings have proved a valuable help to the temperance work. With Ritualism, Romanism, and Rationalism all round, it behoves all those who love the Truth to rally round the banner of Christ and to do their part as God shall give them opportunity. The president is Mr. J. Lawrence Mitchell, West-hill, Dartford.

Workers and Wages.

We hear a good deal nowadays about the effect of German competition in our foreign markets, and the rivalry of German wares at home, but little about our vast superiority in the distribution of wealth and the comfort of our working classes as compared with those of that country. A writer in the Edinburgh Review unfolds another side to the case, and shows from unquestionable statistics that comparatively we are beyond measure better paid, fed, and housed in this country.

Though the limit of exemption to the payment of income-tax is as low with them as £45, only 8·46 per cent. German wage-earners reach even that limit of income; while incomes of £475 are confined to one in every 550 of the population, and out of a Prussian population of 32,000,000 only some 37,000 have incomes of over £1625.

Thus there are fewer rich people there, while the average rate of working-class earnings is very much smaller. As a nation we are prone to complain and depreciate our blessings; we emphasise our misfortunes more than our privileges. In spite of all the social want and poverty that exists in this country, we should remember with thankfulness that we are far and away the best off socially of any nation in the world.

London City Mission.

The committee of this City Mission put forth a special appeal, urging that if the work is to be continued on anything like an adequate scale friends and supporters must without delay come to their aid. The committee state that:—

The number of missionaries, which in 1891 was 504, has now fallen to 470, and for the last five years the expenditure has exceeded the income by no less than £26,408 5s. 9d., an average of £5281 13s. 1d. per annum. Unless, therefore, the income is considerably increased, it will be impossible to maintain even the present number of men. On the other hand, there never was a greater need for the work, nor has it ever been more signally owned by God. The vast city continues to increase at an enormous rate. Last year 14,000 houses, on the lowest computation, were added, and, in spite of the earnest work of clergy and ministers, at least three millions of its inhabitants are reckoned never to enter a place of worship.

Surely this is not the time when the friends and supporters of the Mission will allow it to curtail its operations, but will rather give such increased help as will enable it to carry the message of the Gospel into every corner of London.

F. A. Bevan, Treasurer.

The Costers' Mission.

In an Occasional Paper issued by this Mission, Mr. W. J. Orsman writes:—

Hoxton, once a quiet, respectable, working-class suburb of Shoreditch, is now invaded by the poorest and the worst of characters from other Metropolitan districts now undergoing improvement, so that the benevolent side of the work becomes more exacting and onerous every year.

Our classes are full; the Sunday schools and Mission services and Christian Endeavour meetings are crowded; and a continuous flow of spiritual blessing is graciously bestowed. Costers' Hall is immensely popular with the gutter children of the locality—even with those who cannot be accommodated in its schools and classes. They know of a personal interest in them and their sick and crippled brothers and sisters. As for the adults, there are 2811 members of this Christian Mission and its various societies.

In addition to the religious meetings of the Mission, and the social, thrift, educational, and temperance work carried on, Mr. W. J. Orsman has for thirty-three years opened an Irish stew soup kitchen for three hundred needy families; also provided free breakfasts and half-penny dinners for the poorest children in the elementary day schools. His address is Milton House, Shacklewell-green, Hackney, N.E.

The Christian Lifeboat Crew held its monthly muster on Tuesday week at the New Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town. Miss Child, in opening the meeting, referred to the loss sustained through the death of H.R.H. Princess Mary Adelaide, and gave the text for the month "Made nigh by the blood of Christ." Captain Bush, one of the crew, gave a thrilling account of his restoration from the jaws of death in answer to prayer, and his intense desire to be more than ever used of God. Pastor Joynes gave an address on the love of Christ.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Bishop Tucker left for Mombasa last week.

A ten days' general mission is being held this week in Gloucester.

The will of the late Bishop Walsham How has been proved, the personal estate being valued at £72,240.

Rev. C. G. Ledger, who has done good work at Cheltenham, has been appointed to St. John's, Hollington.

The quincentenary of All Saints' Church, Maidstone, was celebrated on Tuesday, when the Archbishop of Canterbury opened the restored chapel.

The Bishop of London opened, on Tuesday week, the new house and chapel in Dartmouth-street, Westminster, for the Universities' Mission to Central Africa.

Rev. W. H. Davey, for twenty-five years vice-principal of St. David's College, Lampeter, has been appointed Dean of Llandaff, in succession to the late Dean Vaughan.

The Archbishop of Canterbury preached at Winchester Cathedral last Lord's Day, in connection with the observance of Temperance Sunday throughout the diocese.

Rev. H. G. B. Hunt has been appointed to the new vicarage of St. Paul's, Kilburn, Rev. F. W. Joyce to the vicarage of Harrow, and Rev. G. H. Perry to the rectory of St. Luke's, Old-street.

The Bishop of Worcester, preaching at Saltley, said every medical man in a hospital and every nurse was a follower of Christ in ministering to disease. They claimed them all as allies, no less than the clergymen who ministered to the soul.

A movement has been started for the establishment of a third suffragan bishopric in the diocese of London. It is suggested that the thickly populated area of North and East London should be divided, the latter portion to remain in charge of the Bishop of Stepney, and the former to be constituted a new bishopric.

Congregational.

Rev. E. H. Peach has been recognised at Wimborne.

Rev. W. W. Hutchings has entered on his new charge at Crawley.

Rev. A. G. Prichard has been recognised as pastor at Little Ilford.

Mr. H. C. Wallace has been ordained to the pastorate at Westgate, Burnley.

Rev. Alfred Turner, for over forty years pastor at Ashford, has removed to Folkestone.

Rev. J. G. Henderson has commenced his ministry at Islington Chapel, Upper-street, N.

Rev. W. A. Wrigley, owing to continued ill-health, has resigned the secretaryship of Cumberland Union.

Rev. G. Y. Jeffreys, of Capetown, one of the oldest of the Colonial ministers, is now on a visit to this country.

Miss Louie J. Robinson has sailed for India after a rest of eighteen months. A farewell service was held at Doddridge Chapel, Northampton.

Rev. T. Nicholson's health having broken down, the Church at Masborough, Rotherham, has relieved him from the duties of the pastorate to the end of the year.

The congregation at Christ Church, Lambeth, over which Rev. F. B. Meyer is pastor, recently had a collection to defray the balance of expenses connected with the renovation of the church. The sum needed was contributed, with £50 over for the general funds of the church.

The centenary of the Sunday-school in connection with Sheen-vale, Mortlake, has been celebrated by meetings extending over a week, including sermons by Professors Redford and Vaughan Pryce, Christian Endeavour and Band of Hope demonstrations, a meeting of old scholars, and a missionary meeting.

Mr. Meyer's Christ Church Magazine says:—"Our P.S.A. meetings have been steadily growing in numbers and power lately. It was a great pleasure to be told of the large numbers that are attending the evening classes, and the spirit of prayer that pervades the institute. Would that all work among our working brothers thus aimed to satisfy the heart and touch the spirit."

Calls.—Rev. A. L. Matson, to Hingham, Norfolk; Rev. A. G. Spears, to Newland, Lincoln (assistant); Mr. E. C. Rattray, of Westbury-on-Severn, to Bishop Auckland; Rev. F. Vernon, of Girlington, to Sutton Veny; Rev. J. S. Woof, of Derby, to Hazel-grove; Rev. W. J. Dickson, of St. Paul's, Wigan, to Montrose-street E.U. Church, Glasgow.

Resignations.—Rev. S. G. Matthews, of Salem, Bradford; Rev. J. Hargreaves, of Garstang; Rev. W. Gibson, of Ramsbottom.

Baptist.

Mr. Philip A. Pepperdene has been ordained at Soham.

Rev. P. G. Scorey has been welcomed at Sandhurst, Berks.

Rev. W. R. and Mrs. James have sailed on their return to India.

Rev. Y. El Karey has left to resume his work at Nablous, Palestine.

Rev. W. K. Bryce has been recognised at the Tabernacle, Nottingham.

Rev. A. S. Langley has been ordained at Newcastle-under-Lyme.

Rev. James McCleery, of Ramsbottom, has accepted the pastorate of the Tabernacle, Southend-on-Sea.

At Dalston Junction 200 members have been added to the church during the last two years.

Gresham Chapel, Barrington-road, Brixton, destroyed by fire in December, 1895, has been rebuilt and reopened.

During the eight and a-half years pastorate of Rev. T. R. Lewis at Scapegoat-hill, Huddersfield, the membership has increased from 123 to 223.

At the thirtieth anniversary of Upper Holloway Chapel (Rev. J. R. Wood) the membership was stated to be 910; since the formation of the church 2,966 have joined in fellowship. The announcement was made that £82,042 had been raised during the past thirty years.

Calls.—Rev. E. Haggis, of Ryde to Forton; Rev. F. W. Dunster, of Upwell, to Bombay; Rev. G. J. Cliff, of Wigan, to Toronto; Rev. E. A. Hobby, of Macclesfield, to Southampton; Rev. G. H. F. Jackman, of Coggeshall, to Pembroke-street, Devonport, Rev. A. G. Yeats, of Stirling, to Ashton-on-Ribble, near Preston.

Methodist.

A mission has been conducted at Rishton by Rev. G. White, of Blackburn.

Rev. Edwin Brownscombe has been ordained at Newport (Mon.) for service in Western Africa.

A mission conducted by Rev. Thomas Cook at Southport has resulted in many professing conversion.

The Primitive Methodist congregation at East Dulwich has doubled during the last twelve months. It has been decided to begin forthwith the erection of a new chapel.

The applications for the services of Wesley deaconesses from all parts of the country are considerably more numerous than Dr. Stephenson finds himself able to meet. He proposes to receive five or six more in January as residents at the institute.

Rev. Dr. Ferguson having asked to be relieved of the superintendency of the mission which the Primitive Methodist Connexion has initiated at the Church of the Saviour, Birmingham, Rev. H. J. Taylor has been asked to undertake the work.

Rev. A. Baldwin, Primitive Methodist, reports that much good work has been accomplished in the Zambesi Valley, there being already evident an increased regard for the rights of life and peace. The outlook in West Africa was never brighter than now.

The payments in cash to the Primitive Jubilee Fund have now nearly reached £36,000. It is decided that the portion of the fund to be devoted to missions shall be expended in the increase of five mission vans during the next ten years; the employment of evangelists; the opening of central missions in large towns; and the extension of foreign work.

Twelve years ago the late David Hill established the Central China Lay Mission. To-day that mission supports two European evangelists, a medical worker and a hospital, a blind school with a schoolmaster, besides several native workers in Wuchang District. Mr. and Mrs. Miles, two of the missionaries, have recently had their homes plundered, thereby losing £50.

The Wesleyan Home Mission Report says there is every reason to be satisfied with the results of the Gospel cars enterprise. Next to the preaching of the Gospel itself the most important feature of this novel kind of effort is the dissemination of pure, wholesome literature amongst the working populations of the villages. Eight cars are now in complete working order. This number is, at the earliest opportunity, to be increased to twelve.

Presbyterian.

Endeavours are being made to built a new church at New Swindon.

The anniversary of the work at Clapham Church has been celebrated.

A new hall has been opened in connection with Dr. Thain Davidson's work at Ealing.

Rev. H. L. Mackenzie, Moderator of Synod, sailed on Saturday on his return to his work in China.

The week of prayer and self-denial (or thanksgiving) will be observed from the 28th inst. to December 5.

The Mayor of Newcastle presided at the opening of the Rev. R. Stewart's new church at Benwell, and many different denominations were represented in the gathering. The building will cost £6000.

The Barclay Free Church, Edinburgh, is to be congratulated on the happy settlement which has been made in the induction of Rev. Mr. Clow, late of Aberdeen, as colleague and successor to Rev. Dr. Wilson.

The first of the season's monthly Sunday evening services for young men, followed by an "At Home," has been held in Regent-square. There was a large attendance. Mr. Connell referred to the success which had so long attended Mr. Robert Whyte's young men's class, and an address was given by Mr. R. T. Turnbull.

During service at Marylebone Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning a loud explosion occurred, followed by dense clouds of vapour. The church was at the time well filled, and a scene of great excitement ensued. It was ascertained that the explosion had occurred in one of the pipes used in connection with the hot water heating apparatus situated beneath the floor of the church. Despite the efforts of the Rev. George Jackson, who was the preacher of the morning, and the officials to reassure the people, a number left the building. As far as is known no one was injured in the church, but in the stampede from one of the galleries a person was thrown down and somewhat hurt.

Calls.—Rev. James Crichton, of Elgin, to Kelvinside U.P., Glasgow; Rev. R. Scrymgeour, of Monikie, to Jersey; Rev. John Anderson, of Falkirk, to Fordoun; Rev. John Arnott, of Dailly, to Stirling.

Salvation Army.

Twelve hundred field officers will "farewell" from their corps during this month for new commands.

Operations are to be commenced in Hong Kong immediately. A home for soldiers and sailors will be opened, and an experienced ex-naval officer placed in charge.

Over seven hundred Chinese have been to the penitent form in San Francisco. Two officers connected with the work there have offered themselves for missionary work in China.

General Booth is conducting a series of meetings in Scotland. He will also preside next week at the valedictory service of a large party of officers going to India, at the Congress Hall.

Fallen Asleep.

At Barry Dock, on 31st ult., Rev. W. W. Rees, pastor of the Tabernacle Church.—At Sutton Courtney, Rev. Henry Hall, aged sixty-one, a useful Baptist minister.—At Rochdale, Mrs. Withington, the wife of Rev. J. S. Withington, an honoured Primitive Methodist minister.—At Broughton Park, Mr. Joseph Bell, a Christian teacher, the honorary pastor of a mission church, and a man of sterling character and principle.—At Norwich, Mr. E. L. Dixon, a devoted Sunday-school worker and evangelist.—At Tunstall, Mr. John Cope, aged sixty-four, for fifty years a useful local preacher.—At Rawdon, Mr. J. S. Wilson, head of the Bradford firm of Rand and Son, in his seventy-fourth year, a native of Paisley, who settled at Bradford in early manhood, and for many years was a Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. He was on the committee of the old Airedale College, and one of the governors of the present United College, while he was keenly interested in and liberally supported the Yorkshire Home Missionary Society and the London Missionary Society.—At Romsey, Mr. Alderman Osborne, formerly mayor of the borough, and an earnest Christian helper.—At Dawley, Salop, Mr. E. Gough, an active and successful preacher of the Gospel.—At Blackburn, Mrs. D. Bannister, a Sunday-school teacher and worker of forty years' standing, who wielded great influence in all social, temperance, and spiritual work.—At Dorking, on 4th inst., Rev. Canon W. M. Madden, aged seventy-four, for thirty-eight years vicar of Holy Trinity, Wakefield.—At Carmarthen, Dr. John Hughes, aged seventy-nine, a Christian medical man, and father of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.—At Inskip, Fylde, Mr. J. Crook, for over thirty years a deacon, and for sixty years a total abstainer.—At Aberdeen, Rev. R. A. Mitchell, minister of Gilcolmston Free Church.—At South Croydon, on 31st ult., Mr. William Jeffery, a well-known Baptist worker, prominently associated with the church at Croham-road since its formation, and for many years one of the preachers connected with the Open-air Mission.—At Newtownards, Mr. Wm. Dobbin, an earnest worker in the Methodist Church, aged ninety years.—At Newtownbutler, Mr. John Murphy, a consistent Christian, aged seventy-five years.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WITH our next issue will be given a special LITERARY SUPPLEMENT of eight pages, in addition to the ordinary thirty-two pages. The price of THE CHRISTIAN will be, as usual, one penny.

Gratifying letters continue to reach us from those who have availed themselves of our publisher's offer of the Paragraph Bible (see advertisement on p. 6). The following comes to us from Wales :—

I have distributed the copies of THE CHRISTIAN you sent me with the Bible, fourteen at Newport and the others at Cardiff, and being myself a regular reader of THE CHRISTIAN for a considerable time I have been enabled to say a few words of recommendation, and judging by the remarks made by the recipients there will be several new readers.

A Cheshire vicar writes :—

I have sent several of the specimen copies of THE CHRISTIAN to clerical friends, and the rest we have distributed in the parish.

A Sunday School superintendent in a London suburb writes that he is distributing the copies among his Sunday School teachers. There is no doubt that the personal recommendation of the paper among personal friends and fellow-workers will go far to secure the increase of circulation which we desire for the coming year.

The superintendent above referred to gives an emphatic testimony to the value of the Paragraph Bible. He writes :—

The more I use it the more I am pleased with it. It is a convenient size, very well got up, and the print is beautifully clear and restful to the eyes. From the money point of view it is the cheapest book I have ever bought. I have never used a Paragraph Bible before, and find it a delightful change from the other, over which it possesses real and important advantages.

Speaking of Dr. John Watson's call to the Presbyterian Church, Kensington, The British Weekly says :—

It is not too much to say that Dr. Watson would be welcomed in London by the whole Christian community. We wish it were more common than it is for ministers of large churches to consider rather the opportunities to which they are invited than the particular church.

This is rather a sweeping assertion. It is not in our province to suggest any course of action to the Kensington congregation; but we feel at liberty, as representing some part of the Christian community, to say that until a more satisfactory "Apology" is forthcoming for the views set forth in "The Mind of the Master," many will regret that any widened "opportunities" should be afforded him outside that "particular church."

We are not of those who would make a man a transgressor for a word, nor would we overlook the varied gifts of which Dr. Watson has shown himself possessed in a high degree. The following sentences, however, from his much-discussed book can hardly bear two interpretations :—

A certain conception of God must be the foundation [of the new theology] and give shape to the whole structure. No doctrine of the former theology will be lost; all will be recarved and refaced to suit the new architecture. Sovereignty will remain, not that of a despot, but of a father; the Incarnation will not be an expedient, but a consummation; the Sacrifice will not be a satisfaction, but a reconciliation.

Again, speaking of Romish and Protestant views of the Atonement, he writes :—

Whether the price be the merits of Jesus or the merits of saints, the sufferings of Jesus or the alms of penitents, does not matter, since in either case the principle is the same, and is clearly unreasonable. Heaven is a spiritual state, and its settlement on any person, either on account of a payment in blood or money, is an absurdity.

In view of the wrong-sidedness of this teaching, it is inevitable that a considerable section of the Christian community should withhold the welcome suggested by our contemporary. We understand, moreover, that the same disposition is shared in the midst of the Kensington congregation, the call being by no means unanimous, either on the part of the elders or the general membership.

Again we would press upon our readers the necessity of wise and cautious voting on the 25th inst., to secure for our children deliverance from the sacerdotal net, which is designed to be spread about them in the schools, under guise of "Christian tea hing." Let all who really desire to keep the priests out of our State schools do their utmost to this end. A good deal of dust is being thrown, but as we said last week, "It is not a question of 'Church or Nonconformity'—all we urge (as we do most earnestly) is that our readers, to whatever body of Evangelical Christians they belong, should arouse themselves and their fellow-voters, in view of the election on the 25th inst., to support those candidates who desire to maintain the 'Compromise,' which for twenty-five years has worked so well."

It is with sincere pleasure that we hear of the conference that has been arranged through the intervention of Mr. Ritchie between the two parties to the engineers' quarrel. How soon a real understanding may be arranged no one can say; but that both sides will do their best to come to an amicable and permanent agreement the whole country earnestly longs. Meantime, we hope that all heated and foolish words on both sides will be carefully avoided, for they can only tend to accentuate a disastrous dispute which affects so many thousands of people, the issue of which depends so much on the temper of the leading negotiators on either side.

The Bishop of Durham named some undoubted causes of the industrial strifes which are so common when he said that the vast scale on which work is done destroys the personal relationship of employer and employed, and the existence of companies aggravates the mischief. Masters also live in one place, and the men in another. These are difficulties; how can they be met, say, in London, where there is a company as an employer of labour, where the manager lives at Brighton, and where the workmen themselves are scattered over an area several miles in extent? These things are, indeed, more easily asked than answered.

The late Bishop of Wakefield, Dr. Walsham How, in disposing of his large fortune left behind him an explanatory memorandum, accounting for his wealth, and stating that he vowed at the beginning that his family should never profit by his episcopal income, which he spent on the work of the diocese. His private income was inherited from his father and father-in-law, and the large sums he made by his books he gave away. This announcement he desired to be made public, not from any personal motive, but in order to vindicate the credit of his order from aspersions only too readily cast upon it by secularists and others.

He would not condemn any bishop for "making a modest provision for his family out of his episcopal income, if he has no private means." But he felt it a great privilege "to have no necessity to do this." This frank confession will, at least, shut the mouths of those who are continually detracting from the character of others. "Let not your good be evil spoken of."

That all Episcopalians do not share in the narrow and exclusive feelings of Ritualists towards Free Churchmen, is happily being proved in more ways than one. At the recent Liverpool conference Canon Denton Thompson said :—

The truths we hold in common with our Dissenting brethren are greater in character, number, and importance than our controversies sometimes lead us to suppose, and Archdeacon Taylor pleaded for the frank recognition of the validity of non-episcopal orders. We feel certain that though these gentlemen may represent only a minority of their fellow-priests in English orders, they have spoken, at any rate, the mind of the majority of lay Churchmen, who are profoundly displeased and shamed by the assertiveness of the clergy in this matter. The wonder is that Evangelical members of the Church of England do not speak out more openly and candidly in denunciation of the sacerdotal claims made by so many of their spiritual advisers.

Ritualism and Sunday Observance do not always run along similar lines, but we are glad to find The Church Times speaking strongly against the growing custom among well-to-do Churchmen of "Sunday luncheon and dinner parties, river excursions (sometimes involving a railway journey as well), which cannot be indulged in without interfering with and sometimes wholly preventing attendance on public worship on the part of servants and other employés," and affirming that "Churchmen who take part in them are breaking a fundamental law of their religion." The writer very sensibly says :—

When domestic servants marry into their own little homes they carry the influences and lessons they have learnt in their situations; hence the working class is constantly reinforced by young people whose training for home life whilst in service has been the reverse of religious; and then we wonder why so many working people never go to church.

When we remember how many working men's wives have passed through situations on their way to homes of their own, these strong words are very significant.

The private diarist in Cornhill gives a hint with regard to public feeling on the subject of Sunday cycling. "The hedge-clipping season is in full swing. Two years ago I should have paid no heed to it; but now I have a bicycle ...I found old John preparing to give up work early, and making no attempt to rake the clippings together. 'Why, John,' I said, 'don't you call it a bit unsportsmanlike to spoil other folk's pleasure?' 'Well, sir,' said John; 'I be just leaving these for they Sabbath breakers.'" We cannot justify John's method of vindicating his views, but Sunday cyclists show equally scant respect for the feelings of church-going folk, who have to exercise extraordinary vigilance to escape being run down by the cyclists "out for the day."

Dr. K. S. Macdonald told the Missionary Conference at Calcutta that the decay of caste is rapidly going on. The educated classes pour contempt on it, observing it in public for personal ends, but utterly ignoring it in private life. Eating-houses are increasing in Calcutta, and in these Hindoos eat all sorts of food without asking who prepared it. Western musical instruments have got into the harems, and Hindoo young ladies are taught music by European professors. Modes of travelling also tend to produce this same disregard of the severe demands of caste. This, no doubt, is all an advantage to Christianity, a preparation of the way of the Lord; but the sound of the evangelists' feet should be heard in every part of the land if it is to become the heritage of Christ.

The directors of the London Missionary Society have condemned in an emphatic way the new rules of the Indian Government, which deal with the physical effects of immorality in such a way as to countenance and encourage the immorality itself. Presumably the whole of the Evangelical missionary societies will do the same thing in due course; and as more than a thousand Indian missionaries condemned this legislation in 1893—the same in principle and purpose, though not precisely the same in form—the Government will have the whole Christian opinion of the country against it. Can our rulers afford to ignore such a weighty verdict?

The audience which Sir Vincent Caillard had of the Sultan on the 12th inst. was of a very cordial character. In the course of conversation his Majesty spoke of the value which he attached to the traditional friendship of the British people for his Empire, and expressed the hope that it would always be maintained and not be disturbed by slight misunderstandings. Sir Vincent Caillard, having taken the opportunity of thanking the Sultan for the goodwill and support invariably extended by him to the administration of the Ottoman Public Debt, his Majesty expressed his satisfaction at the manner in which the affairs of the Public Debt Administration were conducted. The Sultan felt gratified also that the loyalty with which Turkey fulfilled engagements towards the bondholders was appreciated in Europe. —Reuter.

"Slight Misunderstandings"! What a charming euphemism for Armenian Massacres! And what a picture of mutual compliment and flattery the interview presents!

Lord Salisbury's speech at the Guildhall banquet was directed mainly towards showing that small as was the efficiency of the European Concert in the recent troubles in the East, something important was accomplished, and that the name of England was conspicuous in both. These were the autonomy of Crete and the preservation of Thessaly for Greece. He is still of opinion that, inchoate as it may appear, the Concert contains within itself the germ of a common action among the Powers of the world which may ultimately take the form of a permanent combination and render the dream of universal peace a reality. There are, we fear, few indications of this while the Powers themselves maintain huge standing armies, and act on the principle of "each one primarily for itself." The military spirit must be exorcised ere such a result can be hoped for. As yet there are no signs of this ideal, while voices are clamouring even in England for the constant increase of the Army.

Civilisation does not always get forward on a powder-cart; for in the Federated Malay States it is advancing under the mild form of "persuasion." "Government by persuasion," says Sir Frank Swettenham, is the method adopted with cheering success. His words sound more like those of a missionary than of an official. He says:—

Now, our policy in the Malay States is that of sympathy—and I would sum up the most successful government of coloured races in that one word—with the result that, instead of being exterminated, the race is actually being improved and strengthened mentally, morally, and physically. Owing to our sanitary measures, diseases hitherto rife are becoming unknown. The people are having a chance they never had before. We are mending instead of ending the people. We have saved their bodies, increased their wealth, given them freedom, and, with their full consent and approval, we control their whole government.

Slavery and forced labour are abolished; justice is secured for all. You could travel for twelve months in the Malay States and not hear a single white person use the word "nigger," and you might be there for years and never see one hit a Malay or hear him swear at him. The country does not cost the British taxpayer a single farthing, but its yearly increasing trade has already been of very considerable advantage to British manufacturers.

The acquittal of the Giluk Burgher officers charged with the murder of friendly natives during the Bechuana rebellion has caused a feeling of shame and disgust in many South Africans, and is reflecting itself in the Press. The Kimberley Advertiser puts the case with uncompromising straightness:—

It can only discredit us that atrocities like these should go unpunished, that a crime should be known to all men, rank in the offence with which it rises to heaven, and that yet no man should be held guilty. The eyes of England, and indeed of Englishmen everywhere, are upon us. Can we wonder that their cheeks grow hot with shame as they hear such things? Need we be surprised that Aborigines Protection Societies flourish, when we can only meet their accusations with the tale of Gamogara? And the natives themselves—what must they think of the Government of our great Queen Mother when the hand of justice fails to lay hold on the murderers of defenceless women and children? It is not to the advantage of our reputation for justice that such cruelties should go unredressed. Whoever is responsible for the committal of such atrocious acts, the blood of the natives cries aloud for justice.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., has suggested that on January 1, 1900, a million persons, definitely attached by ties of living interest to the Methodist Church, should inscribe their names upon a roll, and that for each name thus inscribed there should be presented the thank-offering of one guinea, neither more nor less, for each person. The scheme is great enough to strike the imagination, and the method is so fraternal, has so much of the early Christian spirit of equality, as to commend it for universal adoption. The poor man and his wife and children cannot give a guinea each, but when they have given what they can the amount should be made up by some richer brother or sister. Thus the rich will not appear as giving more, nor the poor less. The effect of this plan, we believe, would be excellent. And the objects are worthy of the money. Besides strengthening the home and foreign missionary work, a large sum would be spent on village elementary schools, that "might, with their Bible teaching, be a safeguard to the children against Romanism on the one hand and atheism on the other."

A Methodist paper gives almost every week the name of some aged man who, for half a century or longer, preached, without charge, the Gospel of Christ. Last week it noticed the death of the oldest Wesleyan local preacher, Mr. Joshua Northrop, of Great Horton, Bradford, who had been a preacher since 1827. In his early days he was a hand loom weaver, and for ten years held the position of porter at a workhouse. He travelled thousands of miles in doing his Christian work, and gave to it the best efforts of his mind as well as the toils of his body. In the same issue our contemporary names another preacher who preached for fifty years. What disinterested zeal and patient continuance in well-doing such men of God exemplified; and such men are to be found among all denominations. May the succession never die out!

In a leading article on "Some Aspects of the Missionary Problem" in The Methodist Recorder there is an array of facts as to the present influence of Christianity in the world which are often ignored. Comparative statistics are depressing, but the bearing of the facts are most hopeful. Though numbers still count for heathenism and force, the tendencies, the indications, all count for Christ. The confession of an intelligent Jew, after hearing a Christian preacher at Baalbec on the Lordship of Christ recently, is significant of a great truth: "He is exercising a great Lordship to-day." There are now but five autonomous States that are not at least nominally Christian—Morocco, Turkey, China, Persia, and Japan, and each of them is in the grip of the Christian Powers, and is surrounded—indeed, being permeated—by the light of the Cross There is here a great encouragement and an unparalleled opportunity.

It needs a heart securely anchored on Divine realities to see the relation between the highest truths and the lowliest duties; but till that relation is understood neither truth nor duty can be truly grasped. The Christian has been defined as "a man who can do little things in a great spirit." We are saved from the sense of life's drudgery by realising that the most commonplace act may have Divine meaning for us; and from spiritual moodiness by throwing ourselves into the channels of practical service. This is a thought that is fully illustrated in one of Dr. Maclaren's new volume of sermons, The Victor's Crown, where he says:—

The wisest thing a man can do when he feels the wheels of his religious being are driving heavily is to set himself doggedly to the plain homely work of daily life. Paul did not sit and bemoan himself because he felt this slackening of impulse, but he went away to Aquila, and said, "Let us set to work and make camel's-hair cloth and tents." Be thankful for your homely, prosaic, secular, daily work. You do not know how many sickly fancies it saves you from, and how many breaches in the continuity of your Christian feeling it may bridge over. It takes you away from thinking about yourselves, and you cannot think about anything less profitably sometimes. So stick to your work; and if ever you feel, as Paul did, "cast down," be sure that the workshop, the office, the desk, the kitchen will prevent you from being "destroyed," if you give yourself to the plain duties which no moods alter, but which can alter many moods.

Untold harm is done by the publication in the Press of the details of the Divorce Court. To a large extent this muck-rake work devolves upon the weaker representatives of journalism, but we are glad to know that another reform has become operative, viz., that henceforth the body of the Divorce Court is closed to the general public. There is nothing to be said for, and much may be urged against, the admission of all comers to this court. Next, we should like to see some restriction placed upon the Press in reporting so fully these unsavoury cases.

The Brewers' Exhibition.

THE brewers of England have recently been holding, in the Agricultural Hall, their nineteenth annual exhibition and market of machinery, appliances, and produce used by brewers, maltsters, distillers, wine merchants, licensed victuallers, caterers, and hotel proprietors, and in the manufacture of aerated waters, syrups, cordial, cider, sherry, liqueurs, cigars, tobaccos, and pipes. Amongst the novelties may be mentioned a new automatic apparatus for raising beer and other liquids by pneumatic pressure, instead of by means of the old-fashioned pumps.

At the inaugural luncheon the Chairman, Mr. C. H. Tripp, spoke of the advantages brought to the country by the enormous trade in drink. "The benefit to agriculture," he said, "was that 64,570,000 bushels of malt were used; also 587 cwt. of hops; while 450,000 acres of grain were cultivated for distilling, and 'the trade' paid £11,000,000 to the revenue." Finally, he pointed out that some 2,000,000 people were employed, directly and indirectly, in "the trade," and he asked what would be the result to the labour market if their livelihood were taken away from them?

No doubt from the brewers' and publicans' point of view this exhibition is very complete, but there is another standpoint from which it is most incomplete. Large as the Agricultural Hall is, it would not be nearly big enough to expose to view all the "advantages" of "the trade." Adequately to display them we should require a building at least a thousand times as large. We should have to summon, as the proper exhibits of "the trade," a miserable crowd from our prisons, our hospitals, our workhouses, our orphanages, our lunatic asylums, and even from the unseen world. How much has this cost the country?

At Claybury Lunatic Asylum last year 958 inmates were received; intemperance or drink was responsible for 217 admissions. As regards the criminal classes, it is well known that "drink" introduces multitudes to crime, makes them bolder in crime, and hinders their exit from crime. Morever, the late Sir William Gull declared that "a large number of people are dying day by day poisoned by alcohol, not knowing that they are poisoned by it." It is estimated that not only 60,000 drunkards die annually in the three kingdoms, but that in thus destroying themselves before their time their fall brings down to premature graves 60,000 more innocent victims. And if those who directly or indirectly have been chased out of this world by alcohol were permitted for a short space to return, and by their very presence to testify concerning the dire evils inflicted on them through intemperance in their mortal lives, what a chorus of mourning, lamentation, and woe would rise from this ghostly host.

Such an exhibition certainly would not commend itself to the brewing interest, but it would represent an argument for the positive prohibition of the traffic such as the country has never had.

Just before the great translator of the English Bible, Tyndale, was burnt to death he cried at the stake, with a fervent zeal and a loud voice, "Lord, open the King of England's eyes." In view of what drink is doing for this land, in view of the physical, spiritual, social, and national evils heaped upon us by it, in view of the extreme difficulty of securing even small limitations of the traffic by Acts of Parliament, it becomes all Christians to pray, "Lord, open the people of England's eyes." We have multiplied great temperance organisations for old and young, we have multiplied able books containing scathing indictments of the traffic, we have spread abroad well-written temperance tracts by the million, our temperance orators have done noble work, our pulpits have given a less and less uncertain sound, numbers of our magistrates, judges and physicians have added their weighty testimony to the general condemnation, and yet the "drink" bill last year represented a great increase, reaching the appalling figure £148,972,230.

We have interceded with God, but our intercessions have been too fitful and too few. We have by no means measured the full resources of supplication. Our petitioners have not been numerous enough, our petitions have not been earnest enough. Let the whole Church plead, with spirit-inspired zeal, having cleansed herself from all complicity with the drink traffic, and she will accomplish results which all her other efforts have failed to bring about.

Criticism Criticised.

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

IN a former article (Sept. 2) we showed how fallacious are the three main principles upon which the Higher Criticism proceeds, viz., the psychological construction of history, the literary arrangement of the Bible, and the evolution of religion.

The legislation of the Pentateuch claims the authority of Moses, and the records claim to have been written either by the hand of Moses or by writers in Mosaic times. This the critics deny, making Moses a mythical person, and assigning the greater portion of his work to men who lived 400, 600, and 800 years afterwards, who falsely ascribed it to Moses to give it greater authority. These fragments, written by nearly a dozen authors, were taken in hand, we are told, by several editors, who cut them to pieces and patched them together, like a tessellated pavement, in their present form. But, weighed in the balance of experience, this theory is found wanting.

For example, Prof. Wace, Principal of King's College, tells us: "There is no instance of an ancient book of history being composed like a tessellated pavement, in which unknown sources are dovetailed together, sometimes in the most minute pieces. Still less is there any instance of an elaborate historical and legislative work having been composed with the object of confusing, if not perverting, a nation's traditions of its own history and its ancient laws; still less of such a work succeeding in the attempt" (Lex Mosaica, 617).

We were also told that the Pentateuch could not have been written in the time of Moses, because writing was then unknown. This argument, however, has been ground to powder by the discovery that even in the time of Abraham. The same discovery, as Professor Sayce tells us, has shown how different were the literary conditions of those times from what the critics supposed, when on their unsound principles they built up their theory.

It has been observed that many of the critics are trained Hebraists, and some of them have assumed that all the scholarship of the age was with them. But a column of this paper might easily be filled with the names of skilful linguists and able scholars who reject their theory. I am not aware that they are distinguished as historians or archæologists; some of them, like Canon Driver, have shown themselves singularly deficient in that historic discernment so essential in dealing with the records of ancient times. Even their special knowledge of Hebrew is not indispensable in dealing with the questions they have raised.

Upon this point I give the testimony of two witnesses, whose qualifications will not be disputed. One of them is Kuenen himself, one of the fathers of the modern theory. He says: "When the critics sought on literary grounds to determine the order of the composition of the sources of the Pentateuch, there was —The facts we have to go upon are few, and often ambiguous. We must, therefore, be content, when circumstances require it, with a more or less vague result." So little, according to this authority, can the mere language or literature of the Pentateuch do for the critics. The second authority is Dr. Robertson, Professor of Oriental Languages in the University of Glasgow. He says: "The bare facts of a linguistic character with which trained Hebraists have to deal count for very little in the essential questions at issue, as critical writers themselves have confessed. These writers are specialists, it is true, but dealing with matters in which common sense may follow them, observe their processes, and pronounce upon their validity."

NO CERTAIN RESULT ATTAINED.

As an illustration of this he reminds the critics that what they formerly placed first they now place last. He laughs at them for this "acrobatic performance," and tells them there is no reason for it except the demand of their theory. "An indispensable qualification," he says "for pursuing an inquiry like the present is that knowledge of human nature and sympathy with it which we call common sense." Even Canon Driver is compelled to admit that "the common, unbiassed, and unsophisticated reason of men must prevail in the end." Weighed in the balances of common sense, I am confident this unnatural theory must be rejected, and will finally be classed among the

CURIOSITIES OF LEARNED FOLLY.

Looking at it from this point of view, I thoroughly accept the conclusion to which Professor Watts, of Belfast, was brought. He wrote: "The critics, instead of analysing the facts with which they profess to deal, have entered upon their task with foregone conclusions, to which the facts must be made to conform. If men of science were to frame their theories after this fashion, they would be the laughing stock of the world. When the glamour of literary renown, with which these theories have been emblazoned before a too credulous public, shall have been dispelled, as is being done by a riper scholarship, their authors, if heard of at all, will occupy a very humble position in the domain of Biblical literature, whether of the Old Testament or the New" (Lex Mosaica, 605).

Warning to Boys.—The fate of a lad at Felling should be a warning to the great number of growing boys who are always sucking cigarettes. The following is an extract from evidence given at the inquest:—"Dr. Meade said he was called in but the boy was dead. He was informed that the deceased was a very excessive smoker (although only sixteen years of age). Smoking cigarettes, and not being very strong, the practice brought on syncope." Where one boy is killed we may be sure thousands are injured. The prevalence of cigarette-smoking among youths in their teens is an evil which demands strong condemnation by all who are interested in the physical and moral being of our coming men.

From Jerusalem to Gaza.

THE WAIL OF THE VILLAGE PASTOR.

A FEELING of almost righteous envy is provoked in the minds of many earnest Christian workers in our country districts at the great privileges in reach of the large centres of Christian activity.

This latter fact is as it should be, for there apparently lies the greatest need. But a tour amongst the village causes of our land by some of our best-known and greatly-used evangelists would tend much not only to the reviving of these churches, but even to the increase of England's spiritual tone, and give the missioners also some fresh experience and insight into human nature which are not evident in town missions.

It would mean some sacrifice to them, doubtless, and perhaps the lesser numbers thus reached would seem to indicate a mistake; but what would it mean to many a hard-worked, struggling pastor, beset by a thousand difficulties peculiar to country work, and to many a cause struggling for very existence? Large special efforts cannot be theirs because of the lack of means, and some effort in this direction by a committee of influential men would more than merit the trial. Be it remembered in these days the youth of our villages is increasingly flowing from the country districts to the larger centres; and nothing will so reach the innermost heart of England as a more thorough provision for the spiritual needs of these remoter parishes. Workers in country districts testify that for sterling quality of character there are none foremost of "the country yokel," as he is termed. He may lack the general acquirements of the city population, but for heart and feeling he is the pick of the nation. Many of our towns have multiplied missions, but village stations lack not the need, the desire, or the earnest co-operation, but the money and the means for them. Cannot these be supplied? Where is the Philip who will go down "from Jerusalem unto Gaza"—from the great revival to the needy desert—at the bidding of the Spirit.

DEAR SIR,—Kindly allow me to endorse the views expressed in your ably-written article on the above named subject. I am of opinion that the time has come when the Churches should arouse themselves over this and similar matters, and unitedly defend our Sabbath from these encroachments.

These Sunday concerts are but the thin end of the wedge and one of the many forms of attack which the Sabbath is now experiencing. And one of the greatest incentives to determined action in this matter should be the thought of the influence of these things upon the young people who are just forming their characters. With such temptations and enticements on every hand, what will the rising generation grow into during the next ten or twenty years? A generation of Sabbath-breakers and pleasure-seekers, living unproductive lives, so far as any real good to themselves or others is concerned.

I believe we as a nation owe our morality (what we have of it) very largely to the influences of the Christian Sunday. Take away those influences, and our social morality must decline.

I would suggest that this is a matter which should be taken up seriously by Free Church Councils, and particularly by the London and National Federations. I would also point out the necessity this matter suggests of the churches in every town inviting for the purpose (among other things) of securing the election upon public bodies of men who will defend things which Christians count dear.

The competition against the churches is getting very keen, and it is for those within to show the same degree of activity as those without, and that can be most effectively done by combining in the way I have mentioned.—Yours truly,

Croydon. H. R. GRUBB.

FROM FAR AND NEAR.

American Notes.

AFTER a lovely passage in the Cunard steamer Umbria, my wife and I reached New York on Saturday, October 16. On the following day we were present at the close of a fourteen days' convention of Dr. A. B. Simpson and his friends. Seventy-eight thousand dollars were given or promised that day towards the support of the 300 Christian Alliance Missionaries. At night Pastor John Robertson, of Glasgow, and Mr. Henry Varley preached. Some have imbibed the idea that the Apostle Paul failed at Athens, and therefore told the Corinthians that he was determined to know nothing among them save Jesus Christ and Him crucified. I should like such to have heard Mr. Robertson's sermon showing the high importance and significance of the adhesion of Dionysius the Areopagite. "Among the which was even Dionysius the Areopagite." That word "even" shows that the Apostle was not considered by his recorder, Luke, to have failed at Athens. On the contrary, his address has generally been recognised as a model of courtesy, tact, fearlessness, and sound doctrine. There is a little fashion just now to find out Paul's lapses into selfhood, or compromise, or pride of learning, and if these were all put together they would make the Apostle of the Gentiles a somewhat shady character. Mr. Robertson's discourse was an able and eloquent defence so far as the visit to Athens was concerned. Mr. Varley followed with a pungent exposition of Gospel truth, and between thirty and forty rose afterwards to confess Christ.

On Thursday, Oct. 21, we came to Northfield. Mr. Moody was evangelising in Canada. He has returned home to-day (Oct. 29).

Nov. 2.—We have been spending ten days with Mrs. Moody at Northfield. Mr. Moody has been and only returned for the last four days of our visit.

I had the much-valued opportunity of speaking briefly, almost daily, to the young people of the seminaries at Northfield or Mount Hermon, or the training school for Bible study held in the hotel; and, by the courtesy of the pastor, Rev. Dr. Schofield, of preaching in the church on Sunday to a congregation of 1200, more than half of whom were the young men and women from the schools. One of the most pleasing experiences was the time spent in the classes observing the thorough and painstaking education given, ranging over a wide field of subjects. Not the least important and essential is the training given in household duties, cooking, sewing, etc.

It was delightful to see the welcome given to Mr. Moody on his appearance after a few weeks of absence, expressed not less eloquently by the beaming eyes of the girls than by the throats of the boys in their characteristic "yell." Equally charming was the serenade by the young ladies before breakfast on the morning before the Monday on which we left, in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, concluding with the travellers' psalm—cxxi.—and the benediction of Num. vi. 24-26.

Mr. Moody had been holding short missions at various towns and cities in Canada—Montreal and Toronto, Hamilton and Kingston, Peterboro' and Brandon, Brantford and Stratford, at all of which the usual crowds gathered, with the same enthusiasm and the like results. At Montreal, at the close of a meeting of 4000 men, between three and four hundred remained under evident conviction, leading doubtless in many cases to repentance and conversion; others needing only a little counsel to lead them into liberty. Instances were continually occurring, more interesting than romance, of persons converted in years gone by, of whom nothing was heard at the time, but who have fought the good fight of faith in the high places of the field, have carried the light of life into the darkest circumstances of human life, or have suffered unto blood, striving against sin.

The present character of Mr. Moody's preaching and work in no wise differs from the past. There is no pandering to new orthodoxies or coquetting with new theologies. The very same grand fundamental truths—Ruin, Redemption, and Regeneration; Atonement, Justification, and Sanctification—are preached with the same vivid illustration, picturesque description, and moving appeal as of old, and while sceptical delivers no captives and binds up no broken hearts, God's good news brings liberty to them that are bound, and proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord.

Mr. Moody's plan has been to strike central places in Canada. The daily papers have given fuller reports of his sermons than ever before. Ministers who are lovers of souls become united in love for and testimony to the common salvation, and denominational differences are forgotten in a larger and fuller appreciation and experience of the power unto salvation inherent in these omnipotent truths. The people come in crowds and the meetings and their results will not be forgotten for a generation.

We are now on our way to Winnipeg, where Mr. Moody will probably be holding meetings for a week or more.

I append an interesting extract touching Mr. Moody from the Weekly Bulletin of the Y.M.C.A., Oakland, Cal., dated Oct. 21.

Last Sunday morning Rev. Charles R. Brown preached a sermon from his pulpit in the First Congregational Church on "Religious Life in the Colleges," and made a statement we feel obliged to comment upon. This statement was to the effect that "it was to be regretted that the Christian workers in the colleges took so much of their theology from Northfield. It is also a pity that the Young Men's Christian Association outside the college, as great and grand an institution as it is, should take its theology from Northfield—a theology that teaches the world will not be converted until after the second coming of Christ, the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures, and the substitutional atonement of Jesus Christ." He further declared that "Northfield was no place to go for theology."

As to those particular portions of "Northfield theology" that Mr. Brown objects to, we would say we do not know to what particular extent they are accepted by the officers and active members of the Young Men's Christian Association; but we venture the opinion that the majority of them do accept those plain truths of Scripture, and furthermore, as they are men with brains enough to think for themselves, it is needless to add they were not obtained at Northfield, but from their original source—the Bible. But what is Northfield? In the first place, it is world-renowned as the home of Mr. D. L. Moody. In the second place, it has gained still greater prominence as the meeting-place of Christian conferences and conventions. Taking these conventions and conferences together, it may safely be affirmed that not a single truth held by Evangelical Christianity has failed of due honour in the teachings from Northfield. That Northfield has been a distinct force in modern Christian life and service—a force which has been felt in every department of Christian life and effort, and in every quarter of the world—is now universally admitted. This is the result of the energy, wisdom, and resource of Mr. D. L. Moody.

Another inference from the remarks of Mr. Brown about Northfield is that its religious teaching is weak and out of date. In connection with this, let it be noted who have been the teachers at Northfield for the past fifteen years. They have been men whose ability, learning, and high character no man can call in question. Whatever truth was to be presented, Mr. Moody has constantly endeavoured to secure its foremost living exponent. These men have been the ablest in modern Christian life. It has, therefore, been impossible for scholarly agnosticism, or doubt, or criticism, to treat other than seriously the testimony that has gone out from Northfield.

I cannot close without commending the dear companion of my last North African journey, Mr. S. Trevor Francis, to the sympathy and prayer of my readers. He left me at Naples last April, with an affection of the eyes which now threatens blindness. This is distressing news to me.

R. COPE MORGAN.

A Gratifying Feature of the annual report o the American Board of Commissioners for foreign missions is the statement that 1544 Congregational Endeavour Societies contributed, as against 1223 last year.

An Australian Convention.

I HAVE been attending the Geelong Convention. In many of its features it resembles that of Keswick. There is the same widespread interest in the meetings, the same earnestness and intensity of purpose manifested in those who attend, the same mingling together of Christians of all denominations, and the same spirit of eager desire and expectancy. These conditions have much to do with the blessing so often received at such gatherings.

The speakers were for the most part ministers and others who form what is called The Band. Whether this arrangement tends to the strength or the weakness of the movement is open to question. None are admitted to The Band except by a unanimous vote, and none receive the vote—or, I believe, are even proposed—save those who have experienced in some form "the second blessing." No doubt the object of such an arrangement is to secure unanimity in the teaching; but this object is not perfectly attained. Nor is it likely while The Band includes Wesleyans who hold John Wesley's views of entire sanctification, and Baptists who claim nothing more than the entire subjugation of sin. Several times these differences appeared during the Convention, and statements were made which were understood to mean

SINLESS PERFECTION.

It is significant that one of the requests for prayer at the early morning meeting was "that the dangerous heresy of sinless perfection might be kept out of the Convention."

For my own part, I get to look with increasing disfavour upon the formation of bodies of Christians which exclude all who do not accept a certain form of presenting truth. And I cannot but think that the object of the Convention is defeated by such means. The cry continually rising from the Convention was for "the big Revival." For ten years this prayer has been presented; but while some of the speakers spoke of hopeful signs, it is evident hat the Revival has not yet come. Will it come at all, until "all the house of Israel" inquire of the Lord for it? And would not its coming be hastened if the Convention broadened its basis somewhat, and included holy men of God everywhere, whether their holiness had come to them as a second blessing or not? Perhaps some of these remarks are not without application to the movement at home.

One other feature struck me at the Convention, which was a contrast to Keswick. The evening meetings—and particularly the last meeting before the missionary day—closed in much too excited a manner to be permanently

HELPFUL TO SEEKING SOULS.

Quite a number of persons rose at the call of the speaker to testify their desire to be wholly the Lord's. These and others tarried to an after-meeting with the promise that something would be said to help them. But the dear old Methodist saint of God upon whom the Chairman called to speak was so carried away by his emotions that he could only throw up his arms and cry, "Why, you've all got it, haven't you? Let us sing it again!" And for some time he kept them singing the chorus, "Cleansing for me." And all the while my thought was with those who were desiring to face some real difficulty, and who needed to be quietly dealt within the presence of God. Permanent blessing can hardly be expected from such excitement. When the rush of feeling has passed away, what solid truth is left behind?

I was sorry to miss the missionary day, for it promised to be one of unusual importance and blessing. It is a cause for devout thanksgiving that these conventions lead to the missionary spirit; but, again, the question may be raised, Would it not be better if the missionaries gave themselves to work in connection with the societies which their own churches have long maintained? The tendency to form "Faith Missions," prevalent to-day, finds so much favour amongst colonial Christians that it is to be feared other missions are allowed to suffer.

GEO. WAINWRIGHT.

Melbourne, Australia.

Count Campello and Italy.

IN the course of his last address, before returning to Italy a few weeks ago, Count Campello said: You will ask me whether I have undertaken a revolution. Yes, I have, and in doing so I follow Christ, who rose against and threw down Paganism, and placed in its stead the Gospel of Truth. For this reason I am a revolutionist, but a pacific revolutionist, by changing the hearts of men, not by persecution, not by barricades, not by causing the shedding of blood, but by placing the Bible in the hands of the people. This must be done; in the words of Garibaldi, "The Bible is the cannon that will destroy the Papal Church," this modern paganism. We have already thirteen stations in Italy, and five ministers are working, besides Bible readers. We have made great progress by your help, but that progress would have been thousands of times greater if means had not been wanting.

Rev. Ugo Janni, the trusted helper of Count Campello, said: We seek that the Church of Italy shall be in agreement with Holy Scripture and the doctrines held by the Primitive Church. We reject the doctrines of the Papacy; the Immaculate Conception and worship of the Virgin; the universal rule and the infallibility of the Pope; Transubstantiation and the withholding the cup from the laity; the doctrine of Purgatory and the cult of saints; worship in a language not understood of the people; also all other inventions of the Papacy.

Captain Francis Petrie, who presided, mentioned a typical incident in Count Campello's life. After he left the Papal Church he was followed by another dignitary, and their first act was to seek to preach to the masses in Rome. Many English and Italians "wished them well," and assured them of their "great sympathy"; yet life cannot be sustained on assurances of the warmest sympathies. This they found, and after being without the means of procuring food for three days the evangelists had to take counsel. Count Campello's friend and associate, Monsignor ——, said:—"What are we to do? We cannot go on. I see but two courses: we must go back, or starve. I shall go back. What will you do?" Count Campello's reply was in one word—"starve."

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mrs. F. Petrie, 12, Gloucester-walk, Campden Hill, W.

Evangelical Schools of Pisa.

THE twenty-seventh annual report describes in detail the work done at Pisa, Cisanello, and San Michele. With reference to the last place we read: "The monks close to my boys' school were unable to reopen their day school last autumn, though urged to do so by the Archbishop of Pisa, as they had not a single pupil. On the other hand, every available bench and table was in requisition to accommodate the little boys who kept coming to me up to June."

On the subject of irreligion and infidelity, Miss S. H. Carruthers writes: "A wide-spread movement has sprung up in many parts of the country, and has been quite remarkable in Pisa and its vicinity, where for so long indifference and atheism had prevailed. After about a year's interval, during which there was no resident evangelist of the Evangelical Church in Pisa, Sig. A. Pierotti came last autumn to live in Pisa, and has proved a very earnest worker. At Cisanello he holds a short service on Sunday evenings, in regard to which it is stated in the Piccolo Messaggiero that the congregation is composed chiefly of young people, and these are almost entirely past and present pupils of the schools.

"Very early in the spring a colporteur visited the small town of Pontasserchio, a few miles from Pisa, and distributed a large number of tracts; this proved to be the beginning of a most important movement, which is linked to the work carried on for twenty years in Pisa by the late Cav. Paolo de Michelis, by the circumstance that four men, formerly members of the little church in Pisa and who have suffered much persecution, were found living in Pontasserchio; these have greatly aided the movement, and will form the nucleus of a church in connection with the 'Evangelical Church of Italy.' Thus fruit has been found 'after many days.'

"A large distribution of tracts, gospels, etc., was carried on by a voluntary agent in the town of Pisa during this spring, who found great willingness on the part of the people to accept these Gospel messages, and to enter into conversation on religious subjects. Some were thus induced to attend the meetings held by Sig. Pierotti, and several Bibles and New Testaments were given to those who really wished to possess a copy. The priests were naturally indignant, and one preaching in a chapel in Pisa actually said: 'He had more pity for a murderer than for those who circulate tracts, books, and Bibles, for they are worse than assassins.'"

Communications to Miss Carruthers should be addressed Pisa, per Cisanello, Italy.

Bible Work in Rome.

MRS. WALL, who has been ill for a month, but is now happily restored, writes as to the work in the city on the Tiber:—

"Many of the Romans, more especially among the working classes, are now willing to converse on religion, and frequently confess with tears that they are not happy, and are anxious to hear of something that will bring peace to their troubled hearts. Two of our Bible-women are employed part of every day in taking the New Testament to all the families in Rome, more especially to the apartments in the palaces where we know few have ever seen it. We put each copy in an envelope, with a card containing a list of our services nicely printed, and also our address. In this way we must have sent out nearly a thousand, but not more than one or two have been returned, and very few, in comparison, refused. The priests are taking the alarm because, no doubt, they find God's Word in the families where they least expected. Last week a letter was sent round by one of the principal priests to all his parishoners warning them against receiving these little books, and calling them wicked tracts, and recommending them to consign them to the flames. We feel we have been clearly guided in this work, as now the Word of God can be read without fear of the father confessor. We ask special prayer for this effort."

Items from Africa.

Writing from Carr End, Entakamu, Ixopo Natal, on September 30, Mr. ELBERT S. CLARKE describes the latest calamity that has fallen on that part of Africa, in the shape of the rinderpest, involving the loss of thousands of valuable cattle, the scarcity of milk and of meat, etc. He requests the intercessory prayers of Christians at home that the plague may be stayed, and that the natives may hear the voice of God speaking in it. The epidemic has involved much loss to Mr. Clarke and to the mission.

Mr. ROBERT SHIELDS, of Pungo Andongo, Angola, writes, on Oct. 2, telling of interesting itinerating journeys to native villages around. Meetings were held in many places, and the people listened attentively to the Gospel message. Superstition is very rife, and there are other hindrances to the acceptance of the truth.

An earnest appeal comes from Mr. H. C. WITHEY, stationed at Quiongoa Mission Station, in the same region of Angola, for a mission press, through which to provide Christian literature for the people. About £500 will be required.

MR. A. V. LILEY, of Tunis (15, rue de la Municipalité) writes that he is still putting forth special efforts to meet the young among the Arab population. He says:—"Living among Mohammedans one is more and more impressed with the fact that their religious life is one of hypocrisy. The name of God, his attributes, etc., and many religious expressions are continually used under various circumstances, and often with very questionable objects in view. The Mohammedans cannot understand God's holiness, justice, mercy, and love. What sin really is, is unknown to them. Pray with us that the Holy Spirit may convict, convince, and convert them."

Eastern Arabia.

MUSCAT, Eastern Arabia, on the Persian Gulf, only two days' sail from Karachi, now has a missionary of its own. Rev. P. J. ZWEMER, of the Dutch Reformed Church, U.S.A., has been living in the Bazaar of Muscat for a year or two. He has been visiting India to recruit his health after the terrible heat and solitude and straitened surroundings of Muscat; and has interested missionaries at Karachi, Quetta, Lahore, and Amritsar in his efforts. He has during the last year consented, on the suggestion of the Consul, to take over a batch of freed slave boys, Suahili speaking, from East Africa. He has penetrated about 100 miles or more into the interior; and, though at great risk in so lawless and bigoted a country, he has found many ready to listen more or less to the Injil and to respect him as a "Mullah of the Gospel." He has full belief in the future of the work in and near Muscat. Such men who stand bravely alone should be upheld by our prayers.—Punjaub Mission News.

India.

FAMINE ECHOES.

Mrs. W. D. Osborne, of the L.M.S., Trevandrum, Travancore, South India, makes a most pathetic appeal for help in caring for a number of women, released from prison, who have necessarily lost caste with their relations, and have been received by the mission so as to save them from relapsing into misery and sin. Accommodation must be provided for them, and for years they will have to be taught some useful industry, so as to fit them for an honourable life. With the many other claims of mission work proper, and the scarcity caused by the famine, this additional burden is very heavy, and Mrs. Osborne earnestly invites the sympathetic help of our readers.

Mr. J. D. Denning, of the M. E. Mission, Narsinghpore C. P. India, states that in that district much relief work has been done. He expects to have 400 orphan boys on his hands at the close of the famine. These must be fed, taught, and instructed in the Gospel. The necessities of the case are evident, and friends are asked to co-operate in the good work. £3 will feed and clothe a boy for a year.

Pastor A. Haegert, of the Bethel Santhal Mission, Bethel, viâ Jantara, India, has the same story to tell of crying need for famine sufferers, especially orphans. He says:—"As you have done very little for our district of 1200 square miles, I wish you would kindly send us help for our orphans. All our missionaries share in whatever is sent; it is divided among the five orphanages for boys, in Bethel, Bethlehem, Bethany, Bethesda, and Bethsaida. Miss Polditch is in charge of the girls' orphanage in Bethel; Mr. and Mrs. Barlow are in charge at Bethany; Mr. A. J. Meik, in Bethlehem; Pastor Kale in Bethsaida; Pastor Baker in Bethesda; Mr. and Mrs. Haegert in charge at Bethel. So there are six orphanages looking to you for sympathy."

Mr. H. P. Boerresen, of the Santhal Mission, Ebenezer Station, Benagaria P.O., Rampur Hat, who has been enabled to do much relief work during the terrible famine time, writes recently to a friend:—"On Sept. 26 we had a thanksgiving to the Lord for thirty years' complete work amongst this people. It was just thirty years previously that day that the foundation stone of Ebenezer was laid by us. We were then living in a small leaf hut on the bare fields. The Lord has been unspeakably good to us; his care and help in all these years have been marvellous. After so many years of hard work and so many anxieties and sorrows, as well as so many years of praise and joy, we begin, and especially myself, to grow bodily weary. If spared until the end of next month I shall complete seventy-two years. I am holding on with God's help, and shall continue to do so until He calls me home."

China.

In a recent communication Mr. W. M. Upcraft, of Yachow, viâ Chung-King, West China, writes:—

"During a recent journey across the entire breadth of the empire, and away to the capital in the north, everywhere, and strongest amongst those who have been longest in the field, the spirit of hope abounds. There is expectancy abroad that God's 'due season' is at hand for the advance of his cause here. In line with this is the spirit of inquiry aroused in literary circles, and the wider recognition of Western teachings, which give an 'open door' in many places that have hitherto been exclusive.

"In our district here we find ignorance, opium, idolatry, and immorality our most outspoken foes. The ignorance is intense. The people are simple to the point of danger when any demagogue gets their ear. The effect of the riots of 1895 is yet very active, but we hear of very many who are being moved Godward, in spite of the threatening alarm and uncertainty. There are immense districts to the west stranger yet to the herald footfall that shall bring to them the Gospel of peace."

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

The Oxford Anti-Vivisection Society had an enthusiastic gathering on Thursday evening at the Y.M.C.A. Canon Christopher presided, and moved a resolution declaring that experimentation on living animals, "being indefensible on moral grounds, ought to be legally forbidden." Dr. Berdoe and Mr. B. Bryan strongly supported. The resolution was carried with three dissentients.

Congregational readers will be interested in the appointment of Mr. J. Allsebrook Simon, late Scholar of Wadham, to a Fellowship at All Souls' College. Mr. Simon is a Congregationalist, the son of Rev. E. Simon, of Bath. As an undergraduate he made his mark in the University.

At the preachers' class held at the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday Rev. J. Walmsley, Vice-principal of Wycliffe, gave an able lecture on the Hebrew Prophets. It was refreshing to hear the subject treated by one who believes that the messages of the prophets are full of living water, which should find its way into the life of present-day churches, and not to run out into the dry sands of criticism.

Sir William Herschel presided at a meeting in support of the C.E.Z.M.S. held on Thursday in the hall of Exeter College. Speaking of the great and difficult task to be accomplished, the chairman said that they must not expect too rapid a progress, but that all hearts must be cheered by the growing work in the outlying parts of India. Miss Edith Mulvany, missionary from Burdwan, gave an interesting address.

National Home Reading Union.

This institution, which is starting another four years' curriculum of study in various directions, is somewhat on the lines of the great Chautauquan movement in America, and seeks to direct and encourage the reading of those who have left school, as well as those in later life, who would otherwise have to work in isolation, or drift into shallow and profitless mental habits.

The society, under the inspiring leadership of Dr. J. B. Paton, is just now making a special endeavour to interest the working-classes in a course of reading suited to their needs. Already the Working Men's Club and Institute Union have asked for 13,000 leaflets concerning this course, and the Co-operative Union for 4000. If the Union succeeds in spreading the love of mental culture among the ranks of the nation's workers, it will have done a good work and help to lift their thoughts to higher things.

It is unquestionably the prevailing peril of our industrial classes in the present day to have all their mental and spiritual energies absorbed in the struggle for existence and for the bettering of the outward conditions of their life. With the steady shortening of the hours of labour, and the consequent increase of the hours of leisure, they have an opportunity, such as has never been given before, for the improvement of their minds and the development of their religious nature. So far, however, little has been done by their leaders to direct their thoughts into these directions.

It is time something were done to deepen their lives as well as free them, and it is a good sign that interest is beginning to be awakened even on the lowest plane of mental culture. A good book is one of the best antidotes to the public-house and the music hall, and one of the most helpful adjuncts of those who would lift the awakened intellectual interest into spiritual channels.

Frankly, however, we should like to see a more definite place given to religious and devotional books on the curriculum of the Home Reading Union. But that will perhaps come with a little more experience of its practical working, and of the barrenness of intellectual culture unfructified by spiritual influences.

Cockington, Torquay.—Last week we inserted a report which spoke of Mr. Levi Powell's work as an extension of an effort begun some years ago by the Countess of Castlestuart. This, it seems, is a mistake. The Countess writes:—"Twelve years ago I started an evangelical mission here. Nine years of that time Mr. Powell was missioner employed by me. Twelve months ago his connection with the work ceased, and a new mission has now been started in opposition, not 200 yards from the hall erected by myself."

What is Repentance?

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

To perceive the exact meaning of words is important, though mere study may soon become frigid. Repentance, we know, means a change of mind. Then the kind of change will have reference to the kind of life which has been previously led. If prayerless, or if prayer has been almost formal, such person will begin to speak to God. If we have been living, as the Apostle Paul writes, "without God in the world," there will be a vivid sense of a present, living, acting God, to whom we are accountable. If the life has been sensual, there will now be a renunciation of the past; and if our life has been hard and selfish, there will grow up a soft, kindly way of looking at things, and considerateness for others.

But also (and this is the vital point in genuine repentance), whatever the previous condition has been, there will concurrently with the change of mind, and as part of it, be contrition for the dishonour done to the holy, righteous, loving God Himself, through own past disregard of Him, his character, his will, his claims, and through neglecting the offers of deliverance through salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ, and in many, many other respects according to our individual history. And so will be fulfilled to us experimentally the words "With this man will I dwell," etc. (Is. lvii. 15).

Repentance should be more preached. For if contrition does not take place, or but feebly, at conversion, the soul even of a true believer will suffer loss, which may affect his subsequent history. A poor old Christian woman, speaking of her husband, once said to me, "I don't think, sir, he was ever soundly converted." This was forty-five years ago, and I have never forgotten it. And it may describe a more common condition than is supposed. J. v. S.

Rev. W. Cuff's Work in Shoreditch.

This week Rev. W. Cuff and his people at the Shoreditch Tabernacle are celebrating a quarter of a century of work in that crowded part of London. Since 1872 the outward aspect of the district has greatly changed; vast improvements have been effected, although well-to-do persons are constantly moving farther into the suburbs. When Mr. Cuff undertook the pastorate of Old Providence Chapel, that building soon became too small for the congregation, so that services were for a time carried on in the Town Hall to a congregation of 2000 persons. The Tabernacle, which seats 3000 persons, and a schoolroom in which 1500 children assemble every Sunday, were successively built at a total cost of £25,212. There are eight mission stations. It was resolved to make an effort at the end of twenty-five years to pay off the remainder of the debt, a sum of about £1900.

At a luncheon in the schoolroom on Monday, and attended by a number of persons belonging to various denominations, a very catholic spirit prevailed, while a number of liberal subscriptions were announced. Pastor Archibald G. Brown preached to a full congregation, at 4.30, on Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones, the sermon being in the preacher's most telling and forcible style.

In the evening a great meeting took place in the Tabernacle, Mr. Charles Ackland presiding. Dr. J. A. Spurgeon characterised Mr. Cuff's ministry as twenty-five years of faithful service. The pastor had always been a man of hard work, and out of his own Christian experience he had told out the truth. Rev. J. M. Gibbon said that twenty-five years' service meant sterling qualifications in the pastor; it was also a testimonial to the inexhaustible fertility of the Bible. Speaking on behalf of the people, Mr. Dearberg presented Mr. Cuff with a framed address and a cheque for £105, while Mrs. Cuff received a box of cutlery. These were suitably acknowledged, and a few words followed from Rev. E. G. Gange, President of the Baptist Union. In presenting the cash account, Mr. Bradley showed that the collections of the day towards the debt of £1925 amounted to £1013, leaving about £900 still to be raised.

A Handsome Drinking Fountain is being placed in the City Hall square by the Junior Endeavourers of Winnipeg, Manitoba, as a contribution to the cause of temperance.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, November 21.

"Lo, I see four men loose."—Dan. iii. 25.

This is what trial has often done for us. We have become conscious of the binding effect of our own habits which we wore as comparatively innocent, but gradually the conviction grew that they were amongst the weights that should be laid aside. Yet they clung to us until some fiery trial befel us, and from that hour, through the grace of the Holy Spirit, we were free. Do not fear the fire. It cannot hurt one hair of your head, or leave the smell of burning on you, but it will eat out the alloy, and gnaw away the iron bands that bound you.

I shall know by the gleam and glitter
Of the golden chain you wear,
By your heart's calm strength in loving,
Of the fire they have had to bear.
Beat on, true heart, for ever!
Shine bright, strong golden chain;
And bless the cleansing fire
And the furnace of living pain.

But Jesus never allows his beloved to walk the fire alone. If it is heated seven times hotter than its wont, this is only the reason for his becoming more real, as our living glorious Friend. There always goes beside the tried saint, though not always patent even to the eye of the spirit, another whose aspect is that of the Son of God. Reach out thy hands to Him, beloved, He is there. The Refiner not only watches the crucible, He is in it with thee. In all thy affliction, He is afflicted.

MONDAY, November 22.

"All his works are truth, and his ways judgment, and those that walk in pride He is able to abase."—Dan. iv. 37.

The main lesson, let us note it, which this chapter is designed to teach, and which Nebuchadnezzar epitomises in these words, is the abhorrence with which God regards pride. We are all tempted to walk on the terrace of our palace, and say, "Is not this great Babylon,, which I have built by the might of my power and for the glory of my majesty?"

If thou hast achieved a position of wealth and independence and success, do not be proud of it, as though it were all of thine own creating. God gave thee power to get wealth, and put thee into that responsible position as his agent and trustee, and made thy name as one of the great over the earth. Give Him the glory, and be sure to consider thyself only as his steward, entrusted with his property, and continued in thy position for only so long a time as thou art faithful in thine administration.

May not that illness, that suspension from active work, that serious deprivation have been sent to thee, as this madness was permitted to come to the King of Babylon, that thou shouldest know and acknowledge that the heavens do rule?

TUESDAY, November 23.

"I have heard of thee, that thou canst give interpretations and dissolve doubts."—Dan. v. 16.

The perplexed world often turns to the Christian in its hours of anguish and terror. While the foe seems powerless, and the hall of life is full of light and song; while the merry feet chase the flying hours and mirth is unrestrained; whilst the wine flows freely, and the courtiers whisper flattery, the servant of God may be left in obscurity and neglect, as Daniel by Belshazzar. At such times God Himself is an object of ridicule and scorn. But let a hand come from out the Infinite, and write on the walls of life's palace in words of mystery, then the panic-stricken worldlings cry out for one in whom is the Spirit of the Holy God, and who can decipher the mysterious hieroglyphics, which to conscience forbode only disaster.

At such hours the child of God is held in perfect peace. How should it be otherwise? He recognises his Father's handwriting, and can decipher his Father's meaning. Amid the crash of falling kingdoms, he is sure of his Father's care. Oblivious of his own interests, he only wants to interpret the ways of God, to call back the sinner from the error of his ways, and to save the State from ruin.

The world has more respect for our religion than it cares to admit in its gay moods, and it is noticing us more than we dream. Some day those who treat you with least courtesy will send for you. Only be at peace, and rest in your Father's Spirit. It shall be given you in that same hour, what ye should speak. In the meanwhile, do not be surprised if you are led through many mysterious and trying experiences. It is only so that you can get the key to God's secrets, or the clue to his mysteries. Above all, seek for the Spirit of God that light and understanding and excellent wisdom may be found in thee.

WEDNESDAY, November 24.

"No manner of hurt was found upon him, because he had trusted in his God."—Dan. vi. 23.

By faith they shut the mouths of lions. The lions' den is not an old-world experience merely. God's saints still dwell among lions, and fight with wild beasts at Ephesus.

But still God sends his angel to shut the lions' mouths, still faith surrounds us with his unseen protection. Or, if the lion seems to triumph, it is only in appearance. Was not the martyr Ignatius more than a conqueror when he said:

"I bid all men know that of my own free will I die for God, unless ye should hinder me. I exhort you, be ye not an unseasonable kindness to me. Let me be given to the wild beasts, for through them I can attain unto God. I am God's wheat, and I am ground by the teeth of wild beasts that I may be found pure bread of Christ. Rather entice the wild beasts that they may become my sepulchre, and may leave no part of my body behind, so that I may not, when I am fallen asleep, be burdensome to anyone....Now I am beginning to be a disciple. May nought of things visible and things invisible impede me, that I may attain unto Jesus Christ. Come fire, and iron, and grapplings with wild beasts, cuttings, and manglings, crushings of my whole body, only be it mine to attain unto Jesus Christ."

Whether faith closes the mouth of the lion or gives the soul such an entire deliverance from all fear, such a superiority to its worst assaults, it is immaterial. In either case it overcomes the world.

THURSDAY, November 25.

"There was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all the peoples, nations, and languages should serve Him."—Dan. vii. 14.

Jesus does rule. The kingdom of Christ is no fanciful phrase. The words He spoke, the deeds He did, have shaped the religious life and thought of the civilised world. But this is the lowest ground. He is supreme over all creation. In Him the ancient psalm is fulfilled, "Thou hast put all things under his feet. All sheep and oxen, the fowl of the air, the fish of the sea, and the beasts of the field." The Father hath set Him at his own right hand far above all principality and power, all angels do his bidding, all demon-powers are beneath his feet. Joseph, our Brother, is King.

But let us never forget that the foundation of his kingdom is his cross. We want more than the truth, more than a guide to show the way; we need forgiveness, salvation, life, and these are only possible through the death of the Redeemer. Satan offered Him the kingdom when he met Him in the wilderness, and He would not have it on such terms. With face set for Calvary, He went down the mountain to the valley of the shadow of death, and having traversed it He came to his disciples and said, "All power is now given to me in heaven and on earth." Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ; for Thou art the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

FRIDAY, November 26.

"Then I rose up, and did the king's business."—Dan. viii. 27.

Few have been favoured with such visions and revelations as fell to the lot of Daniel. The future, in so many different aspects, was repeatedly unfolded before him, and he saw much that elated and that depressed him. But through it all he steadily did the king's business; so far as he knew, nothing was allowed to suffer or get behind. He would have counted it a great slur on his religious life if it could have been said that his visions and exercises interfered with his service to the king. Probably he did better work because his life was hid with God.

In all this there is much of suggestion and warning. We too must have our secret mount of vision. We too must look across the valley for that blessed hope, the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. We too must have the vision of the evenings and mornings. But that is not enough. We must do our business in the world. Not star-gazing, but following the star; not always standing at the window, but going to and fro in the King's household, seeing that everyone is at his post, and that the Royal household is properly fed; not always on the mount of transfiguration, but hastening whithersoever the uplifted hand of human need beckons us.

At the same time, it will quicken us to do our business better if we have had a vision. Nothing makes so good a workman as thorough comprehension of his master's purposes. And when Jesus calls us not servants only, but friends, we serve Him with deep appreciation of his thoughts and plans. Our service is more refined, diligent, and intelligent. Get your plan in the mount, and then build your tabernacle on the desert sand, reverently and sympathetically.

SATURDAY, November 27.

"At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment went forth; and I am come to tell thee, for thou art greatly beloved."—Dan. ix. 23.

This is always so. Directly a God-given prayer is uttered the commandment goes forth. There is a sense, indeed, in which the prayer is the reflection in the human heart of the commandment, "Before they call I will answer, and whilst they are yet speaking I will hear." Does it seem as though your prayer were like a ship lost at sea, which brings no cargo home? Dare to believe that the commandment did go forth, though as yet it has not reached you. It is operating, and before long you shall see the result. But if you do not live to see the answer, dare to believe that it is assured.

What a tender address is this? Greatly beloved! And the margin says very precious. Is it really so, that we are very precious to God? To those who believe, Christ is precious, but how wonderful that they should be amongst his jewels, who were born of the first Adam, and have cost so much pain and sorrow by their sins. There is no accounting for love. Directly love begins to enumerate the reasons for its attachment it ceases to be true love. Love knows no law except the drawing of an inward affinity. So Jesus draws near to us. We are very precious to Him. To have our love, well compensates Him for all his bitter sorrow. Let us be very careful not to hurt him, or give Him needless grief. And when we pray, let it be with the assurance that He bends over us and says, "Thou art greatly beloved, ask what thou wilt."

F. B. M.

THE LATE

Miss Edith Gilling Cherry.

THOSE who have read from time to time in the pages of The Christian the sweet pieces written by this gifted young poet might not unnaturally have felt surprise had they met her. Her verses gave evidence of such deep thought, such wide sympathy, such spiritual insight; and she herself looked so youthful—indeed, so child-like. Spite of the crutches that were the necessary companions of her life through infantile paralysis, a petite figure, and a fragile look that bespoke tender interest in her, she was so extremely bright and even gay, with something of the pure abandon of a happy child, that you associated her naturally with flowers and sunshine and music.

Her great delicacy made her all through life the constant companion of her mother, and her education had to be carried on as health permitted, and never in any formal, stated manner. She picked up knowledge in every direction, and a splendid memory enabled her to retain what she somewhat promiscuously acquired. She read greedily and widely. Her love for music and her correct ear made her an admirable performer, while her fingers were no less skilful in artistic design. Nothing she desired to do seemed a trouble; her perceptions in every direction were quick.

The death of her only little sister, fifteen months younger than herself, occurred when she was about six, and, as was natural, made a deep impression on the sensitive heart of the child; but happily no gloomy thoughts were permitted to associate with this event, and she often wondered "how they should meet each other in the bright, heavenly home." Though it is quite evident, from the entries in her diary, that her religious experiences were very deep and very thorough, passing "from death unto life" through "repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ," yet she loved her Saviour as a little child, and fuller knowledge of herself and her needs only made her love Him more.

For some years Mrs. Cherry and her daughter attended George-street Baptist Chapel, when the intensely interesting sermons of the gifted pastor, Rev. Samuel Vincent, made a great impression on Edith. Again and again, in lovely poems, the sacred scenes he had treated flowed with beauty from her pen, and very prettily would she transcribe them with dainty tracery of flowers or foliage or artistic scrolls, and present them to her pastor.

For a time the young poetess taught a class of boys in Shaftesbury Mission Hall, connected with Charles Church. Her bright nature and quick sense of humour enabled her to attain great influence over them. She had them to her house for instruction and talks, lent them books, and was a true friend to them. She was an active member of the Devonport Y.W.C.A. for the last year or two of her life; but the Christian Endeavour movement and her own "Whatsoever" Band were closest to her heart, and to these her energies were principally devoted. The idea of uniting together those who "loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity" by a motto word so full of meaning delighted her. Her sweet hymn and the "Whatsoever" rules were translated into Dutch and, I believe, one or two other languages; and the number of members of the Band increased till it reached 300.

Mrs. Cherry will carry on the work of the "Whatsoever" Band now, in memory of her daughter.

The yearnings and aspirations expressed in the following poem were soon to be satisfied. On August 29, after three days' illness, Edith Cherry left earth for heaven, and she was glad to go. The frail casket that had held the sweet poetic spirit while on earth was laid to rest in Plymouth Cemetery.

Of her spiritual songs the readers of The Christian have for some years had the opportunity of judging. I regard them as genuine poetry, extremely musical in rhythm, and many of them strikingly original. Lovers of religious poetry will hope that her many fugitive pieces may be gathered together into one volume by the mother to whom the original of each in its turn was given by her loving child, so that by them sad hearts may be cheered, God's glory promoted, and unswerving allegiance inspired to her dear Master, Christ. Open-Air Work.—On Sunday week, writes Mr. J. Soames, of the Howard-street Gospel Mission, Wandsworth, we brought our open-air work to a close. It has been carried on since April, during which time 147 meetings have been held with 526 short Gospel addresses and testimonies. Upwards of 5000 tracts and booklets have been distributed. These meetings have resulted in men and women being converted, backsliders restored; a large number signing the pledge and becoming sober.

"We Would See Jesus."

Oh, for one sight of the Master!
One glimpse of the face Divine!
I should scarcely heed the glories
That ever about Him shine.
Only one look at the Master!
Tho' it were but a moment's space!
I could brave the wearisome way again
With the memory of that face.

It would dwell in my heart for ever,
Safe hid in its holiest shrine,
Like a precious and sacred treasure,
That was mine—and only mine.
And at morning, and noon, and even,
As I paused in mine upward pace
To refresh my soul on her journey,
I should think of the Master's face.

And I should forget to be weary,
But hasten upon my way
With the thought, "If I press onward
I may see it again to-day!
I may see Him again—the Master;
Who knows, in how brief a space?
Another turn in the pathway
May mean Home, and the Master's face."

It is not that I am weary,
Dear ones, of you and of earth;
Of the love, and the joy, and the sunshine,
The songs and the innocent mirth;
Far less of the sweet, glad service
He puts in my trembling hands;
But my heart—it wearies to see his face!
Oh, I think He understands.

I know that his eyes are holy,
And that I am full of sin,
And all unworthy to lift mine own
To his and to gaze therein;
But I know that He hath forgiven,
I know that He died for me!
And I think I should e'en forget myself
In the one thought—"This is He."

Sometimes, 'tis but for a moment,
Unbidden and unawares,
There cometh this home-sick longing
That I scarce know how to bear.
One rush of unspeakable yearning,
Till mine eyes with tears grow dim,
And my whole heart aches for the Master,
For one sight, one sight of Him.

Oh, Master, forgive—forgive me!
Thou knowest these tears that start,
Cast never a mist on the gladness
Thou puttest within my heart.
And having not seen, I love Thee,
And can wait Thy time and place,
But my heart will never be satisfied
Till I see Thee face to face.

Not for one glimpse, but for ever;
For ever at home with Thee.
At home in the Father's palace,
At home by the crystal sea.
But in all thy beautiful heaven,
Will anything ever efface
Or outshine one raptured moment
The first, first sight of thy face.

Edith Gilling Cherry.

The National Blind Relief Society issue an occasional paper stating that in the United Kingdom there are over 25,000 blind poor, whose average income from all sources is a paltry trifle, while the average income of those candidates who apply for relief is 3s. 10½d. per week. This Society pays pensions, ranging from 5s. to 20s. per month, to as many candidates as its funds permit, provided that their income from every source does not exceed £20 per annum. It is strictly undenominational, and its list of pensioners embraces members of every denomination. Yet there is room for expansion. Its 600 pensioners are but a small portion of the 25,000 blind poor who need the assistance and comfort that Christian charity can afford. The hon. sec. is Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, Tite-street, Chelsea, S.W.

Corea and Christianity.

AN OPPORTUNITY FOR MISSIONARY ENTERPRISE.

IN November of last year I received a letter from Miss E. P. Hughes, of the Training College, Cambridge, informing me that four young Corean gentlemen had arrived in England with an introduction from the Corean Minister, the Hon. Pom. K. Soh, of Washington, U.S.A., and that she had applied to several of the Missionary Societies to know whether they would assist in the education of these young men who had come to study Christianity and Western Civilisation. To her very great regret, none of the Missionary Societies felt themselves free to undertake this work, and she appealed to me to know if anything could be done for them in London.

Their story was an exceedingly interesting one. They had travelled from Corea to the United States with the hope of being under the protection and guidance of Mr. Soh. A sudden change of Ministers put an end to all their prospects in America, and left them in some difficulty with regard to the future. In this emergency, they had determined to venture again upon the seas, with the hope that in Europe they might find means of pursuing their studies under more favourable conditions.

Miss Anna Tolman Smith, of the National Bureau of Education, wrote a letter of commendation about these four young Coreans to Miss E. P. Hughes, testifying from constant personal observation that during their stay in America they had been orderly, reliable, and extremely diligent.

I wrote back to Miss Hughes saying that I should be glad to do all in my power, and a few days later the young men called upon me with Mr. W. Greene, C.E., who also was taking a great interest in them. I shall not soon forget the first occasion on which they came to my house. At Mr. Greene's suggestion, prayer was offered up that the Divine blessing might rest upon them during their stay in this country, and that the eyes of their understanding might be enlightened, and that they might not only gain scientific and literary knowledge, but might come to a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

Mr. Greene, Miss Hughes, and myself, together with Major Wyndham and Miss McLean, constituted a small committee, and succeeded in raising a sufficient amount, with the very generous assistance of friends, to send them to Harley House, Bow. Dr. Grattan Guinness felt that it did not come within the scope of that institution to educate them at the expense of his organisation, unless they had definitely embraced Christianity, and had dedicated their lives to missionary work, and it was therefore necessary to pay the cost of their maintenance, which Dr. Guinness placed at the lowest figure he could.

It is impossible for me to overstate the very satisfactory way in which these young men have conducted themselves during the time that has elapsed since they went to Harley House. Not only have they given systematic attention to their studies, but they have also shown themselves eager to understand the Scriptures, and to become possessed of such a knowledge of Christian truth as should enable them on their return to Corea to influence their countrymen to embrace the Christian religion. Their names are Mr. H. B. Yer, Mr. H. J. Yee, Mr. B. S. Yee, and Mr. B. K. Im, and their ages are from nineteen to twenty-five. The following letter, recently written by Mr. H. B. Yer to Mr. Greene, and, of course, in no sense intended for publication, will sufficiently indicate how real has been their advance not only in the knowledge of our language, but in that highest knowledge which, though hidden from the wise and prudent, is ever revealed to those who are willing to become as babes.

DEAR GUARDIAN MR. GREENE,—I feel I must excuse myself, because I had been so negligent in writing to you for a long while. As you know, I went together with my friends to Hoddesdon, and spent all our holidays there for three months. And we had known several Christian friends there were often read the Bible and prayed to God with us, to ask for awaking up our deep drowsiness from the bed of sins into the true way by the spiritual action of God. I believe that he is now listening my daily prayer, to make me understand clearly in his true knowledge which we read it day by day. I do desire to gain nothing but the use of true life which Jesus Christ has given to all of us; it is because for myself, and for whom else, I feel I must love my native land more than any other country. Because I am Corean, how can I love her? I can really love her nothing but training the people of hers into the true religion of Jesus Christ as much as possibly can, it is because my own duty.

We had come back to Harley College last Saturday, and attended many meetings began from last Monday till Tuesday, which spoken by Dr. Guinness and some other gentlemen, for the prayers of beginning to open this college. And we have begun our studies from this morning. I suppose all of us must stay here till next Christmas, as Mrs. Macknight had made an arrangement with Dr. H. Guinness before she went to U.S.A. I shall come to see you and Mrs. Greene as soon as I can. Please remember me to Mrs. Greene with my kind regards. I am always praying to God for you and Mrs. Greene, with all my heart. I send you two texts which I heard from Dr. Guinness last night. 2 Corinthians ix. 8, and Luke xxii. 29.—Hoping you are very well always, believe me, your faithful pupil ever,

HINN B. YER.

The opportunity thus afforded of training four members of leading Corean families in Christian truth, is one of which every friend of missions will be quick to perceive the value. One of these young men is a blood relation of the present royal family, and all four of them are likely to occupy positions of great importance in their native land on their return. It will be obvious at once how great will be the gain to missionary work amongst the fifty millions in that country, who are now in great spiritual darkness, if these young men can be sent out there prepared in all simplicity to use their high social position for the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ.

It is calculated that about £150 per annum is necessary for their education and maintenance. I shall be glad to communicate with any who are interested in this story, and who would like to hear further about these young seekers after truth.—Yours faithfully,

Friendliness on Board Ship.

DEAR SIR,—This is the time when our missionaries are sailing for India, China, etc. May I pass on an incident which may be useful? A few months ago I met a lady, a decided Christian, who had come out to visit a brother in India. She had several missionaries as fellow-voyagers, and she told me that the missionary party kept so much to themselves she felt excluded from their company. They had Bible-readings which she would have liked to go to; but she was never asked to come. Doubtless had this lady offered to join a Bible-reading she would have been cordially welcomed; but she was travelling alone, a stranger amongst strangers, and there did not seem to be such an atmosphere of friendliness as to invite her to offer to come.

When I heard this I felt self-rebuked, for I do not think I asked my fellow-passengers to our meetings when I came out last year. I am sure it is a hurtful mistake to take for granted that ordinary travellers are out of sympathy with living Christianity on board ship.—Yours truly, Bombay. B. P. W. W.

Art and the Holy Land.—A fine collection of water-colour drawings of Jerusalem and the Holy Land, by Mr. Henry A. Harper, is at present being exhibited at the galleries of the Fine Art Society, 148, New Bond-street. The subjects include attractive landscapes and scenes full of life and character. Those who have travelled in the East will be gratified to find themselves once more among the scenes that they have visited, and all whose hearts follow the earthly footsteps of Christ will find interest in these works of art. Many people have an idea that Palestine is a barren and unfruitful, and therefore a dead and dreary country; but, while this is true of some parts, it does not apply to the large stretches which Mr. Harper has covered during his artistic tours. A profusion of flowers and great natural beauty are depicted in many of these drawings from the easel of a specialist in the delineation of Oriental life and scenery.

Special Providences.

By Rev. G. WATT SMITH, Leeds.

"They of Beth-Shemesh were reaping their wheat harvest in the valley; and they lifted up their eyes, and saw the ark, and rejoiced to see it."—1 Sam. vi. 13.

YOU do not need to be told what the harvest moon is; but upon a day a company of harvesters were busy on the twenty-second of September; the sun was sinking, all too early for them, behind the western hills; "it will soon be dark," they said; they plied their busy hands and had a race with the light of day. One man stretched his back; his face was towards the East; he was neither a Ritualist nor a scientist; he saw the moon peeping at them with an opening eye over the mountains; soon a full moon hung suspended by invisible threads in the sky, and when the sunlight had died away, the valley was flooded with the soft silver light of the harvest moon. The workers toiled far into the night securing God's bounty for man and beast. Next evening they saw the same sight. Because they were religious they blessed the name of the Lord. They said, "This is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes." The moon hurried not her feet until the labourers were ready to rest from their toils.

An annual occurrence more or less! Say rather, it is a special providence, one of the many that recur in nature and in grace for the good of man.

The text introduces us to what we may call a special providence. There was something above the harvest to consider. Calamity had followed on the heels of disaster in Israel until the dark night of a godless, hopeless winter was settling down upon the land. The sons of the high priest lay on the Philistine battle-field rotting in the sun; Eli is dead. The ark of God is taken. What is it though they have abundant crops? The winter of conscious godlessness was looming heavily overhead; the paralysis of despair was benumbing the faculties. There was no song on that harvest field. No merry talk relieved the tedium of toil. The swish of the sickle grated upon the ears of men to whom labour had lost its sweetness. When one man lifted his head and heard a low moan from the hill side, "Why, what's that?" he said. "Two kine and a cart! What's on it? Here, Jacob, your eyes are younger than mine; look thee, lad!" Jacob looked, and shouted, "Blessed be the name of the Lord, it is the ark of God!" They forsook their shearing, and were soon engaged in the worship of Jehovah.

A usual phenomenon! Yes, but a special providence, a new evidence of the Divine interest in man, a new pledge of Divine love, a new plea for the consecrated devotion of man to God.

1. I notice that this special providence came to men who were

FOLLOWING THEIR USUAL ROUTINE IN LIFE.

Thank God for the salvation of the prodigal. Away out in the far country, stark mad for friends, oh for a human voice among all this swine's grunting! oh for a human hand-shake amid all these cold, clammy snouts! oh for a breath of God's forgiveness amid this seething stench of sin! oh for a moment's peace amid all this misery! God does not fail the prodigal. But in the great field of life, too, the workers need new inspiration.

It is possible for man to put back the hands of the clock of God, but he cannot stop it. Tyranny, seeking absolute power for a man, has done it. Aristocracy, seeking to fatten upon the products of others, has done it. Democracy, in its thirst for pleasure and impossible power, has done it. The sin and selfishness of men is the great obstacle to the swelling stream of God's glory and man's good. What is it? To the wicked—more misery, less comfort, more oppression, less freedom. To the righteous—what is it? The face of God hidden, the ark of God lost, the sun sunk and dark night coming on. Is all a miserable disappointment? Do your duty. The harvest is still to be reaped. Into that darkness which broods over honest men, the light of God's moon will shine.

I speak to not a few who, like Simeon of old, are patiently waiting for the coming of the Kingdom of God, and others who are waiting impatiently. It seems that the ark of God is lost. The aliens are pitched in battle array. The din of strife and war break on our ears. We are defeated. Our veterans cannot bear the sad news, and die like Eli. Strong men faint. Youths are fearful. Let us lay ourselves down and die, and let the enemy triumph.

In the name of God, No. There has not been in English history such written of as the scribes are writing now for many a year.

Listen! There is a great moan sounding through the valleys. The ark of God is coming. In due time we shall reap. I know not where the great leader in national righteousness is to appear, but the clouds break and God will vindicate Himself. His throne will be established. His servants will be prospered.

2. I notice next the reception given to the ark. What foolishness! They have left the harvest field and are all joining in worship. Ah, the work that leaves no room for worship, and provides no place for worship, is like a hearth without a fire, like flowers without colour, like a man without a heart.

TIME SPENT IN WORSHIP IS NOT LOST.

The tendency of the present age is to reduce the hours of labour, and everybody will rejoice in the achievement of that object if it means the general elevation of men. If it means more billiards, more bagatelle, more football, more drink, and no more intelligence, science, thrift, religion, it is no benefit. If it means more club and less home, it is no benefit. If it means more of men with God and God with men, let the day come. Side by side with this tendency there is a growing passion to be rich. Men will forsake home and church, and almost anything to get riches.

The characteristic of our age is godlessness. We are either too much engrossed in business, or too much engrossed in pleasure, to find room for God. The nation buried in either has hewn its own sepulchre. Where is Macedonia? Engrossed in business until it was satiated, and its king sits in tears because his hands can grasp no more. Where is Rome? Wrapt in the tawdry tassels of intoxicated pleasure; art taxed to make new devices of enjoyment; natural emotion suppressed lest it should hinder gratification. Rome the mighty—the hordes of rude savages from the North dance a hornpipe on her walls.

The busiest man that ever lived was Jesus. He was so busy that He had not leisure so much even as to eat. The vigils of night were shortened by the encroachments of toil. How often He stole away from the round of work to pray, to worship God.

"I am succeeding well in business. I shall pull down my barns and build larger. I shall put out another wing, raise the walls another storey, open another shop, put on another traveller. My business pays eight per cent., besides the expense of enlargement."

DOES IT LEAVE ROOM FOR GOD?

If not, your eight per cent. is only eight more chains to fasten you to the mouth of the pit.

"Our children are doing well. Jessie has passed the sixth, Johnnie is at the higher grade, Thomas is in a good situation, and all the rest are doing well. Ours is a busy house." Is there any room for God, any time to worship God? Oh, God forgive me if I am too hard, but I have seen it: the home without God, in which no place or time is found for Christ, is nursing its own bitter sorrow.

A busy life! Have you room for God in it? O man, this church and chapel-going is not all a farce; this praying is not all a sham. In the secret of the pavilion of God giants are born, great movements for the salvation of men find their inception. Lay down your sickle for a while; shut off the steam for a bit; take your breath for a moment with God. The corn will be gathered in; worship will not destroy anything, but will bless everything.

Special providences are always coming to us. Hours of gloom will come. The night cannot long brood over us, for He is in the world who is the light of life, the light of the bright and morning star, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. Have you seen it? It streams from yonder cross. Wherever that cross has gone, there has gone pardon, and peace, and purity. Have you lost sight of it? Christ is there and here. Our hope is not gone; He is the same Christ, the same Saviour, the same God.

The Lingfield Training Colony.

Dear Sir,—An anonymous friend, who has already largely helped us, having, through Dr. Monro Gibson, offered £500, on condition that £1500 is raised in other quarters for the building of the Director's house, with its annexe for crippled children, and the home for the separate treatment of inebriates, we are very anxious to secure the necessary co-operation without delay. Our plans and management have led several boards of guardians to offer their men and subsidies, one London board desiring to place twenty-five men with us immediately.

A very small part of these proposals can at present be accepted on account of the limits of space and means. Extension in every way is urgently needed, but in none more than the making possible to the director of residence on the colony, with the immediate and constant control of all its difficult details. The money that has yet been entrusted to us has gone far, but the realisation of "a colony of mercy" on a worthy scale (to say nothing of others which should follow in different parts of England) will be quite impossible without generous support.

We invite those who could help, and who are concerned about the prospects of the unemployed or other sufferers at the commencement of the winter, to examine the plan and work at Lingfield, and to do what the evidence and their means suggest with the promptitude which doubles the gift. Intending visitors should write beforehand to the Hon. Director, Rev. J. L. Brooks, 146, Castlenau, Barnes, S.W. The treasurer is Mr. W. R. Galbraith, 20, Victoria-street, S.W.

"Unto Me."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

Chapter II.

SURROUNDED with love and careful training, it was wonderful to see how quickly Janie developed, like a flower when planted out in healthy soil, and of the two it almost seemed she would repay the teacher quicker than Muriel, who had started long before. They learned their lessons together, they enjoyed their games and walks, and between them a sisterly love grew up, and in two years' time, one would have imagined they had always lived in the same home.

"Now, my dears," said Mr. Claughton, "I have the little basket for you, with a few things for grannie; and you, May, call and see cripple Harry for me. Good-bye, and God bless you."

"I'm glad mamma found dear old Widow Norley. How lonely she must have been before," said Muriel.

"Yes; mustn't she have missed her, Katie? no one to love her. Oh, I do love trying to make people happy—isn't it lovely?" said Janie, turning her sunny face to her companion.

"I'll rap shortly—perhaps she's asleep. No, she isn't," said Muriel, hearing the feeble "Come in."

The room was clean and comfortable, and in an armchair by the fire sat "Grannie."

"We've come, you dear. We shall always call you 'Grannie'; then you won't miss your granddaughter so much, and it sounds more as if we loved you," and Muriel put the basket down and proceeded to unpack it, while Janie stirred the fire and put the hassock for her feet.

"Oh, my dear little ladies, how you do make an old body happy. My dear Katie would love you for it, she would."

"Now, Grannie, you mustn't say that, because when you talk of Katie you cry." Muriel wiped the tears away, and put the new-laid eggs and the home-made loaf and butter before the old woman.

"To think of it now! Whatever makes you do it all? and think of this warm shawl you knitted, and those thick curtains you put up to keep the draught out. I do often sit and wonder, I do."

"Now, I'll tell you, Grannie," said Muriel, drawing two chairs close to the fire. "We love to feel whenever we do a kind thing to anyone, Jesus is so good. He says we do it to Him. Just think of that. Doesn't it make it beautiful?"

"Ah, my dears, when I read out of that lovely Bible you gave me, I find where He said, 'Ye did it unto Me.'"

"That's it, Grannie, now let us make your tea, and cut your bread-and-butter;" and Janie set the table, while Muriel made tea, and when they left her she looked a true picture of a happy old woman.

"We'll soon come again. Good-bye, Grannie," each said, and gave her a parting kiss, and hurried off to Mrs. Luton's cottage.

* * * *

"He's longing to see you, Missies, do come in," said the tired mother, who had been washing all day.

On a chair bed, put there by Mrs. Claughton, lay a delicate-looking boy of twelve. His face was brightly intelligent, but he had a suffering body. A fall injured his back, and he could not walk.

"We may stay a little while with him while you finish your work," Muriel said, and they sat against him.

"I did want to see your faces; I was so dull and mother was busy, and my back aches a lot. You make me feel better when I look at you," said Harry Luton, trying to raise his head.

By a little careful management the two girls put another pillow under his head and lifted him higher.

"Now, what are you going to tell me this time? Whose turn is it to read to me?" Harry asked, for they had begun a story-book.

"Mine," said Janie," taking the book from the table, and becoming interested, the poor boy forgot for a while his wearying pain.

"Now, you'll be brave till we come again," said Muriel, "and don't forget the text for to-day, 'Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and He shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord.'" (Ps. xxvii. 14).

Mrs. Luton came in, full of thanks that her boy was made so happy, and Janie and Muriel went out into the cold to hasten home.

* * * *

At the tea-table they told of their visits, and of the wish they had to save enough money to buy a chair for Harry to ride out in; but for many months it seemed destined to end in wishing only, and with patience and love they continued to do all they could for the poor lad and for many others.

"Couldn't we do without it?" was a question they constantly asked about any indulgence, and then the sum that would have been spent was put away, until quite half the price of the chair was saved. Spring days came, and as they told Harry of the buttercups and daisies they longed to take him out, for his bright eyes glistened at the mention of the meadows.

"Only think, dear," said Muriel as they walked home one day, "there is Maggie Longfield, whose mother has a chair to go out in, and she doesn't think of lending it, and Grannie could go out. I mentioned it once to her, and she said, 'Fancy lending to such people!' Oh! but she is not so happy as we are."

Every day seemed full (lessons, reading and music, walks and games, and visits and work), and when evening came, and they listened as Mr. Claughton prayed for God's blessing on those they knew and visited, their hearts overflowed with grateful love, and they would go upstairs chatting and planning for fresh deeds of kindness,

One afternoon, when days were lengthening, the girls were walking round the garden with Mrs. Claughton, one on each side, and she loved them both dearly.

"Mother, we know it would do poor white-faced Harry good to get out, and we are trying hard to save enough," said Muriel.

"And so am I, my daughter, and praying about it, too; and he will have it soon, I am sure. But who is that coming through the gate?" and they turned to see a fine, tall man, who came up to Mrs. Claughton.

"You do not remember me," he said. "I only saw you once; but I am an old schoolfellow and friend of your husband's early days."

An hour later, Morris Randal was sitting as one of the family, telling his story, how he had been wild and wayward after his parents died, and might have gone deep into sin and misery, but for a stranger who pleaded with him, and led him out of his wrong ways to Christ; and how after years of work his heart turned toward the old scenes, and he had come back to England, and wanted to find the friend of his boyish days.

Mr. Claughton offered him the hospitality of his house until he knew where he would live. He soon became so friendly that the girls called him "Uncle Morris," and hoped his stay would be long. They let him into the secrets of their visits, for he was quite inquisitive, and in Harry Luton he soon came to take a lively interest. The story of Janie Brewster's coming to the Claughtons pleased him much, and one day he said to her, "Ah, Janie, it's all for Jesus' sake; think what we owe Him. Because of that stranger's love to Him I am here, and hope to join you all in doing something for Him in return. I was sitting one day far away from here, when a letter came in unknown writing to tell me someone I knew very little of had left me a large sum of money; and I asked the Lord to give me grace to use it for Him. And soon after I hurried back here to consult my old friend Mr. Claughton; and now I want you two to help me."

Their dreams that night were coloured by the bright hopes that had flashed across their minds, and on the next day some beautiful plans were made.

We who so tenderly were caught,
Shall we not joyful seekers be,
And to thy feet divinely brought,
Bring weaker souls, dear Lord, to Thee!
Celestial Seeker! send us forth!
Almighty Lover! teach us love!
When shall we yearn to help on earth,
As yearned the Holy One above?"

Personal.

Here are two letters that have made my heart glad. How I hope you will all pray for this little boy and girl that they may be kept true. And will not some others of you come to Jesus too?

Dear Uncle Tom,—I have been reading a story on the "Young People's Page" about Mary. The title is, "Mary hath Chosen." I should like to be a little Christian too. Mother tells me that is the way to be happy. I must close my note with best wishes.—I remain, your friend, Henry W. (10).

Dear Uncle Tom,—I want to be a little Christian too, so I thought I would like to tell you by by sending you a note.

I know it will be very hard for me sometimes. Then I must not think of that. I must think about Jesus and I know He will help me.—Your little friend, Lily W. (7).

A Father asks how he may illustrate the doctrine of the Trinity to meet the mental capacity of his children. No illustration must be forced too far, and one hesitates to suggest anything as in any sense a complete answer to such a question. Perhaps as simple an illustration for children as any is to be found in a candle-flame, which comprises in one object the three elements of heat, light, and colour.

Hilda Rawson.—Am very sorry to disappoint you this week, but try again for a star. You generally write your paper very neatly. Mary E. Clarke.—Perhaps you could find time to join again later on. Hope you enjoy your school life. Mary Beck.—Please give your age at the top of your paper.—Rose Hamilton.—Thank you for your letter. I quite accept your explanation. Kathleen McClure.—I am pleased your cousin is joining. Hope your little brother will soon be quite well.

Salutary Warnings.—1 Peter iv. 1-8.

Golden Text.—"Bé ye therefore sober, and watch unto prayer."—1 Peter iv. 7.

THE first Epistle of Peter was written in a time of great persecution, and the Apostle issues a warning to the Jewish Christians who are likely to fall back from the Christian faith under the fire of the enemy.

Our lesson begins by pointing to Christ as the great Example. The important fact of the vicarious suffering of Jesus often overshadows what is also a fact—viz., that his suffering in the body was to be an example to us. Paul said, referring to the cross of Calvary, "By which I am crucified to the world." Every time we gaze on the cross we should go away with a resolve to bear our pains more patiently; to endure the suffering and contempt imposed upon us by the world with more fortitude. The "mind" or disposition which enabled Christ to bear his cross should be in us and around us. If we are to triumph over ignominy and shame we must be fortified—"armed"—with his spirit (v. i.). And what is that spirit? Forgetfulness of self and all its base desires and passions—its petty ambitions, and even its self-preservation—and a subjection of the whole being—body, soul, and spirit, to the will of God (2). Dr. George Macdonald says, "It is the climax of Christian attainment to be able always to say 'My Father, Thy will, not mine, be done.'" Sin is no longer master of the man who can say that. He may do things wrong, but they are like the slips back of a man who is travelling up a steep mountain. The traveller's face and energies are directed upward and forward. The teacher may compare force of gravitation to force of sin, and contrast the man climbing up the hill against gravity with the one tobogganing down with the force of gravity.

II. A look backward.—The heathen religions in most countries consist of rites which foster drunkenness and kindred evils, and the Jews who migrated to heathen cities joined in the riotous conduct of their neighbours. After the preaching of the Apostles some of them had been converted to Christianity, and their neighbours mocked them for the rigid purity of their lives. In fact this purity of the early Christians was a proverbial marvel to the heathen world. Looking back over the past, they must have been thankful for their deliverance. But the teacher should point out how hard it is to bear the jeers and mockings of old friends and companions (3, 4).

III. Future judgment.—The wicked seemed to be having the best of it, but Peter reminds them of the fact that all will be weighed in the unerring balance of God. Both the living and the dead will be judged by Him (5). In all ages men have had some Gospel light. Those who lived in former ages were judged by the standard of those amongst whom they lived, and God will not condemn them for sins done in ignorance. But now they are dead in the body; their spirits, however, are still growing in the knowledge of God (6).

IV. Present duty.—To be self-controlled and calm always in the spirit of prayer. This saves us from thousands of temptations, and when in temptation saves us from sin. Emphasise the need for continual prayerful mood (7). To be charitable with regard to the weaknesses of others. Charity covers up a multitude, not of our own sins, but of the sins of those around us. Those who profess the name of Christ must be one in love. And love prompts to pitiful helpfulness, not to blame or contempt.

An Authority on Vivisection.—The opinion of the late Dr. Haughton on vivisection ought to have weight. It was a very clear one, spoken in plain words to the Royal Commissioners. Experiments on animals, he said, would not be permitted at Trinity College, Dublin, as it would only convert their students into "young devils." Will it have any different effect in other places?

A writer from San Francisco to The Christian Union Herald of the United Presbyterians gives instances of the effect of the International C.E. Convention upon that city. Chinatown he declares to be cleaner and purer than before that wonderful gathering. Thousands of evil houses have been emptied by the police. The side doors of many saloons have been closed. The churches have been quickened, invigorated, and encouraged.

HOME MISSIONS.

Work Among the Jews.

THE latest report of the Barbican Mission to the Jews tells of much and varied effort directed to an evangelistic end. Refugees from the Continent, and poor people from London Jewry, have found a friend and adviser at the Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C. The work is difficult, by reason of the pharisaic spirit which is found in combination with rabbinical superstition; but Herr Lipshytz holds on his way undaunted by disappointments, and in spite of the opposition of zealots who would hinder their brother Jews from coming to a knowledge of Christ.

The latest Occasional Record of the Mission, "Immanuel's Witness," gives an account of the director's recent Continental tour, in the latter part of which he was in a railway collision, but by the mercy of God escaped without injury. In Berlin he was very cordially welcomed by one Jew, who thanked him for speaking kind words to him and his father (now dead) as far back as 1892. He said: "You will remember that at first my father did not give you what we should call a welcome. Your patience and perseverance, however, in testifying for Him for whose sake we despised you, made a profound impression upon us all. My father's and at length we read the New Testament together, with a real desire to find the truth. In due course it seemed to dawn upon us, but we hesitated somewhat, until we came to the twenty-seventh chapter of the Gospel by Matthew, which we read, verse by verse, with deep concern. At last my father exclaimed: 'How is it possible that the Man described here was anyone but the One who should come to redeem Israel from all his sins?' I readily agreed with this word, and from that moment we grew in the knowledge of Christ."

The warm-hearted young man continued to say: "My dear father has since then been called to his rest. Never, however, shall I forget how he longed to see you, and inform you what the Lord had done for him. When he was sure that the hour of his departure was near, he grasped my hand, and said: 'I wished to have the joy of speaking again to that messenger of God, who brought the great news of a free and full salvation, but I now feel that it is not to be so. Therefore, my son, should you ever come across him, tell him that we shall meet before the throne of God.'" The son added: "Not only for my father have I thanks to express. The Lord has also done great things for me. And may He who has used you as an instrument of good with us, make you a blessing to many others!"

In about a year's time, the Barbican Mission will have to leave its present headquarters through expiry of lease. The committee have determined upon building a suitable Mission House in the midst of London Jewry, and as a memorial of the first president of the Mission, as reorganised under Mr. Lipshytz—Prebendary Gordon Calthrop. Already about £700 has been given or promised in aid of the undertaking.

Dublin Prison Gate Mission.

Writing of the work of this Mission, a correspondent says:—

Many a story could be told of "jail-birds" transformed into "birds of Paradise." Women discharged from prison find here an opportunity of retrieving their characters, and are employed, under loving superintendence, until some comfortable situation can be procured for them. The laundry work is prospering; upstairs are the button-makers, whose neatly-sewn linen buttons find ready sale. On a higher landing beautiful rugs are woven, the materials imported from India, at considerable expense, which, however, is justified by the result.

Sad records are to be traced on the faces of these women; yet, as one reads aloud, or speaks a few Gospel words, some eyes light up, and the superintendent is always bright and hopeful.

This Mission makes a brave struggle to be self-supporting, but ends will not meet without some outside help. There is a pressing call for more sleeping accommodation, in order that women who cannot be quite trusted may not be obliged to lodge in the city. Soul-winning is the first object in all efforts to help the prisoners, and surely God will bless this desire by allowing fruits of patient labour to appear.

The Rescue of the Waif.

IN his own bright way Dr. Barnardo tells in the November number of The Quiver the story of the rise and development of the noble work associated with his name.

It is a sadly familiar fact that drunkenness and vice are responsible for the condition of hundreds of the children who, homeless and destitute, seek and find a shelter within his friendly doors. But it is cheering to know that it is not always so. Here is a case in point:—

> But it must not be supposed that all the waifs rescued by our Homes are on the same low moral and intellectual plane as those just mentioned. Not unfrequently one meets upon the streets and in the vilest slums children of the poorest class, in whom the religious sense has survived amid the general wreck, and which has divinely preserved them from yielding to evil incitements and fierce temptations.
> Between two and three o'clock in the early morning, not long since, I found on the steps at Whitechapel Church a boy fast asleep, curled up for warmth like a dog. After having aroused him, I succeeded in bringing him to the shelter of our principal Home at Stepney. There I elicited the main facts of his story. His father and mother were dead, the mother having died in the workhouse. The boy, however, had still a brother living, who was at that time frequenting a common lodging-house in Bethnal Green, well known to me as the resort of young criminals. Willie told me, with every appearance of honest shame as he did so, that his brother Joe was a pickpocket, and had often been in the hands of the police.
> "And you?" I inquired, and I suppose my eye conveyed the question I would ask.
> "No, sir, I never did," replied the lad emphatically.
> "But how is that? You must have been often hungry, and I suppose Joe often tried to get you to go with him and to do as he did?"
> "Yes, sir, he did," replied the boy; "but my mother, when Joe went bad, nearly broke her heart over him, and she told me it was wicked to thieve, and made me promise her that I would never go bad. And I remember afore she died she prayed that I might be kept honest, and she said to me: 'Bill, you musn't never steal; better to starve than steal.' And so, sir," the poor lad added, "I've often been hungry, but I never thieved."
> In this case, as in the cases of many other poor boys and girls whom I have known, the influence of a mother's love and prayerfulness served, in the midst of abounding squalor and degradation, to keep a child almost unspotted from the vileness of their world.
> To help such children has been the work of my life, and, in the endeavour to deliver them effectually from the slums, the several Institutions I have founded, which are now gathered under one title, have been slowly developed.

Then follows the recital of the Doctor's "first essay in slumming," and the "unexpected results" to which it led. Friends who have followed his endeavours with prayerful and practical interest during the years that have intervened since then will like to refresh their minds and those of later growth will find both entertainment and instruction in the perusal of this sketch of his labours. The article is appropriately illustrated, and adds not a little information and wise counsel regarding some of the social problems which vex the souls of Christian workers in all our large cities.

Dear Sir,—A special effort is being made to raise—ere the close of Jubilee Year—£1,500 to strengthen and establish the Master's work done by the Somers Town Blind Aid Society. It is hoped that some one friend of the afflicted whom God has prospered—making himself or herself well acquainted with the mission—might be led to grant the whole sum asked; or, at any rate, that it might be raised by substantial donations, not interfering with regular and much-needed income. The loving work so faithfully done by the Society for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the blind would then be placed on a firmer foundation, and pressing cares removed as to ways and means. Any friend interested and willing to assist would be heartily welcomed on any Thursday evening at our blind gathering, held in the hall of Bedford Chapel, Charrington-street, St. Pancras. These gatherings in our "Hall of Light" are crowded by our dark clientéle. By God's blessing the good accomplished is large and very real. The needs are deep and various.

London Soldiers' Home.

THIS building, in James-street, Buckingham Gate, S.W., was erected by the late Miss Daniell in 1890 for the enlargement of the work carried on since 1878 in Buckingham Palace-road. Its aim was twofold—not only to carry out the usual routine of a soldiers' home for the benefit of the garrison and their families, but also to provide a home for the hundreds of soldiers and marines who annually pass through London.

It has now become necessary to increase, for the second time, the sleeping accommodation. At times many men have to be sent on to neighbouring "chambers," where they must pay 1s. 6d. for the accommodation provided by the Home for 6d. The fact that since the opening of the James-street Home in April, 1890, the beds have been occupied above 43,000 times, proves both the need of such shelter and the men's appreciation of it.

The spiritual work amongst these passing tenants is of the most interesting nature. The blessing of God has rested in a remarkable degree upon this silent, unnoticed part of the London work. Miss Hanson and her fellow-trustees have therefore decided to turn a portion of the present building into sixteen new cubicles, and a third married quarters.

The architect's estimate for this is £500, with an additional £50 for the contingencies which might arise. The furnishing would cost about another £100. Towards this undertaking help is asked from those who have so often and so kindly given to Miss Daniell's work. Up to the present each cubicle, room, or married quarters has been a separate gift, and bears upon its door a brass tablet, with such inscription as the donor may choose. In most instances it is as a memorial of some beloved one who has fought the fight and finished the course. The gift or collection of £25 secures the right to name a cubicle, whilst £50 would name the new married quarters. Communications may be addressed to Miss Hanson, at the Home.

The "Ruth Elliott" Home.

To some extent this is becoming a cripples' Home. The new report tells that the year has been marked by the advent of sixty cripples sent by the "Daily Telegraph Fund." Says the hon. superintendent, in her brightly-written narrative: "Little Nancy was only six, with a sweet baby face, but a real gutter child, a poor little bare-footed arab, who would have been happy if she could. There was such a longing, wistful look in her sad blue eyes, but circumstances were against her, and her life was without one ray of gladness. In my wanderings I found her, and brought her to Enfield. They told me she had never laughed, but the morning after she came here they cried 'Oh! Sister, Sister, come quick! Nancy's larfin'!' The old rocking-horse had done it. Happy gee-gee!"

The Holiday Home has from the first received over 600 children, most of them of the very poorest; children whom no other Home would take in.

A paper, issued in view of a sale of useful articles to be held at the Home, Enfield, N., on Wednesday, Nov. 17, says:—"How much do you know of the slum and crippled children? Has it ever struck you when you are in the City, or out West, how few of these poor children you see? The neighbourhood is swarming with them, there is no doubt of that; behind the fashionable streets these outcasts herd. You may, by chance, see a little eager, hungry face pressed against the window-pane of the 'A. B. C.,' watching you with longing eyes as you enjoy your tea. An odd one or two may venture from their own narrow streets and crowded courts. They are seldom seen in tram, or 'bus, or train. I have known many children who have never been a quarter of a mile beyond their own homes. Can you realise what the country means to these children?"

On behalf of such we want real heart sympathy, eyes that see, the outstretched hand and generous gift. You cannot take the children into your homes, but you can pay for them to come to ours. You cannot nurse them in sickness, but you can help someone who will. You cannot bind up their wounds and bathe their sores, but you can enable someone else to do it, and while the relief and comfort come to the children by someone else, you will be the benefactors, and it will be through your generosity that health and happiness are gained.

(Miss) A. Priest Peck, Hon. Sec.

Union Hall Mission.

Thanksgiving Meetings were held on Thursday last, at Union Hall, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, in connection with the reopening of the winter's work and of the hall, after a renovation it sorely needed. This mission, so long and usefully carried on by the late Mr. Robert Bilke, is still maintained both in Paddington and at Queen's Park by a few earnest brethren, under the superintendence of Mr. E. C. Cook—himself in past years converted in the hall. The district around Union Hall is densely populated by the poorest classes, while many of the houses are devoted to sinful purposes. Men and women live, work, and die in dense ignorance of the way of salvation, or the importance of personal religion.

Amongst these constant work is carried on by Mr. John Ball, and at Queen's Park by Mr. S. Stidolph, with good result. The Gospel services are fairly well attended, while the Sunday Schools are full of encouragement. One of the most interesting features is the work among the blind, many of whom (with their guides) were present at last week's meetings. Regular meetings for the sightless poor are held, and while they are comforted and cheered the Gospel is earnestly pressed upon their acceptance.

Amongst those who took part in last week's meetings were Messrs. C. S. Thorpe, W. Holmes, James Sprunt, and John Ball. Over £60 has been spent for repairs and decorations, and the friends working at the Hall have done their utmost, but a considerable sum is yet needed to clear the builder's account; they will also be glad of sympathy in support of the general work of the Mission.

Bible-Women's Mission, Brighton.

For nearly half-a-century, since September, 1854, this organisation has been doing excellent work among the needy and the destitute. Its value in this large town, noted for its ritualistic and Romish agencies, its pleasure-seekers, and multitudinous drinking facilities, cannot be over-estimated. Bible-women have access to dwellings of sorrow and degradation, where others dare not tread.

Here is a representative case. One of the Bible-women visited in a sad locality a poor widow with seven fatherless children. The conditions of their home-life were simply appalling, and too distressing to describe. One of the oldest of the children, a boy of only eleven years, was found in his usual condition, intoxicated. Having been selling newspapers, his little earnings were gone in drink, and he himself uncontrollable. The Bible-woman, mustering all her power after various attempts and visits, obtained a hearing, and led this youth to a decision for Christ. Seeing the many dangers of his surroundings, a home for his education in handicraft was sought, and the lad in his new outlook is now placed under pious training for a respectable position in life. In the same locality similar work is being done for a girl in like conditions.

A publican's wife was dying and without hope. The Bible-woman obtained access where no one else had, led her to hear the Word, to hope in Christ, to believe unto salvation, and after frequent visits saw her triumph over death for glorious immortality.

Is it right to discontinue this work through lack of funds? It is to be hoped that some will be led to read and help, as one did some years since, who on reading a notice in The Christian, written by the late Miss Whately, herself a supporter of one, resolved that he would maintain one Bible-woman at his own cost, hence he sent £40 for the first year, and continued it annually till he was called home. The treasurer is Miss Hornbuckle, 3, Alexandra-villas, Brighton. M. H.

National Vigilance Association.

The new Report observes that the efforts put forth in past years have lightened the labours of this Association, and especially with regard to the Criminal Law Amendment Act and its enforcement. The Act, however, it is pointed out, is in urgent need of amendment in several particulars, and especially with regard to the age limit.

Other legislative measures promoted by this committee deal with the terrible immoralities of the streets. The difficulties of this subject are notorious, but the committee are certain that in the West-End of London at least a vast amount of good would be done by empowering the magistrates to convict foreigners, of either sex, of leading a disreputable life, and thereupon authorising the Government to send them away. Solicitation in the streets also ought to be made penal in both sexes, if it is to be really repressed.

In the department of preventive work, and the assistance given in cases of wrong and distress, the committee have had a successful year. They have not found it possible to continue their Medical Home; but the Preventive Laundry Home at Hackney has been of great service. The details given show a vast amount of good work in the way of advice, aid, and protection given to a large number of girls, who but for this committee would either have gone wrong or have otherwise suffered severely; and if the labours of the committee on the whole show a little less law and a little more rescue and beneficence than they did ten years ago, that change will only induce their subscribers to contribute the more cheerfully and the more liberally.

The work of the Association is carried on not only at the central office in London (267, Strand, W.C.), but at four active provincial offices, in Sunderland, Manchester, Birmingham, and Cardiff.

Protestant Reformation Society.

One of the missionaries of this Society, after describing the difficulties in the way of the work, reports that several Romanists have been led to the truth by attending his controversial classes. On one occasion, a few days ago, the missionary invited the young to come forward and help in the Lord's work, this resulted in six or eight young men taking part in the Sunday-evening services. Several of these young men have encouraged others, and really astonished me and their hearers by their ability and grasp of their subject.

In a recent testimony, a convert said:—"I want to tell you that I was born and brought up a Roman Catholic, and used to attend confession and Mass. I have a Bible in my hand. I do not know very much about it, as we never saw one there or in the schools; but with God's help I mean to know and learn much more about it. I thank God that I was led to read it for the first time through attending your missionary's classes, and it was the cause of my joining his Bible-class and deciding for Christ and the truth. I have been reading this Book, and I cannot find in it what I was taught in the Church of Rome. I went to confession and Mass between the ages of eleven and thirteen. We used to go in, a lot of rough lads together, kneel and tell the priest, as we thought, all our sins, and then we used to go away, and perhaps before Mass the next morning commit more sins than we had confessed; and yet we were supposed to go to Mass without sin! I often think about this now, but I could not see it then. The confessional only encourages sin! I thank God that my eyes are now open. I will try to love and serve Him."

Many Romanists have expressed their ignorance of the controversy, and thanked God for the Protestant Reformation Society and the instruction which they received. The office of the Society is 62, Berners-street, W.

High Brooms, near Tunbridge Wells.

Mr. Thomas Sunshine, for many years a City missionary in London, after a period of rest owing to ill-health, has begun a quiet work at High Brooms, Tunbridge Wells. He writes:—"High Brooms is a colony of working-class people, numbering from 1400 to 1500, and still rapidly increasing. Myself and wife have given ourselves to this work, visiting daily from house to house with the Gospel, distributing tracts, praying with the people and striving to our utmost to win them for Christ. We are received with gratitude on every hand. Meeting with a rough hostler in the street, I asked, 'Are you a Christian?' 'I don't know what I am,' was the reply. I opened my Bible and showed him he was a sinner, and that he was commanded to repent. Step by step I led him on, pointing him to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world. 'Well,' said he, 'I haven't thought about these things afore, an nobody has talked to me like this. I'd like to hear you again.' I promised to visit him in his home, and talk more about Jesus.

"A woman said, 'Oh, sir, do try and get hold of my husband. We have lost all through his drinking and gambling; it's well-nigh breaking my heart. I pointed her to the great healer and Saviour. A young man came up to me on a Sunday evening, and asked, 'Are you Mr. Sunshine?' 'Yes,' I replied, 'what is it you want?' 'Mother says although we are very poor, she'll let you have her room to preach in if you will come. We are all converted but her, and she wishes to be. Do come, sir.' In addition to house-to-house visitation, there is a brickyard, where there are from 200 to 250 men employed, and they need saving very badly. I have promised to go to them with the Gospel. There is also a gasworks, where I may do what I can for the spiritual welfare of the men. Many other instances of conversion might be added. In our daily visitations from house to house many invite us to tell of Jesus.

"I have nearly come to the end of the resources in hand, and therefore ask in the Master's name for hymn books (Songs and Solos), Bibles, Testaments, tracts, wearing apparel, and funds to purchase nourishment for the sick and afflicted, of whom there are not a few. Address, Middleton Villa, Southborough, Tunbridge Wells."

Working Lads in Whitechapel.

Just a year ago an article appeared in The Christian to the effect that the expected transfer of the premises and work had not been effected, and that unless some person or society intervened immediately the property would be sold by auction to the highest bidder.

I had done my utmost, if thus sold, to have conditions prohibiting liquor, theatrical, and music-hall licences, but in vain. There was a great danger that these splendid freehold buildings, with the large lecture hall, all specially designed and erected for the moral and spiritual good of the youth of East London, might be devoted to such uses in the future as to be a means of evil.

Let us heartily thank God that danger has been averted, and our prayers have been wonderfully answered. Rev. Thomas Jackson, of Clapton, and some friends, who had long been seeking premises in East London for mission work, saw the letter and considered the opportunity an answer to their prayers. They found the property suitable for their requirements, with ample accommodation in addition to that needed for the institute work for lads. In a few weeks the transfer was arranged, they paying the mortgage and taking the premises subject to the licence conditions, and agreeing to carry on the Working Lads' Institute as heretofore—that is, on Christian principles, but quite unsectarian.

The W.L.I. was repaired, renovated, and re-opened last April. They have had a good summer session, and the swimming-bath has been thronged. The reading-room is crowded, and the evening classes have commenced. Also Bible-class and evangelistic services are held regularly. Already about 400 poor, but hard-working, lads are in attendance, including a few residents.

The great object is to save the lads of London, after their day's toil, from the public-houses, theatres, and low music-halls which abound, and to do them all the good we can. A visit to Whitechapel any night will suffice to convince anyone that the need of such an institute is as great as ever.

The inaugural meeting of the winter session takes place on November 22, when Mr. Alderman-Sheriff Green will preside. All former subscribers and friends will be heartily welcomed, and I think will be truly gratified to find the W.L.I. again a living, working power for good. For tickets please apply to the secretary, Rev. T. Jackson, 137, Whitechapel, E. Henry Hill, Founder.

Destitute Armenian Widows.—An exhibition and sale of Armenian embroideries is to be held in St. Andrew's Halls, Glasgow, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week. It has been organised by the Women's Auxiliary of the Scottish Armenian Association, Glasgow, in aid of the distressed Armenians. The embroideries, which are beautiful in design, colouring, and execution, are worked by the destitute Armenian widows, whose husbands were killed and their homes destroyed at the time of the Armenian massacres. The missionaries have organised this industrial relief work to give these poor women some means of support for themselves and their starving children in the extreme need of their destitution, as the relief funds have practically ceased. Urgent appeals are being received for help from those who are bearing the burden of work among the helpless women and orphaned children, of whom there are thousands in desolated Armenia.

Annie C. Marshall,
Secretary Scottish Armenian Association.

Temperance Notes.

The executive of the Central Association for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday have issued an appeal to the people of England.

A useful Review of British and Colonial Temperance Legislation may be found in a pamphlet by Mr. Joseph Malins (1d. National Temperance Depôt). Speakers will find it a budget of valuable facts.

The "Coming of Age" of the National British Women's Temperance Association is to be celebrated at the end of November by a series of important meetings at Newcastle-on-Tyne, where the association originated in 1876.

The Bishop of Liverpool has addressed a letter to his clergy proposing Sunday, January 30, as Annual Temperance Sunday in 1898. He urges all clergymen to allow the claims of the C.E.T.S. to be advocated in their pulpit on that day.

A pamphlet by Rev. J. F. Bradley, entitled "Temperance Legislation," has been issued (price 4d.) from The Christian Commonwealth office, dealing with "Compensation," "Local Veto," and other points on which divergent views have been held.

Mr. C. F. Luttrell-West has entered upon his duties as district secretary to the Central Sunday Closing Association in the counties of Gloucester, Somerset, Wilts, Berks, Cornwall, Devon, Dorset, Hants, Monmouth, Oxford, and Glamorgan. His address is 35, Canynge-square, Clifton, Bristol.

Mr. Dewar, Chief Constable of Dundee, stated recently before the Royal Commission on the Liquor Laws, that there had been a steady decrease of drunkenness in Dundee since 1844, which was coincident with a decrease in the number of public-houses. This bears out the contention that facilities for obtaining drink means more drunkenness.

The Prussian State Railway Department has issued instructions to station-masters to arrange that in all railway restaurants a good cup of coffee with milk and sugar is to be supplied for ten pfennige (1d.), and that an extra large supply of this beverage is to be on hand during the term of the departure and arrival of early trains, when large bodies of working people are travelling.

At the annual Conference of the Yorkshire Womens' Christian Temperance Union held in Sheffield a large number of delegates were present. The report of the executive committee contained many satisfactory features. This year the attention of the delegates has been specially directed to the law with regard to the licensing of public-houses and of shops for the sale of intoxicating drinks.

The Birmingham Gospel Temperance Mission recently held its annual meeting. Mr. Richard Cadbury rejoiced in the large measure of success which had attended the work of the Mission, and mentioned that one fruitfulpart of the work had been among non-abstainers. Lady workers had given time to looking up people whom they found standing about the doors of public-houses, and whom they invited to partake of a coffee supper; 2000 women attended their mothers' meetings a week.

Homes for Missionaries on Furlough.—These are furnished houses provided at a moderate rent for L.M.S. missionaries during their sojourn in England. Hitherto many of these have been subjected to heavy losses in breaking up their homes, not only abroad, but also when their furlough had expired. Some have thus been plunged into difficulties, from which it took two or three years of strict economy to recover. Moreover, they are compelled to face house-hunting and furniture-buying the moment they arrive home. So far £1353 has been spent in the purchase and repair of three houses, and about £1000 in furnishing six. £1600 has been received in donations, and in gifts of furniture to the value of over £100. There are at least sixteen, and at times twenty or more, L.M.S. missionaries on furlough every year, and this number will be increased by the additional missionaries lately sent out. If the sum of only £1000 be subscribed within the next two years, the movement will be firmly established, not only on a self-supporting but a self-extending basis. The committee will be enabled gradually to provide a sufficient number of homes for those brethren who need them, and, if found expedient in the future, a home for lady missionaries also, both preparing for the mission field and returning home for rest. The secretary is Rev. S. T. Williams, Fairmead, Hendon, N.W.

Scottish Notes.

Rev. Dr. A. Whyte, of Free St. George's, Edinburgh, and Rev. Dr. Leishman, of Linton, are said to be the coming Moderators of next year's Free and Established Assemblies.

A two days' prophetical conference has been held at Alexandria. Following this, Mr. and Mrs. Webster (Rochdale) are holding Gospel meetings, as well as giving Bible-readings to Christians.

Throughout last week Rev. John McNeill attracted large audiences to his Gospel meetings in the Burgh Hall, Montrose. He closes his mission there to-morrow (Friday), and on Sabbath enters upon a fortnight's work in the neighbouring town of Arbroath.

The annual missionary conference of the Lanarkshire Christian Union has been held at Hamilton, Mr. John Colville, M.P., presiding. Addresses were given by Rev. George Waugh, Punjaub; Mr. John Darroch and Miss Bessie Leggatt, China Inland Mission; Rev. Charles G. Moore, London; and Mr. Fred. Suter, Zululand.

Last week at a U.P. jubilee meeting in Edinburgh, Principal Hutton said they had cause with humility, yet with thankfulness, to look forward to the future. United Presbyterianism had brought to the front in Scotland the duty of missionary enterprise. It had borne an unfailing testimony to the spirituality of the Church for Christ.

At a demonstration in connection with the Band of Hope jubilee, held in Glasgow last week, with Mr. A. Cameron Corbett, M.P., as chairman, it was agreed to support the Scottish National Union in an endeavour to promote the formation of a Band of Hope in connection with every church and mission Sabbath school in the country.

The committee in charge of a week of mission services recently held in all the congregations of Dundee Free Presbytery, expresses in its report great gratification on the success which attended these gatherings. From many quarters testimony has been forthcoming that the meetings had been welcomed as a spiritual stimulus at the beginning of the work of the winter.

At the annual conference of the Scottish "Monthly Visitor" Tract Society, held in Edinburgh last week, the report given in by the secretary (Mr. R. Henderson Smith) showed that during the twelve months 579,246 tracts had been distributed being an increase over the previous year of 3000 a month. A thousand distributors are now at work, compared with 900 in 1896.

Rev. John Robertson, in a pastoral letter to the members and adherents of the City Temple, Glasgow, announces that at the end of May, 1898, he purposes bidding them farewell as their minister. He feels led to devote at least three years to preaching the Word in a Gospel mission round the world. He has arranged that during these years of evangelisation his family home shall be in the vicinity of New York.

The Salvation Army is making special efforts in Glasgow. During a visit paid to the city by General Booth last week large and enthusiastic audiences attended his meetings. Amongst other things he said that a "Metropole" had already been opened giving accommodation for 144 "poor, lost, and wretched women"; and that the plans which it is hoped to carry out in the near future include more accommodation for rescue work, a prison-gate shelter, and a shelter for homeless men. The local officers have hired during the month of November the largest hall in the city for meetings on Sunday afternoon and evening.

Miss Ruth Wood, whose good work for eight years among Glasgow sick poor will never be forgotten, and who was forced about two years ago to resign her position as lady superintendent of the Higginbotham Nurses' Home through overstrain, has returned to Glasgow completely restored in health. She taken charge of the Deaconess Home and Medical Mission, situated in one of the poorer neighbourhoods of Glasgow known as the Gorbals. Already her work is much valued; her wonderful love and sympathy draw the poorest and even the most sinful and degraded towards her, and her message of God's love to them is eagerly listened to.

Pentecostal League.—The autumnal gatherings of the league were held in Exeter Hall last week. Addresses were delivered by Hon. and Rev. Talbot Rice, Oxford; Rev. Richard Leitch, Newcastle; Mr. and Mrs. Reader Harris, and others. The audiences were large and enthusiastic.

The Evangelistic Field.

MISSION IN EDINBURGH.

THE WEAVER Brothers have concluded a very successful mission in Dalry Free Church, Edinburgh. Although it was begun at an awkward time—just when the meetings in connection with the municipal elections were in full swing—the attendances grew in number, and the interest was more than sustained to the close. One night in particular the church was crowded from floor to ceiling. The results of the mission were very gratifying. The excitement was not so great as on former occasions, but the work done was good and solid. Not only were Christians quickened, but there were many definite cases of conversion of persons varying from seventy years of age down to ten. Amongst these were some splendid cases. One young man, who confessed that he had never attended church in his life, has joined the Sabbath-morning fellowship association. Another, who regularly attended former missions in this church, yielded himself to the Lord on this occasion; confessing, when he did so, that that day he paid his rent, which seemed to be an unusual thing, and also his standing debts. Another who had been for years a source of anxiety to all, has at last been won to the Lord, and as evidence of the work of grace in him, might be seen standing at the street-corner in connection with the open-air services; or at the early-morning prayer-meeting, conducted by the Christian Endeavourers, at 6.30 a.m., he might be found taking part. Additional cases might be given, but these will suffice to show the solid character of the work done. The visit of the Weaver Brothers to the congregation will long be remembered, and their movements throughout the country closely watched.

ANOTHER FREE CHURCH CAMPAIGN.

This time it is Hastings that is being stirred. A lady resident writes:—In THE CHRISTIAN of Nov. 4 particulars were given of a season of special services in which the Free Churches of Bristol were joining. I want you to know Hastings is not far behind in a like movement.

All the Free Churches of the town are joining, commencing on Sunday, the 21st inst., preceded by a week of prayer, commencing to-day (14th). As an example of the interest and expectation now being felt, the young people of the senior C.E.S. of Mr. New's church have asked for, and arranged, an early-morning prayer-meeting. The whole town has been mapped out for house-to-house visitation. Mr. New said he alone wanted sixty visitors from his people for this work, and the sixty offered themselves.

There is great expectation of blessing, "That God may be glorified." These were Mr. New's words to the people this morning. Please add your prayers to ours, that this may be brought to pass in abundant measure.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Gospel meetings have been held by Mr. ROBT. BOYLE, Assembly's Evangelist, in connection with Scarva-street Presbyterian Church, Banbridge, and a similar series of meetings has been held by Mr. WM. SMITH, at Ballywalter, co. Down.

Mr. J. H. HAYNES, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a successful mission at the People's Hall, Boone-street, Lee. The attendance was excellent. From the first it was evident that a great blessing was in waiting. The week of preliminary prayer was most helpful, and the evangelist's earnest pleading has aroused many Christians, restored backsliders, and led sinners to the Saviour.

During the past fortnight, from Oct. 31 to Nov. 12, Mr. RICHARD SPRAGG has been holding meetings in the Free Mission Hall, New John-street West, Birmingham, and the Lord has given decided tokens of blessing. On the first Lord's Day a lad was saved in the Sunday-school. At night he brought his sister, and she was saved. The two then went to the evangelist, and begged him to "come and see mother; she is dying of cancer." He went, and mother was saved too, as those who have visited her can testify. But, indeed, such cases are numerous. In fact, at the closing meeting, when those who had been blessed during the meetings were asked to stand up, 28 or 30 rose, and many were very striking and encouraging cases. Mr. Spragg has now gone to Hamstall, near Rugeley, for a week, and then he goes to Bristol.

An eight days' United Evangelistic Mission has been concluded in Bewdley, Worcestershire. The meetings were arranged by the Free Church Council, and never before have the people been so much stirred. The Town-hall has been packed nightly, and the addresses of the missioner, Rev. WM. MOTTRAM, will long be remembered. The ministers heartily supported the work, and it is felt on all sides that a great wave of blessing has passed over the place. The last service was deeply impressive. At the after meeting many remained behind to testify to the blessing they had received, and several decided cases of conversion have taken place.

Mr. JOHN GREENWOOD, of the Evangelization Society, has completed a five weeks' mission at Hollin Bank Mission, Blackburn, that has been attended with remarkable blessing. A great number professed to find peace through Jesus Christ.

The following Missions, arranged by the Evangelization Society, are about to be held, amongst others:—

Saltcoats, D. M. Bayne; Edinburgh, T. Canning; Wick, H. Young; Kingussie, D. Pittendrigh; Kirriemuir, J. W. Moodie; Nairn, R. Lapsley; Braco, C. G. Roger; Madderty, J. W. Galletly; Wheatley, C. Lazenby; Eversley, J. Stanger; Earlsfield, E. Bailey; East Dereham, F. Holmes; Cheriton, J. Shields; Quinton, N. Taylor; Lays Hill, S. Vivian; Ford, C. Jolliffe; Brighton, J. Brown; Fulham, H. Bray; Burton, J. H. Haynes; Bingham, G. Pell; Headley, K. Lambert; Beaconsfield, J. Lovell; Rowlands Castle, S. Bryant; Bristol, A. Clark; Brigg, C. Noakes; Stewkley, J. Simmonds; Liverpool, H. Collins; Combe Martin, F. Walter; Framfield, J. Clark; Knebworth, J. Johnson; Hawkinge, J. H. Cooke; Brill, J. Harris; Blofield, F. Tarrant; Moston, J. Whiting.

Requests for Prayer.

A TEACHER in a Board School earnestly desires prayer on behalf of her scholars.

For a mission by Mr. James Eyres in the Congregational Chapel, Snodland, December 11 to 20.

For special services for children at the Cage-lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, from Nov. 20 to 26.

For evangelistic services at the Mission Hall, Godmanchester, Nov. 21 to Dec. 1, by Mr. T. H. Johnson.

For a united mission in the Town Hall, Trowbridge, by Mr. John Elliott, commencing on Sunday, November 21.

For Gospel meetings to be held by Mr. Monro Collings, at Eastleigh, Nov. 18 and 19; and at Monmouth, Nov. 20 to Dec. 4.

For an eight-days' Gospel mission to be conducted in the Borough Hall, Stockton-on-Tees, by Rev. F. J. Feltham and Mr. P. R. Hopkins, from Nov. 21 to 28.

For blessing on all work following the mission held at Paddock Wood, and especially for the work at Queen-street Mission Hall, and the young men's Bible-class conducted by Mr. W. Trowell.

Lord Radstock writes:—"I am going to Paris for some time on Nov. 20. I should be glad of the prayers of God's people. The power of evil there is alarming, and immense classes are living without God in the world."

DEAR SIR,—In view of the zeal shown by Roman Catholics for the conversion of England, ought not English Christians to cry to God more fervently for the conversion of France?

A grand opportunity will take place next week, when there is to be a three days' Holiness Convention at Paris, November 23-25, specially intended for French pastors and workers. The movement is well supported by a great number of the leading pastors, and if many of these dear men really received a powerful baptism of the Holy Spirit, it might have a wonderful effect on the whole country.—Yours sincerely,

W. F. HATHAWAY.

Lapéruse, Chabanais, Charente.

Praise.

For much blessing on the mission held at Paddock Wood, by Mr. J. H. Cooke (Evangelization Society).

For blessing granted on the recent mission, conducted by Mr. F. A. Glover, at Longwell's Green, near Bristol, especially amongst the young.

Croydon Convention.—The annual Croydon Convention took place at the Temperance Hall, Mint-walk, High-street, Croydon, Nov. 8 to 13, and was attended throughout by very large audiences. The chairman for the whole course of the meetings was Capt. Tottenham. We hope next week to give some account of the meetings.

Christian Endeavour.

THE "Tenth Legion" of proportionate givers to God now has a membership of nearly four thousand.

There are now 51,578 C.E. societies in the world, with a total membership of three million members. Almost one hundred new societies are reported each week to Secretary Baer.

Hundreds are becoming enrolled in the U.S.A. as "Comrades of the Quiet Hour." These take the following covenant and remember the "morning watch": "I will make it the rule of my life to set apart at least fifteen minutes every day, if possible in the early morning hour, for quiet meditation and direct communion."

Personalia.

Mr. W. Summers, of the North Africa Mission, who has laboured for ten years in Morocco and Egypt, is now at home for a time, and will be glad of opportunities to hold meetings and speak on behalf of work among the Mohammedans. He may be addressed, c.o. Mr. E. H. Glenny, Barking.

The late Principal Brown.—A biography of the late Principal David Brown has been undertaken by his life-long friend, Dr. William Garden Blaikie. The family of Principal Brown would be glad if any letters or other material suitable for publication in this work were sent to Rev. Dr. Blaikie, Edinburgh.

Mr. S. Arumugam Mudaliar, a high-caste Hindu from Madras, is now studying at Harley College, Bow, E., with a view to returning as a missionary to his native country. He is a convert to Christianity of eleven years' standing, and has had a wide experience of mission work in India. He would be glad to hear from friends interested in the Lord's work in India, with a view to arranging meetings, either missionary or otherwise.

Alderman James Duckworth, who has been elected as member for Middleton, is one of the leading men among the Free Methodists, and was last year president of the Conference. It was he who started the Gospel Car Mission, presenting two splendidly-equipped vehicles for use in rural evangelisation. For foreign mission work he has done much. One who has known him long and intimately says that the uppermost principle in his mind throughout his career has been that of stewardship, and in that sense he seeks to administer whatever has been entrusted to him.

The late Bishop Walsham How left behind him a memorandum, which his family have made public:—"I have, ever since I possessed an income at all, always dedicated one-tenth annually to God in charity. When I became a Bishop I resolved that my children should never profit by my episcopal income, and as soon as I became Bishop of Wakefield I dedicated to God in charity (i.e., in direct gifts and subscriptions) £3000 a year, or a full fifth of my gross income. Perhaps I should mention that I always gave away the large sum I received for my books in addition to the tenth of my income. My chief object in naming these things is to provide an answer to the charge, sure to be made, that I have enriched myself and my children out of the endowments of the Church."

Open-air Preaching.

AN important and well-attended meeting of the members and other friends of the Christian Community engaged in this work was recently held in their Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, for reporting upon this work during the past season. The leaders of the bands and other helpers furnished most interesting details of the work at most of the twenty-one stations occupied by the society, which conclusively proved the necessity of the work in the open air. The testimony of all was that the audiences are almost entirely composed of street idlers and others who systematically abstain from attending any place of worship, yet they were most ready to listen to the Gospel addresses, and seemed much impressed with the Word. The police were most helpful in preserving order, and deserved special thanks. About 500 services have been held, and over 1000 addresses delivered to tens of thousands of people.

Arbitration.—Two important memorials have been presented to Lord Salisbury on behalf of the Arbitration Alliance, through its hon. secretary, Dr. W. Evans Darby. One of these was a national memorial relating to an arrest in the growth of armaments, and bore signatures representing a total of 165,119, besides a number of representative signatures in connection with which the exact number could not be ascertained. The other memorial referred to the conclusion of an arbitration treaty between this country and America, and consisted of 64,572 signatures.

THE BOOK WORLD.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Sunday Friend, Vol. XXIII. (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) An admirable companion for the Sunday afternoon for boys and girls, with a page or two in each issue for Saturday as well. The volume is brightly illustrated, has good tales, and gives attractive sketches of missionary life. (Price 1s. 6d. coloured boards, and 2s. 6d. cloth.)

The Animals' Friend is one of the brightest of monthlies, advocating the rights of what is called the lower creation against the thoughtlessness and cruelty of humanity. The annual volume is full of entertaining and instructive matter, illustrated with portraits of distinguished friends of the cause of mercy, and representations of beauty and strength in various branches of the animal kingdom. Those who keep pets will find these pages of great service; and, besides providing pages specially for children, the volume will in many ways assist parents in training their little ones in merciful habits, and giving them becoming consideration for "our dumb brethren." (2s. 6d. net. G. Bell & Sons.)

CHRISTMAS CARDS AND CALENDARS.

An excellent and large selection of these seasonable messages, now so popular, may be had at the establishment of Messrs. W. G. Wheeler & Co., 17, Paternoster-row. They are not of the frivolous or merely artistic sort, but chaste floral designs are fitly wedded to sacred motto or verse. We may mention as especially attractive in the card department "Thy King Cometh" (1s. per packet), "Joy Everlasting," very choicely printed with texts and flowers (6d.); "Peace, Perfect Peace," with beautifully illuminated texts (1s.); "Trusting Jesus," card booklets, with sacred poems by Mrs. Gorges (1s.). Among the calendars we specially commend "The Upward Path" and "The Onward Path," having landscapes and flowers on every page (1s. each); "Abiding in the Lord" calendar, with verses by Charlotte Murray (3d.), and Motto Calendar for 1898 (6d.). The motto cards for hanging are also finished in the best style. The whole are described under the general title of the "Keswick Series."

English Ann. By R. Ramsay. (Gardner, Darton, & Co. 1s. 6d.) Here we have pleasantly told the experiences of a girl sent from England to a school in Germany.

Jenny. By Mrs. E. Cartwright. (Gardner, Darton & Co. 2s.) The little maid whose adventures are here related finds her mischief fraught with troublesome consequences, though at length all ends well. The book is illustrated, and will interest the girls.

Joana. By Margaret Surrey. (Marshall Bros. 3s. 6d.) A high-toned story of Crimean days. As a tale it is well written and powerful, but its evident purpose lies deeper far in the illustration afforded of the strength and sweetness of a life of full trust in God and glad surrender to his will.

Stories for Children, in Illustration of the Lord's Prayer. By Mrs. Molesworth. (3s. 6d. Gardner, Darton & Co.) Eight stories, with many admirable engravings. The book is produced in such an attractive style as to mark it as particularly suited for presentation purposes.

When Thou Prayest. By Rev. W. Hewetson. (1s. "Home Words" Office.) To those accustomed to use helps in devotion, these suggestions for private prayer, with Scriptural meditations, must be of genuine service. We have found the reading of the pointed petitions a real stimulus.

Chips of China is an illustrated book, the sequel fo "Pigtails and Chopsticks." It tells, in a deeply interesting manner, the story of a Chinese girl, and affords other glimpses of life in the Middle Kingdom. There are also sketches of Robert Morrison, William Burns, "Chinese" Gordon, and Li Hung Chang. (Religious Tract Book Society, Edinburgh.)

The New Law: Six Sermons preached in St. Paul's Cathedral. By the Ven. Archdeacon Sinclair. (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) A volume of the "Preachers of To-day" series. The discourses expound fundamental principles of Christian duty. The first enforces "Christ's Law for a Nation and its Neighbours"; the others deal with love to enemies, prayer, intercession, forgiveness, and truthfulness.

A Doctor of the Old School. By Ian Maclaren, with illustrations by F. C. Gordon. (2s. 6d. Hodder and Stoughton.) Dr. Watson's sketch of Drumtochty's devoted doctor has already become a recognized classic in idyllic literature. This profusely illustrated edition will be a prized possession in many a Scottish home, and in other homes where the broad pawky speech of rural Perthshire is less familiar.

The Love Affairs of Some Famous Men. By the author of "How to be Happy though Married." (6s. Fisher Unwin.) Personal matters of this kind, when associated with men who have made a name, are eagerly read by many. Here such will find information as to the tender passages in the lives of poets, writers, painters, musicians, preachers, soldiers, sailors, scientists, and statesmen. For those who love such fare here is rare store.

The Companions of Jesus (Sunday School Union. 3s. 6d.) The author seeks to make the children familiar with the men who gathered round the Lord Jesus when on earth and shared with Him his toils and rejection. The aim from first to last is to set forth the Saviour Himself, and to manifest his tenderness and grace. New Testament Stories, by E. A. Macdonald (1s.), is addressed to the younger children. Its theme is also the life of our Lord here below. Both books are illustrated, and likely to be of good service to teachers and mothers.

On the Indian Trail. By Rev. Egerton R. Young. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Like Mr. Young's former books, these sketches of missionary life and work in the far north-west have about them a halo of romantic interest, due partly to the country and the people, but partly also, we imagine, to the skilful pen of the author. They represent a state of things now fast passing away before the inroads of civilisation, and they cannot fail to awaken interest, whilst they will also stimulate thankfulness for the triumphs of the Gospel.

The Friends of Jesus. By Helen E. Jackson. (Partridge. 2s.) The authoress of "Gentle Jesus" has already done good service to the children and their teachers. Once more she addresses herself to the same task by describing in simple language and narrative form the little company who walked with Jesus during his earthly ministry and heard the gracious words which fell from his lips. Peter seems to have a special attraction for her, inasmuch as while one chapter suffices for each of the others, ten are devoted to Cephas. The book will be of real service to those who minister to the lambs of the flock.

Love the Conqueror. By Jeanie Ferry. (Robert Culley. 2s.) Vivid pages from a girl's diary, showing how love, that "beareth all things and hopeth all things," finally subdues and conquers jealous and envious cousins. Runnelbrook Valley. By Mrs. Haycraft. (1s. 6d. and 2s.) A capital temperance tale, narrating the ruin wrought in a quiet valley by intemperance and the happy results accruing from the earnest efforts of a few active workers. Two Snowy Christmas Eves. By Eliza Kerr. (1s. 6d.) The adventure is of a little one stolen from her parents, and at length restored to her mother one snowy Christmas eve.

Amongst their new season's books, Messrs. Nelson & Sons issue Vandrad the Viking, by J. Storer Clouston (2s.). Here, as the title implies, the boys will find adventures and fierce fights after their own mind. Wee Doggie, by E. C. Traice. (1s.) A merry little tale of a young dog, which plays many pranks, and proves its faithfulness by saving its boy-master's life. The Little V.C., by Helen Marion Burnside; The Boys of Hamnavoe, by John Gunn, M.A.; The Angel's Charge, by Grace Mara; and The Lost Letter, by Helen Marion Burnside (9d. each). Pleasing gift books for scholars, illustrated and tastefully bound in cloth.

Old Samoa; or Flotsam and Jetsam from the Pacific Ocean. Rev. John B. Stair. (Religious Tract Society. 5s.). The Bishop of Ballarat in an introductory chapter, speaks of this book as describing strange episodes in what may be termed "the Stone Age" of Samoa. The pictures of native and tribal life given by the writer are of rare interest, while they have also a permanent value as a record of a primitive state of things now passed away. Unpretending as the book is, it is an important addition to the missionary library, while it will also find a welcome among students of aboriginal peoples.

The Church of England: A History for the People. Vol. II.—The Mediæval Church. (6s. Cassell & Co.) Dean Spence's very useful work continues to be as well written and as admirably illustrated as at the start. This volume comes well after the first, which depicted the Anglo-Saxon Church; two more volumes will complete the work, which is conceived on so generous a plan as fairly to survey the rise, vicissitudes, and progress of Christianity in England, which of course is a wider subject than the history of the Church of England strictly so called. The illustrations are an important feature, as they delineate many historic persons and scenes, and reproduce notable objects and documents. This work, from the pen of a fair-minded churchman, deserves to be largely read.

Sunday-school Teaching: A Manual of Method in Class Instruction, Management, and Discipline. By James Bailey, head master of Southlands Training College. (1s. 6d. Wesleyan Sunday School Union.) Here we have the whole duty of the Sunday-school teacher. The book is thoroughly practical, and should be carefully studied by such as would excel in the instruction of the young in Divine things.

The Story of Some Famous Bonfires, by W. Stanley Martin, is a book for the times. The bonfires are of "Bones," as appears in the story of Wycliffe, and of "Bibles" as in that of Tyndale. A third chapter relates to the martyrs of Queen Mary's reign, and a fourth enlarges in a striking manner upon Protestant facts and principles. Mrs. W. R. Arbuthnot, president of the Women's Protestant Union, writes an introduction to this useful book. (1s. net. W. Wileman.)

"The Everlasting Gospel" of the Old and New Testaments. Sermons preached by C. H. Spurgeon. Selected by General Sir Robert Phayre, K.C.B. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) Shortly before his death Sir Robert Phayre completed a careful selection from the thousands of sermons by the renowned Metropolitan preacher; and here they are, thirty-six in number, reprinted and bound in a goodly volume. The sermons unfold fundamental truth, and include some of the most powerful ever delivered by the distinguished preacher. The volume is a good sample of the excellent sermon literature standing in the name of C. H. Spurgeon.

Off to Dolly Land is a painting book for children dealing with dolls of every description and nation. The designs are simple enough to be within the scope of the youngest artist. (6d. Jarrold & Sons.)

How the Good News was Received, being the Story of the Father and the Prodigal, is one of the "Helpful Booklet" series. (6d. A. Holness.) The ever-attractive parable is first given in the words of Christ, and then explained and enforced with sympathy and judgment.

Many will be interested to read a penny pamphlet entitled A Plea for the Canine Race: Showing the Inutility of the Muzzling Order, and the Folly of Creating Needless Pain. By the Editor of Health News. (Savoy Press, 115 Strand, W.C.)

The Church of England Almanack, compiled by Henry Miller, of the Church Association, is a useful little book, giving much special information on the Protestant constitution of the Church of England, and the process of Romanisation. (Paper 1d., cloth 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co.) The Church Association has also issued an illuminated card, depicting Queen Victoria in 1838 taking the coronation oath, and giving the words of the Royal declaration against Popery. (Office of the Association, 14, Buckingham-street, Strand.)

INSTRUCTIONS.

Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN" must detach the above Coupons for the particular Subjects required, and forward them to the South Kensington Fine Art Association, 8, Exhibition-road, South Kensington, London, S.W., together with a postal order for 2s. 6d. for one Subject, 5s. for three, 10s. for six subjects, or 17s. 6d. for the whole set of twelve. It will be observed that the Pictures are arranged in pairs.

This payment will cover all charges, including Plates (the property of the South Kensington Fine Art Association), packing, case, carriage, and all other expenses.

It must be understood that the offer of such GENUINE Steel-plate Engravings as "THE TRUE VINE," after ALEXANDER MELVILLE, A.R.S.A., and "LOCKED OUT!" after J. YATES CARRINGTON, at 2s. 6d. each, are practically GIFTS to the readers of "The Christian," for the Artist's Proofs on India Paper have fetched Four Guineas each for the former, and Three Guineas each for the latter subject: the impressions which we are presenting to the readers of "The Christian" for 2s. 6d. being GENUINE One Guinea Prints, PRODUCED DIRECT FROM THE STEEL PLATE: and as to the beautiful OIL PICTURES at 2s. 6d., the subject of "MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS AT FOTHERINGAY CASTLE" was alone issued in a precisely similar style but larger size at One-and a-half Guinea per copy, and the other exquisite subjects in charmingly blended natural Oil Colours are equally as good in every respect.

The general distribution of the beautiful pictures recently made has given the greatest satisfaction, and letters of thanks have been received from all parts of the world from many who have long desired such high-class Works of Art for the adornment of their homes at a merely nominal figure.

If the instructions given above are faithfully carried out, and the Coupons are sent (with name and address carefully written), the South Kensington Fine Art Association, of 8, Exhibition-road, South Kensington, London, S.W., undertake to forward the Pictures, carriage paid, to all parts of the world (Foreign and Colonial 2s. extra), in a stout case, and being securely packed, they will arrive in good condition.

N.B.—As the number of copies is limited, it is desirable to make early application. A certain portion of the issue will be reserved for Foreign and Colonial readers of "THE CHRISTIAN."

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone sails for his diocese on Dec. 4.

Archdeacon Madden preached last week for the N.P.C.U. at St. Clement's, Liverpool.

A new church is about to be erected in the parish of St. Andrew's, Listerhills, Bradford.

Rev. E. A. Stuart has been elected to the Jones lectureship, in the gift of the Haberdashers' Company.

The new Bishop of Wakefield preached at Wakefield Cathedral on Sunday week, and in the afternoon delivered an address to men only.

A meeting of the C.M.S. Younger Clergy Union for London was held on Monday at Salisbury-square, addressed by the Bishop of Sierra Leone.

Rev. C. H. Banning, Vicar of Christ Church, Highbury, has received the sum of £500 from a lady parishioner for the purpose of erecting mission premises in a new part of the parish as a memorial of the Diamond Jubilee.

Large meetings have been held at Sheffield in connection with the anniversary of the Gleaners' Union of the Church Missionary Society. There are now upwards of 700 branches, which have enrolled more than 100,000 members.

The living of Clifton has been offered by the trustees to Rev. W. E. Burroughs, Central Secretary of the C.M.S.; but as his resignation of his present post at this moment might imperil the interests of the Society, Mr. Burroughs has declined the offer.

The Church Association Conference at Shrewsbury has proved a distinct success. One of the Protestant vans has lent effective auxiliary service. The various addresses by Rev. Talbot Greaves, C. H. Wainwright, T. Davies, E. H. F. Cosens, and others, dealt with points of considerable interest to Evangelical Churchmen.

Mrs. Bury has issued from Little Hadham Rectory, Herts, a "plea for the Argentine," in which she says that friends of Englishmen who leave home to settle in the Argentine are feeling deeply the great absence of outward religious helps which fall to the lot of those who are settled there. It is proposed to provide an itinerating missionary among the estancias, if sufficient means can be found and the proper man.

Congregational.

Mr. Herbert Hooper has been recognised at Frodsham Bridge.

A week of special services has been held at the Tabernacle, Hawley.

Mr. James W. Smith has been ordained to the pastorate at Shillington.

Rev. G. Watt-Smith has been recognised at Belgrave Chapel, Leeds.

Rev. John Yonge has completed a quarter of a century's pastorate at Wycliffe, Washington.

Rev. George H. Giddins, of the Evangelical Continental Society, has returned from an extended visit to Italy.

A new Sunday-school was opened on the 3rd inst. at Ramsbury, Wilts, Mr. T. L. Hinwood, J.P., of Malmesbury, an old scholar, presiding.

Dr. Brown, of Bedford, began on Monday, at the Memorial Hall, E.C., a series of lectures on "Apostolical Succession in the light of History and Fact."

Mr. E. Hampden-Cook, late secretary of Mill Hill School, London, has accepted an invitation to take the temporary oversight of the English Church at Dolgelly, N. Wales.

Rev. T. Sissons, secretary of the London Congregational Board, on the completion of his engagement for a year at Wycliffe Church, Stepney, has intimated his decision to continue to labour there.

Mr. F. W. Freeman, who has laboured for several years as evangelist in charge of the Pitsea, Prittlewell, and Southchurch Beach Missions, has been ordained as assistant to Rev. E. Hamilton at Cliff Town, Southend.

The new Mayor of Newport, Mon., is a Congregationalist, and has been identified with Victoria-road Church for a long period. He is now senior deacon, and has been superintendent of the Sunday-school for a number of years.

Rea-street Men's Early Morning Class, which the late Dr. Dale first started in connection with Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham, held its thirtieth annual meeting on Sunday week, when cheering reports of the year's work were read.

Bishopsgate Chapel, erected in 1837 for a church originally formed in 1700, has been renovated at a cost of nearly £1000. The building was reopened on Sunday last, when the thirteenth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Thos. Grear was celebrated.

Calls.—Rev. J. Le Pla, of Harringay, to Caledon-square, Capetown; Rev. G. F. Elliott, of Adlington, to Buntingford; Mr. A. G. E. Gibson, to Blyth; Rev. Jonathan Evans, of Buckley, to Milton, Rochdale.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Joseph, of Westbourne, Bournemouth; Rev. Henry Rees, of Anglesey.

Baptist.

Rev. John Ney has been recognised at Earl Shilton.

Rev. S. Knowles has been welcomed at Winchcombe.

Rev. John Bozier has been recognised at St. Clement's, Norwich.

Rev. S. Pilling has entered on the pastorate at Barry-road, East Dulwich.

Rev. E. C. and Mrs. Smyth left on Friday to resume their work in Chou Ping, province of Shantung.

Rev. G. W. White has completed twenty-seven years' work at Enfield-town as pastor of the Tabernacle.

The annual meeting of the young men's class at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, conducted by Mr. J. T. Dunn, was held on Tuesday evening.

The 104th anniversary of the church at Earls Barton, Northants, and the sixth anniversary of the settlement of Rev. Horace A. Hunt have been celebrated.

A crowded gathering assembled at Hunslet Tabernacle, Leeds, last week, to take farewell of Rev. A. E. Greening (son of the pastor), who is entering upon mission work in China.

A meeting of former teachers and scholars of Regent's-park Chapel Sunday-schools has been held. Rev. E. C. Gange presided, and addresses were delivered by Revs. Dr. Landels, David Davies, and F. B. Meyer, and by Colonel Griffin, who was for many years the senior superintendent.

Calls.—Rev. A. B. Tettmar, to Ebenezer, Cottenham; Rev. G. M. Rice, of Todmorden, to Gildersome, Leeds; Rev. E. C. Monk, of Okehampton, to Tenterden; Rev. Joseph James, to Dolwer, Denbigh; Mr. Stuart Douglas, to Horsforth.

Resignation.—Rev. C. James Jackman, of Lerwick, Shetland.

Methodist.

Rev. W. H. Long is about to sail for Galle, Ceylon, where he has accepted a charge.

A new mission has been inaugurated at Bolton on the lines of the Manchester Mission.

The Soldiers' Home at Aldershot is being increasingly used both by soldiers and civilians.

A fortnight's successful special services have been conducted at Wakefield by Miss Ashmore.

Of the £50,000 which it is hoped to raise in connection with the Primitive Jubilee Fund, the sum of £36,000 has already been received.

The opening of the new railway to Bulawayo will, it is said, bring the Zambesi Mission within three months' journey from England.

Returns from the Wesleyan Methodist Connexion in Australasia give a total membership of 94,407, as compared with 9313 sixty years ago. In the same period the membership in the South African colonies has grown from 864 to 47,872, including 42,287 natives.

The United Methodist (London) Extension Fund reports substantial progress all along the line. At Shernhall-street, Walthamstow, where an iron chapel and schoolroom have been erected, there is already a membership of fifty, a Sunday-school of 100, and overflowing Sunday-evening congregations. A new chapel at Haggerston has cost £1850, and the debt is only £600; whilst it is claimed for the "Lighthouse," Walthamstow, that it has the largest membership and congregation of Free Methodism in London.

Among Wesleyan leaders in London there is a growing feeling that the time is at hand when a Connexional movement on a much larger scale than anything previously attempted might, with every prospect of success, be launched. Nearly a quarter of a century has elapsed since the Thanksgiving Fund movement resulted in the raising of nearly £300,000, and a new generation of Methodists has arisen. One of the foremost in this suggested movement is Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., who is expected to bring the proposal before the next Conference, and who holds the belief that if every English Methodist gave or collected a sovereign, a fund of not less than one million sterling might without difficulty be raised.

Presbyterian.

A hall for a proposed new church, an outgrowth of Rev. D. Watters's congregation, has been opened at Cardiff.

A conference is to be held in January by the Presbytery of London (North) on the territorial evangelisation of London.

Rev. James Beattie, of New College, Edinburgh, has been accepted as missionary for China, his destination being Amoy.

The twenty-second anniversary of the Jewish Mission in Whitechapel, now in charge of Mr. M. Polan, was celebrated last week.

A new church has been opened in Caversham-road, Reading, under peculiar circumstances. The entire cost of the building has been defrayed by a merchant in Reading, who, in addition to meeting the cost of the erection, has promised to provide for the first year the whole of the stipend needed to secure an efficient minister, and also to contribute lesser sums for the second and third years.

Society of Friends.

Dr. Thomas Hodgkin has written a clear and concise account of the history and doctrines of Friends in "Our Churches, and why we belong to them," which will be helpful to all inquirers.

Harriet Green and Sarah J. Naish were at the Indianapolis conference, and are actively at work in visiting American yearly meetings. They are meeting much to encourage them. They should be remembered in prayer.

The venerable Wm. Allen, of Dorking, in his eighty-ninth year, has just been called home to his eternal rest. A member of one of the most ancient and honourable families of Friends, and himself deeply interested in the progress of truth, his death leaves a gap that cannot easily be filled.

The quinquennial conference of the American yearly meetings, just held at Indianapolis, has been very successful and profitable. The unification of discipline and effort, and the power of some central body for its maintenance, received much thought; and a committee was set apart to labour for its accomplishment.

The sudden death, on the 9th inst., of Dr. James Carey Thomas, of Baltimore, U.S.A., will be felt as a personal loss almost as widely in England as in America. As a clear, able, loving Gospel preacher and teacher he was greatly valued, and his Christian character and splendid services were well known. He was at the Conference in Indianapolis from 20th to 23rd ult., and spoke with deep feeling there.

Salvation Army.

Army work is about to be commenced in Barbadoes.

The fifteenth anniversary of S.A. work in Canada has been celebrated by large meetings in the Massey Music-hall, Toronto.

The leader of the Socialist party in Bornea, Denmark, has been converted in a Salvation Army meeting, and is now an Army soldier.

In one of the lodging-homes of the Social wing lately were sleeping two solicitors, an ex-bank manager, a professor of phrenology, and a professional photographer.

Fallen Asleep.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

GRATIFYING letters continue to reach us from those who have availed themselves of our publisher's offer of the Paragraph Bible (see advertisement on p. 6). The personal recommendation of the paper among personal friends and fellow-workers will go far to secure the increase of circulation which we desire for the coming year.

A Sabbath-school superintendent gives an emphatic testimony to the value of the Paragraph Bible. He writes :—

> The more I use it the more I am pleased with it. It is a convenient size, very well got up, and the print is beautifully clear and restful to the eyes. From the money point of view it is the cheapest book I have ever bought. I have never used a Paragraph Bible before, and find it a delightful change from the other, over which it possesses real and important advantages.

In the present struggle to keep priestly influence out of our national elementary schools we ought not to forget the teachers who, while willing to give religious education under the Compromise of 1871, cannot consent to put their consciences into the keeping of priests. When the circular was before the London School Board, its author said that > the religious opinions of candidates will not in any way influence their appointment or promotion, nor are they to be subjected to any question with reference to their religious belief.

More than three thousand teachers signed a manifesto asking for exemption from religious teaching, and then shortly afterwards Mr. Riley, the Moderate leader, said :—

> Everybody at the Board knows that we cannot treat the three thousand as we treat the six thousand.

The Times thereupon remarked that men who so spoke allowed "the plainest teachings of common worldly morality to be warped and perverted by their religious convictions." Let voters at the London School Board Election to-day support the teachers who wish to maintain the Compromise, and not to be subjected to unjust influence.

It appears from The Echo that during the thirteen years the clerical party has ruled Belgium it has closed nearly a thousand common schools on the pretence that they were superfluous. One of the Belgian papers thinks that a few more years of its reign and the education of the people will be on a level with that of the Turks. And there is some ground for the fear, for at a recent examination of 1570 young Brussels military recruits, 150 of these city youths, or ten per cent., could neither read nor write. If Brussels is so ignorant, what must be the condition of the villages? Roman Catholicism will do the same for our own country, if it has the opportunity.

We ask the attention of our readers to the three mass meetings for men, to be held in Exeter Hall, at 7.30, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings next week, for ventilating the evils of gambling, intemperance, and impurity. On Monday addresses on gambling will be given by Archdeacon Madden and Dr. Joseph Parker; on Tuesday the speakers will be Dr. Clifford and Rev. Silas Hocking, the subject being intemperance; the evils of impurity will find exponents in Dean Lefroy and Col. Seton Churchill on the closing evening of the series.

It is surely high time the whole law regarding organised forms of gambling and betting were thoroughly revised. So far, the recent extraordinary decisions in the various courts have resulted in legal chaos. In the half-yearly record of the National Anti-Gambling League particulars are given of the unparalleled conflict of authority due to Lord Esher's decision in the case of Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Company. The minor courts are giving contradictory decisions, and till the law has been altered or authoritatively defined everything will work towards giving the bookmaker a free hand. It is a misfortune that Parliament is not sitting at this crisis, as there seems to be no way of reopening the question except there. Meanwhile, the real facts should be made widely known, and the eyes of the public opened to the condition of things. The circulation of this pamphlet will greatly help to this end.

The condemnation of Monte Carlo is written clearly in some of the items of its balance-sheet, viz., 100,000 francs for travelling expenses for unfortunate players to reach their homes, and a similar sum paid for the prevention of suicide. Last year thirty-five persons committed suicide owing to losses—that is to say, that number is admitted to have taken place. Our fathers rightly called such places "gambling hells."

The Sunday controversy is doing much good in clearing the air and crystallising opinion. Mr. Mark Judge's statement, read by Rev. Price Hughes at the St. James's Hall Conference, that he desired on Sunday to "put Science and Art on an equality with Religion," has drawn a protest from the Sunday League that in this respect Mr. Judge does not represent its aims, as it strongly sympathised with the protest against the opening of the music halls as a trade arrangement for pecuniary profit. The attempt on the part of the Oxford Music Hall to start such concerts again, has elicited an emphatic statement on the part of many "artistes," that theatre employés, as a class, are strongly opposed to Sunday engagements. The Church Times has published a series of powerful articles from the High Church point of view against a secular or selfish use of Sunday, in which a modified Puritan ideal is being urged. As yet we are only at the beginning of this controversy, but the process of public enlightenment has begun in earnest, and it may, if wisely pursued, result in a powerful revulsion of opinion against the insidious attacks recently made against the sanctity of the Lord's Day.

The terrible fire in the neighbourhood of Aldersgate, E.C., on Friday and Saturday last, is the worst that has happened in London since 1666. Acres of crowded buildings were swept away in a few hours and what was a busy centre of industry and merchandise turned into a heap of charred ruins. Providentially, the fire broke out at an hour when most of the employés were out to dinner; otherwise, there would have been certain loss of life, for, once started, the conflagration spread with extraordinary swiftness. Over a hundred warehouses have been burnt down, and 4000 people are thrown out of employment in full view of the winter. The sympathies of the nation will be extended to those who have suffered, and a Mansion House Fund is to be opened for the benefit of the destitute. It is a matter of great thankfulness that no lives were lost, though some of the firemen had many narrow escapes.

If Dr. Bowman Stephenson can effect his purpose of rescuing every Methodist child who is in the workhouse from that undesirable situation, and placing him in a home, he will have done a good thing. He estimates that out of every twenty pauper children one is a Nonconformist; and that of the Nonconformist pauper children one-half, or even two-thirds, are Methodists. He thinks that 1500 Methodist children would be placed in new and happy surroundings if he could carry out his plan. Part of the cost would be borne by the guardians, and the remainder, £7500 a year, he believes would come gradually as the plan was put into operation. It would be to the honour of our religion if we could say that none having at least any direct connection with the churches of Christ was allowed to remain in a workhouse. But Christians pay poor rates in common with all other citizens, and further tax themselves voluntarily to a large extent on behalf of the poor. It is only specially favoured individuals among them who could undertake this additional burden.

We had thought that the disreputable practices formally associated with church bazaars in the direction of disguised gambling were things of the past, but according to the Nottingham Daily Express an outrageous case to the contrary took place recently at St. Leonard's Church, Newark. A "clerical casino" was organised, in which raffling was indulged in on a large scale, and > the gambling fever, especially among the ladies and young people, reached an intensity which could scarcely be surpassed at the gambling tables at Monte Carlo.

A pig was won by the vicar, and a councillor drew the winning number entitling him to a "safety bicycle." This kind of thing is a disgrace to religion, and in times when so many misguided youths are being destroyed by the betting fever, and the authorities are compounding with bookmakers in their legal decisions, it is of the utmost importance that it should be exposed and denounced.

The Chief Inspector's report regarding the condition of our factories in 1896 is, on the whole, a very cheering document, for it speaks of steady progress in the improvement of the conditions of work all round, and of a commendable and growing willingness on the part of employers to aid the inspectors in their work. That there is still room for reforms, however, is clear from the fact that the law still legalises a fourteen-hours day in laundry-work. While men are clamouring for eight hours, is there no one to come to the rescue of these poor over-ridden women? The sanitary conditions under which they work are also, in many cases, very deleterious both to health and morals. The inspector here makes a suggestion which is at least practicable, and might be very instructive:—

I cannot help remarking (he writes) that were the good example of a few philanthropic women of the wealthier class followed by ladies connected with or partially owning factories, such loathsome sanitary conditions would not be found by inspectors at the end of the nineteenth century. I will not believe that the existence of this state of matters can be known to the ladies who derive their wealth from manufacturing sources. Is it too much to suggest that a personal acquaintance might be made with the conditions under which so many women and children work?

Dr. Haig-Brown's testimony to the improved tone and life of the great school of which he has been head master for so many years is full of encouragement. Charterhouse was formerly not a happy place for a "new boy"; fighting was a "regular thing," and generally originated between older boys and new comers over some trifle. Athletic games have destroyed organised fighting. The public opinion of the school is against it, and also against betting. The school maintains a useful mission in Southwark at a cost of £600 a year. These improvements in the moral tone of our great schools, for we believe it is general, ought to have a good influence on the life of Englishmen wherever they are found.

At the Brewster Sessions held at Torquay recently, the magistrates showed a commendable firmness in refusing to renew a licence on the ground that gambling had been permitted. They held to their decision in spite of three applications made by the brewers who owned the house to get the licence restored. The presiding magistrate, an ex-Indian judge, said that the question was whether the interests of a public-house should prevail against the interests of the people, there being already thirty-nine licensed houses within 400 yards. If our authorities were to take this stand oftener, it would be an unspeakable boon to public order and morality. The loss of the brewers who allowed their property to be thus mismanaged is variously estimated as between £2000 to £5000.

"Mountain-rats!" The St. James's Gazette shows the kind of spirit which animates too many Englishmen in regard to other nations, especially if we happen to be at war with them. Referring to the number of our soldiers and the uses we are making of them, it remarks that:

Sixty thousand men, and those the very flower of our Indian army, are locked up in trapping and knocking on the head the mountain-rats of the Afghan hills.

This hateful spirit of pride and contempt for other races makes Englishmen disliked abroad and brings our country into many a trouble.

"Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin," writes the Apostle to the wavering Hebrews. We are always prone to imagine that when temptation of any kind overcomes us it has been in spite of our best endeavours to resist it. "I couldn't help it," is the plea of every weakling who has fallen a victim to some onset of evil. The Word of God leaves no room for excuses. Sin can always be successfully overcome. But its power is such that it is often only at sore cost. We must be ready to "resist unto blood," as it were, to take our lives in our hands and face all earthly consequences. Only those prepared to do this in the spiritual life will qualify for the victor's crown.

The Sultan has received two sharp reminders that in spite of his recent victories on fields of battle and diplomacy he still rules by the sufferance of the Great Powers. No sooner had the Czar put an end to his intention of strengthening the Turkish navy by threatening in that case to demand payment of the arrears of indemnity, than Austria puts down her foot on another matter, and speedily got him to accede to her demands. The short-lived glory which he won among the Mohammedan population of the world, owing to the triumph of his arms in Greece, is rapidly pining away, and there is little peril that he will assert himself in the old way. The almost instantaneous surrender made to Russia and Austria last week showed how amenable to determined pressure the Sultan is, and throws a suggestive light on the failure of the Powers to coerce him to reforms of justice in Armenia. Had they but been really in earnest, how much mischief might have been avoided!

There has been much joy in some quarters over the large legacy that has come to the Moravian Missions by the will of the late Mr. J. T. Morton, and it is to be feared that the venerable Society will seriously suffer through a prevalent misapprehension on the subject. It is true that £250,000 has been left to the Moravian Church, of which about two-thirds are to be applied to missionary effort; but (1) the money is not likely to be available for some time, and (2) when it is remitted, in ten equal instalments, it will not (as is supposed) benefit the current work of the Missions, but will have to be promptly applied to entirely new enterprises. Meantime, the Mission balance-sheet shows a heavy deficit, and unless friends arise without delay in aid of the ever-growing work, the Society will be simply overwhelmed with debt, and labour under sadly lessened resources. Maybe some friends of missions will see in this perplexing situation a great opportunity to hasten Christ's coming and kingdom by rallying to the aid of existing operations, so that the compulsory extension provided for by the bequest may not overtax the Society.

In the popular mind no doubt there is a distinction sometimes between legal justice and the justice which is suggested by conscience, and commends itself to every heart. But the extremely interesting speech delivered by Lord Esher, when he bade farewell to bench and bar, upheld the highest standard of equity that can rule in the settlement of disputes:—

I never have allowed myself to think that a judicial tribunal ought to allow a person's rights to be overthrown because there may be some mistakes in preliminary investigations by those who were his advisers. I am speaking of civil actions and disputes between parties, and in regard to these the duty of the judge is to find out what is the rule that honour, candour, and fairness in the position of the two parties would apply in respect to the matter in hand. That is the common law of England, and there is no other law. It is not only the common law, but when we come to the equity law it is the same thing. The law of England is not a science, it is a practical application of the rules of right and wrong to a particular case by the Court.

The Indian Witness points out that there is a growing expectancy in missionary circles of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in India. It is believed that the troubles which have fallen upon the people will prove a preparation of the heart. The Calcutta Missionary Conference has called for a day of united prayer in mission circles throughout the whole empire. No doubt, information of this day will in due course be given to us at home, and we are sure that the home churches will thankfully join their brethren in India.

An interesting letter from Rev. Dr. Griffith John, of Hankow, the eminent L.M.S. missionary, shows that a remarkable change for the better has taken place recently in the attitude of the native authorities toward Christian missionaries and their work. They have issued proclamations at Hengchow to the populace, ordering them to desist from all molestation or interference with Christian work. One of these proclamations, a document of great length and eloquence, commands in the name of the Emperor that all foreigners bearing the Gospel should be treated "courteously and kindly as guests from afar," with a view to "consolidate friendly ties between our country and the West." When we remember that it was among the authorities that the chief source of disturbance arose in times gone by, and that the common people merely acted in pursuance of secret orders, it is easy to see what an unparalleled opening is thus afforded for Christian efforts in this vast country in the future.

Seed Sowing and Harvest.

THE parable of the Son of Man sowing the seed of the Kingdom in the hearts of men ought to be enough to convince us that apparent immediate results are not the most reliable: the seed which falls on stony places springs up immediately, because it has no depth of soil; that which falls into good ground strikes its roots deep down unobserved, and in due time bears fruit upward, thirty, sixty, or hundred fold. The Kingdom of God comes not with observation; the Kingdom of God is within; the Kingdom which can only be entered by being born again; the Kingdom which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. It is permanence which proves reality. Nothing can be trusted until it has been tested. "God did test Abraham." "Whose house are we, if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope.' "For we have become partakers with Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." "To present you holy and unblamable and unreprovable before Him, if ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the Gospel . . . which is Christ in you the hope of glory" (Heb. iii., Col. i.).

There are times of sowing and times of reaping, and there are times of revival when the ploughman overtakes the reaper. It is unwise to fix a time for the fulfilment of the promise, "My word shall not return unto Me void," or to insist that in every case the Kingdom of God should immediately appear.

Experience shows, however, that "the Gospel of God concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who was made of the seed of David according to the flesh, but declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead," has been, is now, and ever shall be, "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Some may mock, and others say, "We will hear thee again of this matter"; but there are few occasions when the Gospel is faithfully and intelligibly driven home to heart and conscience, but fruit will be seen in a Dionysius and a Damaris, and others with them, to be followed by a larger number as the days go by, of whom the preacher may hear nothing, save from time to time some touching or striking story, given to lift up his hands when they hang down, or to encourage his heart when it is weary.

M.

The Testimony of Jesus

Concerning Himself.

By Dr. J. CULROSS.

THE SYNAGOGUE OF NAZARETH.

MAN'S heart is full of boundless longings. It is not merely that he cannot rest—that he is like one in a fever turning uneasily from side to side, and ever hoping that the next movement will bring repose; but he has aspirations beautiful as dawn, mightier than death, for which we cannot account except by granting that they are God-kindled. For there is not only a light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, but also a Holy Spirit who commands every avenue to the human heart.

These aspirations belong to all climes, ages, and ranks of society. To describe them fully it would be necessary to survey human history from the beginning, and to go deep down among the most hidden and subtle motives of the human heart. Peace, freedom, brotherhood, truth, righteousness, undying and unaging life. Vaguely for the most part and not knowing what they do, men sigh for such things, even as they stretch out eager hands in the dark to the unknown God. This earth, they hope, shall yet put on her beautiful garments; the serpent's brood shall cease; fraud and violence shall have an end; kings shall reign in righteousness; man with man, the world over, shall live in brotherhood; and so the heart turns to the future as the earth turns sunward.

Mocking lips pronounce it a dream, as foolish as that of the child who chases the rainbow; and our wisdom (they tell us) is to do the best we can for ourselves in the present, and to leave the future to take care of itself. But mocking lips cannot kill the IMMORTAL LONGINGS OF THE HEART.

"NOW" may do for dogs and apes: man has "FOR EVER."

Jesus Christ comes with his mighty promise as the Fulfiller of our highest and largest aspirations. In the Synagogue of Nazareth, He stood up one Sabbath day to read among the villagers in whose midst He had grown up, and there was delivered to Him the book of the prophet Isaiah. Opening the book He read out these words: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach glad tidings to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted; to proclaim deliverance to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord."

Every fiftieth year, on the Day of Atonement, the Hebrew Jubilee year was ushered in by sound of trumpet, and the blessings which it brought were proclaimed to all the inhabitants of the land. In that synagogue Jesus rehearsed the Jubilee blessings one by one, and announced that He had come to bestow them—good news to the poor, healing to the broken hearted, deliverance to the captives, sight to the blind, redemption to the bondsman. Summing up the whole in one word, He came to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, the blessed reign of grace, the Jubilee of God, wherein the bondsmen of sin are liberated, their guilt removed, and their lost heritage restored. "This day," He said, "is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." In these words He announces what his mission is.

Making the ancient word his own, Jesus sets forth the issue that He contemplated. The Four Gospels show how He began. Oh, the tears He wiped away, the wounds He healed, the bonds He unloosed, the prison doors He opened and the prison gloom He dispelled, the souls He restored from the ways of death, the purity He created, the everlasting joy He kindled! Has He expended all his force? Are those wondrous three years the fulfilment of his commission? or are they only the promise of the future? Are they not the mere showing of his hand, and the foreshadowing of what He undertakes yet to accomplish?

Criticism Criticised.

(Concluded.)

By Rev. HENRY STURT.

BUT we will let the critics speak for themselves, and see whether they have followed that unbiassed and unsophisticated judgment of common sense which Canon Driver says must prevail in the end. This is what Kuenen says: "The Bible is in everyone's hand. The critic has no other Bible than the public. He does not profess to have any additional documents...Yet he dares to form a conception of Israel's religious development totally different from that which, as any one may see, is set forth in the Old Testament, and to sketch primitive Christianity on lines which even the acutest reader cannot recognise in the New." Professor Gray, one of the tutors of our future ministers in Mansfield College, Oxford, also says: "That Israel was a chosen people, elected of God for the accomplishment of a particular purpose...is an idea deeply rooted in the Scriptures, and which has in manifold ways dominated Christian thought. Now," he goes on to say, that modern learning "renders the history of Israel a very different story from what was thus interpreted."

is this writer prepared to go, that he does not even regard the plain Biblical narrative of the Decalogue, given on Sinai by Jehovah, as trustworthy, but treats it as the fabrication of some writer who though he worshipped but one God, believed in the existence of others. (See his address to the Congregational Union at Leicester). Does this look like the unbiassed and unsophisticated judgment of common sense, or the perversity of learned folly, weaving theories from airy speculations;—the freaks of an expert, as Prof. Robertson says, "getting away from a plain and simple meaning which stares him in the face, to one that is recondite and fanciful"? For it is not simply a literature which has to be accounted for. Behind that, there is the wonderful history of Israel, with their persistent beliefs for thousands of years through exile and sufferings untold; and all their peculiar institutions which have to be rationally explained. Let the reader ponder well the following the principal of Mansfield College, which, with slight modification, is applicable to the Old Testament as well as the New:—

POWERFUL ARGUMENT OF DR. FAIRBAIRN,

"Here is a literature remarkable not simply for its supernatural history, but for its ethical sanctity, its intellectual sincerity and integrity, and its gracious reasonableness, yet also for its intensity of conviction, as expressed in word and conduct. Nor is this all; it does not express the passing mood of certain exalted dreamers...It is a programme of the vastest, deepest, strongest, most revolutionary, yet most persistent, of all historical movements, and possessed of the belief of its sure fulfilment. Is, then, our explanation to be this—the dissolution of the history into a mythological creation by the retrospective imagination?...It has indeed been so proposed to explain the Gospel and the Pauline system. But we cannot deal with the question as if it concerned a literature alone. It concerns still more the religion whose birth the literature describes, the people who have believed it, the place it has filled, and the work it has done in the collective life of man. For if the literature be thus conceived and resolved, then the religion appears as a web woven by illusions out of airier nothings than were ever spun by poet's fancy...It means that man, in all the centuries in which he has believed and obeyed it, has lived and acted in the highest regions of thought and experience as if he were without any reason. To deal with our sacred history as if it were a pathological psychology is to draw up the most serious indictment against the rationality of man; for it is not a question of how certain things came to be written, but how they came to be believed, and continued to be believed, and to ACCOMPLISH SUCH EXTRAORDINARY RESULTS.

These are not problems for curious literary speculations; they involve the whole order and purpose of history, and through it the whole meaning of man and his universe." (Expositor, March, 1895.)

This admirable argument is applicable to the religion of Israel. We have a marvellous literature, and behind it the persistent belief of a nation in its genuineness and authenticity. They never dreamed of such an origin for it as modern critics have fabricated. It was also embodied in their national institutions, which could only have been established in the way the history describes; such as the Sabbath Day, the tabernacle, the temple, the sacrifices, the great annual feasts, the ritual of the law and, what is most difficult of all to accomplish, the separation of one entire tribe without territorial possession, devoted entirely to priestly work. To ask us to accept the modern theory of the origin of the religion of the Jews is to ask us to believe "that in all the centuries of their history in which they have trusted in their records, they have lived and acted in the highest region of thought and experience as if they were divested of reason, and to draw up the most serious indictment ever framed against the rationality of man." Surely Prof. Robertson may well say, "It is time we had criticism of a saner sort."

The Prodigal's Welcome.

Tune: "Bayfield."

The sinner's sincerity, owning his wrong;
The mercy of God, freely given:
These two are the hinges on which hath been hung
The door of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Thrice blessed be God, who doth not turn away
The prayer of the penitent heart;
Who never in anger of spirit doth say
To him who is contrite, "Depart."

Though far from his Father the prodigal roam,
And wasteth his substance in sin;
If only he turneth him back to his home,
The Father will welcome him in.

He'll welcome him in with a loving embrace,
And call to his servants to bring,
For him who at last hath been won by his grace,
The shoes, and the robe, and the ring.

The calf must be killed, and the table be spread,
And merry be all at the board;
"For this," saith the Father, "my son has been dead
But now unto life is restored."

O ye who have tasted such welcome as this,
Go, tell it to others around;
For many a wanderer longs for the bliss
Which you so rejoice to have found.

Missionary Possibilities.

BY BISHOP J. M. THOBURN.

AN impression prevails widely in both England and America that converts in India are comparatively few, and that missionaries are for the most part still in the position of the disciples in their long night of toil—labouring hard, but catching nothing. Thirty or forty years ago this illustration would have described the situation, but it is by no means applicable to the present day. The mass of the higher classes, both Hindu and Mohammedan, still hold aloof from the missionary, but not at all so universally as in former years.

A marked change, however, has come over large sections of the community known as the "depressed classes," embracing all those low-castes and outcasts who are found below the line of social respectability. These number about fifty millions, and are found in all parts of India. The Hindu social system is so constructed that the presence of a certain proportion of these people is a necessity to every village, and hence they may be looked for wherever the missionary goes. During the past ten years has in some way been awakened among these people; and evidences of this have appeared in so many different places, many of them widely separated, that it is difficult to account for it except by attributing it to the workings of God's Spirit and providence.

My own attention was drawn to this subject about ten years ago, and I have since carefully noted every token of an awakening interest in Christianity among these people in different parts of India. The depressed classes are divided and subdivided into castes of their own precisely as their high caste neighbours, but their interest in Christianity is not confined to any one of these sections. Thousands of the sweepers, that is village scavengers, have become Christians during the past ten years. Other thousands from among the Chumars, Churas, and other communities, have done likewise. In Southern India, corresponding classes, but bearing different names, are awakening to a new interest in religious matters, and especially in the Christian religion.

It is affirmed by many that this interest is chiefly stimulated by the hope of worldly advantages which these poor people begin to see are connected with Christianity. There may be, and probably is, a measure of truth in this, but if so I can see nothing alarming in the fact. The Christian religion certainly holds out a promise both for the life that now is and for that which is to come, and the sooner that all men everywhere perceive this fact the better. It is a fact, however, to which I call attention, that tens of thousands of poor people can be found in India to-day who are willing to if teachers can be found who, in the language of the inquirers themselves, can "show them how to be Christians."

Thoughtful missionaries are exceedingly perplexed to know what course to pursue in the face of a movement of this kind. Many hold aloof waiting to see whereunto it will grow, or perhaps hoping that it will assume a more decidedly spiritual phase Others think their call lies in the direction of other departments of the great missionary work, while a few have deliberately taken up the work which God seems to be placing before them, and are struggling to do the best they can, trusting that more light will be given to them as time goes by.

If I may be allowed to speak for the mission with which I chance to be connected, I would say that we were led some years ago to receive all who came to us professing a wish to become disciples of Jesus Christ. We said nothing about employment, but let the scavenger remain at the work at which we found him. We adopted the rule of baptizing all who gave up their idol worship, avowed their faith in God, and professed to accept Christ as a Saviour. We explained baptism as a sign of the baptism of the Holy Spirit, and taught the converts to look forward to this baptism which Jesus Christ had promised to give to those who would believe and obey Him. In some cases, of course, the converts had professed a change of heart before baptism, but much more commonly it was otherwise. We tried to follow the precedent of the New Testament by baptizing on the spot all who professed to believe.

As to the result of this policy, I wish, first of all, to say in all frankness that in not a few instances we have met with humiliating failure. In some cases a hundred or more have been known to within a week of receiving it. In other cases weak or unworthy native preachers have baptized large numbers without proper scrutiny, and have afterwards failed to make any adequate provision for their instruction. Some of these failures have caused us intense grief and mortification, and yet after eight years of experience in this work I do not hesitate to say that the total result has been, if not satisfactory, yet the best that I have known in India. In other words, if India is ever to be Christianised, we must all make up our minds that sooner or later the people will be around us by the ten thousand, asking us to show them how to begin the Christian life. When that day comes, in spite of all our best efforts, many things will happen which would now shock our in general, and of the observances of Christian worship especially. But is it not better that such things should happen than that thousands and tens of thousands of simple, trustful souls should be turned away merely because we are not able to introduce conventional Christianity among them, as it chances to exist at the close of this nineteenth century?

While I frankly admit our many failures, I wish to say on the other hand that the best work I have seen during thirty-eight years of missionary service has been in connection with these "hasty baptisms." We hold many revival meetings among these converts, and at these meetings the uppermost question always is, "Have you received the Holy Spirit since you were baptized" I have often seen scores and hundreds on their knees praying earnestly for the witness of the Spirit, and I can recall one day in which about a hundred and fifty persons professed to have received the Spirit's gift. If it be said that many hundreds have denied the faith which they so imperfectly professed, it ought to be said on the other hand that very many hundreds more have gone forward from the day of their baptism seeking a personal knowledge of Christ, and finding the Spirit whom they had been taught to seek.

In addition to this I need hardly say that we have learned by our failures and mistakes, and have no idea that in the future these will be repeated on the same scale as in the past. So far as I have been able to ascertain, in not a single instance in which proper instruction was given after baptism have these converts disappointed us. The failures and defections have invariably been in the case of those who were baptized, and then which our Saviour directed should always be given. Christian baptism without subsequent teaching is unscriptural.

The dark shadow of famine is now passing away, and many are inquiring what the outlook of Christianity after the famine is likely to be. My own impression is that a great movement in the direction of Christianity is close at hand. In our own missions I hear of encouraging signs in many directions. At one point two brethren report five hundred applicants for baptism, all now receiving instruction. At another point, a thousand miles away, over a thousand have been baptized during the past year. This was in a district where there was no famine. A missionary, not a Methodist and not an American, writes from another distant point that he believes that, in his district, 400,000 converts could be gathered in during the next ten years.

IF A VIGOROUS EFFORT WERE MADE

For my own part, I wish to say deliberately that if in our own mission we had the means to provide proper teaching for those baptized, a million converts could be won before the close of the first decade of the next century. In other words, I wish to say that such possibilities as God is setting before his people in India at the present day have never before been witnessed in Christian history; but the work cannot be done by merely baptizing those who come to us. Our world can never be converted without patient, faithful, and almost universal labour on the part of Christians. The conversion and nurture of immortal souls in any land, and under any circumstances, means work in the best sense of the word, and

THIS FACT CANNOT BE IGNORED.

For nearly ten years past the income of the Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society, to which the writer belongs, has been slowly contracting, and the outlook for some years ahead is not hopeful. In the face of such a movement as I have indicated above, some of our people have felt constrained to make appeals to other parts of the Christian world, and, after many suggestions and even urgent requests, I have concluded to present the above facts, as viewed by us, before the Christian public of England. I hesitate to appeal for aid, but if those who chance to read these lines feel moved to send us any assistance it will be strictly applied to the one object of supporting those who preach to and teach converts of the above character. Six pounds a year will support a simple worker, called among us a pastor-teacher. who does the double work of teaching children and having pastoral oversight of the parents. Fifteen pounds a year will support a teacher of a somewhat higher grade, who works beyond the bounds of his own village. Fifty pounds a year will support a preacher with three assistants, having charge of from one hundred to one thousand Christians. If God moves any reader to desire a share in this blessed work, a remittance can be sent to the undersigned, and in due time a brief account of the application of the money will be sent to the giver.

Prince Consort's "Grace."

A CITY missionary in Brooklyn, N.Y., recently told to a friend of mine the following incident. He was going one day through his district work, work that brought him into contact with so much misery and sin, that, but for his faith in the remedial power of the Gospel he was bringing to the people, with its practical help both for body and soul, he would often have yielded to utter disheartenment. On this day especially his hopefulness of feeling was considerably below zero, as he threaded his way through a human rabbit warren, one of those many-storied, densely-crowded tenements, every room of which contained some specimen of "life's ironies," aye, and tragedies too!

Passing the open door of a small room on the upper flat of the building, his attention was arrested by the scene within. The room was bare of furniture, but—for the locality—singularly clean and orderly. The tiny handful of fire was burning in a well-brushed grate over a spotlessly white hearth; the little window-panes were so carefully polished that no single sunbeam was denied admittance; and a row of plants on the window-sill gave a touch of unwonted colour and freshness to the place. A small table in the centre of the room was arranged as if for a mid-day meal. The only food was a loaf of bread, but around the table were seated, in quiet decorum, a mother, and three children of ages varying apparently from seven to twelve years.

The visitor paused a moment, himself unseen, feasting his eye on so unusual a picture of refinement amidst surroundings so sordid. As he did so the members of that little group, at a signal from the mother, bowed their heads, and, with reverent voices, repeated in unison the late Prince Consort's translation of a German hymn.

God bless our going out, nor less
Our coming in, and make them sure.
God bless our daily bread, and bless
Whate'er we do, whate'er endure;
In death unto his peace awake us,
And heirs of his salvation make us.—Amen.

That evening, at a committee supper in the conference room of the City Mission, he was called upon to "ask a blessing," and with the scene he had witnessed at noon that day fresh in his thoughts, he repeated the same grace. He afterwards told the incident to the assembled guests, who, accustomed as they were to his "annals of the poor," listened to this one with quite unusual interest.

As he finished, a gentleman, who was on a visit to the city, and had been brought in that evening—apparently by the merest chance—by a business acquaintance, started to his feet in evident agitation. Coming up to the missionary he made many inquiries about the family, their number, appearance, etc., and asked if the room they lived in was far away. The missionary told him that it was only a few minutes' walk to the place, and proposed, if he were benevolently interested in the case, to take him there after supper.

"It is not mere benevolence, but a far stronger feeling," said the stranger, "and I am sure these gentlemen will allow me to explain. Many years ago, in a country home in Scotland, my sister and I—orphan children—were carefully brought up by our good old grandmother, who trained us in the fear of God, and taught us to make use every day of the grace you have just repeated. My sister married when very young, and went to a distant home; our grandmother died soon afterwards, and I came to America, and entirely lost sight of my only remaining relative. But that 'grace' is daily repeated in my house in the far West, rendered doubly sacred by its association with my childhood, and with the noble Prince whom we honour and love so much. I have a strong conviction that if my sister is living the same grace will be used by her and her family. God knows how to meet her again. May not this be a clue in his marvellous providence to guide me to her?"

And so it proved. An hour later there was a wonderful transformation scene in the little attic in "Horrock's Rents." When the missionary's knock summoned the poor widow to the door, there was an instant recognition of her long-lost brother; and when the first burst of joyous excitement was over, prompt use was made of his well-filled purse to bring into the room light and fire, and food, so that the children, awakened from sleep and looking round them with bewildered vision, could only suppose that they were dreaming a beautiful dream.

It was a pitiful story to which the brother listened, of early widowhood in a strange country, and then slow descent from a comfortable home to poverty and unavailing struggle, and at last destitution. "We had come to our last loaf to-day," the widow said, her voice well-nigh stifled by tears. "I did not know where I could possibly get money to buy another, and my faith in God was so sorely shaken that it seemed almost a mockery to say our grace, but when I remembered those words "whate'er endure," I felt that we did need God's blessing there, and so we asked it of Him to-day with all our hearts. But how little I thought He was going to answer like this!"

The good missionary closed the door on that bit of heaven's own sunshine and came away, thinking as he did so that to be the ministering spirit in such a deliverance counterbalanced many days of dark, weary, and apparently unproductive labour. He had not many opportunities of carrying out his purpose of becoming better acquainted with the widow and her family, for when her brother left New York he carried them all away with him in triumph, and their scant goods and chattels were handed over to their good friend to help some of his very poorest cases. But in another bright Christian home in one of the Western States, the Prince's "grace" is daily said, and as the cup that was filled with bitterness now runs over with plenty, there ascend daily ascriptions of praise to Him who has once more proved himself to be "the Judge of the widow, and the Father of the fatherless." FROM FAR AND NEAR.

The Famine in India.

About eleven months ago Miss A. Müller, of the Kurkhu Mission, working in the jungle villages of a considerable area in Berar and the C.P., wrote a letter which was published in The Christian. Since then about £4500 has passed through our hands in famine relief. Over 200 orphans have been rescued; but small-pox, cholera, dysentery, famine months, etc., have reduced our numbers now to something over 150. Besides a large amount of relief work, we have taken over fifty starving lepers, who are under Christian instruction, from our missionaries. We have also been enabled to give seed grain to a number of the people around our stations, whose fields would otherwise have lain fallow, and in many cases have bought bullocks for them to plough the land.

In all this work thousands have heard the Word of God, and we trust many who have died have trusted in the Lord. Two of our little band have fallen martyrs—Mr. H. Shepherd, a blessed, sunny, devoted soul winner, and Mrs. Fletcher, the real mother of the orphans, the latter of cholera, after only twenty-four hours' illness, almost the greatest loss the Mission could have sustained.

The Health Question in Africa.

Dr. C. F. Harford Battersby has returned from Africa, where he was mercifully kept from any trace of fever during journeyings extending over five months. The doctor writes to us:

"Unfortunately the health question in Africa is ever to the front, and I have paid very special attention to this subject during my journeyings. I am convinced that not nearly enough attention is paid to this subject by our missionary societies. I do not think we ought in any way to relax our requirements as to the spiritual fitness of candidates for service abroad, but it is little use to spend much time on a missionary's training in other ways unless we give him the best chances we can of maintaining his life in the mission field."

Dr. Harford Battersby has prepared a comprehensive statement on this important subject, to be read on Thursday evening, November 25, at the annual meeting of the Livingstone College, Memorial Hall, E.C. (5 o'clock). The East London Medical Mission, which is carried on in connection with Livingstone's College, in one of the poorest districts of East London, is, he says, needing financial help. The address of the College is 33, Hamfrith-road, Stratford, E.

Evangelisation in Tinnevelly.

The Christian Patriot thus describes encouraging evangelistic tours in the Tinnevelly district by Indian Christians:—

"Interesting reports were forwarded by each leader of the band; according to these reports the three bands have been preaching in 267 villages and towns, giving more than 911 open-air addresses to an aggregate assembly of about 47,225 souls. Besides, one leader says, 'I am glad to say that we had the opportunity of visiting villages where no evangelists had been for a long time. In a certain place the women remarked that that was the first time of their ever seeing Christians, and requested us to tell them more of Jesus.' At Puliarai, says another leader, a man called 'Truthfulness,' who came and listened with rapt attention to the words spoken in all the places where we held meetings there, promised at the end that he and his family would go to worship the God of the Christians in their Church; while the third speaks of a youth at Manalvilei belonging to a family notorious as devil-worshippers in the village who confessed that their faith was worthless and their form of worship debasing."

The Protestants of France are looking forward with interest to next year, which completes the third centenary since the Edict of Nantes. A fortnightly review, La Foi et la Vie, will shortly appear in Paris. The circulation of the sacred Scriptures, under the auspices of the Société Evangélique de Genève, is being carried on with much encouragement. At one place a priest boldly tore up a New Testament, and forbade his parishioners to buy the book. His denunciations were in vain, for the colporteur's stock was soon exhausted, such was the determination of the people to read for themselves.

Good-bye to Mr. Hudson Taylor.

A large and sympathetic company of friends gathered in the Conference Hall, Mildmay, on Saturday afternoon, to say farewell to Rev. J. Hudson Taylor and his co-workers, and to commend them to God in prayer. Mr. Theodore Howard, the home director of the Mission, presided.

After the introductory proceedings, Mrs. Hudson Taylor spoke a bright and cheerful word of farewell, referring to the many times in the past when she had gone forth, and requesting the prayerful sympathy of friends.

Miss Hanbury told of the work of the schools at Chefoo for the education of the children of missionaries and other Europeans. Her own work will now be to take charge of the girls' school. She described the aim of the schools to be the giving of a thorough education under Christian influence, and told of quite a number of the former pupils who are now taking their part in the work of the Mission.

Miss Soltau said that years ago she wanted to go to China. Then the desire passed away, but now she felt that the Lord was calling her forth.

Mr. Hudson Taylor led in prayer, and then told of a recent deliverance of some of the missionaries when a portion of the cargo on board the steamer in which they were travelling took fire. He also mentioned God's goodness to himself only this week in preventing a very serious accident from happening to a train in which he was travelling. Referring to the legacy lately left by Mr. J. T. Morton to the Mission, Mr. Taylor said that on first hearing of it he trembled, but after waiting on God he saw in it an indication that God's time had come for a fresh movement for the evangelisation of the still unreached districts in China. He indicated that the first need was a deepened life amongst the missionaries and the native Christians. We are not to try to evangelise the world; we are to do it, and if only the Church would rise in all her membership to heed her Lord's call, then there would be no lack either of workers or of means.

"The Wail of the Village Pastor."

Dear Sir,—I cordially agree with the remarks in last week's Christian under the above heading, and join in the hope that some able evangelists may go down "from Jerusalem to Gaza."

An exceptional need in the villages has arisen through the rapid spread of sacerdotalism, and when it is considered that in numerous instances where such teaching prevails, there is no other resident minister, the need for some such effort becomes increasingly apparent.

It may interest your readers to know how work, either of a temporary or permanent character, has been commenced in some districts. A gentleman wrote that through the death of a brother he had come into property in two villages. He had been to the neighbourhood, and was impressed with the need for some Gospel effort. In this case he was glad to provide for a missionary, temporarily. Another gentleman desired to make similar provision for the village in which he was born. This has been carried out, and several villages near have also partaken of the benefit. A lady wrote that she wished to do something for a village where her father had formerly been rector, but where the teaching was now very different. And quite recently a lady who had been staying in the West of England, and who had learned the great spiritual need there, forwarded a sum of money through The Christian for a missionary of the society that I represent to be sent to the neighbourhood. Instances might also be given of friends who have endowed different districts, so that at the present time the society holds about £16,000 invested for these particular purposes.

The society, as its title implies, was formed originally as a supplementary agency to meet the rapid growth of population in our towns; but in recent years its attention has been more particularly directed to the need of our rural population, and about one-half of its staff of fifty missionaries systematically visit groups of villages with the Word of God. In addition, some of the missionaries stationed in towns visit villages in their vicinity during the summer months.

The society is now making a special effort to raise £1,000 in the current year in order to pay off a debt, and to enable them to sustain the grants made in aid of many districts.

At the opening meeting of the recent convention in Croydon for the deepening of the spiritual life, Rev. John Brash invited the hearers to self-examination and heart searching as a preliminary to the reception of blessing. All doubtful things must be relinquished, and disagreements with fellow-Christians must be straightened out. Mr. Brash delivered a second address the following morning on "Union with Christ."

In an address on "The Overcoming Life," Rev. E. Hopkins said that such a life presupposed continual difficulties. For all these hindrances, however, Christ has made provision, and the life of conflict may be a life of victory. Christ in us is stronger than all that can be against us; in order to obtain victory we must continually be in conscious contact and fellowship with the overcoming Lord. At a subsequent meeting Mr. Hopkins expounded God's command to Abraham to survey and possess his possessions. The Christian must not only know what he has in Christ; he must appropriate and enjoy the riches that are his.

Dr. White spoke of being first reconciled to God, and then being used as vessels at his disposal. This excludes self-pleasing and self-aggrandisement. Dr. White's second address pointed out some of God's varying methods of dealing with different disciples according to their individual needs and characteristics.

Among the other utterances at the Convention were an address by Rev. J. Harford Battersby, on the internal warfare between flesh and spirit that goes on in all believers, even the most saintly; and one by Pastor Fuller Gooch on the transfigured life, which has not only its times of great exaltation and privilege, but of suffering and endurance. If we are closely following our Lord, He will be with us to guide and sustain in the valley as well as on the mount.

A Churchman's Notes.

It would be hard to gauge how much the Church of England, and Evangelicals in particular, owe to the beloved Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. The presentation of portraits made last week at Cambridge was a warm and real testimony to the love borne to Dr. Moule by Ridley men, and if the larger constituency who read his books could have been included with the college it would have a great privilege and pleasure. More and more is the work of Dr. Moule and Mr. Chavasse telling on the ministry. Evangelical Churchmen never did a wiser thing than when they formed Ridley and Wycliffe Halls.

One of the more prominent of young Oxford men has just been accepted by the C.M.S., Mr. W. T. H. Gairdner, of Trinity College. His influence during his University course has been very great, and his success in the Final Schools was distinct and gratifying. His life is full of the highest promise. Long may it be spared.

What one church can do for missions is seen by the report of Mr. Hopkins's Church at St. Luke's, Kensington, which in four years has increased its contributions to the C.M.S. from £32 to £649; and other churches in less favoured neighbourhoods are "doing likewise." "T. Y. E." is interpreted to mean "Treble your energies."

Two admirable and impressive addresses were heard last week at the meeting of the Junior Clergy Union of the C.M.S. Rev. A. N. C. Storrs gave a graphic account of his work in Tinnevelly, and drew a most interesting and able parallel between the state of the Church of Corinth and that in Tinnevelly. The coincidences were quite striking, and Mr. Storrs elicited much sympathy in the difficult problems of his work. Bishop Taylor Smith made an earnest appeal for more workers for West Africa, and spoke of the surprise of the native converts that more Christians do not volunteer and come out.

The brave stand made by Bishop Ryle on the subject of Auricular Confession is bearing its fruit in the vituperation of the organ of the extreme party. But such action will assuredly recoil on the heads of those who take it, and in the meantime all lovers of Bible and Church truth rejoice in the venerable bishop's firmness and in the impregnable position he has assumed. O si sic omnes!

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, November 28.

"O man, greatly beloved, fear not; peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong."—Dan. x. 19.

WHY should we fear? We are loved, greatly beloved, loved to God's uttermost, loved to the gift of his only-begotten, loved to tears, of blood-shedding and death. Has God done so much, and will He not do all? Has He brought us out of Egypt to let us perish in the wilderness? Is He so careful of soul, and so careless of all beside? There are mysteries—mysteries of life and death, of sin and sorrow, of this world and the next—but fear not, God is ours, and we are his by immutable and indissoluble ties.

Let us possess ourselves in peace. We cannot understand, but we can trust. We may not know the way we are going, but we can lean back on the heart of our Guide; standing in the cleft of the rock we can look out in peace on dreaded evils as they pass away together, dismayed and amazed. If only we are acquainted with God, we shall be at peace, and thereby good will come to us. It is they who look at circumstances, and not into the face of God, that fear.

And we shall be strong; strong to endure, strong to achieve, strong to wait, strong to carry the battle to the gate, strong to set our face like a flint, when the hour strikes for us to go to the cross, strong to be glad when the crowds ebb away from us to follow the dear Master, Christ:—

Be strong to hope, O heart! Though day is bright,
The stars can only shine in the dark night.
Be strong, O heart of mine, and look towards the light.

MONDAY, November 29.

"The people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits."—Dan. xi. 32.

Daniel probably refers to the great persecution under Antiochus, when the followers of Judas Maccabæus, knowing their God, and keeping loyal to Him amidst the general defection, refused to bow before the idols of Syria. These were strong in God's strength, and did exploits never surpassed in the annals of those who have suffered for the truth.

There are many ways of knowing God—through the Bible, in solitary mediation, and pre-eminently in the person of Jesus—but we also come to know Him by the daily experience and intercourse of life. Those who live with you in the same house are read and known by you in an intimacy of knowledge which no other method can rival. Learn to live with God! Summer and winter with Him! Let Him be your companion and fellow!

Then you will be strong to do exploits. When a man is sure of his base of operations, sure that those in the rear of his march will back him up, sure that a strong and wise friend behind him is pledged to his support—his heart is at peace, he can concentrate all his attention and energy on the work that is on hand. He has no care, the Greek word for which means division. Thus, when we really know God, and understand how utterly faithful He is to those who venture forth on the basis of his promises and commands, we are able to do what others dare not attempt. We draw on God: we find Him to be our strength and our salvation: we can do all things through Him that strengtheneth us.

TUESDAY, November 30.

"Go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot, at the end of the days."—Dan. xii. 13.

Man becomes mystified with the great circle of God's Providence. He tries to follow it, but his eyesight fails, his heart and head grow weary. And God says, It is enough: go thy way till the end be: learn thy lesson, do thy work, tread the predetermined path: it is enough that thou, as a true being, shouldst fulfil thy day; evening will be here presently, and then thou shalt rest; leave the evolution of my vast schemes to me, I will bring all right, and "thou shalt stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

Thy way. For everyone that way is prepared; identical in the main outlines, but special for the footsteps that are destined to tread it. There are three elements, which are almost certainly present—Suffering, the strain of Toil, and Temptation. So long as the blight of the curse lingers on our earth these will be the ingredients in our cup. But let us go on our way. It is graduated to our steps. God's grace will be sufficient for us.

Our lot. What will it be? As Canaan was allotted, so will heaven be. Where shall we stand? Among the overcomers, or the martyrs, or the virgin souls that follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, or those that get the victory over the Beast? Or shall our lot be amongst those who have buried their talents, forgotten their oil, and proved disobedient and self-indulgent? "Make us to be numbered with thy saints in glory everlasting."

WEDNESDAY, December 1.

"He went and took Gomer, the daughter of Diblaim."—Hosea i. 3.

Under the glorious reign of Jeroboam Israel had become very prosperous, but this period of wealth was one of shameless idolatry, self-indulgence, and oppression of the poor. The people were unfaithful to their marriage covenant with Jehovah; yet He loved them still. With the love that a husband may bear to the woman who is mother of his children, but who has shown herself worthless or abandoned, so God still loved, and wooed, and sought to reclaim. All this was set forth in Hosea's sad personal history.

He married one who was probably well known at the court for her infidelities. Her children's names were all significant. The first was called Jezreel to indicate the prophetic import, the daughter "Unpitied," the third child "Not My People"; and they were, perhaps, used in after years, to go between the prophet and his wife and plead with her. "Plead with your mother, plead."

This is the sad result of sin. We may have been privileged to enjoy intimate fellowship with God, but if we yield to temptation, which is most to be dreaded when our circumstances are comparatively easy, we may become exiled from the home and bosom of God into the outer darkness. He may cease to own us as his, to save us from our adversities and perils. He may hand us over to those that will spoil us. He may threaten to withdraw his mercy. But if we repent and turn to Him, the blessed promises of v.v. 10 and 11 shall yet be realised.

THURSDAY, December 2.

"The valley of Achor for a door of hope."—Hosea ii. 15.

We know the story of the valley of Achor, where Achan the troubler of Israel was stoned to death. We can see the long stony valley through which again the house of Israel was made to pass. The prophet forsaw the heavy judgments, which were about to fall upon the land, as God took back his corn and wine and flax, and laid waste their vines and fig-trees. It seemed as though the nation were again in the valley of trouble; and as the people take their weary way, dropping with fatigue and privation, behold a door suddenly opens in the stony wall of flint, through which they pass into a land of corn, and wine, and wifely loyalty to their true husband. Thus the traveller piercing the Alps will, within the space of an hour, leave the northern slopes of ice and snow, and emerge upon the fertile plains of Italy.

It is a beautiful similitude, and one that still has its counterpart in spiritual experience. You, too, are in the valley of Achor, brought there in consequence of your sins; your life is overcast, your heart desolate. Ah, how different it is with you now compared with those first glad days when you went out after God, in the kindness of your youth, and the love of your espousals. God cannot leave you. He comes and pleads, "Return unto Me, thou art mine." Will you answer his tender pleading with repentance, faith, and prayer? Will you cry, "Oh that it were with me as in the first days!" Then, immediately, right before you, the door of hope will spring open, and you will pass from winter to summer, from ice to vernal heat. Dare to believe that in your Valley of Achor there is but a door between you and the Divine betrothal—only a step to Jesus. Why not take it now?

FRIDAY, December 3.

"Afterwards shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king."—Hosea iii. 5.

The faithless wife had left husband and children and sunk into abject poverty and shameful disgrace, but Hosea is bidden to seek her again and bring her to his home. It was a wonderful act of condescending love on his part, to be willing to condone the past and take the poor stricken thing to his well-ordered dwelling. Nothing could have done it but the strong love which had followed her through all her wanderings, refusing to let her go. We cannot certainly affirm that Hosea's love succeeded in making his Guinevere fair and lovely again, but we may cherish the hope that in this his compassionate love was recompensed.

Through the tragedy of the prophet's domestic life, the people were called to see the mystery of the Divine faithful love. "The Lord loveth the children of Israel, though they turn unto other gods and love cakes of raisins" (1). The people in their wandering and rebellion had been unfaithful to the marriage vow plighted at Sinai. They had gone after many lovers, but God's redeeming love would not let them go. That love still follows them, and though they have been for so many centuries without king, prince, sacrifice, or temple, they shall doubtless return to God. And is not this marvellous Zionist movement one further step towards the ultimate recognition and reunion.

You, too, have been without king or priest, without tears of penitence, or smiles of conscious acceptance. But the love of God has never ceased to follow you. A woman might sooner forget her child, than God you. And now, in your abject need, He seeks you out and says, "Be for me only." Will you not come with fear back to the goodness of God in these your latter days? Then He will give you the years the locust has eaten.

SATURDAY, December 4.

"The Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land...therefore shall the land mourn."—Hosea iv. 1, 3.

Throughout the Old Testament the sin of the people and the prosperity or otherwise of their country are closely conjoined. If the people please God harvests are plentiful, and the seasons of the year pursue their round in unbroken bounty. If the people backslide the land is smitten. There is probably a much deeper connection than we suppose between the moral condition of our nation and its prosperity. It is at least remarkable that ever since the Indian Government has legalised impurity in India, and has made money out of the vices of Chinamen, that empire has been smitten with drought and pestilence. So with Africa, the injustice with which the natives have been treated has been terribly avenged in the rinderpest which has swept over the land. And may there not be a close connection between the vice, Sabbath-breaking, and drunkenness of the mother-country and the agricultural distress which has so long driven our people from the open country to life in the cities? It is an awful thing when God has a controversy with the inhabitants of the land. Sin is then terribly avenged.

One noticeable feature with all the prophets is their intense devotion to God on the one hand, and their ardent patriotism on the other. They never scrupled to denounce the sins which were bringing their land to desolation, and to indicate the inevitable result. In the present instance Hosea turned on the priests and shows how accountable they were for the state of the people and the desolation of the country. Let us take these lessons to heart, and in our daily prayer plead for the removal of those national crimes which cost us so dear.

French and English.

During his recent visit to Scotland, Pastor Theo. Monod addressed meetings in Glasgow and Edinburgh, on the work of the McAll Mission in France. Incidentally he referred to the present attitude shown by many Frenchmen towards any work of evangelisation carried on in their country by British people. On this point he said:—

Come over to France with me for a moment and look upon those teeming millions of people. They are having an influence for good or for evil; they must be led into the right way or into the wrong one, into the broad path or into the narrow path. They must exert upon their neighbours, upon French society, and therefore upon the world at large, an influence for or against righteousness and truth. Then ask yourselves, How can we reach them? You say the great bulk of them, almost all of them, belong to the Roman Catholic Church. Very well. Of thirty-eight millions or so, we Protestants do not count one million; it seems very likely we are not 700,000, possibly between 650,000 and 700,000. Then, among those Protestants, how many there are who are Protestants only in name! I do not say that in the Roman Church there are not some true souls and pious souls, but I do say that Romanism as a system is the bane of the country, and it does not hold forth the Lord Jesus Christ as the one Saviour of sinners.

You say to yourself, "How shall we reach this people?" We must begin with the towns, surely! The Apostles showed us how it was done in the beginning, and so it has been done since. Great centres of influence have to be reached as well as small ones, and perhaps we should begin with the great cities, as the Apostles began with Athens, Corinth, Antioch, and Rome. Well, take Paris—how are you going to reach it? You say, "Have you not got your Protestant churches?" Yes, we have a few there doing their work, but what if the people will not step inside a church? What if they do not come in; and when they do come in, what if our forms of worship, perhaps even our forms of speech, hardly suit them? They find it, perhaps, rather stately, or rather cold, or stiff, or hard to understand, and what not!

You say, "Could not one reach those people in some other way?" Not by public meetings in the open air—that is not allowed. What then? When you find it out it is simple enough. Just open shops on the wayside, on the street, and invite the people to come into those shops, large halls, large factories—if you can get them. Let there be some simple talk about the Gospel; let there be some lively singing; let the people feel that they are welcome; that they are free to come in and free to go out; that they may come in just as they are, in everyday clothes. "Ah, yes," you say, "that would be a very fine thing; but who is going to do it?" Mr. McAll has done that, and we go on doing it. That is

THE M'ALL MISSION.

Mr. McAll found a new mode of evangelising, so much so that I remember Mr. Moody using this very word—"We ought to have on the streets of New York McAll Missions." That mode of evangelising is the most sensible that you can think of, and the most practical. We at first thought it a very strange thing. We wondered how it could succeed, but it has succeeded.

And now I must forbear, for I could take up all night in telling you of what has been done. I come to my point. We were encouraged for a long time. People had nothing to say against the origin of the Mission. When Mr. McAll began, the very first handbill he put into the hands of the people had this title—"English friends wish to speak to you about the love of Jesus Christ." That was simple enough, but I do not think we would dare to do that to-day. It would be very unwise. They would go no further than the first words—"English friends." Nothing to do with English friends, nor with the friends of the English! What has come over the temper of the people? Why just this, that there has been for years a concerted movement entirely artificial, but strenuously kept up—there is no doubt about it—by the Jesuits at bottom, proving that we are having some hold at last on our people, that we are not a quantity that can be neglected, that the people are beginning to listen to us.

The Jesuit party do not care so much for the apparent triumph of atheism that for a few years has been blatant, one may say. They know well enough there must come a reaction, and the reaction is all for their benefit, and it is taking place now. But that there should be those who will say to the people, "You need not go back into the bosom of the Romish Church, you may just come to the Lord Jesus Christ, you may have Christ without the priest,"

THAT IS WHAT THEY CANNOT STAND.

They were born, they were created, to withstand the Reformation; we all know that, and we must give them credit for being faithful to their origin and to their purpose. And now they are fighting us everywhere. They have had one campaign in the papers against the Jews; that is going on now. It is a great question. It seems to me that it is somewhat softening down, but it is a most unjust and horrible thing that campaign against the Jews, in France. But I should not very much wonder if, after all, it was not merely a preparation for the other campaign. They gently insinuate that we shall all be put into the same bag and thrown into the same river—Jews, Protestants, all those people are the enemies of France! Those Protestants, they are English! Thus they go on. They say "English" or "German." It was said in our Parliament, "A sword is this Protestantism, the point of which is on the heart of France, while the other end of the sword, the hilt, is in two places, in Berlin and in London."

That is the kind of public opinion they have tried to create, and not without some success. What they have done in Madagascar I will not even allude to. They pretend that they are waging war there against the English. There is no sense in that, if only for this reason, that the English have practically given up Madagascar altogether. But they call every Protestant there a friend of the English and an enemy of France, and I believe their main purpose is to create a similar state of opinion about the Protestants of France. A few days ago one of my daughters-in-law, who is in Algiers, was speaking with an Arab woman. She told her something about the Gospel, and went on to explain what Protestants were, and she said: "You know all Christians are not Roman Catholics—for instance, my husband, Mr. Monod, is a Protestant." And the woman said, "Oh, indeed, is he a Protestant? I thought he was a Frenchman!" That is what they want to get into the minds of the people.

Let me give you a few quotations. Here is a Paris paper with a large circulation. I read you a few lines:—

One knows with what ardour the Protestants of England work at their evangelistic propaganda. Nothing costs too much for that English Protestant propaganda. They operate as charlatans do. They are full of advertisements and announcements, and premiums given to proselytes, full of gifts, full of money. One may say that the Protestant propaganda of England works like a large factory, business house. They have agents, they have commercial travellers and colporteurs, and everywhere through the world they place their merchandise. Protestantism is the great article of exportation of Old England, and this England carries on at the same time the interests of its invading and perfidious policy and the hatred it bears to Roman Catholicism. English Protestant propaganda always covers a conspiracy. Thus the Anglican pastors have given France so much trouble at Madagascar. Thus we find all those madmen armed with Bibles in our colonies, and wherever they go fight against French influence.

It goes on to speak about the McAll Mission, about the mission boat, "Bon Messager." Here is another Parisian paper, which is very well known, and is perhaps the most widely-circulated; it is called La Libre Parole—the great Anti-Jewish paper. It speaks about the "Good Messenger," and says:—

On that boat they give conferences that last an hour and a-half. They sing hymns and distribute hymn-books printed at Paisley, in Scotland. They make great efforts to organise meetings for children, but our gamins, who are more patriotic than our Prime Minister, refuse to go. The question is, Where does the money come from? To that question the preachers first replied evasively, but finally they declared that they work for an English society called "McAll," and at the head of the English McAll Mission is they say, Miss Scott [I wish you would give me her address!] who disposes of immense sums of money...Imagine French Roman Catholic missionaries going to England and trying to convert little Englishmen to Popery! [Well, imagine! it is not difficult to imagine!] The least that could happen would be that they would be immediately arrested and perhaps thrown into the river. Not a doubt about that! Our Roman priests may found colleges in England, but on the formal condition, which is signified to them when they land, that they will never receive an English pupil.

How well informed that gentleman appears to be! Well, there it is, and that kind of stuff goes down with the people, and creates a very dangerous state of things for us. Here is another quotation from a local paper—a very interesting paper—which is called The Cross. They publish it in Paris, but they have a special edition for almost every department of France with some local news, and it has a very large circulation. It costs only a halfpenny. From the place where the McAll boat was lately, a man writes that he has gone to see the boat, and has seen a good many things. He saw this text on the wall, "Here we preach Christ crucified." He saw a sort of little pulpit, he saw an harmonium, he saw a box of books, and he saw photographic apparatus—a kodak, or something a little larger perhaps. He can't get over that. He says:—

What was that photographic apparatus for? That is what I want to know. Do they want to take a likeness of the Most High? What do they want that for? Shall we let those strangers go up and down our rivers and visit our valleys? If we went into the hold of the boat perhaps we might find some things that would be very dangerous to us in case France was invaded by strange soldiers.

Then here is a nice little sentence for you. One man was arrested under suspicion of being a German spy. This is the last sentence of the article.

A spy will put on every kind of skin and take every kind of shape. One of them pretends that he is studying the architecture at one of our cathedrals, while another says he is preaching Protestantism. The one is just as bad as the other, and they work hand in hand.

Let me give you one quotation on the other side. Perhaps the best known of our French journalists is M. Sarcy, who has been writing chroniques in a number of papers for the last forty years. He happened to be near the boat, and a friend who had been rather interested in it told him he should go and see it. He went—it was rather a misty Scotch-like Sunday and he could not go anywhere else—and was rather pleased with what he saw. The pastor, he says, "came to us with open hand. He has not that grave and stiff air that one often remarks among pastors; he is smiling and affable; and he told me that the work was called 'the popular evangel.'" He adds that the pastor put the Gospel before him very plainly. Well that man who makes no confession of religion but rather a confession of having none, was very much interested, and went the length of saying, "You may inscribe me as one of your subscribers; you are doing a good work." Now, this is encouraging, and, after all, the state of opinion they are trying to create is not so bad as it seems, because the people have common-sense. They will finally see where the opposition come from and what its manifest object is, and there may be—perhaps there is beginning to be—some little reaction in our favour. So that I would say to you, friends of the McAll Mission, if you have helped us so far, now is the time to help more.

It is the McAll Mission. We have not started it. We have not said we were strong enough to do that. But God has put it into your hearts to do it. You have begun it and now carry it on. We are willing to give ourselves, we are willing to work, but we ask you most earnestly to look upon the importance of the work at the present time, and if you have helped somewhat hitherto, help us henceforth yet much more.

May I remind you that the work has special claims on Scotland. Who was the best friend of the work in Great Britain if not Dr. Horatius Bonar? You have his writings on the Mission. If you have them not, get them and read them. You have not forgotten that his son-in-law, Rev. Theophilus Dodds, gave his life in the service of that Mission. You have not forgotten that the successor of Mr. McAll, the president-director of the Mission, Mr. Greig, of Edinburgh, is Scotch of the Scotch. If ever there was an energetic Christian and an able man, and a man who is heart and soul in the work, and who, I happen to know, has refused more than one call to some position that might have been more to his comfort, for the sake of the French people, it is that same Mr. Greig. Rejoice his heart and strengthen his hands by helping him largely, and as you help by your gifts help also and still more largely by your prayers.

THE SPIRIT OF BURNING.

By Alexander Maclaren, D.D.*

If we take this symbol of fire as expressive of the operations of the Divine Spirit it may suggest to us some thoughts as to what He does for human nature, and what He is willing to do for us all. Let me try to work out briefly the force of this symbolical representation.

Fire gives life. That seems a paradox, but put your hands or your lips on the cheek of the beloved corpse and you know the shock of icy coldness. Put them on the living flesh that holds the spirit that you love, and you know the electric glow of warmth. Heat is life; death is cold. Though there is a fire that destroys, there is a warmth that vivifies.

I believe that modern Evangelicalism has to a large extent failed in "prophesying according to the proportion of faith," in that it has fixed its gaze too exclusively on forgiveness and acceptance, and the escape from the penal consequences of sin, as being the gifts of Christ to the world and as making up the notion of Christ's salvation, and has not sufficiently given weight and proportionate prominence to the thought that these gifts are but the preliminaries to the true, central, deepest gift which Christ has to bestow, according to his own great words: "I am come that they might have life." It is the gift of life which the wholesome mysticism of Christianity insists upon as the highest that He can give. Do not go away with the notion that it is a metaphor, or a piece of rhetorical embellishment of some simple fact. The centre of Christ's work for man is that He breathes into the dead spirit—dead because it lives in self—the germ of a new nature, and imparts a spiritual life, without which we are dead while we live.

THIS FIRE KINDLES MEN'S LOVE.

It was a strange new thing when Christ came into the world, for men to love God. Judaism had very partially grasped the idea. The selectest of the psalmists had glimpses of it, but for the nation at large there was no emotion in their religion, no warmth of feeling in their prayers, no love to God in their hearts. Christ came, and everything became different. Men poured out the treasures of their hearts like water at his feet, and felt that He, and He only, was the adequate object of all their emotions, and that all were glorified and ennobled when they were fixed on Him.

Religion is worth nothing unless it is warm. There is nothing more irrational than that people should, as a great many of us do, believe in a way the truths of Christianity and feel next door to nothing about them. Its truths are so solemn, so certain, so tremendous that not to be stirred to the very depths of our being by them, and yet to believe them, or say we do, is sheer insanity... A fire and a furnace—does that describe this church? An ice-house would be a better illustration of the facts in a great many cases.

Again, fire cleanses by kindling. John's water baptism washed the outside. There is a better way of making things clean than that. Fire purifies, either by melting down the obstinate ore and bringing the scum up to the top, from whence it may be skimmed, leaving the residue clear; or it cleanses by dissipating the cause of the foulness, and as it passes off the stain melts from the surface of the disfigured clay. The great glory of the Gospel is to cleanse men's hearts by raising their temperature, making them pure because they are made warm, and that separates them from their evils. It is slow work to take mallet and chisel, and try to chip off the rust, speck by speck, from a row of railings, or to punch the specks of iron ore out of the iron-stone. Pitch the whole thing into the furnace, and the work will be done; which, being translated, is—the true way for man to be purged of his weakness, his meannesses, his lusts, his sins, is to submit himself to the cleansing fire of the Divine Spirit.

* From The Victor's Crowns and Other Sermons. By Alexander Maclaren, D.D. (5s. Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company.) These are grand discourses; marked by expository insight, Evangelical warmth and practical grip. The first seven deal with the rewards promised in the opening chapters of Revelation to the overcomers in life; the others are selected from the Doctor's utterances in his weekly pulpit ministry. The sermon from which we give an extract is on the baptism of the Holy Ghost (Matt. iii. 11). May our good brother be spared to preach and publish many such volumes.

Missions and Social Progress.*

In his new work on foreign missions Dr. Dennis contributes a very valuable handbook to the literature of the subject. If in this declining decade of the nineteenth century any new apologia of missions were needed, then Dr. Dennis may be said to have supplied the lack. It seems to us that, from the standpoint he has taken, nothing could be more forceful or convincing than this calm, dispassionate study of the sociological aspect of the work of Christian evangelisation all the world over. It is one which appeals to all man-loving, unprejudiced minds, and from a basis other than that which is ordinarily taken.

Dr. Dennis makes it manifest throughout that, with him, first things are first. His conceptions of revealed truth are clear and Scriptural, and with the primary object of Christian missions he is profoundly in sympathy. But the main object he has before him in these volumes is to prove, by incontestable facts and arguments, that even "for the life that now is," as well as for "that which is to come," the Gospel of Christ is the one and only sufficient and satisfying basis: that there can be no real social progress or evolution apart from it.

> Secular education, apart from Christian truth, does not hold the secret of social regeneration. Material civilization, as exemplified in temporal prosperity, artistic luxury, and commercial prosperity, cannot guarantee the moral transformation of non-Christian society. State legislation in and by itself, apart from Christianised public sentiment, is not an effective instrument of social righteousness...Christianity is the supreme gift of God to human society (p. 352).

In these few concise sentences is summed up a good deal of the main argument of the lectures. To the establishment of this argument earlier in the volume the author brings a convincing mass of evidence, gathered at first hand from reliable sources in many lands, including the latest personal testimonies of about 300 living missionaries in connection with nearly all the recognised Protestant societies and agencies. Dr. Dennis contends that—

> Christianity alone provides an adequate method of deliverance from sin and its penalty. But sin is a social curse as well as an individual offence, and only sin-freed souls can constitute a perfected society. A society of saved individuals is potentially a saved society...Christ Himself thus becomes the sin-bearer. He removes the crushing burden of conscious guilt. If that be not lifted, the true religious life of humanity is paralysed, and society is morally helpless. Every ethnic religion has stumbled just here (p. 409).

It will be seen from these brief extracts how simple and lucid is the reasoning, and at the same time how suggestive and forceful. Amongst other fatal flaws in the system, Dr. Dennis finds in the scandalous lives of many religious leaders in heathendom one great secret of their failure to uplift the people they profess to guide. By his quotations from Buddhist writings he has made the priests stand self-condemned.

The burning social evils of non-Christian lands are powerfully depicted. We may not suppose that the sorrows of women have become, in any sense, a thing of the past, because of the advance of civilisation and education. Dr. Dennis, writing of woman as she is to-day, says:—

> She is still regarded, as of old, in a non-Christian environment, as a scandal and a slave, a drudge and a disgrace, a temptation and a terror, a blemish and a burden,—at once the touchstone and stumbling-block of human systems, the sign and shame of the non-Christian world (p. 194).

Strong as these words are, they actually seem weak as an expression of the facts adduced in evidence of their truth. In all the evils of which woman's degradation is but one, it is indisputably shown that the Gospel is the only true panacea.

Clearly the crying need is that the nations should be set free from their bondage by a knowledge of the truth, and by an enthronement of the Christ of God in human hearts. It is with the entrance of Christianity that real success and deliverance must ever be associated.

Those who have had experience of the patient toil required for the authentication and collation of a mass of information of any kind, and especially of a literary kind, will the more intelligently appreciate the labour which this volume represents; but from all lovers of Christian missions, and such as are exercised by social problems, we bespeak for it a hearty welcome and a prayerful perusal. The book is profusely illustrated throughout, and many of the pictures are of exceptional interest.

Communism of the Sixteenth Century.

It is beyond question that the Communists of the sixteenth century were largely misunderstood by the ruling classes of their time, and were also most unfortunate in their first historians. As ordinarily told, the story of the Enthusiasts of Zwickau and the Anabaptists of Münster is neither cogent in itself nor consistent with outstanding facts of history. Every now and then, however, fresh light has been forthcoming on points that have presented special difficulty; and if there are to-day some who continue to execrate the very name of these and other heretical Communists, there are others whose conclusions are more lenient, and, indeed, some in whose eyes these people stand for personal worth and social good order.

This is the position maintained (we cannot always be assured as to adequate grounds) by Karl Kautsky, whose latest work, Communism in Central Europe in the Time of the Reformation (16s. T. Fisher Unwin), has been translated into vigorous English by J. L. and E. G. Mulliken. After a general description of the author tells the story of the Taborites of Bohemia and the Hussite revolution; and then gives an account of their successors, in some respects very different in character, the Bohemian Brethren. The author shows himself possessed of great discrimination in the use of the materials at disposal. To still greater purpose does he exercise this spirit in the story of the German Reformation and Thomas Münzer, with the memorable incident of the Peasant War; but when, in the second half of the book, he writes on the Anabaptists, he is quite bold in his criticism, alike as to the sources of information, and to generally-received statements passing under the style of "facts." What with the cruelties to which these people were subjected, it would not be surprising if they took up like practices. As to the horrible immoralities that were charged against them a century ago, they have been shown to be largely exaggerated, and in many details false.

If the people were not what they should have been, assuredly their "orthodox" contemporaries set them no superior example. One thing is made abundantly clear by our author, and that is that the Moravian Anabaptists were prudent and intelligent, sincere and industrious, and succeeded in gaining the good word of their most pronounced enemies. Their uttered statement was declared to be as good as the solemn oath of their neighbours.

The Communistic movement occupies an important place in mediæval history, and in its various forms and developments has special importance to all who are interested in the social problems of to-day. Our author regards modern socialism as a new expression of the same spirit. Further inquiry will show whether he is justified in some of his interpretations of history. He has certainly produced a work which will be valued by historical inquirers and students of social progress.

Dr. Watson's Latest Book.*

If Time be a healer, Trouble is a reconciler. How many lives sundered by differences have found common cause in the presence of a great sorrow. Man is born to trouble, and fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind. Many there are, and ourselves among them, with whom in doctrinal matters some of Dr. Watson's works are hopelessly at variance. But in the region entered by this, his latest book, such will find a sympathetic chord vibrating alike through his heart and theirs. It carries them out of the realm of controversy into that of comfort. Of all the ills that flesh is heir to, none distress more keenly the souls of men than the perplexities of Providence. What? How? Why? are ever on our lips—echoes of the dreary doubts which ever and anon come to us all. With some of these Dr. Watson sets himself to deal. The ground may be slippery, the ice thin, but his foothold is sure, for he rests upon the infallible righteousness and love of God, and of his Son, Jesus Christ.

The first chapter introduces us in general terms to the use and purpose of the clay in the Eternal Potter's hands; those which follow treat of such specific experiences as go to make or mar the lives of men — broken homes, loss of goods, vexatious children, obscurity, perplexing providences, the world-sorrow, personal suffering, and others—hard problems which who shall solve, intricate mazes to which who has found the guiding thread?

Before trying to find reasons for the Divine action, it is always well to remind ourselves how little we know about anything and how very unlikely it is that we should know much more till we get the afterlook. We are the victims of the present and the imperfect, seeing only processes, not ends, understanding only a part, not the whole. We should never have imagined this fair earth had it been given to us to see fire and water labouring like blind and chaotic forces at its making, and it is at least as impossible to anticipate what gracious products of human character may result from what seems in our day the confused and senseless agonies of life. We see the carving of the stone with the dust and broken splinters, the wrong side of the web with its tangle of thread, the molten metal poured from crucible to crucible. Each generation lives amid the machinery which is making souls; and the individual must be patient when he fails to understand its whirling wheels and sharp-edged tools.

The sorrow occasioned by the loss of little children is treated from a threefold aspect—if taken, were they not first given? have they not left fadeless memories which their parents would not now consent to have never known? have they not been "taken from the evil to come"?

Is it not good that some of our race should have but one chapter in their short lives here; is it to be desired that all should have page upon page that none but God must see, that nothing but Christ's blood can cleanse?

How many can draw from the resources of their own experience an answering note to this?—

People who are strong and busy and successful and glad, are apt to take shallow and trifling views of life. Life is but a pleasant day, a pastoral, with song and dancing. By-and-by one blind after another is drawn down, till the light grows grey and sombre, and the Christ upon his Cross looks out from the shadow.

Of the uses of obscurity, with all its disappointments and shattered hopes, we read—

After all, the greatest affair in life is the creation of character, and this can be accomplished as well in a cottage as in a palace. Finer webs with more lasting and richer colour are wrought in poor Eastern huts than in the huge sounding manufactories whose black smoke trails across the sky.

The attention of young people may be called to a serious fact thus truthfully stated:—

Very few people indeed begin their religious life with an open mind, going out each one to find the new world for himself, and possessing it in his own right...But it is well to remember that the title to a hereditary creed is very precarious, and that our security may be roughly shaken. A single sentence in a strange book has roused the critical faculty and left the soul without a spiritual roof over its head..Surely it is good to learn that the object of faith is not the Bible, nor creeds, nor ourselves, nor our neighbours, but God Himself, and Jesus his Son. It is not the Bible which proves Jesus, but Jesus that proves the Bible...It is excellent to say, "God of my Fathers"...it is best to say "my God."

Here is another bit for young readers, especially those who are inclined to be wild or thoughtless:—

One would like to suggest to them how much their parents' life depends on their conduct. If young people could only put themselves in their parents' place wonderful things would follow...Some thoughtless, selfish girl might deny herself whims and pleasures to bring satisfaction to her people. Some young man might bear himself with a little more humility, and even condescend to give occasional information about his movements if he had any idea of his father's feelings on certain occasions. It does not occur to them that although they consider themselves independent of the old folks, the old folks are continually, pathetically dependent on them for what is more than living, or rather, what is the heart of all living—for love.

That there are expressions here and there in the book which we do not like, may be freely admitted —unguarded some, purposeful others; but they are few and far between, and none of them vital. Are we wrong in fancying we discern a personal touch in the chapter on "The Veiling of the Soul," wherein the author shows how little one man understands or rightly estimates his neighbour?—

Every one of us is liable to be misunderstood and to suffer injustice. When one remembers how hard it is to understand himself...it is not wonderful that one should be misunderstood by other people...Perhaps it were better for most of us to complain less of being misunderstood, and to take more care that we do not misunderstand other people.

On the other hand, equal care should be taken that we give no occasion for being misunderstood.

Perhaps the most striking chapter in the book is "The Defeats of the Soul," for here man meets with his neighbour on the common ground of human frailty and proneness to sin. The picture is a terrible one, all too faithfully drawn. How refreshing, then, to read—

Frequent disasters to the soul deliver us from shallow views of religion, and convince us that for our security we need more than an example. No power can be of much avail that does not act from within and reinforce us in the crises of temptation. What one longs for is a second alliance—this time with a Saviour...It is at this point many people have turned to Jesus and made trial of Him for the first time.

The same thought is carried further in a succeeding chapter, thus—

A white marble Christ had not touched the human heart, nor loosed the bands of sin. It is the Crucified, in the unutterable pathos of his Passion and Death, who has overcome and gotten unto Himself the victory.

And again in "The World-Sorrow"—

[God] comes through Jesus his Son into the midst of the battle and Himself receives its most cruel wounds, when down the ages He is touched by the feeling of our infirmities, and in the midst of the Throne there is a Lamb as He once was slain.

One other thought from the same chapter:—

This fact of world-suffering is perhaps our darkest problem, and it cannot be faced without touching another and earlier. Something goes before suffering, and that is SIN; and it is amazing we make so much of the one and think so little of the other. It is therefore missing the mark to conclude that this world is misgoverned, unless one be sure that the Government has been obeyed, and as a matter of fact we know very well that the opposite has been the case.

In conclusion, then, after reading carefully this eminently practical and useful book, we wish heartily that we could erase from our minds the impressions caused by some of Dr. Watson's former works. We can only hope that if the purer metal now given to the world is the result of the refining fire of criticism through which his earlier work has passed, the dross may not appear again.

Is My Bible True?

This is a question that arises in the minds of many, and not in every case to be laid to rest by an answer founded on adequate and convincing information. Some are, unfortunately, content to allow the question to remain unanswered, with the result that their minds are haunted by doubts and distressed by sad misgivings. To know whence we got our Bible is a great step towards settling intellectual difficulties; not until then are many able to say:—The book has come to us from men whom God inspired to write its pages and compile it as a whole; therefore it is, like to its great Author, "faithful and true," may be relied upon to the uttermost of its promises, and must be followed to the entire extent of its abiding injunctions.

In view of these serious considerations, many will welcome a plain and forcible statement of historic grounds of our confidence in the Scriptures from the pen of Rev. Charles Leach, D.D., entitled "Is My Bible True? Where Did We Get It?" (2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.) In some measure this volume was anticipated by a series of articles in our pages, which we have reason to know were found very helpful by many readers. In response to the urgently-expressed desire of many, Dr. Leach has enlarged and revised the whole, so that in the course of eighteen chapters the reader is supplied with outlines of the antiquities of the Old and New Testaments as to MSS. and versions, also with a brief narrative of the various editions of our English Bible during the past thousand years and more.

In addition to a portrait of Dr. Leach, the book has illustrations depicting historic scenes, also affording some idea of the original MSS. and of famous versions. The author has long been known as a preacher to the people: this book shows him to be a writer for them also, the style being always clear and expressive. Many will read the book to great profit, and it should not be overlooked among works specially suited for presentation to inquiring young people.

Dr. Beet on "The Last Things."

In a very definite sense, all subjects which come within the scope of Divine revelation and instruction are of grave and solemn importance. But if the life that now is has a grave import, what must be said of the life that is to come? If salvation, as a past accomplishment by Christ and a present enjoyment by his disciples, demands our solemn thought in what frame of mind should we think on "the last things," including the second coming of Christ, with issues of glory or wrath, the reward of holiness and the punishment of sin? The fact that these subjects are included in Divine revelation has not secured them from misrepresentation; but this is not so noteworthy as the fact that even among the most loyal servants of Christ and the strongest defenders of God's Word written, there has been difference of judgment regarding the life of glory as well as the doom of sin.

Some who are of one mind in the interpretation of the words of woe are divided in mind as to what will constitute "the glory to be revealed"; others who have no controversy as to Paradise, the beatific vision, the new heaven and new earth, are divided as to the nature and duration of the punishment which God's Word pronounces to await those who reject Christ and his mercy.

The most recent work on this great subject is by Dr. Joseph Agar Beet,* Professor in the Wesleyan College, Richmond, and widely known as the author of commentaries on the Pauline Epistles, and other theological works. Embodying the careful research and thought of thirty years, the volume leads the reader by processes of induction to an understanding of the various terms employed by the New Testament writers, first regarding the Second Coming of Christ, and then as to the future punishment of sin. Finally, there is a lecture on the eternal glory, and a series of appendixes on the literature of the main subjects of the book. As to the Return, though rejecting the premillennial view as it is generally stated, Dr. Beet unfolds no vague post-millennial theory. This is made clear in the following passage:—

In Christ and by his return from heaven to earth will be accomplished fully the purpose for which the world and man were created. Its orderly accomplishment was disturbed by sin; and this disturbance could be removed only by the suffering and death of the Incarnate Son, Himself the Agent of creation. A pledge of the accomplishment was given in the resurrection, ascension, and enthronement of the Crucified. His return to earth will bring the full realisation of the entire purpose of God.

Not the death of the body, which is a penalty of sin and a victory of the powers of darkness, but the return of Christ in bodily form to reign over his faithful ones, their own bodies rescued from death and the grave, is the aim and goal of our exultant hope. For that return his early followers eagerly waited. And their eager hope suggested that perhaps they might hear his voice and see his face without passing under the dark shadow of death. That expectation was not fulfilled. And we cannot share it. But, long as the time seems, that day will come... Many reasons suggest that, though not close at hand, it cannot be very long delayed. Doubtless we shall lay us down for our last sleep. But in our sleep we shall dream of Him, and be with Him. And when the morning dawns we shall wake up in the splendour of the rising Sun.

Regarding the punishment of sin, the author's inquiries are conscientiously conducted. In a chapter summing up his studies, he says:—

The various writers of the New Testament describe the punishment to be inflicted on the great day as ruin, utter and hopeless and final. The Synoptist Gospels also represented Christ as teaching, and the Book of Revelation teaches in plain and awful language, that the lost will suffer acute and continuous pain...Consciousness o fendless and glorious life forfeited through our own inexcusable folly and sin involves remorse and mental anguish beyond conception. Even in human life on earth, remorse has often been more terrible than bodily suffering...Of this acute suffering of the lost, the writers of the New Testament see no end; nor do they teach anything which logically implies, or even suggests, that it will ever end. On the other hand, they do not go so far as expressly and indisputably to assert the endless permanence of these ruined and wretched ones, and the consequent endlessness of their torment. The curtain is raised for a moment, revealing the anguish of the lost; and then falls, hiding them from our view.

Dr. Beet exposes the unscriptural character of the various Universalist theories. He points out the difficulties attending views that are inconsistent with God's moral government, and he obviously guards against any theory that might exhibit sin as an eternal element in God's universe. He has given his views without reserve, and in the clearest language, and he submits them, as a small contribution to Christian theology, for correction or addition, "to the arbitrament of the Book of God, as read by the servants of Christ, under guidance of the Holy Spirit."

Francis of Assisi.*

There is a perennial interest in the lives of those who, in days of dense darkness and small privilege, walked in the light and witnessed with boldness for God and righteousness. Scanning the centuries we are impressed on the one hand with the spiritual greatness of some who had no open quarrel with the corrupt Church of their time, and on the other hand with the undoubted sanctity of others whose names for quite obvious reasons have not been recorded in the Catholic calendar of saints. In these categories we meet with such different men as Savonarola and Bernard of Clairvaux, as Fra Paolo Sarpi and Francis of Assisi. All interpretations of the lives of such worthies have peculiar charm and real value.

During recent years there has been no lack of literature on the life and work of St. Francis, and a volume of lectures in large sympathy with the subject, by a High Anglican, is fully worthy of attention. In the short preface to his handsome book Canon Knox Little tells us that the subject has interested him for many years, and that he has studied everything, mediæval or modern, which has come within his reach relating to it. There is criticism for Popes and their deeds, also for some ecclesiastical institutions, but St. Francis towers above all these for his faith in God and loving loyalty to Christ. After St. Paul (in our author's view) comes St. Francis, who by the closest possible following of Christ achieved what no man before or since has achieved!

The compassion of Francis for the lepers and his pity for the poor are admirably outlined, and the success of the movement which he led is found in the saint's unique character, prudence, self-sacrifice, courage, love, and holiness. Describing the inception of the work, the Canon says:—

> There can be no way of advancing God's truth except God's way; it must be carried to hearts and consciences by the loving teachings of those who are full of faith. It was this that was felt so deeply by such men as St. Francis. Around him he found a world full of sorrow, wretchedness, and sin. He saw society dislocated by all sorts of terrible forces. He was not the man to discuss whether this came from the Crusades or from the feudal system, or, indeed, from what second cause it came. He was one of those noble and simple natures which gain their highest gifts of genius by receiving the wisdom which cometh from above. He loved God, and he loved God's world because it was God's world, and he therefore loved everything in it—the birds, the beasts, the fishes, the winds, the clouds, the showers—because God had so ordained them. He loved his fellow-men, both because they were his fellow-men and also because the Lord, who had loved him so, and whom he so loved, was one with them in His humanity, and willing to die for them on the cross. He never dreamt of systems of persecution or systems of government; his first and clear thought was to be, to the utmost of his power, like his Master. He felt that example was better than precept, and that precept would tell if example supported it.

This life of St. Francis has many charming passages. In dealing with the sources of information Canon Knox Little is but slightly critical. He allows the tale of the stigmata, and regards those marks as miraculous in origin, a witness to the saints's sanctity. As would be supposed, the Canon has small patience with the sects of the time of Francis, the Paulicians, Albigenses, and Cathari; in other matters he is wanting in depth of view, as for instance in his treatment of the celebrated Indulgence of the Portiuncula, at back of which there is a profound theological question as well as obvious ecclesiastical considerations.

A Christian Scientist.

Shortly after the death of Professor Babington, we gave in our columns a sketch of his life and work, accompanied by a portrait. Considerable interest was evinced in the career of one who combined large scientific attainments and activities with Christian faith held in its simplicity and with vigour. We welcome now a memorial volume* giving the story of his career, with reminiscences, journal extracts and notes, and scientific correspondence.

In Cambridge, Professor Babington's name was a synonym for Botany; in a wider world it was associated with acts of Christian generosity on an extensive scale. Sympathy with home agencies for the spread of the Gospel and the expression of philanthropy was combined with a deep interest in foreign missions in many lands. Professor J. E. B. Mayor writes a brief memoir, and several intimate friends contribute reminiscences. The journal will be specially attractive to those who knew the man; it reflects the ceaseless varied tastes and industry of the Professor, and outlines botanising tours and excursions in all the three kingdoms. Students of Botany will find much to entertain and instruct them in the correspondence, the details of which are made accessible for reference by admirable indexes.

Twelve Empire Builders.†

Dr. George Smith's biographical works give him a high place among the teachers of the age. Generally speaking, India is his subject, and a great subject it is; in particular, he has "realised" to the reading public some of the noblest of lives, including Carey and Martyn, Heber and Duff, Wilson and Hislop. As he has been intimate with great missionaries, so also he has numbered among his acquaintances the empire builders of our great Eastern Dependency, and of them he writes in his new book with remarkable fulness of knowledge and patriotic sympathy.

We have read this work with deep interest, and have been impressed from first to last with the eminently religious character of the men who have held high position in India, also with the noble contribution of Presbyterian Scotland and Ireland to the forces of Imperial progress and achievement. A list of the sketches will afford some idea of the scope of the book. Charles Grant, first and greatest of Indian philanthropists; Sir Henry Lawrence, provisional Governor-General; Lord Lawrence, saviour of India in the great revolt; Sir James Outram, the Bayard of India; Sir Donald McLeod, lover of the people; Sir H. M. Durand, soldier-statesman; Lieut.-Gen. Colin Mackenzie, last of the East India Company's Puritan soldiers; Sir Herbert B. Edwardes, a knight of the Faith; John Clark Marshman, historian and journalist; Sir H. S. Maine, jurist and legislator; Sir Henry Ramsay, the "king" of Kumaon; and Sir Charles U. Aitchison, student and foreign minister.

These are men who through faith subdued kingdoms and wrought righteousness; and the story of their lives and work is soundly instructive as well as deeply interesting. Among the many questions touched upon and illustrated, mention may be made of the famines and wars, of mission effort and press development, of the advance of rule and the establishment of Christianity. This book is a grand record of the age of the giants in Indian administration, and those who now occupy the high places of the field will do well to make themselves familiar with its pages and learn by head and heart how the empire was won and saved, secured and built up, in spite of tremendous opposition and innumerable difficulties.

This book is specially suited for presentation to the young civil servants and officers who year by year proceed to India; it will show them that loyalty to Jesus Christ made the Twelve Statesmen what they were.

Our Churches ; Why we Belong to Them.

There is interest if not profit in the study of denominational distinctions. In a recent volume* of essays these distinctions are stated with general precision, although not with authority. The term "Church" is used in the sense of communion or denomination, and the principal sections of British Protestantism are included in the survey. Though decidedly Protestant in constitution, the Church of England is, sad to say, far from Protestant in its ministry, so it has two exponents, Canon Knox Little representing the High, and Prebendary Webb-Peploe the Evangelical section.

These two essays furnish, at a glance, material for an interesting study of contrasts. The latter answers the question "What do we understand by the Church of England as Established by Law?" The former, however, repudiates the designation, and by a verbal quibble declares that the Church "helped to 'establish' the State." The Evangelical has read history, with its record of the Reformation, marking a break, sudden and complete, in ecclesiastical continuity in our land. The High Anglican, as he looks back upon Church history, is unobservant of any shock or catastrophe: with him one characteristic of the Church is "the constant instinct of reformation," and "from the seventh to the nineteenth century, she has ever, from time to time, been reforming herself!"

Canon Knox Little is generous in his sentiments towards other communions, but his general view is altogether one-sided. Mr. Webb-Peploe's essay is more comprehensive and true to history; faithful in asserting Protestant principles, and strong in opposition to Romish doctrine and practice; he is, moreover, equally generous in his views of those who dissent from the Church of England. He thinks it is idle to expect "corporate reunion" between Churchmen and the Free Churches in this generation, but he holds that Christian men of all churches should—

(1) forbear one another in love where they must disagree; (2) meet wherever possible upon the common grounds of doctrine and practice—as is now done at Keswick and other Conventions for the deepening of the spiritual life; and (3), vie with one another in this single point, viz., who shall do most for the glory of God by winning souls to eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The other essays are by no means uniform in structure or interest. Dr. R. F. Horton, representing Congregationalism, speaks first of the idea, secondly of the organisation. He defines the system as undenominational, a Church from which there are no dissenters.

If the conditions are fulfilled which secure Christ in their midst, if the Christian spirit is there, and the Christian fruits are produced, we may fully and freely recognise the notes of the true Church—ubi Christus, ibi Ecclesia.

Corporate reunion is not, in Dr. Horton's view, desirable, but practical reunion, a oneness in the Spirit of God, is feasible, and in a measure realised.

Dr. R. Glover, representing the Baptists, defines the distinctive views of that denomination, and presents a historical outline as to the people and their principles. The paper is modest and instructive. When speaking on "close communionism," Dr. Glover remarks that it is almost as universal as Christendom; there is not so much significance in a large section of the Baptists holding the view that only the baptized should communicate, as there is in the large proportion who differ from Christendom on the point, and regard the Lord's Table as free to all believers in Christ, whether baptized or not.

The paper on the Wesleyan Methodist Church, by Rev. John Telford, B.A., is largely historical and descriptive; and that on the Society of Friends, by Thomas Hodgkin, D.C.L., Ph.D., is also deeply interesting, and in part critical as to the writings of Barclay. Other contributors are: Professor John Herkless, on the Established Church of Scotland; Dr. W. Ross Taylor, on the Free Church of Scotland; and Dr. A. R. Macewen, on the United Presbyterian Church. These are capital historical sketches, which will help many English readers to realise the ecclesiastical situation on the other side of the Tweed. Finally, there is an account of an organisation whose operations have been so much blessed in the Principality—the Welsh Calvinistic Church, by Principal T. C. Edwards and Rev. John Owen. Taken as a whole, these essays will promote good understanding rather than foster old prejudices. Assuredly the pages supply answers to many interesting denominational questions.

* Our Churches; and Why we Belong to Them. By Various Writers. (6s. Service & Paton.)

English Church History.*

Canon Overton's two volumes are the latest contribution to a series—The National Churches—which has already attracted considerable attention. Undoubtedly, our author possesses in a large degree the qualifications of the true historian. He has gathered and garnered an immense amount of information, and with a scrupulous fairness and candour, tells us, in many cases, as he goes along, how much, or how little, he has been able to verify and establish the facts, theories, and opinions woven into his story, which dates back to the very early ages after Christ.

To a remarkable extent Canon Overton is content to chronicle events, without obtruding his own personal preferences and prejudices. There is a bias, of course, but the ordinary reader may search long before he discovers it. Historic persons belonging to all sections of the Church are sketched in miniature with an evident truthfulness which admits of no party-colouring, and which helps to make the work, incidentally, a really reliable History of England, though from the ecclesiastical standpoint only.

For Cromwell and the Puritans Canon Overton has no harsh words; of men like Wesley, Whitefield, and their spiritual compeers, he writes calmly, respectfully, and even appreciatively, acknowledging, too, that the early Methodist movement was, "beyond all comparison, the most important movement connected with the Church in the reigns of the first two Georges." There is not, however, any satisfactory recognition of other Christian bodies, as such.

As already intimated, Canon Overton enters upon the debatable ground of the antiquity of the British Church, as distinguished—if we understand aright—from the Church of England. Freely admitting the slender foundation upon which the supposition rests, he nevertheless briefly considers the probabilities, or rather the improbabilities, of the Apostle Paul having visited our shores, as some maintain that he did, or at any rate may have done. With the history of King Lucius of the second century, a personage who seems to have fascination at the present time for some learned antiquarians, he makes short work:—

King Lucius, if ever there was such a king, could have had but a very limited sway, probably only a part of what was afterwards called Surrey and Sussex, for Britain was under the rule of a number of petty princes.

For the Celtic Saints, such as St. Chad, St. Aidan, and others, he has more to say, but there are ominous gaps, as Canon Overton points out, in the chain of historic evidence.

The conception of the Church, as here considered, is—and avowedly so—almost exclusively earthly and political — or, as Canon Overton would express it, "National." Consistently with his own standpoint the work is, upon the whole, remarkably well done, although we by no means accept as "proven" all the conclusions arrived at. It seems to us that more than is just is claimed for the Church of England as her share in the formation of such societies as the British and Foreign Bible Society, the London Missionary Society, the Religious Tract Society, and other great organisations. No history of any Church can be complete and satisfying which takes so little account of its spiritual history, and which is silent with regard to the wider aspect of that true Ecclesia which Christ has purchased with his own Blood.

The Silence of God.*

In his latest book Dr. Anderson speaks of a silent heaven as the greatest mystery of our existence. Considering "all the oppressions that are done under the sun," the tears and woes; and having in mind the massacre and murder that are now and then meted out to those who stand for God and his truth, we are tempted to ask, "Doth God know? And is there knowledge in the Most High?" Scripture talks of mercy and righteousness, and declares that all power in heaven and in earth has been given to Christ, Son of God and Son of Man; but while Jewish history teems with miracles by which God showed his presence and power, "yet we are confronted by the astounding fact that from the days of the Apostles to the present hour the history of Christendom will be searched in vain for the record of a single public event to compel belief that there is a God at all!"

In the course of a discussion on the miraculous, Dr. Anderson denies the popular view that Christianity was received in the world on the authority of miracles. On the contrary, he holds that Christ wrought miracles out of a benevolent purpose rather than to silence unbelief (Matt. xiii. 58), and incidentally as the Teacher sent from God to the Jewish people who had been led by their Scriptures to expect such signs. As long as the kingdom was being preached to Jews, miracles abounded, but when the Gospel appeal was sent to the heathen world, miracles lost their prominence, and soon entirely ceased. On occasions when, according to the received theory, miracles should have been wrought to accredit Apostolic testimony, heaven was silent. "The days of the 'rushing mighty wind,' 'the tongues of fire,' the earthquake shock, are past. The anchor of the Christian's hope is firmly fixed in the veiled realities of heaven. He endures, 'as seeing Him who is invisible.'"

Hence the silence of Heaven is nothing new; but in the words of our author, what is new and strange and startling is that the silence should be so absolute and so prolonged; that through all the changing vicissitudes of the earth's history for nearly two thousand years, that silence should remain unbroken. This is that which tries faith and hardens unfaith into open infidelity. Addressing himself to

A SOLUTION OF THE MYSTERY

Dr. Anderson maintains at the outset that it is useless to look anywhere for a solution except in Holy Scripture. Then, there is no light on the subject to come from the Old Testament, the Gospels afford no clue, for they are the record of "days of heaven upon earth"; the Acts of the Apostles yield no help, for that book is a record of a transitory dispensation, marked by abundant displays of the power of God among men. If the key to the great secret of the Gentile dispensation is to be found at all, it must be in the writings of the Apostle to the Gentiles.

After some keenly reasoned pages, insisting on the intensely Jewish character of the Pentecostal dispensation, Dr. Anderson holds that the murder of Stephen marked the crisis in the destiny of the Jews. "Never again was a public miracle witnessed in Jerusalem. The special Pentecostal proclamation (Acts iii. 19-26) was withdrawn. The Pentecostal church was scattered. The Apostle of the Gentiles forthwith received his commission, and the current of events set steadily, and with continually increasing force toward the open rejection of the long-favoured people and the public proclamation of the great characteristic truth of Christianity. With that truth lies concealed the key to the mystery of a silent heaven."

* The Silence of God. By Robert Anderson, C.B. LL.D., Assistant Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Proceeding to examine the writings of the Apostle Paul, Dr. Anderson dwells upon the terms, "my Gospel," and "revelation of the mystery" in Rom. xvi. 25. He finds the present truth in according to which the Divine attitude towards man is one of universal beneficence. Having shown that while the ground of salvation, grace is also the basis of judgment, our author maintains that when the Son of God died at the hands of men, the world took sides with Satan, and God averted his face. Notwithstanding that, however, Christ is yet the sinner's Saviour, and grace reigns. Heaven is silent, but "it is not the silence of callous indifference or helpless weakness; it is the silence of a great sabbatic rest, the silence of a peace which is absolute and profound—a silence which is the public pledge and proof that the way is open for the guiltiest of mankind to draw near to God... If God is silent now, it is because heaven has come down to earth, the climax of Divine revelation has been reached, there is no reserve of mercy yet to be unfolded. He has spoken his last word of love and grace, and when next He breaks the silence it will be to let loose the judgments which shall yet engulf a world that has rejected Christ. 'For our God shall come and shall not keep silence' (Ps. l. 3)."

There are several digressions in the course of the book, yielding an examination of the presumptions of ignorance, the fallacies of unbelief, and the misrepresentations of error and superstition. Dr. Anderson is an uncompromising champion of Divine revelation, and a safe exponent of the fundamentals of the Christian faith. Some readers will regard the considerations presented as falling short of a complete answer to the question raised. All will allow, however, that the book is a thoughtful contribution to the study of a deeply mysterious problem.

A Book of Poems.*

THE name of H. M. Burnside is so familiar that the reader at once anticipates a season of delight in the perusal of this charming collection. Thoughts glad and gay alternate with others solemn and sad, while not a few deal more particularly with those experiences of the soul which readily lend themselves to poetic expression. Many of these have been set to music, and seekers after sacred song will find in them some valuable additions to their repertoire. The few sample verses given below may be taken as typical of all.

"Tell me a story," cried nine years and over—
Her bonnie brown eyes full of innocent glee;
"What do the butterflies say to the clover—
What does the rivulet sing to the sea?"
I told her a story of flowers and fairies,
And varied expressions swept over her face,
While gravely she followed my fancies' vagaries,
Her arms round my neck in a childish embrace.
So clever, so clever, the little one thought me,
Her praises were lavish, her kisses were free;
And "Tell me a story," she often besought me,
For "no one tells stories like you, dear," said she.

We are marching, lads and lassies,
We are marching, great and small;
We are marching ever onward
On Life's highway, one and all.
Hasting to what fate we see not,
Meeting faces all unknown,
Only sure that our great Captain
On the road before has gone;
For as darkness closes round us
We can hear his trumpet call—
Marching, marching, ever onward,
One and all.

The chestnut burrs are falling
On the dew-besilvered lawn,
Where the swallows have been calling
To each other since the dawn;
For again the forest leaves,
And the upland's crown of sheaves,
Wear the fair pathetic glory which
So quickly is withdrawn.

Sweetest the herb that the careless foot crushes;
Lay bare thine heart for the stroke of the rod;
Trust on, the fragrance from heart wounds that gushes
Wafts the tried soul to the peace of its God.

"Why dost thou fail me?" I said to my heart,
"Why shrink in life's battle from bearing thy part?
Why mourn in the dunlight
Of sorrow and care
When God pours his sunlight
On labour and prayer?
Though long be life's pathway, yet strength shall be given.
Up, heart! and be hopeful, Rest waits thee in Heaven."

Rev. Thomas Jackson,

OF THE CLAPTON MISSION.

THE wondrous results which may spring in after-days from the faithfulness of a simple believer, in seeking to win a wayward boy to the Saviour, has often found illustration in Christian biography, and once more in the subject of our sketch these blessed issues find fresh exemplification in the fruitful career of one who, while far from God, was led to Him by the personal efforts of a humble but earnest Methodist. Born in 1850 in Belper, a nail-making village in Derbyshire, Thomas Jackson was set to work—according to the custom in this trade, which was largely, in these days, a family industry—at the early age of eight. His schooling, owing to his own dislike of restraint and study, had been of the scantiest. His workmate was a professed atheist and open blasphemer, while any knowledge the boy had of religion had been gained in a Unitarian Sunday-school. Under such untoward circumstances, the very energy which has marked his later career became manifest in open depravity. To remove him from harmful associates he was sent at the age of fifteen to Sheffield, where in the providence of God he was lodged in the home of a Primitive Methodist. This humble man took the boy as a charge from God, and ceased not to pray and plead until he induced his youthful lodger to attend the Primitive Methodist Sunday-school, where ere long the lad was led to accept Christ.

The change was immediately apparent. His mother's Bible became his delight. Hot and heavy as was his work at the forge, he would be found at every opportunity with the Book in his hand, teaching himself to read. His evenings were given to self-education, and within a short time he was a teacher in the Sunday-school, an open-air speaker, and a local preacher. The success which attended his labour, and his marked fitness for the work, led to his being set apart as missionary. In the course of a few years his peculiar gifts for pioneer evangelistic work became recognised, and he was appointed to mission service in London.

The wisdom of the choice has been fully vindicated. The twenty-one years which have since elapsed have been devoted to the East End of London; and his Gospel activities have been abundantly blessed in the conversion of hosts of the indifferent, the building up of strong and live churches, and the erection of some seven mission halls and chapels, which are now the centres of earnest and fruitful endeavour. Rev. Jesse Ashworth says:—

> Mr. Jackson had a splendid preparation for his mission work. It may not be generally known that he gave up employment in which he could often earn five or six pounds per week, and accepted at that time the small stipend from the General Missionary Committee of £13 per quarter as a married ministerial probationer for four years. These four years of self-denying labour and self-abnegation must have awakened in both Mrs. Jackson and himself that compassion which both have ever since shown to the poor of Walthamstow and Clapton.

In 1876 he began work in Bethnal Green, in a small mission-room in Squirries-street, and a chapel in West-street, Mile End. Much of his energy was, however, devoted to Walthamstow, where the working men crowding in were largely outside of Christian influence. An old Independent chapel had been secured before Mr. Jackson's advent. With the help of a carpenter, he removed the old-fashioned, high-backed pews and the "swallow's nest" pulpit, and adapted the place for mission services. He started with a congregation of three persons, and left an active church of 129 members, with four chapels in the districts. One of these chapels originated in the following way:—Open-air services started in Chapel End led to a little cottage meeting. The success of these meetings was being talked about in a neighbouring public-house, when the landlady said in joke, "Let them we don't use it on Sundays." This reached the missioner's ears; he promptly applied for the alley, and got it. He fitted up a platform with his own hands, and soon it was crowded. Six months after, at a fellowship meeting, fourteen men testified they had been converted on the spot where they used to drink and gamble. This is typical of the way in which most of his new extensions have had origin. A Congregationalist hearing of the blessed work offered to build a mission-room; and a member of the Church of England (sympathising in the good work) gave the site. It is pleasant to note that among the first converts in the new hall were the son and daughter of the donor of the site, and these are now prominent Christian workers.

In somewhat similar fashion arose further mission chapels at Higham Hill and in Hawthorn-road—each of which has a story of providential leading attached to it. After eight years of this kind of labour, Mr. Jackson was appointed, in 1884, to superintend a new evangelistic undertaking in North-east London. Clapton Park was growing rapidly, and behind the main thoroughfare poor and populous streets were found in urgent need of Christian effort. An old theatre, known locally as the "Dust-hole," from its disreputable character, was taken, and again Mr. Jackson and his wife had to cleanse and refit by personal labour. The first service was attended by eleven persons; but incessant house-to-house visitation and lively open-air services won the people, and ere long the place was crowded. Here also began the systematic social and relief work which has become an attraction at this and other mission centres. Much destitution was found to exist, and free meals were given. A nurse was set to work, and so successful did her labours prove that four mission sisters are now busily engaged from house to house. Soon the theatre became too small—being also condemned as insanitary—and the present Clapton-park Tabernacle was by heroic effort erected. This is now the centre of ceaseless and varied evangelistic, missionary, and philanthropic labour, and, above all, ringing with the message of salvation, for, amid all his numberless activities, Mr. Jackson is first and foremost a preacher of the Gospel.

TOUCHING THE POOR AT ALL POINTS,

Nor is this all, for in connection there are now vigorous missions in Southwold-road, by the River Lea, and at Jubilee Hall, Hoxton.

Fresh vent has also been found for surplus energies in a new chapel rising at Southend, and mission rooms in neglected parts of Shoeburyness and Southchurch.

Moreover, in addition to all this, the Connexion took over last year the famous Lads' Institute in Whitechapel, and to this Mr. Jackson devotes himself with an assiduity which seems astonishing in view of all his other undertakings. The good work founded by Mr. H. Hill is going on and growing. There are now 450 members, and the lads are not only kept off the streets but brought under warm spiritual influence. In illustration of this the devoted superintendent points with thankfulness to the numbers who have joined the church, the firm attitude taken against "smoking, drinking, and gambling"—peculiar besetments of such lads. Mr. Jackson feels that he has at length found his "life work," and emphatically declares that whenever in the providence of God he finds himself able to put the Clapton Mission in other hands, he hopes to devote himself entirely to the Whitechapel lads, amongst whom he has found a fruitful field.

If the secret of all this growing success be sought, it may be found (apart from Mr. Jackson's tireless energy and devotion) in the spirit thus expressed in his own words:—

> We recognise that there is no substantial hope for the thousands among whom we labour except in the blessed truth that centres in the sublime fact of "Jesus Christ and Him crucified." We have made in the past, and intend to do in the future, the spiritual supreme in all our plans and methods of work. To give light and save life may not in appropriately describe our work; and in reviewing it we are filled with the "joy of the Lord," as we think of the souls saved, homes made happy, children instructed in the things of God, the sick and needy ministered to, and the testimony borne to the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Ross Bible Carriage Mission.—The past summer's tent work in various places of Herefordshire and the surrounding counties, has been the best we remember. The Lord has been pleased to bless in conversion of souls, and we have been greatly cheered on revisiting the scenes of former labours to find those who professed conversion seasons ago in our tent meetings standing firm and manifesting the reality of the change. One marked feature of the work has been that people who never go to any place of worship, have come and got blessing. The Divided City, a picture painted for our mission work, has been greatly used. We have shown it and preached from it to thousands in crowded cities and in the small villages. We are now busy with indoor missions, for which we ask prayer. JOHN COATES.

HOME MISSIONS.

Romance and Work.

THE latest approximate estimate, received the other day from the Registrar-General, gives the present population of London as 6,290,000, showing that this gigantic city is growing more rapidly than ever. This in a limited area renders the work of the London City Mission, acting as the pioneer of the churches, of intense and increasing importance. All admit that the churches cannot overtake the swelling masses. Hosts of the newcomers—apart from the question of those already settled—cannot be reached save by the house-to-house visitation of the City missionary.

Moreover, this City mission is peculiarly a mission to men. Working-men are rarely to be found at home when the minister or regular visitor calls, but the City missionary goes after them to their workshops, factories, yards, cab-ranks, stables, and even into the public-houses. No less than 121 special missionaries are set apart for service among classes largely isolated by their calling and habits from ordinary Christian ministry. These special agents work among bakers, market-men, cabmen, boatmen, stablemen, coalheavers, dockers, firemen, gasworkers, navvies, omnibus-men and carmen, police, postmen, hotel and club servants, railway-men, scavengers, soldiers, theatrical employés and common lodging-houses; while twenty-six missionaries are wholly employed in public-house visitation. Besides this, foreigners of all nations and colour are reached by missionaries fully qualified to set forth the Gospel in their tongue. No matter from whence some wanderer drifts to this Metropolis, and what may be his speech, there are men in the L.C.M. who can deal with him. Yet, further, seven men are devoted to labour among the Jews.

Personal effort, individual evangelisation, is the grand principle of the Mission; and on this all-important business 470 men, carefully chosen for their capacity for such work, are constantly engaged. 349 of these are going from house to house endeavouring to enter every door, and urge the Gospel on every family in their district, while, as stated, 121 are appointed to special service among special classes. In view of these figures, the question will naturally be asked, What is the outcome of this work? Is it really and definitely fruitful in winning men to Christ? It is. The work is often hard, and apparently—by reason of prevalent indifference—results are few; but this is in appearance only. As a matter of fact, it is rich in spiritual result, and many, through the labours of these missionaries, are constantly being led to the Saviour. Homes that were cursed by drink and vice are being remodelled, as the hearts of men and women are being changed by the grace of God.

INTERESTING CASES.

But the genuine results may best be shown by citing some actual and recent instances. To begin with a type frequently met with. A working man, when first spoken to by the missionary, was very sullen and rude. Patience and forbearance, however, at length gained permission to visit his house, and even to read the Word and pray with him. Some time after the missionary spoke of the uncertainty of life, when, to his surprise, the man said, "Thank God, I am not afraid of death, because I now know that Jesus has saved me." Asked when the change took place, he replied, "It has been a gradual work with my soul, but the turning-point of my life was reached chiefly through a conversation I had with you about two months ago."

Again, a missionary to omnibus-men writes: "I have known an old, experienced driver for thirty-four years. He has always taken a great interest in horse-racing, and has lost a large sum of money. For years I have been trying to persuade him not to have anything more to do with it, but he said,

'IT IS MY LIFE'S BLOOD.

I am so fond of it.' I tried to show that it was likely to prove his ruin both in body and soul. This has at last had its effect upon him, and he has abandoned it altogether. Better still, he has been led to see himself as a lost sinner in the sight of God, and he is now resting for salvation on the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ."

THE NAVVY'S CONVERSION.

A navvy said lately: "You used to come to the Tower Bridge, when I was working there. I have heard you read and speak many a time. I used to wish I could do better. I tried, but rather got worse, and lost my work, and by-and-by got into prison. There I thought of what you said, and I asked God to help me. I had a long, hard struggle, and felt it was no use. After my discharge I got into a field and prayed nearly all night. The next night I found peace, and now I've been serving God for three years."

A SCEPTICAL WORKMAN.

One of the missionaries to factories writes: "I had sought the salvation of one man for many years without apparently making any impression upon his heart. I began to think that in his case my work was in vain, but one day, seeing him apart from the other workmen, I said: 'Tell me what you think about your soul and its salvation,' when I was surprised to hear him say: 'Well, I cannot keep back any longer. I have now for some time thought I would tell you of my feelings, and my change from doubt to faith. After one of your Biblical lectures you gave me a little book called "The Sinner's Friend," which I took home and laid aside without reading. A short time ago I was greatly impressed by your conversation, and when I went home I felt anxious about my soul. I looked over my books, and found the one you gave me, which I had quite forgotten. I read it, and re-read it. In a week or so I went to a place of worship, and in a short time I was truly converted to God. I united myself with the people of God, and confessed my change to my family and relatives. Then I lent the little work to them, and each of them wished to have one.'"

AN UNBELIEVING CABMAN.

Another man before his conversion was an opponent of Christianity, and a thorn in the side of Christian cabmen. He was a politician and a sceptic, and, possessing the gift of speech, became an acknowledged leader among the unbelieving cabmen. Now all this is happily changed for the better. He was spoken to and reasoned with; and, being convinced of sin by the Spirit of God, repented, and believed the Gospel. Then he joined the Christian Cabmen's Association, becoming a fellow-worker. Now he defends the truth, and faithfully preaches the Gospel of Christ. He finds plenty of work in the cab shelter and on the ranks.

Sometimes, again, the word spoken seems to reach the heart at once. Here is a striking case of this kind. "I was visiting," says a missionary, "on the ground-floor of a house, when a woman rushed downstairs, and said, 'For God's sake, sir, come up and see my husband—he is murdering me!' She looked in a sad condition, for he had been knocking her about. I had to climb three flights of stairs, which I did, looking to God for strength, and found the man like

A RAVING MANIAC.

After I had succeeded in quieting him a little, I told him my own life story, and what God had done for me. He became thoroughly interested, and said, 'If God can do that for you, surely He can do something for me also.' I assured him that God both could and would do the same for him if he asked Him, We all knelt in prayer, and since that day he has been a changed man—a Christian and a staunch teetotaler.

"His landlord has recognised it, for he has let him a better house, as he is sure now of his rent. 'If,' said the landlord, 'you could do as good a job for all the people about here, the place would become a paradise.'"

These gleanings from the sheaves (which might be indefinitely multiplied) will suffice to show that the Gospel, carried by the humble City missionary, is proving its power among the careless and sinful of all classes. Like instances might be cited of sailors, soldiers, Jews, foreigners, and unhappy street-walkers saved and changed; of hearts made glad and homes made happy by the coming in of a a new life.

Yet, strange to say, this Mission, which would seem to be of first importance to the community, is actually in a very critical condition by reason of lack of funds. In view of the increased population, ought to be at once sent out, but the state of the funds threatens to compel a serious decrease in the staff unless increased funds be provided.

The committee find themselves at present £8500 behind-hand, to meet which nearly £5000 have already been given by leading Christians. This incubus must be cleared off, and an additional annual income of £7000 secured in order to set this important evangelistic agency free to fulfil its great mission. Surely a fact of this gravity needs only to be made known to call forth large and liberal giving.

Every information as to the London City Mission may be had of the secretaries, 3, Bridewell-place, London, E.C. PEARL FISHER.

Imprisonment of Children.

THE annual report of the Howard Association reviews the past fifty years, and traces the progress made in the direction of prison reform and humane treatment of criminals. During the past year the work has gone on steadily at home and abroad, and testimony is given of good results in Canada, the United States, India, Germany, and Finland.

Reference is made to the imprisonment of children, to which fresh public attention was recently aroused. The public do not seem, it is stated, to be aware of the strong disapproval of child-imprisonment felt by the prison authorities, or of the very small number of children now committed to jail on sentence. But a considerable number are sent to jail on remand by magistrates, merely to await reception into a reformatory. Until further legislation may remedy this state of things, it is to be hoped that local magistrates and authorities will use every endeavour to avoid recourse to the prison for the care of children, even for a day. For only a day or two, is not only sufficient to affix a LIFE-LONG "PRISON BRAND.

But also, in many cases, to show a child that a prison is not a place to be so much dreaded as had been previously supposed. And thus the path to a career of crime has often been opened. Many prison officials have expressed their objection to all child-imprisonment. A veteran governor recently exclaimed, "Children should never come inside that gate! By all means let them be kept outside that gate!"

On the question of parental control and responsibility, it is stated that in prisons, reformatories, and industrial schools there is witnessed constant and abundant proof that a most serious cause of juvenile delinquency consists in the mischievous license legally permitted to parents who have grossly neglected their children, and in many instances become the worst enemies of their offspring. There are in England and Wales about thirty thousand of such children placed upon the shoulders of the taxpayer for years of training, during which the parents barely pay a shilling a week, on the average, towards the costs involved. And then, after all the care thus bestowed upon these children, the parents can claim them back to their bad homes, to be again led toward ruin, and to undo what has been accomplished.

Attention has also been given to the uselessness of repeated short imprisonments for habitual drunkards, and the need for inebriate retreats, and the adoption of more sensible and effective remedies. The training of prison warders is also kept in view. Instructive notes on these and many cognate questions will be found in the report. Copies may be had of the secretary, Mr. W. Tallack, 5, Bishopsgate-street Without, London, E.C.

The Home of Industry.

THE monthly meeting of workers and friends was held at the Home of Industry on Wednesday last week. Mr. A. H. Maude, who presided, read Psa. cxvii., and briefly spoke of the beauty of praise. It is comely to give thanks, and surely having received of God, it is meet we should render praise.

Rev. A. Saunders, well known and beloved at the Home of Industry as a former co-worker, had much to tell of the Lord's dealings in China, during the ten years which had passed since last he spoke at the workers' monthly meeting. For four years he and his wife had been labouring in P'ing Yao, a large city in the north of Shan si. This was largely pioneer work, and many difficulties confronted them. When they tried to rent a house within the city for an opium refuge, they found it impossible on account of the jealousy and suspicion of the people; yet such have been the leadings of God that the very house at first unobtainable was two years later rented, without demur, as a house for lady workers. Four years ago, a small room outside the city, holding twenty persons, sufficed for the meetings; now a chapel, holding 200, is wholly insufficient. Then there were nineteen or twenty church members—now there are seventy-five, and over a hundred unbaptized, but so far as man can judge genuine believers. Several instances of persecution and loss for the Gospel's sake were mentioned—cruel beatings, fines, and deforcement for refusal to pay temple taxes, from which by law Christians are exempt, although local authorities often ignore this law. The speaker went on to say that the aim of the China Inland missionaries is to build up self-supporting native churches, and that the great hope for the future lies in the native Christians. Already, even in this out-of-the-way district, there are small self-supporting churches in three villages, and God is using the native Christians. The district, however, is very wide—there are eight large walled cities and about 4000 towns and villages—hence more workers are very urgently needed.

Mrs. Saunders followed with supplementary details as to the work among the women of P'ing Yao and other cities in Northern Shan-si. Four years ago it was almost impossible to reach the women, but now the lady workers find more open doors than they can possibly enter. There is great need for more lady workers, also for Chinese Bible-women, who are of great value in spreading the Gospel.

Miss Annie Taylor, who was to leave for her distant post on the frontier of Tibet on Friday, expressed her strong feeling that Tibet is one of the last lands to be evangelised; that when the Gospel is preached in that region the Lord's way will be prepared, and that the Devil, knowing this, has put peculiar obstacles in the way of the Gospel penetrating Tibet. Her special desire in setting forth once more for the land laid on her heart was that earnest prayer should be made on her behalf. This request Miss Macpherson emphasised in a few earnest words.

Miss Sharman's Homes.

The annual report of these Homes notes the opening of the Convalescent Home, at Hastings, and of an Educational Branch at Stockwell as the special events of the year. The income of the Homes has been £4343, and the expenditure about £200 more, viz., £5404.

"During the last twelve months the pressure of applications for admission has been greater than ever, but the saddest and hardest part of the work has been the having to say 'no' to so many whom it would be a real pleasure to help. While looking with thankfulness at the happy young faces within the Homes, one's heart yearns for the little ones outside. We began the year with three hundred and seven children in the Homes, and closed it with three hundred and twenty-one, forty-six orphans having left during the twelve months, and sixty having been admitted. Many of our orphans have given evidence of true conversion. There is every reason to believe that the good work is being carried forward in many hearts, and that the elder girls, by consistent Christian lives, are influencing the younger children, and helping to bring them to the Saviour." The report, from which we quote, gives many touching incidents of the various branches of the work in London and by the seaside. Copies may be had of Miss Sharman, 20, West-square, S.E.

Obituary.

REV. F. A. MALLESON.

The death is announced, at the age of seventy-eight, of Rev. Frederic Amadeus Malleson, M.A., for twenty-seven years vicar of Broughton-in-Furness. Mr. Malleson was the editor of "Ruskin's Letters to the Clergy on the Lord's Prayer and the Church, with Essays and Comments, Replies, and Epilogue by Mr. Ruskin," which, first published in 1880, reached a third edition last year. He edited several volumes of Messrs. Ward and Lock's Christian Knowledge Series, for which also he wrote "Jesus Christ, His Life and His Work." He was likewise the author of the "Acts and Epistles of St. Paul" and of "Holiday Studies of Wordsworth."

MRS. H. M. WILLIAMSON, BELFAST.

Belfast has lost one of her most active and devoted mothers in Israel in the call home of Mrs. Williamson, wife of Rev. H. M. Williamson, D.D., ex-moderator of the General Assembly. For some months Mrs. Williamson had been laid aside by the illness which ultimately ended in her death. Her time of sickness and waiting, however, was a time of peace and victory. God in his grace turned the bed of weakness and pain into a throne of triumph.

Mrs. Williamson took the deepest interest in every Christian enterprise. She was often seen at the midnight rescue meetings speaking tenderly to the erring sisters brought in there; at mothers' meetings, Dorcas gatherings, and working parties for furthering mission enterprises at home and abroad she was always to the front. She will be much missed by many ladies in Belfast, but most of all by those who were associated with her in Christian enterprises.

PROFESSOR HENRY CALDERWOOD.

The Professor of Moral Philosophy in Edinburgh University, died suddenly on Friday night at his residence at Edinburgh. Dr. Calderwood was born on May 10, 1830, at Peebles. He was educated at the Royal High School and the University of Edinburgh, and, having studied for the ministry of the United Presbyterian Church, was ordained pastor of the Greyfriars Church, Glasgow, 1856. This post he held till his appointment in 1868 to the chair of Moral Philosophy in Edinburgh University. His first publication was a work on the "Philosophy of the Infinite in Opposition to the Views of Sir William Hamilton," in 1854. Since that time Mr. Calderwood has given to the world a number of books, including "A Handbook of Moral Philosophy," "On the relations of Mind and Brain, and Science and Religion." He edited an edition of Fleming's "Vocabulary of Philosophy," and was the author, among other works, of a book on the "Parables of Our Lord."

REV. EDWIN LEWIS, BELLARY.

A telegram was received by the London Missionary Society on Tuesday week, telling of the death of this well-known missionary, who was ordained in 1865, and was married to Miss A. M. Dibsdall, of Sherborne. They both sailed for India in September, and reached their destination (Bellary) about four months afterwards. Mr. Lewis devoted himself to vernacular work and itineration, and Mrs. Lewis interested herself in the girls' schools. They both visited England as recently as 1894, and, before returning to his station in 1896, Mr. Lewis, accompanied by his wife, visited the Australasian colonies as a deputation from the Society. His lovable disposition and attractiveness as a speaker led to a great demand for his services whenever he visited this country. Though he was much attached to the work of itineration, preaching the Gospel in the villages of the Bellary district, he has for many years done invaluable work as a bi-linguist, preaching both in the Canarese and Telugu languages, and acting as one of the revisers of the Scriptures in these tongues. The translation of the Scriptures into the Telugu language was originally the work of missionaries of the London Missionary Society, and, from the first, their agents have been very closely and prominently associated with every effort of translation and revision. The need of a further revision of the Telugu Scriptures, so as more fully to reach some seventeen millions of people in South India who use that language, has long been felt, and Mr. Lewis was chosen as the man who would be most likely to carry the proposed revision to a satisfactory completion.

"Christ's Humility and Exaltation."—Phil ii. 1-11.

Golden Text.—"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus."

THIS Epistle was written during Paul's imprisonment at Rome. We have seen that the church at Philippi was the first founded in Europe and naturally one for which the Apostle had much affection. He had been treated there with the loving sympathy which gave his message a ready welcome. Epaphroditus had now brought gifts from the Christians at Philippi to the imprisoned Paul at Rome, and the prisoner using this letter to return his thanks, at the same time gives them some loving, helpful thoughts which have been handed on to us. This portion of the letter deals with our duty in the face of Christ's humiliation and exaltation.

I. Our duty.—That of self-denial for the sake of others. We usually understand this to mean giving up some material pleasure. It does mean that, but it means more. It entails a humility which is willing to be "nobody" in order that our brother may be "somebody." It means doing things for the benefit of others and not for our own advancement or glorification (3). Where every man is striving for himself there must be conflict and disagreement, but where every man is striving to make others happy there is unity and peace (2). This is a very high standard, and the teacher should apply it to the child-life. They must work hard at school, not in order to win prizes and so gratify their pride and vanity, but in order that they may grow up good men and women, useful to others and able to make the world brighter and better. When they go out to parties this winter instead of going there to "cut a shine" they should "look on the things of others," i.e., see that others are accommodated with seats, or are entertained. If there is one person out of the circle with no one to talk to, that is just the opportunity of leaving the pleasant friends they are with and trying to make that one "at home."

II. The Example of Christ.—He had all the power, wisdom, and holiness of God, yet He did not selfishly hold on to so great a possession—thought it not robbery, etc., thought it not a prize to be selfishly grasped at—but allowed Himself to be born into the world as a poor child; to be trained in poverty and hard work; He allowed men to maltreat Him, and in the end to crucify Him. This was the marvellous humiliation of Jesus Christ. Thousands of people have had the same mind as Jesus—missionaries who have left comfortable homes, prosperous businesses or professions, and gone abroad to endure the hardships and sufferings of savage districts, in order that they may win souls to God; fathers, who have given up ease and pleasure, and have toiled day and night, in order that their children may have a good education. The teacher may multiply examples of this kind, illustrating "the mind" that was in Jesus.

III. The Exaltation of Christ (9-11).—Christ has the joy of knowing that through his humility and self-denial the disciple became so devoted to him that they dared to die for his sake. To-day there are millions who worship Jesus. "His name is above every name," and that time will come when it shall be said, "The kingdoms of this world have become the Kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever." This is the reward of humility and service. The two things go together. There is no royal road to the exaltation of Christ. For King and people it lies along the way of service, and if we refuse to serve others, we can never never "enter into the joy of our Lord." The altar of sacrifice lies over the well of joy, and you must bring the former away by enthusiastic service before you can get at the latter. The victory comes after the battle. The crown lies beneath the cross.

II.—The Result of all this is, that while service brings joy to us it also brings glory to God the Father (11). Men looked at Jesus Christ and saw that God was in Him, and that God received the glory. The harp string moves so swiftly that it is forgotten and the harpist receives the praise. So if we are servants, found faithful, we shall be ever winning others for God by our very lives. Men will glorify God because of us.

A South African School.

Dear Children,—Many of you hear of missions to the heathen, but as you may never have been in a foreign land to see the natives or the little black boys and girls in school, you may give only a passing thought as to what the words mean Now, we missionaries aim at what your teachers do to try and impart knowledge, and train up these children to be useful members in their own sphere of life; and just as in your schools, there are bright ones and dull ones, needing great patience and forbearance on the part of the teachers, hence in many cases these poor children are far longer than you can guess of grasping even the most simple things. They often seem so stupid and awkward because nothing has gone before to give them a taste for knowing more and better things. While you all from infancy have been accustomed to cleanliness and order, and to see pretty things around you, and learn day after day that such are valued by your parents and friends, your education commencing long before you can remember, there is nothing in this home life of a heathen child to elevate or put good desires into the heart.

When they first come to us they see nothing amusing in a toy, a picture is not pretty to them, and even sweeties have no charms, they are afraid to eat one—for the first time—fearing it is poison! They also think it very queer that we should admire and cultivate the flowers in our garden. "They are not good to eat, so what is the use of them?" Nothing in nature has any value in their eyes unless it is "good to eat"! They do not know that God has given us all these beautiful things to look upon, and enjoy, and to make us happier. You see that the mind of the black child seems quite a blank, and so it is in all that pleases and refines us; these little minds are steeped in superstition and the darkness of heathen customs, showing that there is space for something better when someone comes to show them the right way, for they can be taught and do profit by the instruction, and we can never forget that they have souls to be saved, and even black children can teach lessons.

I want to tell you how an incident affected me the other day which at first made me very angry, then a lesson shot through my mind. Well, a little Kaffir boy whose name is U-Makwaka was to chop wood for the fire—we have no coal—and, seeing an old stump of a tree in the garden, thought that was just the thing, dry and dead. It was nothing to him that I had been training most carefully an English honeysuckle to grow over the stump. So off he tore the creeper, and dragged the just-peeping blossoms in the dust—for now we are nearing our summer, while the frost and winter are upon you—and away went the hatchet, hacking and hewing, until I came upon the spot. You can imagine my distress and grief, and I thought how very thoughtless and tiresome this little black boy was, not to know any better, and it struck me at once, yes, it was that he did not know better. Not from any wish to give pain, or from mischief, he just did not know. The wood he did know was good to burn, and that was what he was seeking.

So I thought here was a weather-stained and knotted stump—its only use while there to be covered up by some pretty creeper—as full of holes and hiding places as it well could be for centipede, scorpion, lizard and spider, and a whole family of other little reptiles and insects. Then, again, I thought how many there are who let the heart grow into a hard and knotted block, and then try to hide it up with its secret places of malice and bitterness, haughty words and selfish ways, and petty strifes, with wreaths of smiles and pretty words to suit the occasion. Words like the honeysuckle for sweetness and fragrance but, alas! all the time the little reptiles come creeping out at the first ruffle of the leaves or the push of a twig, to mar the beauty and spoil the bloom. It was well the little Kaffir boy wanted to cut down the gnarled old stump.

Let us take a lesson. If there is anything in our hearts that should be made open, let us wrench away the creepers that may be checking it, and ask God to create a clean heart within us, and then the smiling wreaths and pretty ways will return fourfold, which are right and good for us to cultivate, giving sunshine and pleasure to all around us, for we are told to think upon those things that are lovely and true and of good report. And remember the little black children more than ever in our prayers, and that they may be taught all things that lead to eternal life and glory. If any of you would like to write to me I shall be pleased to tell you all I can of the children of this dark land.—Believe me to be, faithfully yours.

The Things that are Lovely.

Some very earnest young Christians make a mistake in putting too light a value upon those graces of manner and little courtesies of speech and conduct which might commend their excellent qualities to others and give them the vantage ground of personal influence. If a merchant has diamonds to sell, he does not shut them up in a drawer, nor display them in a rough box. He does not say, "Nothing can add to the value of a diamond, and I will not condescend to any tricks to catch admiration or draw customers. If a man really wishes to buy, he will come to me."

What he does is to put his jewels upon beds of satin, in cases of velvet; to use every art to display their beauty. He knows very well that people who have never thought seriously of buying may be attracted by the beauty that catches the eye and arrests the attention.

Your Christian principles ought to be rendered so attractive by your personality that those who know you will associate goodness with graciousness.

Neatness and good taste in dress, a careful avoidance of all rude and disagreeable habits, conformity to the customs of good society, these are by no means trifles to be ignored by those who claim to belong to the highest court of honour. You do not properly represent your sovereign unless you are not only a patriot but a gentleman.

The great majority of those with whom we come in contact must judge us by externals, and, if we covet that most precious power of influence, we must see to it that we do not so repel them by the prickly outside that they never care to go any deeper. We are indeed to think upon the things that are true and pure, but not less upon "those that are lovely and of good report."—Epworth Herald.

What the Stone Said.

The block of stone was heard to speak,
As on the ground it lay;
"It will not mar the temple church,
If I remain away;

"I am so small; so seldom seen;
They surely wont miss me,
I'll be content just here to lie;
Of what use can I be?"

But on the building as He looks,
The Master's eye doth view
A vacant place; He gently says,
"This place was meant for you."

Such as ye have I only ask;
Thy gifts seem small to thee;
But if there be a willing mind,
They shall accepted be.

So there is none without their worth
In all God's great design;
n his own diadem of love,
He wants each one to shine.

Personal.

I have received a few papers this week where references only are given as answers to the Searcher, but this is insufficient, as although references are desirable they are not so important as the answers themselves. Some of my nieces and nephews have written asking that their papers may be re-examined, but I must ask them to accept my decision as final. I would impress upon them that special care is taken in correcting the answers each week.

A. Kay.—There are, I think, two of you with the same initial, so will you all give your Christian names so as to avoid confusion. Dorothy Berry.—Thank you for your little note. I am sorry that Leslie has been so disappointed this last fortnight, but this week he is successful. Theodore Hill.—Many thanks for your letter and enclosure. Edith Cole.—Am very pleased to see your handwriting again. Hope you are really recovered and feeling quite well. When you and your sisters stamp the envelope with a half-penny be sure and not write anything in the form of a letter, as I had to pay extra this week. Queenie Upton.—If you will send a penny stamp next week I will send you the rules. Bessie Cheale.—Unfortunately, besides omitting No. 6, your answer to 7 was incorrect. Louie Peachey.—Sorry to hear you are ill, and hope by now you are quite well again. Gracie and Louie Finch.—Your papers must be sent each week, and not two or three "Searchers" together. Each paper must be signed by a parent or teacher.

CANDLES OF SCRIPTURE.

1. The Candle of the Lord: Conscience (Ps. xviii.).—Conscience is the candle of the Lord fixed in every breast, and is the natural light which makes us sensible of right and wrong. But it must be enlightened by the Holy Spirit, and guided by the Word of God, or else it is not a sure guide to salvation and life. When the Holy Spirit enlightens conscience then there is conviction of sin, sense of danger, and an earnest cry for help (Acts xvi.).

2. The Candle of Grace: Love.—(Luke xv. .) This candle of grace lights us to salvation and joy.

It is a search light to seek the lost (Luke xix.).
It is a Divine light to find the helpless (Ezek. xxxiv.).
It is a warm light to welcome the found one (Luke xv.).

3. The Candle of Testimony: Life.—(Matt. v. .) When we are saved we become the candles for the Lord

A candle lit for the right purpose (Matt. v. ; Phil. ii.).
A candle put in the right place (Matt. v. .)
A candle shining for God's glory (Matt. v.).

4. The Candle Put Out: Death.—(Job. xviii. .) The light of nature and the spark of reason may do for this world, but will never light us to the other world in safety, and death will come and put it all out. This is no light for the soul, and when death comes it is often too late to get Divine light (Matt. xxv. ; Luke xiii.).

5. The Candle Outshone: Glory.—(Rev. xxii. .) There is a bright glorious future for God's people. No night of darkness. No night of sorrow, and no night of death (Rev. xx.).

The Evangelistic Field.

REV. JOHN McNEILL IN MONTROSE.

[By a Minister.]

THIS evangelist has concluded a fortnight's meetings in Montrose. From the beginning the meetings have been a triumphant success, never wavering, never falling off, but growing in numbers and in intensity of interest.

Mr. McNeill began his mission by preaching on the Sabbath forenoon in St. John's Free Church, and in the Burgh Hall in the afternoon and evening. The Burgh Hall, the largest in the town, capable of accommodating sixteen hundred people, has been filled night after night with audiences gathered from all ranks and conditions of the people. One might see here and there the well-known faces of leading men in the town mingled with the general throng, which included not a few of those who spend their evenings on the streets. A remarkable feature of the meetings has been the number of men who have attended them, and the eager expression on their faces as they listened to the winsome and dramatic setting forth of the old story. Sometimes the preacher broke upon them with such overwhelming power that every soul seemed to realise that this was not the word of man, but the word of the living God.

On the second Sabbath Mr. McNeill preached in the old parish church. In the evening he returned to the Burgh Hall. The evening was cold, wet, and stormy, yet the hall was packed and the doors closed long before the hour of meeting. Many were obliged to turn away, and among them some who had travelled long distances from the surrounding country. During the second week Mr. McNeill instituted meetings in the afternoon in Free St. George's Church, principally for old people and for the many visitors who came trooping in from Craig, Maryton, Marykirk, Craigo, Hillside, and the various districts round about. These afternoon meetings were highly appreciated, and were attended by about 500 people.

On the last night of the meetings there could not have been fewer than 2000 people crammed into the hall, but the second last night was perhaps the most solemn and impressive of all. Many acknowledged that they had never so felt the presence and power of Divine things. Sound to the core on the great vital truths of the Gospel, and setting them forth with rare application to the present times and to everyday life, the common people have heard the evangelist gladly. Those who love the evangel have been refreshed and strengthened, and many, we do not doubt, have been led to make the great decision. May the power of Christ abide upon the preacher, to whom it is no irreverence to apply the old words of Scripture, "There was a man sent from God whose name was John."

THE EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY.

This company of preachers is now in the midst of its winter campaign, and the evangelists are busily engaged, both north and south, in making known the way of salvation. Many of the Missions are in small places, where the Gospel in its fulness and simplicity is rarely heard, while others are in large and busy centres where a few seem to take time to think of the importance of personal safety. From a multitude of letters recently received by the hon. secretary, Mr. John Wood, we give the following in order to call forth prayer and praise.

Rev. J. J. Mackay, of Prospect-street, Hull, writes that a deeply-interesting Mission has been held by Mr. Thomas Canning. The Bible-readings have been well attended. Christians have been fed on strong meat; there has been deep digging in the Scriptures, every statement being broadly based on the Word of God. Nor have these Bible-readings run on old ruts simply, they have been fresh, thought-compelling, and helpful. The meetings for the young were also a great delight. "He got them," said a worker, "from the beginning." Many of them were eager to attend every night, and not a few have, it is believed, been led to Christ. The evangelistic services have been growing in attendance and deepening in interest. The proportion of men in the audience grew as time went on. Best of all night by night we could see that souls were being powerfully dealt with. Many have decided for Christ, and some of the cases have been intensely interesting.

At Cox Green, near Bolton, a mission has been held through the kindness of Mr. Jeremiah Garnett, a large mill-owner, by Mr. Henry Collins, who has again and again held evangelistic meetings in the place. These past missions have been much blessed, and many who came out for Christ are now serving Him faithfully, and doing their best to bring others to Him. The mill manager writes that the mission now concluded has proved one of the best ever held in the town. Several have been brought over on the Lord's side. The full extent of the results cannot be estimated. There has been no excitement, but a quiet work, the fruits of which promise to be abiding and real. Further he adds: "The missions held here from time to time by the Evangelisation Society have been a blessing to hundreds, if not thousands, who have directly or indirectly derived benefit from the preaching of the Gospel."

The workers responsible for Handsworth Mission Chapel, Birmingham, are rejoicing in the outcome of a fortnight's mission. Preceded by many weeks of earnest prayer, these special meetings have been greatly blessed, and the words spoken have proved powerful to break down hard hearts. The interest deepened as the meetings proceeded, and many professed conversion. The evangelist has proved himself a real and effective preacher of the Gospel. A lady, writing as to the same mission, refers to the clearness of the message delivered, the directness and force of the addresses, and the evident results in compelling men and women to seek the Lord.

Evangelists from this society have been holding special services at the Corsham Town Hall during the last four Sundays. The stirring Gospel addresses have been much appreciated, as the attendance proved.

Mr. C. B. Jolliffe has held a three weeks' mission at Coleorton, Leicestershire. The busy time of year was a little against the mission, but much encouragement was given by many of the miners who were on night work coming in their pit clothes, and leaving immediately the meeting ended. The Lord graciously manifested his presence by blessing sinners, and establishing his own people. After the last service a united communion service was held, when a large number of believers from other churches sat down.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

A five weeks' mission in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall has been held by Mr. Walter Notman, who for the last twelve months has had charge of the Albert Hall, Nottingham. The attendances have been above the average. Mr. Notman is a speaker of no mean order, and is a great favourite with those who frequent the hall. His efforts have resulted in many being brought to Christ. Many interesting cases of conversion have come under notice, and have given joy to all who were privileged to witness the work of the Holy Spirit. At the last meeting Mr. Notman held, when bidding farewell, several came up, shaking hands, and saying: "Thank God you came here this month, for God has through you used his hand to my salvation."

LADY ASHBURTON'S HALLS.

In continuation of special services commenced at Lady Ashburton's Hall, Custom House, by Mr. Charles Inglis, on October 31, Mrs. Dawson (now Mrs. Ellis), the converted Gipsy, assisted by her husband (a converted infidel) and daughter Lynda, have been doing substantial work amongst the inhabitants of this dock district.

Mrs. Dawson has much power in speaking and winning souls, and gives accounts of her former life as a gipsy and her companions in caravan and tent with telling effect. She also sings the Gospel in a pleasing manner. The people seem unable to break away, and the meetings are prolonged to considerable length, many coming out and confessing Christ, and others loath to leave till the way of salvation is made plain.

Services have also been held at Albert Central Docks Coffee Rooms, and at Manor Way, North Woolwich, both being branches of Lady Ashburton's Mission Work. Mrs. Dawson is open to conduct services in any part of the country. Her address is Ozone House, Hamlet Court-road, Southend-on-Sea.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. A. George Hooper, one of the Wesleyan evangelists, has concluded a united mission at Retford. The mission was promoted by the Free Church Council, and all the ministers of the town took part.—A similar mission has been conducted by Mr. J. Sampson, another Wesleyan evangelist, at Driffield.—Successful missions have also been held at Blackwood and Hirwain. At the latter village the Wesleyan chapel was packed so full that many persons could not obtain admission.

Mr. C. Minor has been in Portsmouth during the past week, speaking and singing at various places in connection with the Soldiers' Home, Gosport, the Soldiers' Christian Association, and the Soldiers' Institute. In company with Mr. Sidney Smith, of the Soldiers' Institute, he went to Southampton on the departure of a troopship with about 1200 men. On Thursday he spoke on H.M.S. St. Vincent, with Mr. W. Punter; on Friday to wives of Service men; and on Saturday and Sunday to very large congregations at the Royal Sailors' Rest. He has now commenced a mission in a hall which Mr. Logie Pirie has recently erected at Tottingworth Park, Heathfield, Sussex.

Mr. George Hunter, of Aberdeen, has closed an interesting mission in the Baptist Chapel, Weston Turville, in connection with the Bucks Evangelistic Mission. The chapel has been crowded upstairs and down every night. The interest was so great that half an hour before the time of opening the people crowded around the doors waiting to get in. One feature in the work has been the number of young men attending the meetings. Many, it is believed, have found peace in Jesus, and God's people have been greatly stirred for fresh endeavour for the Master.

In London-road Free Church, Glasgow, a very successful series of services for children has been held by the evangelistic committee of the Sabbath School Union, the Gospel teaching being illustrated by limelight views of the Pilgrim's Progress. About 1500 children were present each evening, and in the after meetings many hopeful cases were brought under the notice of the workers.

The Brothers Stewart (of Edinburgh) have brought to a close a fortnight of evangelistic meetings in Maxwelton Free Church, Dumfries. The week evening meetings showed a growth of interest which was most encouraging, and on Sabbaths the accommodation was taxed to its utmost.

Rev. Mr. Lamont, of Snizort, has been conducting evangelistic meetings at the village of Munlochy, in Ross-shire. A deep impression was made on the community as the mission went on.

The Newcastle-upon-Tyne Circus services evidently grow in public estimation, for during this year the attendance has shown the largest average yet reached. As to results, there have been many manifestations of the presence of the Lord, and many cheering reports have come from without of blessing received. Some of the most striking cases of conversion have been of persons who were on a visit to Newcastle, either from a distance or from its immediate neighbourhood. For example: out of a family in a village in Durham, five sisters professed to find Christ through the influence of the Gospel preached in the Palace Theatre.

Mr. R. W. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society, has held a fourteen days' mission in the Chalmers Free Church, Edinburgh. The meetings were well attended, and the addresses characterised by graphic description, incisive statement, and evangelical appeal. There have been clear and satisfactory conversions at every meeting, some of the decisions of a remarkable kind.

Mr. George Clarke commenced a united mission at Winchester, on the 14th inst. He has had good meetings, and considerable interest has been awakened. The mission continues till Tuesday next. Mr. Clarke hopes to commence at Wigan on the following Sunday, Dec. 5.

Requests for Prayer.

For two weeks' Gospel meetings, from November 28, conducted by Mr. W. W. Dunn.

For special services at Folkestone Y.M.C.A. by Mr. J. E. Taylor, assisted by his daughter, Miss F. M. Taylor.

For blessing on a mission at Little Kingshill, Missenden Bucks., beginning December 5, conducted by the pastor and Rev. Kirby Byard, of Winslow.

For a week's mission to be held in the Great Assembly Rooms and the Corn Exchange, Welshpool, to be conducted by Rev. Seth Backhouse, Nov. 27 to Dec. 2.

Work Girls and the City Fire.

THE fire which broke out in the City on Friday last proved the most disastrous of modern times, having destroyed over a hundred different factories and warehouses in sixteen different streets, throwing out of work over four thousand persons. A large number of these are work-girls, among whom Mrs. Fisher has for years been doing a good work. Many of the places burned down were visited by her lady workers, and not a few of those now out of work were in the habit of coming to "The Welcome." This place, at 6, Jewin-street, is right in the area ruined by the fire, and escaped only by a change of wind.

Hence it is but natural that Mrs. Fisher and her helpers should be deeply concerned in the interests of these girls. On Monday we found Mrs. Fisher in Aldersgate-street surrounded by a crowd of distressed girls, who were pouring into her sympathetic ears their tales of distress at the loss of work and wages, which in many of them means so much. These ladies are strenuously endeavouring to help the most needy. In some cases, where girls live at home, things are not so bad; but in other cases, where girls support themselves in lodgings, their outlook is gloomy.

Mr. A. C. P. Coote writes:—During the fire those in charge of the home were in prayer that "The Welcome" might be spared. Just after leaving the Lady Superintendent, I met Commander Wells, the chief of the Fire Brigade, who remarked that "if the wind hadn't shifted the place would have been burned."

May I state, for the information of any who are not aware of the purpose for which "The Welcome" exists, that it has been established for providing meals and a "Home" for the many hundreds of factory girls employed in the surrounding warehouses, a large number of whom are now, of course, temporarily thrown out of work.

Between 300 and 400 City girls dine at "The Welcome" every day, and many also come in for tea. In the evening, classes are provided for them; and the weekly Bible-class on Thursday is attended by a considerable number, rarely less than 200 being present.

The work was commenced fifteen years ago, and a special effort is now being made by the committee to purchase the building and lease. About £3800 is required for this purpose, and contributions will be most thankfully received by Miss Seton Karr, Atherton Grange, Wimbledon.

The Y.W.C.A.

A NEW "MORLEY HALL."

On Friday, the 19th inst., at George-street, Hanover-square, the Viscountess Portman laid the memorial stone of the new hall and gymnasium, which Mr. Howard Morley is giving to the Y.W.C.A. as a jubilee gift in memory of his father, the late Mr. Samuel Morley. The Vicar of St. George's presided. Before laying the stone Lady Portman said that she felt the right person would have been the generous donor himself. A bottle containing a selection of Y.W.C.A. literature was placed within the stone, and Lady Portman declared it to be well and truly laid. The inscription is, "Morley Hall and Gymnasium, 1897," the gymnasium being underneath the hall on the basement level. A vote of thanks to Mr. Morley for his munificent gift, and to Lady Portman for laying the stone, was moved by Dr. Newman Hall, seconded by Rev. C. W. Vick, and carried with rejoicing. A prayer meeting was afterwards conducted indoors by Mr. W. T. Paton, who stated that £6000 was still needed to free the premises of debt, and that £2000 was required for the general work.

NEW HALL AT STRATFORD.

At the rear of the Conference Hall, Stratford, E. a "Jubilee hall" has been erected for Y.W.C.A.' work. The hall is the gift of a kind donor who wishes to be anonymous. On Tuesday, Nov. 9, Archdeacon Stevens presided at the opening ceremony. Miss Duff, District Referee, spoke on Y.W.C.A. work in general, and Miss Boardman reported on the local work. Rev. Arnold Perry and Mr. Boardman also took part. A portion of the hall can be curtained off, and is comfortably furnished for use as a sitting-room, and a secretary's private room is provided. It is hoped that the hall will be a centre of much useful work for many years to come. The anonymous giver will have the heartiest thanks of all who value the Y.W.C.A. and its work.

BRIEF NOTES.

Miss Hull has lately conducted a five days' mission at the Y.W.C.A., Eastbourne, assisted by local friends.

Mr. C. T. Studd has recently conducted mission meetings at the Southport Institute, the Bible readings having been taken by Mrs. Studd and Miss Hatch.

Fowey Y.W.C.A. held their annual meeting on the 4th inst., presided over by Mrs. Treffry, of Place. The report showed ninety-four adult and sixty-three junior members.

The annual meeting of the Brixton branch was held at Raleigh Hall on November 10, when bright, helpful addresses were given by the chairman, Mr. B. J. Greenwood, Hon. Emily Kinnaird, Rev. J. Carnegie Brown, and Rev. W. Fuller Gooch. Financial help is needed at this time, as an agreement has been made to purchase the lease of the house now occupied; £800 is the amount required, of which £300 must be raised at once. The hon. treasurer is Mr. R. Gunston, 111, Loughborough Park.

For thirty-one years the Y.W.C.A. has been at work in Manchester, with varying success, and the rooms in Grosvenor Chambers, Deansgate, are now totally inadequate for the numbers who attend. There is an increasing need in the city for a comfortable and attractive haven for young women in their leisure hours. For the past six months the committee have made diligent search for new premises, A building has been offered in Great Ducie-street, near Victoria Station, and to purchase, adapt, and furnish it will cost about £3000. The secretary is Miss K. Wheeler, Grosvenor Chambers, Deansgate, Manchester.

The Y.M.C.A.

The Sunderland Association, by its membership campaign, has added the names of 214 young men to its register. It has now 976 members.

The Lincoln Y.M.C.A. held on the 14th inst. a very successful service in the Cathedral, at which Rev. H. Percy Grubb, vicar of Oxton, Southwell, was the special preacher.

A "Membership Campaign" in connection with the Sunderland Association has resulted in the addition of 214 new names to the register, bringing the membership up to a total of 976.

Mr. Henry Conder, late president of Bombay Y.M.C.A., presided on the 16th inst. over the annual meeting of the Peckham Association. The speakers were Mr. W. Hind Smith, Mr. H. W. Maynard, and Rev. Frank James.

The Scottish Y.M.C.A.'s have made an earnest effort to improve the occasion of the week of prayer for young men. From all parts of the country accounts have come in of special gatherings for prayer and conference, and of aggressive efforts instituted among the non-churchgoing.

The Countess of Warwick held a most successful book reception at the Coventry Association Rooms last Thursday. There was a large and representative gathering. During the proceedings Lady Warwick received 466 vols., which number has since been augmented to 500, truly a splendid library.

New rooms, opposite the railway station at East Hartlepool, were opened for the Y.M.C.A., on Tuesday week, by Councillor H. Crawford Smith, chairman of the N.E. District Council, who gave an address upon the work of the Association. Rev. C. W. Vaughan presided, and other ministers, the travelling secretary, and Mr. Mitchell took part.

Rev. George Wainwright writes from Sydney that he has been addressing the men's meetings held by the Y.M.C.A. This is one of the most important aggressive efforts of the Association, and is a perpetuation of the Theatre Services commenced many years ago. The audience was made up mainly of working men, to whom it was a joy to tell of God's power to keep."

On Monday week a conference was held in the Oddfellows' Hall, Berwick-on-Tweed, with a view to increasing the public interest in and extending the usefulness of the Y.M.C.A. at Berwick, Tweedmouth, and Spittal. Mr. John Peacock presided, and Mr. J. C. Moor and Mr. J. G. Hardwicke attended as a deputation. The Vicar of Tweedmouth, Rev. A. J. Blagden, Rev. Mr. Grainger (Wesleyan), Councillor Dr. Maclagan, and Councillor Dodds, with Mr. James Henderson and Mr. G. S. Stone, took part.

The universal week of prayer for young men has been observed by Young Men's Christian Associations all over the world from November 14 to 21. In this country special meetings have been held in most Associations on several or all of the evenings of the week, and a very large number of sermons, addressed specially to young men, have been preached from church and chapel pulpits, at the request of the Associations, on the two Sundays. In a few of the larger centres as many as seventy or eighty such sermons have been arranged for.

Feathers for Arrows.

MOTTOES FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

The motto of Lord Lawrence of the Punjab was "Be ready," and that of his elder brother, Sir Henry Lawrence, "Never give in." These may well be acted on in any good cause. They were helpful to Indian statesmen; let them be followed by Christian workers.

AN ILLUSTRATION OF UNBELIEF.

A man once stood on London Bridge, for a wager, offering real sovereigns for a shilling each. The notice which he displayed was plainly worded, and it was read by hundreds of passers-by. But by all it was read incredulously, and therefore with indifference. He won his wager; not a single coin was taken from him! And for the same reason "the Gospel of the grace of God" is ignored.

Dr. Robert Anderson.

REJECTING AN INHERITANCE.

A young woman who had been brought up among the Blackfoot Indians, and who had refused to recognise a wealthy citizen of Cincinnati who claimed her as his daughter, recently married a full-blood Indian of the tribe. Even so many a sinner, becoming infatuated with evil associations, turns a deaf ear to the appeals of the heavenly Father, and prefers wicked courses in the "far country" to purity and heaven.

SATAN A BAD MASTER.

Not long ago, the clerk of a burial board retired after long years of service. Desirous of recognising his worth, the board presented him with deeds for a free burial space! They bestowed upon him nothing for the present life, but simply provided for the disposal of his remains after death. So it is with the devil: he is pitiless to all who serve him. He is a false friend in life, and at the last he has naught for his servants but the darkness of death.

NEEDED TYPES OF MINISTRY.

In the Church of Old Ireland there were bishops for the oversight of many departments of ministry. One class, called "Soul-friends," gave spiritual counsel and help; another, called "Champions," or strong men, superintended the defences of the monastic settlements. The archetype of all such workers is Christ; and we do well to be in the same glorious succession. There are many around us who want the comfort of a "Soul-friend" pastor, many who require the help of a "Strong Man" minister, in meeting life's duties and overcoming its temptations.

"BE YE RECONCILED TO GOD."

When the late Serjeant Wilkins returned to the Law Courts, after an illness which practically ended his career, Mr. Robert Lush (afterwards Justice Lush) saw him sitting with his face in his hands, and tears falling from between his fingers. When the Serjeant hurriedly left the court, Mr. Lush, although not of his acquaintance, followed, and delicately inquired if the Serjeant was in any trouble in which he could be of any service. Gratefully acknowledging the kindness thus shown, the Serjeant explained his distress by saying that he had that morning read 2 Cor. v., and while he sat in court the words "Be ye reconciled to God" had come back to his mind with such power that he could not restrain his emotion. The incident illustrates, among other things, the might of the Apostolic exhortation, and the "finding" nature of the Divine Word.

Personalia.

Dr. E. P. Goodwin, owing to failing health, has resigned the pastorate of the First Church, Chicago, which he has held for 29 years.

Rev. Thomas C. Hall, of the Fourth Presbyterian Church of Chicago, and son of Dr. John Hall, is resigning owing to his health.

Rev. E. Bosworth, travelling secretary of the Grande Ligne Mission, Montreal, is about to visit Great Britain to interest the churches in work among Roman Catholics in the Province of Quebec.

Gen. Sir Arthur Cotton, K.C.S.I., the oldest living soldier of his rank, has been a life-long abstainer. Having been invited to take part in the celebration of the Band of Hope Jubilee, he replied, expressing his regret in being unable to attend and and adding, "I am certainly a living proof of the benefit of abstinence. Sixty-five years ago my grave was dug in Persia, and four times have I been under sentence of death by the doctors through Indian illnesses and accidents, and certainly if I don't need strong drink no young man does."

THE BOOK WORLD.

A Self-Pronouncing Bible.

The Self-Pronouncing Bible is a very useful edition of the "Comprehensive Teachers' Bible." (7s. 6d. Bagster & Sons.) In type and printing this book is "the very thing" for Sunday-school teachers and other workers; while the new and revised "Helps to Bible Study" will render important service in the preparation of addresses and systematic reading. The "Helps" are, in fact, a library in essence, covering a wide field of introduction and explanation, history and antiquarian lore. There is the usual harmonistic, tabular, and analytical information.

Many will welcome the marvellously compact introductions to the Greek of the New Testament and the Hebrew of the Old, while all will find the subject-index and concordance of great utility in searching for parallel passages and in studying the Scriptures topically. Another feature of this Bible is a series of illustrations of objects of archæological interest, and a set of maps with index of places. The binding is so flexible that the book will lie open perfectly flat, and sustain no injury by being rolled up!

The Ritschlian Theology.

Dr. James Orr's new book, The Ritschlian Theology and The Evangelical Faith (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton), is an addition to the Theological Educator series, and a thorough piece of work it is. No man is better able than Professor Orr to describe the Ritschlian system and contrast it with the Evangelical Faith; and in all respects he has done admirably, supporting his statements by notes which bear testimony to his intimate acquaintance with the writings of Ritschl and his followers.

The subjective and insecure nature of Ritschlianism is set off against the reality of the Evangelical basis. A significant incident closes the book. In his "History of Pietism," Ritschl selected for special animadversion Paul Gerhardt's favourite Passion hymn, "O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden" ("O Lamb of God once wounded"), which he thought failed to strike the true Christian note in dwelling on the physical sufferings of Christ instead of on the inner motive of obedience. In his last hours, however, it was this very hymn that he specially desired to have repeated to him! Then, at least, a man may well think little of speculations and imaginings; he needs a realisation of truths going back to God's redeeming purpose as surely revealed and Christ's saving work as fully accomplished.

The Emphasised New Testament.

We called attention a few months ago to the issue in parts of Mr. Joseph Bryant Rotherham's Emphasised New Testament, the third edition of a version which was first published twenty-five years ago. It is a pleasure now to welcome the completed work, and to congratulate the editor upon the success which has attended his efforts in precise translation, literary arrangement, and the indication of emphasis. This edition is much more than a revision of its predecessor; being founded on the Greek text of Westcott and Hort, and remoulded in various particulars, it is practically a new work.

Moreover, it appears as part of a larger design—the Emphasised Bible, by which, at length, it is hoped to present the entire "Divine Library" in the same attractive form as this New Testament. It will be obvious to all that Mr. Rotherham assumed a difficult task when he addressed himself to this great undertaking. He has been compelled continually to choose or reject competing senses and interpretations. Where, however, we may not follow him, we recognise his conscientious purpose and desire to assist the ordinary reader in understanding God's Word. To many this version will be a great help, not only in study, but in devotional reading. Thoughtful Christian workers will appreciate the volume as a present at such a time as this. (10s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.)

ST. PATRICK AND IRELAND.

In The Celtic Church in Ireland, Dr. James Heron, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the Assembly's College, Belfast, tells the story of Ireland and Irish Christianity from before the time of St. Patrick to the Reformation. He points out in his first prefatory sentence, that much ignorance prevails even among Irishmen respecting the history of Ireland. While this is a great pity, the fact is little less deplorable that, though the subject has been unfolded in many a handbook and historical outline, the striking story is as unfamiliar among Protestants as it is misunderstood and misrepresented in Roman Catholic circles.

In the form of a series of lectures, Dr. Heron sketches Irish ecclesiastical affairs for a thousand years or more, and his pages are so clear in style and interesting in substance that they should do something to stimulate inquiry regarding the antiquities of the Isle of Saints. The great sources of information have been consulted, and the story of Patrick, Columba, Columbanus, their "orders" and teachings, their monastic settlements and other institutions, is admirably told.

Rich in evangelistic and educational achievement, the old Celtic church had peculiarities that find no counterpart in modern organisations—ruled by abbots who were sometimes presbyters, at other times laymen, officered by bishops exercising a congregational pastorate rather than a diocesan jurisdiction. The days of old in the Sister Isle have somewhat to teach us of simple life and heroic endeavour, and of those days Dr. Heron gives a good and very readable account. (7s. 6d. Service & Paton.)

SKETCHES OF BIBLICAL SCENES.

In Pictures of the East, by Helen B. Harris (8s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.), we have a handsome volume, containing thirty-two sketches of scenes in Palestine, to which are added five more of the city and neighbourhood of Athens. One or two pages of descriptive letterpress go with each illustration. All who study the Scriptures, whether for personal or active use, will find light upon many a Bible story, and be able the more clearly to appreciate the truths it contains. That the sketches were made a few years ago is no demerit, for more than one of the scenes appear as Nature left them, instead of being covered, as they are to-day, with some modern monstrosity. It is a most instructive and interesting work.

The Anglican for November (1s. 37, Norfolk-street, Strand) is substantial, varied, finely-printed, and capitally illustrated. It ought to make a place for itself in many intelligent Church of England homes.

Commonly Misquoted and Difficult Texts Explained. By Rev. John Mitchell. (9d. G. Stoneman.) This little book explains, with clearness and brevity, over fifty passages that perplex the ordinary Bible reader.

Little Tora, the Swedish Schoolmistress, by Mrs. Woods-Baker (1s. 6d. T. Nelson and Sons), contains three stories, all of them Swedish, told in a very pleasant manner. Scandinavian life is admirably reflected in the pages.

The Children's Study: Germany. By Kate F. Krocker. (2s. 6d. T. F. Unwin.) This lucidly written handbook will form an admirable introduction to a more elaborate historical acquaintance with the great central European Power.

Part VII. of The Queen's Empire (6d. Cassell & Co.) gives further views of work and workers throughout Her Majesty's far-spread dominions. It is deeply interesting and instructive to note the variety of occupation provided for our fellow subjects in different climes.

Twelve Famous Girls, by Marianne Kirlew, is a series of biographical sketches. (1s. 6d. Robert Culley.) From Princess Victoria to Joan of Arc, with Grace Darling, Laura Bridgman, Catherine of Russia, and other worthies in between, this is a very readable and useful little book.

Sacred Art. Part II. Cassell & Co. 6d. The pictures here reproduced from the work of eminent modern painters mainly illustrate the history of Abraham and Jacob. It is wonderful to what an extent the sacred narratives have inspired the imagination and the brush of the artist.

The Swiss Family Robinson retains its powerful hold upon young minds; and Messrs. Ward, Lock, & Co. publish an admirable edition (3s. 6d.) in which the charming story is enlivened and explained by two hnndred engravings, with coloured pictures thrown in. For presentation purposes this is a capital book.

Ideals for Girls, by Rev. H. R. Haweis, is a volume of smart papers on girls of various types—untidy, musical, parochial, learned, mannish, and engaged girls. Finally there is a pleasant chapter on Brides. Good counsel, well spiced with gentle sarcasm, fills this pretty presentation volume. (2s. 6d. James Bowdent).

The Life of Christ. By Dean Farrar, D.D. Messrs. Cassell & Co. are once more reissuing this famous work in weekly parts (6d.), embellished with maps and illustrations, and admirably printed. The opportunity is thus afforded to many for securing a work of intrinsic value and genuine usefulness to teacher and preacher.

The Vanished Yacht. By E. Harcourt Burrage. (2s. 6d. Nelsons.) "Vanished," because stolen by a Spanish adventurer. Pursuit was promptly given in another light craft, and the truant brought up in South American waters. There was excitement on both sides, and the things that were hazarded and accomplished will delight boy readers.

From Me to You is the title of a series of painting books issued by Messrs. Jarrold and Sons (1s. each) The latest issue, the third, is as good as its predecessors. The designs are sufficiently easy for little folks to copy, and the card is perforated so that, when completed, the pictures may be neatly detached from the book, and sent as presents "from me to you."

The Illustrated New Testament, issued by T. Nelson & Sons (2s. 6d.), is a valuable work. The text of the Sacred Record is in beautiful type and printed on admirable paper. The illustrations, two hundred in number, depict Bible scenes, sites, and antiquities, with remarkable clearness and precision. Many of them are from photographs by Bonfils, Thevoz, Mason Good, and others.

Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons send four nicely-bound reward books for young folks (price 1s. each): Little Lois and Joy's Jubilee, by E. Everett-Green, two very pleasing tales for girls; and The Boy Crusaders and The Howe Boys, both, as indicated by the title, likely to interest the boys. Sunday-school teachers will find these well adapted for gifts to their young scholars.

Battledown Boys. By E. Everett-Green. (Sunday School Union. 2s. 6d.) A genuine boy's book; breathing of the downs and meadows, and telling of an honest old farmer, his lively but right-hearted sons, his strained relations with a new landlord, and the eventual clearing up, through the daring of the boys, of mutual misunderstandings. Altogether it is a healthy and stirring tale.

Three Aspects of Temperance: Scriptural, Economic, and Physiological—a course of instruction, forming a compendium of useful knowledge on the temperance question. (3s. Church of England Temperance Society.) The title page of this book gives a good idea of its scope and purpose. Leaders of Bands of Hope will find the pages of great value, for they supply useful material for addresses, syllabuses of instruction, and blackboard summaries.

Bubbles, Dr. Barnardo's monthly for young folks, is as gay as ever; and the half-yearly volume is "A1" for presentation purposes. Here are true tales out of number, and coloured pictures in large variety. Natural history sketches are a feature; there are also outlines for boys and girls to colour. The popularity of this magazine, in serial and bound-up forms, is explained by the all-round excellence of production. (Children's Book-room, 158, Aldersgate Street, E.C.)

A Century of Missionary Martyrs: Being an Account of some who have suffered Martyrdom for the Truth during this century of missionary work. By Rev. S. F. Harris, M.A., B.C.L., Vicar of Walton-le-Dale. (2s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) Here are narratives of men and women who have witnessed unto blood in many lands—in Madagascar and the South Sea Islands, in Central Africa, and China. Whether the story be that of Williams, Patteson, or Hannington, or of native witnesses unknown to fame, the pages are stimulating and profitable.

Life's Look-out. An autobiography of Sydney Watson. (Hodder & Stoughton. Price 3s. 6d.) The seafaring adventures and experiences of many years have provided this prolific writer with an apparently exhaustless mine of material for his popular and useful "Penny Stories." His autobiography now supplies the key to "Wops, the Waif," and many another widely-read narrative. We feel sure that many will peruse this life-story with keen interest and thankfulness that the author should after long and wasted years been led to accept Christ and dedicate his pen to His service.

The Anti-Christian Crusade; or, Official Attacks on Christianity. By Robert P. C. Corfe (1s. 6d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.) The object of this book is to direct attention to the compromising and unsettling utterances of certain ecclesiastical dignitaries on evolution, the composition of the Bible, and other subjects. Mr. Corfe shares our vexation that mere opinions and wild speculations should be placed before the people with all the confidence of assured knowledge; and in this small book he reproduces some recent statements of an extravagant and misleading character.

The Life of Gordon. By D. C. Boulger. (6s. T. Fisher Unwin.) We welcome heartily a third and cheaper edition of this deeply interesting and admirably written memorial of a heroic life. General Gordon's noble devotion, his brilliant service, his splendid self-sacrifice, and above all his exalted character and profound piety, together with his romantic death, form an entrancing chapter in Christian biography. The more widely it is circulated the better for the coming generation. Its lessons are well calculated to fire the mind with high ardour after noble and useful service.

Daily Light. The hallowed and profitable habit of pondering morning and evening a portion of Scripture has been largely furthered by the numerous well-printed and well-bound editions published by Messrs. Bagster & Sons of their famous "Daily Light on the Daily Path." It is superfluous to commend a book which is already the daily companion of many thousands. Suffice it to reiterate its great value as presenting a carefully-chosen meditation for the morning and evening hour, in the words of Scripture, and in a compact and pleasing form. The book may be had in varied and beautiful bindings, and at diverse prices.

Cassell's Family Doctor. By a Medical Man. (10s. 6d. Cassell & Co.) This comprehensive handbook to health is the work, we are told, of a medical practitioner of wide experience and brilliant attainments. As far as a non-expert can judge, the author has produced, at comparatively small cost, a most invaluable help and counsellor in all time of individual or family illness. The plan of the work is systematic, while the explanations are full and simple, and the prescriptions popular in style. No household need now be without guidance in the event of any emergency, and the commoner ailments of life may be warded off without external aid.

The Ne'er do Weel. By Annie S. Swan. (5s. Hutchinson & Co.) With such an industrious writer as the author of this book, we recognise the difficulty of inventing new and reasonably-jointed skeletons on which to construct the story. The plot of the tale before us is neither pleasing nor probable, though we admit that the filling in of the details is well enough done. The title does not seem a happy one to describe the career of a penniless Highland youth who in a remarkable brief span of time acquired an immense fortune and was elected M.P. for his native country. We cannot think that the author's literary reputation will be furthered by this venture.

Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges.—The First Book of Maccabees. Edited, with introduction and notes, by Revs. W. Fairweather, M.A., and J. Sutherland Black, LL.D. (3s. 6d. Cambridge University Press.) Though not included in the Hebrew canon, the books called Apocrypha still form part of the Bible as a Church book. Of the entire collection, the First Book of Maccabees is one of the most valuable as a chapter of Jewish history at once important and interesting. In this edition the text adopted is that of the Revised Version, while the notes are informative in a high degree. A map and several illustrations add to the worth of the book.

Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co. have issued two companion books, Half-a-Dozen Girls and Half-a-Dozen Boys, by Anna C. Ray (3s. 6d. each), and well illustrated. Both are healthful stories of free, happy boys and girls full of spirit, and sometimes of temper as well, by wise influence led in the right path. There are troubles, and one of the boys dies nobly in saving a blind comrade. These books will delight and please juvenile readers. Everybody's Business. By Agnes Giberne. (3s. 6d.) A well-written story of life in an out-of-the-way seaside village, of gallant daring to save life from a ship on the rocks, of the vicar's success in securing a lifeboat, and of certain happy unions that were formed out of it all. A real and high-toned girls' book.

The Herald of Mercy, the well-known illustrated messenger for the people, is much appreciated as a localised monthly magazine. It abounds in earnest Gospel appeals to the unconverted, striking incidents from real life, stories of conversion, Scripture narratives, etc. Each number is well illustrated, and contains a page specially written for the young people. For churches and missions conducting aggressive Christian work among the people we heartily commend "The Herald of Mercy" as a valuable adjunct. Arrangements can be made for any local title and an announcement at foot of first page free of cost on a monthly supply of 300 copies and upwards. Full particulars and specimen copies will be forwarded free on application to Morgan & Scott.

Prisoners of Conscience. By Mrs. Amelia Barr. (6s. T. Fisher Unwin.) Mrs. Barr has written a book professing to deal with certain phases of religious life in Shetland about the beginning of this century. The story is well and powerfully told, and the chief characters are very cleverly drawn. So kindly does she speak of these lonely toilers in the Northern Sea, that it almost seems ungracious to hint at criticism. One feels, however, that she has overburdened the consciences of her "prisoners" with Norse superstition and fatalistic theology. The lighter side of life in the land of the "merry dancers" is altogether wanting. Moreover, her knowledge of local manners, customs, and characteristics is clearly very slight.

The Return to the Cross. By Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D. (3s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) In this volume we have a reprint of leading articles and addresses written or delivered by the accomplished editor of The British Weekly. From the necessities of the case there is no sustained line of thought or argument giving homogeneity to the book, and the hand of the leader-writer is clearly discerned in the polemical tone of many of the chapters, as well as in their literary allusiveness and garnishment of style. But the prevailing trend of the author is in the direction of upholding and defending the Pauline theology respecting Christ and Him crucified, and this, needless to say, is ably and conclusively done. Dr. Nicoll is a living illustration of the compatibility of modern culture with old-fashioned orthodoxy.

Ecclesiasticus xxxix. 15 to xlix. 11. Translated from the Original Hebrew, and Arranged in Parallel Columns with the English Revised Version of 1895. By A. E. Cowley, M.A., and Ad. Neubauer, M.A. (2s. 6d. The Clarendon Press). The editors of the Hebrew text here supply a version of the interesting fragment, of which a facsimile is given as frontispiece. Though in the prologue to the Greek translation of the book we are told that Ecclesiasticus was originally written in Hebrew, it was not until about a year ago that the portion of the text here translated came under the eye of scholars. Students of the "Proverbs of Ben Sira" will find profit in an examination of these pages. It is worthy of note that in their preface the Editors declare the Hebrew of the text to be of the Old Testament classical type, with a certain admixture of words peculiar to the later language.

In a striking passage of her book on Rich and Poor (3s. 6d. net. Macmillans), Mrs. Bosanquet sounds a note of warning against the tendency of the Churches to turn their energies too much in the direction of outward reform, and so of forgetting their distinctively spiritual mission. Speaking of the slow progress they are making in the East End, and of the hopeless absorption of the poor in their immediate struggles and present distresses, she says :—

> The one thing needful to-day is to lift up the people in some way out of themselves, and give them wider interests and a more steadfast hold upon realities. Yet with the mass of the people the Church has failed utterly and entirely to do this. The strength of its position, the patience and enthusiasm of many of its ministers, stands helpless before the stolid indifference of the thousands whom it regards as its flock.

Then follows an illuminating remark as to the reason.

> Why, she asks, has not religion done this for them in the past? Why does it not do it now? I believe it is due largely because the ministers of religion have allowed the spirituality of their work to be swamped by the material needs around them.

There is here something worth pondering over.

CALENDARS AND ALMANACS.

The "Life of Faith" Almanack, 1898. (Marshall Bros.) Rev. E. H. Hopkins gives, besides the daily texts, suggestive Bible readings and extracts bearing on the spiritual life.

The Friends' Foreign Mission Almanack (1d. Headley Brothers) is replete with missionary interest. The leading illustration represents Khama, the Bechuana Chief, among his people.

The Ian Maclaren Kalendar, 1898. (2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) An illuminated wall kalendar, embellished with views in and around Drumtochty, and accompanied by extracts from several of Dr. Watson's books.

The Golden Grain Almanacks, issued for so many years by Mr. J. H. Hawkins, 36, Baker-street, W., will again be welcomed by those who have proved their helpfulness in the past. The "Diary and Pocket Book" (1s. 6d.) will be a useful companion through the year.

Spurgeon's Illustrated Almanack, 1898. (1d. Passmore & Alabaster.) This well-known book almanack preserves its original and useful form. The extracts are from sermons by the late Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, while Mrs. Spurgeon contributes a touching letter.

The Scripture-Subject Searching Almanac for 1898 is a compilation which will afford useful exercise to students of God's Word. The selections have been made so as to bring together similar expressions from different parts of Scripture, under the sub-title of "Two-fold Similarities." (1d. Marshall Bros.)

John Ploughman's Almanack (1d. Passmore & Alabaster) seems to show no falling off in the quaintness and practicality of the daily mottoes. There are two illustrations of the Beulah Baptist School Chapel at Bexhill-on-Sea, and a photograph group of students under the "Question Oak" at Westwood.

The Religious Tract Society issue The Scripture Pocket Book, 1898 bound in leather (1s. 6d.), very compact and handy, with daily texts and a variety of useful business information. The Pocket Almanac (2d., interleaved) and The Penny Almanack (1d.) are useful pocket companions; while the Illustrated Sheet Almanack (1d.) is attractive and informative. The People's Almanack (1d.) abounds in pleasing and popular pictures.

The British Workman, one of the oldest and best known of monthly magazines, will, after this year, be edited by Mr. Sam Woods, M.P.

"Horner's Christmas Number" this year is entitled The Red House on the Moor. It is by Fanny Eden, and is in a very bright cover and accompanied by a coloured plate, "Black-Eyed Susan." (3d. Horner & Son.)

Your Redemption Draweth Nigh, by A. Gay, is a pamphlet giving, in the words of the title-page, "signs and tokens of the approaching end of the Gentile times in 1898¼, and the speedy coming of Christ." The author follows Mr. Dimbleby on many points of detail. (1d. Nister.)

Ernest Nister, 28, Paternoster Row, has issued illuminated motto cards in several sizes. They are of varied design and bear appropriate words from Holy Scripture. A special card has been prepared for Christian Endeavour Societies exhibiting the familiar motto and badge. "Watchword" cards (size 10¾in. by 7¼in.), furnished with a cord for hanging, will be welcome in many a home. (2d. each.) There are also attractive cards with Christmas wishes. (Packets of twelve, 6d. and 1s.)

Theatrical Employees. — Mr. Forbes gave last week a tea to a number of ballet girls and "dressers" in the Orange-street Chapel Lecture Hall, Leicester-square. Such meetings have been held from time to time for the past twenty years in order to bring the Gospel before them. After a substantial tea had been served, the guests sang hymns and listened to solos as well as to a few earnest addresses.

Railway Stations: A Suggestion.—An esteemed correspondent writes :—Will some to whom God has entrusted much wealth, spend a portion by placing enamel plates in and about London railway stations, displaying striking texts, or forcible sentences, such as, "Where wilt thou spend eternity?" "The coming of the Lord draweth nigh," etc. It is marvellous how the eye is attracted by these. I would suggest only one or two should be used, and these constantly repeated. I am aware that texts of Scripture are placed in many tram cars, but I have never seen them where I suggest.

The Sultan as Reformer —According to the Constantinople correspondent of the Speaker, Turkish enthusiasm at the recent military and diplomatic successes of the Sultan is giving way to the old dissatisfaction. All officials are six months in arrears with their pay, business does not recover its buoyancy, 50,000 recruits have been called out to make up for the losses in the army through the Greek war, and Turkey has nothing substantial to show for her victories. Meanwhile Russia is checkmating the Sultan's scheme of strengthening the navy by threatening in that case to demand the arrears of her own war indemnity, and though Turkish diplomacy has succeeded in straining the relations of the European Powers with one another, it has not made a single real friend among them. In view of these facts, the Sultan is said to be contemplating turning his attention to internal reforms in his empire. He will have plenty of work to undo the abuses of his own empire. He can never undo the tragic results of his fanatical frenzy against some of his best subjects.

OFFICES—10, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

This Society exists to develop the INDUSTRIAL ELEMENT in Missionary Operations by associating Manufacturing, Agricultural, and other Industries with the ordinary work of Foreign Missions—financially separate, but linked in close fellowship.

If capital can be Safely Invested in Missionary Industries, it may be reasonably inferred that Christian Capitalists will give the preference to such investments. For further information apply to the Secretary.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNER SOCIETY.

In connection with the above old-established Society dinners are now being given. Funds are most urgently needed. 200,838 Dinners were given last season.

Donations will be thankfully received and acknowledged by Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.; or H. Morton Carr, Esq., 13, Ilminster-gardens, Lavender-hill, S.W. (Secretary); or the Bankers, Messrs. Barclay and Co., 1, Pall Mall East S.W., or the Editor.

Midnight Meeting Movement.

(Established in 1859.)

Arrangements have been made by the Committee of Management to hold gatherings of outcast women all over London during the Winter months.

A series of Special Meetings will be held on the last nights of 1897.

The funds have suffered greatly through the recent Jubilee Festivities. Each reader of THE CHRISTIAN is asked to send a contribution to c/o Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT, or to

C. WILSON McCREE, Secretary.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

STARVING AND DESTITUTE

Sheltered and Fed.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

Already, since this work began, over 40,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

Free Meals for the very poor, both Adults and Children, are given every week to some hundreds all the year, and have proved a great boon to many really starving and destitute poor.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, 6, REGENT-SQUARE, GRAY'S INN ROAD, LONDON, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an urgent appeal for Contributions:—

1.—For the GENERAL FUND—the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.

2.—For the CHILD'S FUND—a guinea or two to pay the nurses would, in many cases, rescue a mother and child. Five shillings would pay for a child for a week.

3.—For LAW EXPENSES—in every case, if it be possible, the men are compelled to pay for the child's support.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent, and the Committee are in great distress for funds.

Scottish Notes.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the Glasgow Foundry Boys' Religious Society was held last Thursday. The number of lads and girls enrolled is over 19,000.

Miss Emily Bernard (sister of Sir Charles Bernard), who has for several years been working as a missionary in India, has recently addressed several meetings on behalf of the Church of Scotland Women's Foreign Missionary Association.

A great missionary farewell meeting was held in Edinburgh on Sunday night, when a large number of missionaries, in connection with the U.P. Church of Scotland, gave interesting addresses. Most are returning to their fields of labour after furlough, but some go out for the first time.

Special services have been held at Ullapool (West Coast), by Mr. Pittendrigh, of the Scottish branch of the Evangelisation Society. This was not his first visit to the Highlands. On the invitation of the Duchess of Sutherland he visited various districts in Caithness and Sutherland, where he laboured with much acceptance and success.

The Home of Rest for the Aged at Dalkeith continues to fill a useful niche in caring for those who need such help. There are at present twenty-one inmates, with room for an additional aged man. It would be very desirable to purchase the house if friends will help in the effort. The hon. lady superintendent is Mrs. Pearson, 80, Thirlestane-road, Edinburgh.

This year's holiness convention at Edinburgh (says a correspondent) has been a marked advance on that of previous years. The attendance has been large. The truth proclaimed has centred more around the person of a crucified and risen Saviour as the only source of life and power, than on any former occasion. We believe that the Holy Ghost has carried light and blessing to many.

The agent for Eastern China of the National Bible Society of Scotland reports the successful distribution of 20,000 Gospels among students attending the triennial examinations at Nanking and Hanchow. Copies of the first Japanese Family Bible, and of the Gospels of Matthew and John in raised letters for the blind, printed at Yokohama, have been received. A grant of £420 has been made to the Evangelical Society of Geneva, forty-two of whose agents sold in France during the summer months 11,048 Scriptures, including 7278 Bibles and Testaments.

In the course of a lecture in Wishaw Free Church on "The Progress of Ritualism in this Country," Rev. William Paterson, of Edinburgh, said that there were 23,000 churches belonging to the Church of England, and that 7062 of these were thoroughly ritualistic. The English churches which practised ritualism were growing at the rate of 1000 a year. Two years ago there were 1132 confessing priests in the Church of England, and forty-six in the Episcopal Church of Scotland. The time had come when all Scotland should stand together and put an end to this.

The annual report of the Grove-street (Home Mission) Institute, Glasgow, gives the record of another year of good work among the masses of the city, on which the seal of Divine approval has been set. In addition to the general evangelistic, medical mission, temperance, and benevolent work, there are special departments for men, women, young men, young women, working lads, and children of both sexes. The true ideal of territorial home mission work is being worked out; and whenever a link is formed with any member of a household, that is used as the first of a chain for bringing all under Gospel influences.

Last Thursday the annual meeting of the friends and supporters of the Orphan Homes of Scotland was held in Glasgow. Mr. Quarrier reported that during the year the donations for daily maintenance amounted to over £13,000, in addition to large quantities of clothing and provisions. Nearly £7,650 were received for the Consumptive Hospitals. The number of boys and girls received was 409, which added to those resident at the beginning of the year makes a total of 1450 dealt with in the twelve months. 235 children were sent to Canada, and sixty-five returned to friends now able to help them. The Children's Night Refuge is not now found to be so much required, but the Training Home for Young Women and the Working Boys' Home are filling a useful place. The Consumptive Hospitals are rapidly approaching completion.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. W. J. Somerville has been elected rector of St. George the Martyr's, Southwark.

More than 200 special sermons were preached on Sunday week on behalf of the East London Church Fund.

Rev. F. W. Ford, of All Saints', Mile-end New-town, has been appointed to the vicarage of St. Matthew's, City-road.

Rev. E. A. Stuart has announced his intention of devoting the stipend of the "Jones Lectureship" to the aid of Church work in East London.

Rev. W. Atkinson Blake, vicar of Bradley, Redditch, and Rev. C. E. Julian, vicar of Styvechale, have announced their intention of resigning their respective charges.

Canon Overton, rural dean of the Isle of Axholme, has resigned the rectorship of Epworth, Lincs., on account of ill-health, and has accepted a small country living in Leicestershire.

The charge of Thames Ditton, Surrey, vacant by the resignation of the Rev. E. H. Rogers after thirty-five years' service, has been accepted by Rev. Bainbridge Bell, vicar of Micheldever.

A bank-note for £100 was sent to the Church Army headquarters in Edgware-road, by an anonymous donor on Saturday in aid of the work of the society among the outcast and starving.

Rev. E. P. Williams has accepted the post of organising secretary for the diocese of Lebombo, the Bishop of which has at present only three clergymen working under him, though the diocese is as large as the whole of England.

Lady Low will open the annual sale of work in aid of the Church Army Labour Homes for the Outcast on December 8, in the Portman Rooms, Baker-street. The Training Home Anniversary Conference will be held at the headquarters, in Edgware-road, on December 10.

As a protest against the introduction of "Ritualistic practices" in the church of St. John, Dukinfield, five superintendents and thirty-seven teachers of the Sunday-school are reported to have sent in their resignations. One of the superintendents has opened a class in his own house, which is attended by over eighty scholars.

Congregational.

Rev. John A. Hamilton has been welcomed at Penzance.

Rev. A. E. Killon, late of Nelson, has been recognised at Lowther-street, Carlisle.

Rev. Stanley Rogers has completed twenty-one years' useful labour at Westminster-road Chapel, Liverpool.

Rev. J. Calvert has been recognised at Emmanuel Church, Margate (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion).

Rev. J. T. Cynon Davies has commenced his ministry at Spa Fields, Clerkenwell (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion).

Ten young people have been received into membership at Trinity Chapel, Sudbury, eight of whom were members of the Christian Endeavour Society.

Centenary services have been held at New Windsor, Salford. Rev. F. Hill, rector of Christ Church, Salford, delivered a sympathetic address at the public meeting.

Rev. G. Henry Sandwell, late of New Britain, Connecticut, U.S.A., has been recognised as pastor of Leytonstone Church, of which the late Rev. C. B. Symes was minister.

Rev. James Le Pla bade farewell to his Harringay congregation on Sunday. He is leaving England immediately to enter upon his work as pastor of Caledon-square Church, Cape Town

The first anniversary of Rev. Harold E. Brierley's pastorate has been held at Queen-street, Sheffield. Mr. Batty Langley, M.P., who presided, said the church was more promising now than at any period in his connection of forty-five years with it.

The Welsh Congregationalists have recently commenced a Forward Movement, which is meeting with liberal support. The object is "to reclaim the unattached in Wales and the Welsh in English towns, and to assist the weaker churches." Recent promises amount to over £1000, one earnest temperance reformer at Merthyr giving £500.

A telegram has been received from the deputation of the London Missionary Society in Madagascar intimating that Mr. Evan Spicer will leave Tamatave for England by the East Coast route on December 18. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, who leaves on the 21st, will spend a few weeks visiting the mission stations in South Africa before returning home.

Calls.—Mr. E. C. Rattray, of Westbury-on-Severn, to Bishop Auckland; Mr. D. Jenkins, of Alltness, to Rhos, Cibbelyll, Swansea; Rev. W. J. Dickson, of St. Paul's, Wigan, to Paisley; Rev. Rowland Sturt, of Stourport, to Bracknell; Mr. Rowland G. Maple, of Hackney College, to Yarm-road, Stockton-on-Tees; Rev. John E. Christie, Sanquhar, to Darvel E. U. Church.

Resignations.—Rev. C. S. Pedley, of Friern Barnet; Rev. L. A. Lees, of Hood Memorial, Glasgow; Rev. J. D. Thomas, of Penydarren, Glamorgan.

Baptist.

Rev. S. Knowles has been recognised as pastor of Union Church, Winchcombe.

Holland-road Church, Hove, reports 322 members—42 of whom were received last year.

Rev. Joseph Booth, late of Swaledale, has been recognised in his new charge at Gawthorpe, Ossett.

Rev. Seth Backhouse has conducted a helpful and successful eight days' mission at Fishwick-street Chapel, Rochdale.

Spring Hill Church, Birmingham, reports that more than 200 members have been admitted during the five years' pastorate of Rev. T. E Titmuss.

Rev. R. Wright Hay, who is engaged on a visitation of the churches on behalf of the Baptist Missionary Society, has been in Liverpool for ten days.

Interesting meetings have been held in connection with the settlement of Rev. T. W. Way, at Fleet, Hants. A hopeful spirit was manifested as to the future.

The forty-first anniversary of Rev. S. A. Tipple's settlement at Upper Norwood was celebrated last week. Mr. Tipple gave some reminiscences of his early ministry.

Rev. S. A. McCracken has now been pastor at Hendon for three months, and there are many encouraging signs. The congregations, both at the week evening services and on Sunday, have largely increased, and the church is having monthly additions to the membership.

The anniversary at Leigh, Essex, was held last week. Special sermons were preached on Sunday by Revs John Bettridge and Arthur C. Sidey. The report showed an increase in membership, the reduction of the chapel debt, and a healthy tone existing in the manifold agencies of the church.

During the three years' ministry of Rev. A. C. Jarvis at the Bethel Chapel, Macclesfield, 136 persons have professed conversion and 72 members have been added to the church. A debt has also been cleared off. A special effort is now being made to raise funds for very much needed alteration and renovation.

The annual tea in connection with Gorse Lane Chapel, Swansea, took place last week, and proved an unqualified success, nearly 300 attending. It was announced that a lady had contributed the sum of £40 towards the debt on the schoolroom, and in response to an appeal from the pastor, Rev. E. Palgrave Davy, further sums were promised amounting to £42 7s. These amounts, in addition to the sum of £50 collected by Mr. Stephen Baker, clear the building entirely from debt, and a special thanksgiving service was held last Sunday morning.

Calls.—Rev. S. Jones, of Farnworth, to Twickenham; Rev. T. Pandy John, of Barry Dock, to Sandy Hill and Marloes, Milford Haven; Rev. J. E. Barton, of Gloucester, to Newport-road, Middlesbrough; Rev. G. R. Y. Fearn, of Kensal Town Mission, to Orpington.

Methodist.

Rev. J. F. Barnard, of Northwich, is laid aside by illness.

Successful anniversary meetings have been held at Belmont-row, Birmingham.

Rev. W. L. Watkinson has promised to preach the annual sermon of the London Primitive Methodist Council on February 8.

Through the kindness of a lady, a Home of Rest, for workers in connection with the London Wesleyan Mission, has been opened at Tooting Bec Common.

At Llandrindod the attendance at the services is well maintained. The friends are doing all in their power to secure the erection of a chapel, which is much needed.

A sketch of the life of Rev. George Robinson, of Leeds, appears in the Quiver. He is the oldest minister in the United Methodist Church, and for many years has been a supernumerary stationed at Leeds.

On the Sunday after his election as the member for Middleton, Alderman Duckworth preached anniversary sermons in one of the chapels of the Rochdale circuit. Most of his Sundays are occupied in preaching.

Principal Roberts, of Aberystwyth College, is pleased with the steadily-increasing appreciation entertained towards education by his countrymen. In 1891 there were in the college eighty-five students from Wales, but in 1897 the number has risen to 227.

Rev. Thomas Jackson has made arrangements for students of the Manchester College to spend their Christmas vacations in work at the Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, thus taking the first step towards a Primitive Methodist Settlement in London.

Rev. Henry Mann, the newly-elected secretary of the London Chapel Extension Scheme (United Methodist) is urgently calling for greater financial support. It is felt that building schemes should at once be promoted at Willesden, Streatham, and East Ham. It is pleaded that the fund ought to have had an annual income of £1000.

The annual services and meeting of the Leeds Auxiliary of the New Connexion Missionary Society on Sunday and Monday were helped by the presence and addresses of two returned missionaries from North China, Rev. John Innocent (President of Conference), who has served thirty-seven years in China, and Rev. John Robinson, who has been there twenty years, and only returned home on account of a serious illness a few months ago.

Presbyterian.

The Synodical Committees were held last week in London.

Good reports have been received of the progress of the new congregation at Reading.

Rev. William Hutton, of Birkenhead, has been nominated Moderator of the English Synod.

An appeal is about to be issued to increase the capital of the Aged and Infirm Ministers' Fund.

Rev. James Beattie, newly appointed as missionary for China, will shortly start for his field of labour.

A new mission centre has been opened at Ruabon in connection with the Forward Movement in Wales.

Owing to continued ill-health Rev. James Mackenzie has resigned his position as organising secretary of the Church Building Fund.

A new chapel is to be erected near New-street Station, Birmingham, to take the place of one now situated in Granville-street.

At the morning service on Sunday, at Sefton Park Church, Liverpool, Dr. Watson ("Ian Maclaren") announced his decision to decline the call to Kensington Church, London.

Salvation Army.

Mrs. Booth will open a new home for soldiers and sailors at Devonport next month.

In all, 1786 officers have been sent as missionaries from Great Britain to foreign countries.

A maternity home has been opened in New York for women living in the slums of that city

A new shelter and lodging home for men in Cape Town has been opened by the Mayor of that town.

The officers of the Army in Java live in native style, using neither bread, sugar, tea, milk or potatoes. They use no tables, carpets nor beds, walking with bare feet, and sleeping on the floors.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

WE direct special attention to the article on page 18 of our present issue entitled "The Awakening of India." Not alone in India are there searchings of heart as to the progress of Christianity and the depth of Gospel work. In many quarters there is a conviction that prayer is the momentary need of the Church of Christ. It is felt, however, that India is on the point of awakening, and that the time has arrived for importunate pleading that God will hasten his kingdom in that dark land. Therefore, in calling attention to Mr. Walker's thoughtful article, we would also intimate that, with the hearty approval of the various missionary bodies, Sunday, Dec. 12, has been set apart as a Day of Prayer for the Awakening of India. It is fervently hoped that the churches of the home lands will also observe the day, and join hands with the missionaries in prayer on behalf of India's millions.

Now and again someone publishes a new recipe for a long life, in the form of aphorisms on the care of the health. None of them seem to include any reference to religion as a conservator of the physical life. Sir James Sawyer, speaking at Birmingham the other day, included two moral maxims: (1) Limit your ambition, (2) Keep your temper. The Psalmist goes deeper to the heart of things when he links the promise of a long life with a true and earnest faith in God. The 91st Psalm is a beautiful, sweet lyric on the conserving influence of such a faith over the whole of life, including the physical. "With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation." No promise is absolute, but longevity and piety are often closely related, and the man who is devout and spiritually obedient will tend to prolong his life as well as sweeten and ennoble it. Christ is the Saviour of the body as well as of the soul.

In a trenchant letter to Miss Willard, Mrs. Josephine Butler has severed her connection with the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union, having resigned her position as superintendent of the Purity Department, to which she was re-elected by the recent Convention at Toronto. Her reason for doing so is that neither Miss Willard, the president of the Union, nor her committee seem fully to recognise that the scheme put forward in six propositions by Lady Henry Somerset, vice-president of the Union, is an odious form of regulation of vice. Mrs. Butler says that, as a firm abolitionist, and hon. president of the International Federation for abolishing all forms of regulating vice, she cannot appear before the public as the holder of an office in a Union of which a promulgator of an extreme form of regulation is the vice-president. We can only commend this step, which sets principle and consistency first, and hope that it may do something towards saving great moral questions at home from being subordinated to personal considerations.

The London School Board Election has resulted in a great victory for those who, wishing to stand by the compromise of 1871, were opposed to sectarian teaching in the schools. It is lamentable that so small a proportion as 25 per cent. of the electorate should have voted, but the fact remains that the thinking portion of the people of London who have taken the trouble to express their opinion by means of the ballot are decidedly opposed to the sacerdotal aims of those who would rob religion of its life and reduce it to a mere mechanism of priest and dogma. This is emphatically a children's age, and we cannot but rejoice that the verdict of London has been decided for the religious and mental well-being of the children.

Two things have been made clear by the decisive result of the election. First, the community has made demands for a thoroughly efficient education on a religious basis. This has been no triumph for Secularism. It was found out conclusively during the electioneering campaign that parents would have nothing to do with those who would like to banish the Bible from the schools. Even non-churchgoers are anxious that their children should be instructed in Biblical and Christian knowledge, so long as the teachers avoid debatable subjects. Secondly, this religious teaching must be non-sectarian. The sacerdotalists are receiving their dismissal from the field of primary education. This attempt to capture the Board schools in the interest of a particular creed, after a campaign of four years, has failed. The compromise has vindicated itself, and is fixed more firmly than ever as the basis of elementary education.

The Dean of Norwich draws a painful picture of the privations of some clergymen; according to him many are suffering from hunger, others do not know where to turn for clothes, and many of their wives are maids-of-all-work. He speaks as one who knows the inside life of the Church of England, and from whose house assistance is constantly being sent to poverty-stricken brethren. This is a reproach which the richest church in this rich country ought to wipe out at once. If anything of the misery is caused by imperfect or bad organisation, this ought to be within reach of a reforming hand, and such portion as arises from unfaithful giving on the part of churchmen ought to be done away with by the exercise of a new spirit, by the exercise of faithfulness to our Lord, and gratitude for the spiritual blessings received.

If newspaper reports are to be trusted, the treatment accorded to two ex-Roman Catholic priests by the mob in Manchester last week is a disgrace to all who took part in the demonstration. The action of the crowd was so reckless and determined in their hostility to Rev. T. Connellan, who had come to tell the story of his conversion from Romanism, that even the police seem to have been helpless to control it, and he had to retire in spite of the vast multitude that had come to hear him. This gentleman has been treated with almost similar violence in other places, which suggests an organisation among the Roman Catholic roughs of the towns. The day for such methods of argument are surely over. "Popery must be in a sad case if this is the only answer it can give to statements of fact," says the Methodist Recorder, and we agree.

We wonder whether the Pope has intuitive knowledge of Party questions, or whether he studies the national and municipal politics of all countries for himself, and then comes to an enlightened conclusion on the subject? He has sent messages or emissaries to France, Spain, and Canada to inform the "faithful" how they are to vote. The abject mental slavery of those who have resigned their will and reason into the hands of the priest is most pitiable. They are robbed not only of will and reason, but, worse still, of any desire of mental improvement generally. For what is the use of a cultivated mind if you are not permitted to use it? The ignorance of Roman Catholics may be gathered from the fact that in one of the recently held suburban School Board elections two-thirds of the spoiled or semi-spoiled papers were used by people who evidently wanted to support the Roman Catholic candidate.

The disclosures being made in the extraordinary Dreyfus mystery in Paris reveal a terribly low standard of public life in France. French politics seem to be honeycombed with corruption, intrigue, and unprincipled self-seeking. Each fresh agitation unfolds dark and fatal symptoms of decline in the standard of public service. There are doubtless many causes for this sad condition of affairs. What seems certain is that at the root of it all is that profound loss of faith in spiritual realities which is the most remarkable feature of French thought during recent times. There are, it is true, signs of a dawning change in this matter, but it will be long ere it can do much to leaven the mass. So long as the nation is divided between an ignorant Romanism and a heedless materialism there can be little hope of a thorough reformation of public life. Superstition and indifferentism in religion have always been parents of prolific abuses.

The Gresham Divinity Lectures just delivered by Prof. Bevan closed with a suggestive contrast between Mohammedanism and Christianity. The religion of the Prophet finds a good many thoughtless exponents among students of the East, who lay stress on certain principles imbedded amid the great mass of nonsense in the Koran. What they do not always remember is that Islamism is a degenerate descendant of Judaism, with a dash of Christian truth to leaven the whole. It has borrowed from the Old Testament records, mixing these with Talmudic legend; and its vital doctrines are easily traced back to the Bible. As we find it to-day, it is non-progressive in all that makes for a true and holy life. Islamism fails to satisfy the onward aspirations of humanity. As Mr. Bevan pointed out in closing, "the Christian Gospel, broadly based on principles rather than rules, alone fulfils the need." That is because it is a true Gospel of Grace, and not a mere doctrine of Fate.

In the Studia Sinaitica just issued by the Cambridge University Press, an interesting account is given of another important discovery in Biblical scholarship. It is an old lectionary, consisting of portions of the Old Testament, the Acts, and most of the Epistles, written in the Syriac dialect used by our Lord and his Apostles, and it consists of 228 pages of well-preserved vellum. It will be an invaluable help to the study of this peculiar dialect, the existing literature of which is only too scanty; and when the results are tabulated, it will probably throw important light on textual and expository questions. There are some interesting various readings of Scriptural texts, and as the Old Testament lessons it contains have been translated from the Septuagint or Greek version, it will doubtless assist in settling some doubtful Old Testament problems. These successive finds are gradually enabling us to come to more and more perfect certainty as to the precise meaning of Scripture, though they add nothing to its substance. The Word remains the same.

In view of the Christmas season, some of our friends have expressed a wish to obtain the Paragraph Bible (see p. 7), without undertaking the responsibility of distributing the accompanying numbers of The Christian, which is the condition on which the Bible is sent out at a nominal price. Our publishers have therefore adopted an alternative plan for this month, by which intending purchasers may have the Bible alone for 8s. 6d. post free.

Many correspondents, in ordering or acknowledging the Bible, give expression to their appreciation of The Christian. It is impossible to reply to all these letters individually, and we therefore take this opportunity of thanking our friends for their kind words of encouragement. We are always glad to know of any features in our paper which our readers find specially helpful. Thus a Sunday-school worker in a seaside town writes:—

I often make use of the "Young People's Page," which is very useful and instructive.

Quite a number of the testimonials as to the value of the paper come from old subscribers. Thus a lady writes from Barnet:—

I have been a reader of The Christian for upwards of twenty years, and find it most helpful week by week, and feel sure it has greatly influenced me for good in my Christian life.

A reader in Bournemouth speaks of the "great pleasure" she will have in helping to increase the circulation of The Christian, "having read it nearly ever since 1860, in the old Revival days."

According to The Daily News there are in round numbers twenty million journals and magazines issued each week in this country, excluding all dailies and those weekly papers which are mainly news sheets. And within the last seventeen years more great fortunes have been made by publishing popular weeklies than by any other industrial occupation in England. As for the kind of production that is most relished, one manager declared that the surest way of raising the circulation is to get a good war story;

A really popular tale of that kind adds fifty thousand to our sale.

That there are probably more readers of good books and periodicals than ever may be taken for granted, but there is an army of frivolous readers, and of worse than frivolous, not to mention a considerable number of simply obtuse readers, who have acquired the art of reading, but have no taste or discernment.

One surprising and not very encouraging growth has been the newer comic journals, sheets mainly made up of pickings from American comic weeklies, very crudely illustrated, and mostly without a flash of genuine humour from cover to cover. One of these sells considerably over half a million a week; another, which has only been established a few months, already has a circulation of considerably over two hundred thousand.

This is a doubtful compliment to the "ever-increasing intelligence" of our highly civilised community. Such reading may (or may not) "do no harm"; it does no good, and at the best comes within the category of "idle words"—wastrel seeds, sure of sorry harvest.

There is no class of people, according to The Methodist Times, that more needs the services of a benevolent Lord Shaftesbury than those engaged in the "amusement industry." Thousands of them never have a seventh day of rest, unless they pay for it. Even as it is, the Sunday is usually given up to rehearsals, mostly without extra payment. Where orchestras are employed, especially in seaside resorts, the working-days are seven, not six. The same is true of many of our waiters and others in restaurants. In the case of theatrical companies on tour, the travelling is almost always on a Sunday. The employés in these occupations have no remedy. They are the victims of circumstances. Protests would only result in dismissal. And yet in some quarters the cry is ever for a "freer" Sunday, i.e., one given over to pleasure-seeking. These pleasure-seekers are selfish, they would purchase their amusement at the price of other people's slavery.

Sister Lily, of the West End Wesleyan Mission, who spent a week recently in New York exploring the "slums," made an interesting comparison between the condition of the poor in that city and in London, published in The New York Herald. The result is not favourable to our own city. There is in New York less overcrowding, drunkenness, filth, hunger, and misery than here. In all the saloons she visited, Sister Lily found only one woman, and only one man really drunk. This contrasts favourably with the report of one social explorer in London recently, who on a Sunday evening counted as many as seventy women entering one public-house within the short space of an hour! Sister Lily tells a pithy story of a London working-man, who gave his opinion of the secret of reforming the terrible condition of the London poor:—

"Some say," said he, "'educate, educate, educate!' others say, 'legislate, legislate, legislate!' I say, 'regenerate, regenerate, regenerate!'"

This man went to the heart of the trouble.

Better that attention should be called to temperance by an unconscious misrepresentation of the proposals of the temperance party than that nothing should be said at all. Hence we are glad that Mr. Herbert Gladstone has said that the local veto idea is all a mistake, and that we ought to aim at three feasible things, as he deems them—(1) To detain compulsorily by law any person in whom drunkenness has become a disease; (2) to increase the penalty with each offence committed; (3) to give licensing magistrates the power to insist upon proper buildings where licences are granted, this provision being covered with a legal provision that public-houses shall be in a certain proportion to the population. Now temperance men do not object to the doing of anything that can be done justly to cripple and diminish the drink traffic, while they still hold that the people should be able to close public-houses if they wish so to do. Why did Mr. Gladstone omit Sunday Closing from his reforms? It is the most clamant of all.

There is one fact which makes strongly in favour of Sunday closing which should be firmly fixed in the minds of all who desire that measure. During the three years following the adoption of Sunday closing in Scotland the commitments for Sunday drunkenness diminished by 7172 cases. Were the reduction in England to be in the same proportion to our population, it would mean that there would be 22,600 fewer convictions for drunkenness than during the three years ending December, 1897. To effect a change like that would be a great work, and well worth the doing. It would keep many a youth from his first fall, and preserve many a family from shame. If the churches ever would arise in force and demand this reform the day of rest might be redeemed from the worst kind of work and the most debasing form of indulgence.

There is something very depressing in reading the reports from the Afghan seat of war; one life after another is sacrificed among the officers; hundreds of our native soldiers are killed or wounded; and now the rigours of a mountain climate are setting in with terrible effect. How much misery is couched in these few words:—

The troops had to pass the night without food or blankets, and on Tuesday they started on their return to Bagh, the men wading knee-deep in the mountain torrent with their clothes freezing about them. The rear-guard was smartly engaged with the enemy all the way back through the defile.

Many of the men are suffering from frost-bite. Meanwhile some of our ablest Indian officials tell us that all this suffering and loss of life is unnecessary, and that the war will do our rule harm instead of good. Cannot some good reason be found for ending it? India cannot afford any heavier taxation, and the misery of her people ought not to appeal in vain for a cessation of hostilities.

There is much talk at present about making the Army more popular as a recruiting ground, as the number of recruits recently has been much below par. Lord Wolseley and other Army authorities have been discussing this matter. The most practical suggestion made by him was to secure better chances for employment to discharged soldiers. Why is the Army unpopular among respectable, God-fearing men and women, who dread seeing their boys accepting the Queen's shilling? We are afraid that it is not as yet a deep "prejudice against the art of killing," much as we should like to see the un-Christian character of war more widely recognised. But thousands of people, knowing the terrible temptations which the Army puts in the path of young men in the direction of impurity and licence, have a thorough and wholesome dread of seeing their boys enlist. If the authorities want soldiers of the right class and character they must first cleanse our military system of its abominations.

Mark Twain is on the side of the missionaries with regard to the labour system in the Pacific—the Kanaka traffic. In his new book, "More Tramps Abroad," he denounces it as the black spot in the civilisation of the Antipodes. In his opinion great abuses still exist, notwithstanding all regulations passed against kidnapping. He can understand why the recruiter is fond of the business; the recruit costs him a few cheap presents (given to the recruit's relatives, not to the recruit himself), and the recruit is worth £20 to the recruiter when delivered in Queensland. The poor slave himself, should his life be spared so long, gets only £25 for three years' wages, with clothes; the cost of his diet brings the figure up to £60. Mark Twain is right when he says it is remarkable that men should jump overboard and make a swim for life if they are voluntary recruits. He anticipates, in the course of time, the complete extirpation of the islanders through the diseases brought upon them in an unfavourable climate.

The Faith of our Fathers.

MR. BERNARD J. SNELL, whose book on "Loss and Gain" placed him among what are known as the "liberal" or "advanced" thinkers, men of the "higher criticism," has expressed in an article on "The Eternal Now" a sense of dissatisfaction with the spiritual results of present theological teaching as compared with the results manifest in the lives of our fathers from the teaching they followed. "Why is it, we ask, that religion does not give us more joy? We feel sure that this absorbing anxiety, this tremulous hope, is not the atmosphere in which Christ's followers should walk." He believes the answer to be that "we are trying to be our own saviours instead of letting God be our Saviour. Our fathers understood the abiding reality of the Father's love better than we. They had an overpowering sense of the Divine grace, and trusted it absolutely." Assuming that to be so, we ask, "Why so?" Was it not because our fathers had a grasp of the love of God manifested in the death of Christ as a propitiation for sin which gave them strong consolation, abounding hope, and the peace that passeth all understanding?

Mr. Snell seems to have an idea that their greater joy came from their clearer realisation of the love of God, which is true; but again we ask, "How did that clearer realisation come, that stronger faith?" Was it not because the atonement was an objective fact in the work of redemption, not, as some say, only a subjective influence on the heart? Did they not realise its subjective influence just because they believed in its objective value, that Jesus is "the Lamb of God who has taken away the sins of the world"? Mr. Snell turns longingly to their bright experience, and says truly:—

> They were confident, very sure of God. Perhaps we have entered into a wider possession of the Father's love for all the world, but that great truth stands outside our lives until we verify it in our own individual experience. It is a dead proposition, however true it is, until a man translates it into the living inspiration of his own life. Spiritual truth exists in great generalisations, but it lives only in the first person singular.

Faith is the soul's quick and sure deduction from the glorious statements in Scripture concerning the love and gift of God to the world, its conclusion that Jesus "loved me, and gave Himself for me."

The love of God to us is dim, nebulous, fluctuating, until it is focussed in the cross of Christ. The experience which comes from saying that "the gift of God is eternal life" is a varying thing compared with that which comes from saying, "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." And the New Testament, which has given us the matchless words, "God is love," never dissociates the love of God from the proof and the manifestation of it in the giving of Jesus, and in the work of Jesus for men in the days of his flesh. "God commendeth his own love to us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." The love of our Saviour in bearing our sins in his own body on the tree is the love wherewith God has loved us. To know and believe the love which God has to us has precisely the same effect upon heart and life now as in the days of our fathers. But the fathers spoke of a sacrifice that atoned, of a cross that propitiated, of blood that cleansed, of a Saviour who died—the just for the unjust. Some of their theories might be wrong, but they were gloriously sustained by a faith that appropriated Jesus and all his work.

The Shorter Catechism: AFTER 250 YEARS.

TWO hundred and fifty years have passed since this venerable document was compiled by the body of divines assembled in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, and presented by them to the Parliament then in session. During these two centuries and a-half probably no other formulated body of Christian doctrine has so largely moulded the thought and given tone to the lives of Protestant believers. It has long been a standing proverb that all Scotchmen at least, who have shown moral grit and physical stamina, have been reared on porridge and the Shorter Catechism.

The Catechism was, of course, only part of the labours of the learned divines gathered on that historic occasion. The Confession of Faith is a much more elaborate thing, and for that reason probably it has not so universally and in all respects retained its hold on minds given to theological study as the shorter and more general statement of belief. Though originally designed to regulate and guide the credal subscription of the churches throughout Great Britain, these documents did not find a wide welcome in England except on the part of the Presbyterian Church. The completion of the two and a-half centuries of the Catechism's history was deemed by some of the more zealous and orthodox members of that Church to be the fitting opportunity for a public celebration. This was held last week in the Marylebone Presbyterian Church, and there was a goodly array of fathers and brethren in the ministry, as well as a fair muster of the rank and file.

The chairman of the evening, Sir George Bruce, in his opening remarks, quoted some words from Richard Baxter to the effect that the Catechism was the best book in his study next to the Bible, and an equally strong opinion as to its value from Dr. Dykes. Sir George said he feared it was falling into disuse in many of the schools. Then followed the reading of seven short papers by as many brethren (with one exception all ministers) dealing with various aspects of the Westminster Catechism—its history and influence as a system of theological truth.

Rev. Simeon R. Macphail, of Liverpool, surveyed the proceedings of the Assembly in relation to civil and religious liberty, making special reference to the revolt at that time against the clerical oppression fostered by the Stuart dynasty. Some delightful monographs descriptive of several leading members of the Catechism Committee followed by Rev. Robert Taylor, of Norwood. The preparation of the Catechism in its various stages and vicissitudes was the theme of an interesting historical statement by Mr. W. Carruthers, a learned elder of the Church.

Next to speak was Rev. P. Carmichael, of Highbury, who discoursed most eloquently on the value of the Catechism in forming a robust and fruitful type of Christian character. Rev. J. Cunningham, of Wandsworth, spoke of the teaching of the Catechism in relation to the Church and the Sacraments of Baptism and the Lord's Supper; regarding it as a safeguard against extreme sacerdotal views and pretensions, and a Scriptural presentation of these great doctrines.

One of the weightiest, timeliest, and most admirably expressed utterances of the evening was that by Dr. Oswald Dykes on the Catechism in its relation to the doctrines of grace. With respect to such subjects as the Divine sovereignty, the exceeding sinfulness of sin, the expiatory nature of Christ's atoning work, and the Pauline teaching as to justification through faith, Dr. Dykes unreservedly extolled the Catechism and the place it had filled in keeping alive in the Church these vital themes. If the Catechism should disappear from our homes and schools, we shall need to take great care lest from our pulpits and from our faith the great doctrines of grace should also disappear.

The closing speaker was Rev. R. C. Gillie, of Willesden, whose able address, to some extent, struck a jarring note in the harmony of the evening. As one of the younger school of divines, he remarked that some of them revered the Catechism—not so much for its contents, as for the associations that cling around its history. He went on, however, to unfold in a graphic way what he called "the romance of the Catechism," as seen in the very varied and remarkable ways in which it has entered into the experience of our people, and has been a source of individual strength as well as a potent influence for good in the crises of life. The proceedings of the evening were altogether a powerful testimony to the worth of this ancient confession.

The Evils of Gambling.

WE have become so familiar with the ramifications of the betting and gambling evil, that we are too often disposed to acquiesce and think that the monster is too big to tackle. The London Y.M.C.A., however, are determined to clear their skirts of responsibility, and to warn their constituency of the dangers that lurk on every hand. A "demonstration" on the subject was held in Exeter Hall on Monday evening, when Sir George Williams presided over a goodly company. In his opening remarks he aptly pointed the moral by relating a conversation he had with an ex-employé of the Post Office, who had lost employment, means, and character through betting on the turf.

The first address was by Archdeacon Madden, of Liverpool, who took up the general subject of betting as it affects the life of young men and the nation generally. At the outset he said he had been strongly advised to protest against ecclesiastical gambling at church bazaars; and that he was quite prepared to do. Quoting the remark of a great statesman that the betting system is "a vast engine for the demoralisation of the nation," the speaker went on to impeach the evil, in view of its influence on the national character. The passion for gambling, he said, is antagonistic to all that is industrious, the man who is given to it inevitably becomes a loafer. Further, it degrades the reason and perverts the will. The betting man takes no interest, intelligent or otherwise, in subjects that require any exercise of the mental faculty. If you try to speak to him about Ruskin or Carlyle, he knows nothing about either. He wonders whether the former is the name of a horse, and the latter that of a jockey! Our national sports are becoming spoiled. The spirit of deceit is fostered. Homes are wrecked and characters ruined on every hand. This was illustrated by some sad cases personally known to the speaker, who closed his address by an eloquent appeal to his hearers to do their part in fighting this terrible foe.

In making some announcements, Mr. J. H. Putterill, the general secretary, referring to some statements made by the Archdeacon, said he was reminded that there are two daily papers in London which do not keep sporting prophets on their staff—The Echo and The Daily Chronicle.

Dr. Joseph Parker was loudly cheered as he rose to give the second address. After a graceful compliment to the Irish eloquence of the Archdeacon, he plunged into an exceedingly cogent and powerful impeachment of this national sin. As the address had been well prepared and has been published (James Bowden, 3d.), we feel relieved from the necessity of reporting it at length. It was full of telling points and weighty sayings. Here are a few:—"Every man should set his face as a flint against the hypocritical pretence that any form of evil is really necessary to the security and progress of society." "By the very ordination of Divine Providence, gambling ruins both the winner and the loser." "Every evil passion leaves a man poorer than it found him; in gaining money he is losing his manhood." Referring to dishonest company-promoting, the speaker said: "It is the blackest blasphemy for a professed Christian to be selling his name, or his honour, for thirty pieces of silver, and then to sit down at the Lord's Supper or sing hymns of Christian piety. Out upon such hypocrisy." "The Liberator Building Society did more harm to the cause of Christianity than was ever done by all the infidels in the world."

Soldiers' Christian Association.—A gathering of an interesting nature will be held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday next, December 8th, when a convention will take place of delegates from the Soldiers' Christian Association. Mr. W. R. Lane will address the delegates in the afternoon, and at the public meeting in the evening Rev. E. J. Kennedy will speak to soldiers.

FROM FAR AND NEAR.

Notes from America.

By Mr. R. Cope Morgan.

At New York we were met by Mr. Sankey. It is pleasant and profitable to see a kind familiar face on arriving in a foreign land. We got through the Customs without difficulty. On leaving Northfield with Mr. Moody, as noted in my last, a night journey brought us to Montreal, when the evangelist was met by Mr. Budge, the able representative for many years of the Y.M.C.A. in Montreal. I am written to from time to time for names of men in distant cities or foreign lands in whom young men going thither will find sympathising friends. First on the list in my reply is generally the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., for I have always found him kindly, capable, and helpful, and well informed on subjects relating to the interests of young men.

Our route to Winnipeg lay through hundreds of miles of a rocky wilderness, which may one day teem with population, if, as some think probable, minerals should be found there. Leaving Montreal on a Tuesday morning, we reached Winnipeg on the Thursday afternoon. Mr. Moody preached that evening and twice daily on the five following days. The meetings were arranged by the Y.M.C.A., whose secretary, Mr. Haddon, was formerly a colleague of Mr. Budge at Montreal.

A few weeks ago Mr. Moody preached in Massey Hall, Toronto, and a very appreciative article on the meetings appeared in The Westminster, a Paper for the Home, published in that city. Speaking of Mr. Moody himself, the writer said :—

Nothing pleases him more than to come upon a real preacher. He puts him down at once for service at Northfield or Chicago. He knows his own limitations, and he is quick to perceive the strong qualities in another. He is to-day one of the great men of the world, and the late Professor Drummond was right when he said, "Probably America possesses at this moment no more extraordinary personage; not even amongst the most brilliant of her sons, has any rendered more stupendous or more enduring service to his country or his time." There was a great opportunity; no man ever had a greater in Toronto. The people—more than 5,000 of them—were eager, but not curious, and in a responsive mood, ready to be stirred in heart and moved to action. Ministers were—a hundred of them—earnestly desiring a message, a fresh inspiration—something to help them out of the rut, something to revive them in the fainting years. Were they disappointed? No. There was power. The preacher had a message. It went home to many hearts. e

But the sermons, as pieces of sermon-making, were quit t commonplace. Were a student in the homiletical class ao college, or a candidate for licensure before presbytery, t present for examination either of Mr. Moody's sermons, or one similarly constructed, he would be given a bad quarter hour, and he would deserve it, for there were not many rules of homiletics Mr. Moody did not violate.

What shall we say then? That homiletical training is valueless? No! That Mr. Moody is a poor preacher? In the face of eager listening thousands, no! But this: Truth, even the most careful statement of it, is not all. And this; Grammar, logic, rhetoric, not even a system of theology, and all of these things, can make a man a preacher. If preaching is to be judged, not as an academic exercise, but as a force for godliness among men, then Mr. Moody takes his place in the front rank.

Doubtless,

HOMILETICAL TRAINING HAS ITS VALUE.

But if Mr. Moody's preaching and its results are such as above described, why should he be given a bad quarter of an hour if one of his sermons were under examination? Would not the censure return to those who uttered it—as Pilate was condemned before his prisoner, Jesus; and as Felix, Festus, and Agrippa, before Paul in chains? The prophets knew but little of homiletical training; there were not many rules of homiletics which the apostles did not break. Nathan's parable, which constrained the guilty king in a fit of generous indignation to condemn himself, and the startling application, "Thou are the man!" was as a piece of sermon-making quite commonplace, but it had a magnificent result. It penetrated the Castle of Indolence and awakened the self-indulgent monarch from his dalliant dream.

The irruption of Elijah the Tishbite, like a torrent from the mountains of Gilead, with his abrupt and appalling message, was regardless of rules of homiletics, but it drove idolatrous Ahab like a leaf before the whirlwind, and foreshadowed the doom of that "imperious whorish woman," Jezebel.

Elisha's words were not much as pieces of sermon-making, but it is not he who gets the bad quarter of an hour in comparison with the sons of the prophets at Bethel and Jericho. Those students in the homiletical class in the school of the prophets or candidates for licensure before the Old Testament equivalent for presbytery, appear to have resented God's call of the son of Shaphat to be prophet in Elijah's room, as he drove the last of twelve pair of ploughing oxen in Abel-Meholah. But Elisha had been tested as the sons of the prophets had not; and he had continued in the faith grounded and settled: "As the Lord liveth and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee." And while fifty of them stood to view afar off, waiting to see what would come of this unprofessional proceeding, "they two went on...they two stood by Jordan...they two went over on dry ground."

Was there ever a revival without that majority of fifty who stoodstill to criticise? But we count them blessed who endure, and to the man who has endured test after test, a blank cheque is given—"Ask what I shall do for thee"—which he fills up with "A double portion of thy spirit"—of "the Spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind."

These are they who in Divine and human sympathy, stretch themselves out upon the dead children of men, their hands upon their hands, their eyes upon their eyes, their mouth upon their mouth, and breathe into them the breath of life which they have received from God, until those to whom they minister wax warm, and open their eyes, and take up their bed and walk.

The Lord Jesus, and his forerunner John, and the apostles who succeeded them, were all preachers after this same pattern, and it would seem wiser to judge the value of homiletical training by the work of Spirit-filled preachers, than to judge men of the prophetic and apostolic type by rules of homiletics.

I must defer further notice of Mr. Moody's meetings at Winnipeg and other central cities in the North-West, only adding that I have never heard him preach with more powerful simplicity, nor has he ever done better or more fruitful work than he is doing now. Yesterday (Sunday) afternoon he preached in purest homiletics (the meaning of this word, according toWebster, is "religious eloquence") to nearly four thousand men, while another thousand were unable to get in; no one who was present will forget the profound impression; very many outwardly expressed their desire and determination to forsake sin and commit themselves to Christ.

Health in Africa.

The annual meeting of the Livingstone College was held at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, on Thursday afternoon. Prebendary Webb-Peploe presided, and warmly commended the work of the College. Mr. J. H. Cook gave an account of life and work among the students. An encouraging report of the College and the East London Medical Mission was submitted, but the special feature of the meeting was an address on "Health in Africa," by Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby.

There is (he said) no problem which is of greater importance, in considering the question of the opening up of Africa, than the health question, nor is there any part of Africa in which this matter is of such vital interest as the West Coast. Livingstone College was founded four years ago by some medical men who felt keenly the need of instructing missionaries in the care of their own health. It was felt that the mortality of missionaries was greater than was necessary, and that steps should be taken to prepare those who are going into places of danger to meet the risks which they are sure to encounter, and we have therefore, in this College, an institution which has been established to give instruction to missionaries in the care of their health, and to be the means of considering health questions as they concern missionaries. There is a secondary use of the College, in that those who have gone through the course of training are able to be of service to the natives, who are ignorant of the application of even the simplest remedies; but its first object is to help the missionaries themselves. I had myself considerable experience of the African climate before entering on this work, from having three times visited West Africa with a view to doing medical missionary work in the Upper Niger, and on two occasions I was invalided home with severe forms of African fever. But during the present year I have had a special advantage in once more being enabled to visit the West Coast, and my journey has given me very good opportunities of studying the question before us.

I am sorry that I cannot hold out any great hope of West Africa ever becoming a healthy climate, nor do I think it probable that many Europeans will be able to reside in West Africa for any length of time. But though there are serious climatic difficulties, there are dangers to health which are in no way connected with the climate, which we may just as easily meet with at home, and which are absolutely preventable. We are so much accustomed in this country to have everything done for us that we can hardly realise the advantages that have been gained for us through sanitary boards, medical officers of health, and the carrying out of the regulations devised by these officials. To these well-regulated systems we owe the marvellous health which is enjoyed even in such a crowded centre as London. In most missionary countries, however, there are no sanitary inspectors to trouble us, no medical officers of health to frame inconvenient regulations, no inspection of the food supply or the water supply, and no regulations by which nuisances can be abolished. No wonder that under such circumstances illness often results.

Natural instinct will not teach a man how to deal with the insanitary conditions by which he may be surrounded: nor are we always able by simple intuition to discover how to avoid the risks of exposure to the sun, or what diet is most suitable for certain occasions; and the danger of chill is often but little understood until some serious fever has taught a missionary by bitter experience the necessity of care in this matter. It is evident, then, that if our missionaries are to have a reasonable prospect of maintaining their health, they should be armed with and not only as they would affect residents in this country, but with special reference to the mission field. But even more is required. There is such a thing as climatic disease, and the majority of our missionaries resident in Africa are beyond the reach of qualified medical aid. It is therefore imperatively necessary that the missionaries themselves should have some acquaintance with the symptoms of these diseases, and careful instruction as to their prevention and cure.

But medical training is not all that is required, though perhaps it is the best way to insure the carrying out of hygienic laws in the mission-field. We need to pay more attention to the housing of our missionaries, to their food supply, to their drinking water, and matters of this kind; and until we have adopted every reasonable precaution the responsibility for much of this loss of life must lie at our doors. But it may be objected by some that it is impossible for lay missionary boards to deal with questions which are essentially medical, and the obvious answer is that each missionary society should be furnished with who should consider all such questions and advise the General Committee. I do not suggest that the Missionary Committee should go to large expense in this matter. There are surely enough medical men in connection with every Foreign Missionary Society who would be only too glad to offer their services freely to serve on such a committee, in the hope of diminishing the loss of health and frequent loss of life which is so sad a feature in our missionary reports. It is not my opinion that the unhealthy conditions of life in West Africa are a sign that we should abandon our enterprise, but it is my strong conviction that we have no right to send out missionaries to work in these or in other unhealthy climates where they will not be able to obtain skilled medical assistance without systematic training in the laws of health and the treatment of disease.

Convention in Paris.

We have again had a visit from Rev. F. Paynter, Rev. J. J. Luce, and Rev. W. Houghton. The meetings extended over three days and were well attended, the addresses given by our friends being greatly valued. Meetings for the deepening of spiritual life were also held here last week in French, organised by the pastors with the assistance of M. Tophel, of Geneva, M. Coillard, and others. Much interest was awakened, and large a audience gathered. We believe that much blessing was bestowed. W. Soltau.

A Chinaman's Prayer.

No feature of missions in any land is so encouraging as when the natives themselves are seen undertaking evangelistic work among their own people, and during a visit to China nothing gave me greater pleasure than an incident which occurred while I was in Hankow, 600 miles up the great river Yangtse from Shanghai. To the south-west of that busy centre, which is situated in the province of Hupeh, or "Lake-North," is the province of Hun-Nan or "Lake-South," the vast lake of Tung-Ting lying between them. Hu-Peh was one of the earliest inland provinces to hear the Gospel, and to-day, from Hankow as a centre, there radiates through it a goodly number of mission stations and outposts of various denominations. But as it has a population estimated at forty millions, and in area is somewhat larger than England, the total number of Christian workers among its people is ridiculously inadequate to its needs.

The province of Hu-Nan, however, about the same size, but estimated to contain only twenty-three millions, still remains practically closed to resident missionaries, on account of the fanaticism of its sturdy and independent inhabitants. Evangelists travelling through, entering either from Hujdeh on the North, or Kwang-Tung (Canton) on the South, have usually been able to do work on a small scale, though even they have at times met with serious opposition, but so far none have been able to settle within its borders to establish permanent work. Its needs have therefore been long a subject of special prayer among the workers devoted to China, and several are only waiting the Master's time to enter in.

Some while ago the people of this province were highly inflamed and prejudiced against foreigners generally, but especially against missionaries, by the publication on the walls of some of its cities of grossly vile-coloured posters, illustrations of what the "Jesus sect" was accused of doing with its converts and the patients its members enticed into the mission hospitals, as also of what disgusting penances and tortures they were deemed worthy in consequence. These placards were inspired by local officials, members of the literati class which is throughout China so bitterly opposed to every sort of innovation, and in an especial degree to foreign religions. To these publications the riots which subsequently broke out in those and neighbouring parts are now in a great measure attributed, but it is hoped that ere long European missionaries will be ABLE TO MAKE THEIR HOMES THERE.

What gave me so much pleasure in Hankow was the sight of one of the Wesleyan chapels crowded with some 300 native Christians at one of the New Year Week of Prayer services, listening to the appeal of one of their number for volunteers and funds wherewith to organise an entirely Chinese Missionary Society for the evangelisation of Hu-Nan.

What could be more encouraging than this? The speaker had already been at work in Hu-Nan, and was preparing to return there. Presently he prayed, and one of the missionaries present kindly translated for me part of what he had said, which I jotted down in my note-book.

"Thou knowest, Lord, that Hu-Peh is on one side of the Tung-Ting lake, and Hu-Nan on the other, and thou knowest that there are more men and women in these two provinces than there are fish in the lake. Yet in many places there exist no Gospel nets to catch them, nor is there any fisherman. But Thou, O Lord, hast told us to catch men. Send more nets and send more fishers, we beseech Thee!"

What a typical prayer! God will not let it go unanswered, of that we need have no fear. But this pleasing incident had a sequel no less gratifying. The new mission is under Wesleyan auspices, but Dr. Griffith John, who also addressed the meeting, promised on behalf of the members of the London Mission Church that it should not only have their heartfelt prayers, but also all the practical financial support that was possible. I do not know if this was not even more encouraging than the project itself, but where the Spirit of God is really working there must be brotherly love and co-operation. All the other denominations at work in the vicinity were represented at that gathering, and I am sure that Dr. John's friends are not the only members of other bodies who are doing what they can to assist this promising departure.

Later on I learned the history of the man who had prayed. Some years ago, when a shopkeeper in Liang-Ho-K'ue, one of the towns of Hu-Nan, a New Testament fell into his hands, but though he read it, it remained to him a sealed book till one day he picked up one of Dr. John's Chinese tracts, "The Gate of Wisdom," which was the key needed. So deeply moved was he that he took the first opportunity of coming to Hankow for further instruction, and in due time he was baptized. Now, he in his turn is bearing fruit, and is experiencing the greatest joy on earth, the joy that is shared by the angels of God, in bringing sinners to repentance and eternal life.

Progress in Spain.

The latest "Letter from Spain" tells of the continued work of the Figueras Mission. "During July five English lady workers went to Llansa, a lovely spot on the Mediterranean, for change. While there they did what they could to win the children, with the result that general attention was aroused. "One night there was a great excitement in the Port Flora. A fisherman's wife had been seized with a serious attack. We quickly made our way to the cottage, and found the kitchen and bedroom crowded with friendly neighbours and one or two lady visitors. It is beautiful to see how kind the poor are on such occasions. One woman had lit a fire in case hot water should be wanted. Another had gone to the fountain to get a cantaro of water; others were fanning the patient, etc., whilst the distracted husband went to the town for the doctor. When the pastor entered everyone made way for him, saying, 'The Protestants know everything!' We applied mustard leaves, etc., with such success that in half an hour consciousness had returned and the breathing become natural. In consequence of this a discussion about the Protestants took place next morning in the market. One of the visitors who had witnessed the scene in Flora's cottage settled the matter by saying, 'I can tell you that in my town they are very kind to the poor. Where the sick are to be found they go, and what is more they know almost as much as the doctors and never leave a case till cured. Yes, the Protestants show the love of God more than we Catholics do.'"

The wealthy visitors who frequent Llansa began to hear of these things and to make inquiries for themselves. Hence a large portion of the "Letter" is devoted to conference with grandees of various ranks.

An earnest plea is made by Pastor and Madame Rodriguez for funds, also for help in making Christmas bright for 300 children connected with the Mission schools. Another lady worker is also urgently needed. The treasurer is Dr. Macwhirter Dunbar, Hedingham House, Clapham Common, S.W.

From Dr. Baedeker.

My dear Sir,—Since I left England, on Oct. 15, my time has been very fully occupied with happy Gospel services in Strasburg, Baden-Baden, Karlsruhe, Frankfurt, Gotha, Leipzig, and the last fifteen days in Berlin, in the "Christliche Verein junger Männer." In all these places the meetings have been very full, with attentive audiences, more especially here in Berlin. There are evidences of a great working of the Holy Ghost in Germany. The proclamation of a plain simple Gospel draws people of all ranks and ages.

The Y.M.C.A. here is a very fruitful field; it is a great joy to observe the energy and enthusiasm of many of its members in inviting others to join them. Baron von Rothkirch is a chosen vessel for this work, and the warm glow of loving interest cannot but act with great power on many young men.

The various branches of happy and fruitful services in Wilhelmstrasse 34 comprise: Meetings for soldiers, for journeyman bakers, also for bakers' apprentices, for waiters, for young men and for boys. The large and commodious premises are well and profitably used; it is a joy to see the young men flock together to the various meetings. The culminating point is the Gospel meeting in the large hall, and then last, but not least, th prayer meeting at the close of the day for youn men only.

On the 25th inst., I am booked for Hamburg, where Gospel meetings are laid out for eight days in various churches and halls. On December 4 I hope to visit Copenhagen, and thence I reckon to go to Stockholm on December 8. There are many open doors and invitations before me, and it is not an easy matter to say "nay" when one's desire would be to say "yea." My rule has been for some years to seek out the dark and needy places, and as my days are shortening I feel the more that I must not waste the time and opportunities given for sowing the precious seed in the darkest places of the earth.

After my visit to Stockholm I have on my program Finland and Russia. I look to the Lord for further guidance, and I know that many beloved servants of the blessed Lord consider it their call to stand on the mount, and to move the arm that moves the world on behalf of the least of his servants.

A Vital and Urgent Question.

Fifty British missionaries and workers labouring in India in connection with twenty-four British missions (including Australasian and Canadian) have signed the following letter addressed to ministers of the Gospel in the United Kingdom:—

"Dear Brethren,—As ambassadors for Christ in this heathen land, having duties to Him, to you of the home churches, and to the people among whom we live and labour, we must solemnly raise our voice in protest and appeal against the sanction by British law in India, in any form, of the breach of the seventh commandment.

"The system of regulated or legalised impurity, under whatever name, necessarily involves three evils. (I) The further demoralisation of the soldiers whom it is designed to protect beforehand from the consequences of sin; demoralisation through the temptation incident to supposed or attempted immunity in evil-doing, and the assumption that this sin is a necessity. (2) The deeper degradation of the Indian women (many are young girls rather than women), the victims of the lust thus sanctioned by authority. (3) The corruption of large numbers of natives who are cognisant of what takes place under the sanction of so-called Christian rule, and their consequent hardening to attempts to reach them with the message of the Gospel.

"As we represent you in India, we desire that you will represent us in the home land, in opposing the great iniquity concerning which we write. While we would not presume to dictate a particular course of action, we cannot doubt that in answer to prayer, and under the Divine guidance, means can be found to move the British Parliament and Government, that India may be saved from a calamity so dishonouring to God and so destructive to our fellow-creatures."

HOME MISSIONS.

Does it Pay?

By T. J. Barnardo, F.R.C.S E.

EVERYTHING is nowadays being tested by this utilitarian standard—"Does it pay?" My whole work of rescue is viewed coldly and hypercritically by many who seek to judge it solely in the light of that inquiry. "Can you reduce the result," I am sometimes asked, "to the common denominator of £ s. d., and tell us how it works out as a matter of commercial percentage?" This blessed work among the young is much more than a mere question of pounds, shillings, and pence! Yet it does pay, and if unprejudiced critics judge our work even from that lowest standard of monetary return, they must be convinced of its immense value to the nation, as well as of its unspeakable benefit to the individuals rescued. My annals are crammed with cases which amply support this view.

The following is

A STIRRING EXAMPLE.

In the winter of the year 1894 I received a very touching letter from a youth living in West Hartlepool. This lad, whom I shall call Isaac Mantle, said he was seventeen years of age. His father had been dead eleven years. His mother, a poor, honest woman, gained a precarious livelihood by charing, and died in 1892. Isaac then lost his home, and ever since had lived by odd jobs, tramping about, and being occasionally helped by a married sister, who was practically as poor as himself. The lad earnestly besought me to give him a trial, and he added, "If you will only try me, I will start away at once, and walk to London."

There was real "grit" behind that letter. I found that Isaac's story was accurate, and after a few days' stay at our "Ever Open Door" at Newcastle he was admitted to the London Labour Home, London, where for five months he gave complete satisfaction by his docility, zeal, and assiduity. Isaac then of his own accord approached me with the request that I would send him to sea. I kept the request in mind, and, an opportunity offering, I placed him, through our shipping agent at Cardiff, on board an American ship bound for Sydney, Australia. I was very much impressed by the manner in which this poor fellow responded to the religious instruction he received in the Homes. Isaac had become a lad of prayer, and this encouraged me to send him so far after so comparatively short a period of testing.

About midsummer of the present year a fine, handsome-looking, well-grown, gentlemanly youth called at Stepney as a visitor, and was taken, as other visitors are, over the Institution. He seemed deeply interested. But in the course of his inspection he betrayed a curiously intimate acquaintance with the place. On being definitely challenged as to his knowledge he replied, "I was once in Dr. Barnardo's Home myself." He turned out to be Isaac Mantle!

After an inspection of the Stepney Home, Isaac went down to the Labour House, and stated that his object in calling was to thank those who had done him so much good. He was invited to address the lads then in residence, and it was suggested that he should, at a meeting that evening, give them an outline of his own history since he left. Summarising what has already been related, he added:—

"During that time my mind became deeply impressed with the Christian tone that was manifest throughout the branch and with the teaching I received, and by the grace of God I was led to accept of Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour.

"I did not like a sailor's life very much, so, on reaching Sydney, I got my discharge. I tried to get work in various directions, but things being dull, I did not succeed, and at last I became reduced to great straits. When my money was almost gone, I began to pray more earnestly that God would open up a way for me, and this I now feel He did in the most marvellous manner.

"One day, whilst walking along the street, I picked up a piece of an old newspaper (I had not money enough left to buy a new one), and there I read an advertisement headed, 'Smart youth wanted.' I applied, and got the situation right off. I liked the work from the very first. My employers took to me, and I am still in the same employment. I am now stationed at P——, in New Zealand. I have a wage of £3 10s. to £4 a week, and other perquisites. I am a surveyor, my firm being mining surveyors and engineers. I have always remembered it is my duty to help others, yet I have been able to save something to advance myself in life. It has been a pleasure to me to assist in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked during times of great depression at P—— and elsewhere, when hundreds were out of work. But God has blessed my store, and I have been able to save enough to purchase eight £50 shares in the company for which I work. That means, as you see, a capital of about £400. My employers, who are very kind, have given me four months' holiday to visit England, and have very generously paid the cost of passage both ways. I hope to return to Australia again in August.

ISAAC MANTLE, THE TRAMP: 1894.

"I feel that I owe my character and position in life to the Founder of these Homes, who, at a time when I was homeless and near slipping into evil out of sheer destitution, held out the helping hand, and lifted me up from my surroundings; and I want now to say before you all that my one desire is to live not for myself but for Him who died for me and rose again, whose servant I am."

ISAAC MANTLE, THE CHRISTIAN SURVEYOR: 1897.

How much did it cost to effect so great a change in the life of a mere street wastrel, who was friendless and homeless, and almost helpless? I find that we spent on him, from first to last, only £7 10s. And, I may add, this is a fair sample of the rescue work that we are carrying on through the Labour House, and through our "Ever-Open Doors" all over the kingdom almost every day and every night of the year.

"Does it pay?" you ask. If a life redeemed from squalor, physical suffering, want, temptation, and the possibility of chronic pauperism to independence, happiness, and hopefulness is anything, I think this life-story of Isaac Mantle may be considered to answer the question with an emphatic Yes. But remember that this outward physical and material transformation is after all as nothing compared with the which resulted from the Divine blessing upon our work with this lad while he was in our Homes! The whole current of his life has been altered, so that he was not ashamed, although he has now reached a responsible position, to stand up before lads who were in the same circumstances as he himself once was, and to avow that the change has all been due to the grace of God.

Many others of my boys are now out preaching the gospel of the grace of God, and have been used of the Lord in leading others to Christ; many others are adorning the doctrine of Christ whilst engaged in secular callings of an honourable character. Probably no mission to the heathen could supply more triumphant examples of the power of Divine Grace to change the life that now is, as well as to give a blessed hope for the life that is to come!

Medical Mission Incidents.

Under this title the London Medical Mission has issued an occasional paper giving narratives of medical mission service in dark St. Giles and Lambeth. The two branches are now in full activity, under the superintendence of Dr. Henry Soltau. A series of special services held lately in Short's Gardens were much blessed. The little dispensary in Lambeth is now under the charge of Dr. Foster Owen, Dr. Gibson having given himself for mission work in China.

In order to help ladies preparing for the foreign field arrangements have been made to receive a limited number to teach them the elementary principles of nursing, dressing wounds, dispensing, and the outlines of anatomy, physiology, and treatment of simple ailments. Eight have started and are now busy at work at Lambeth and St. Giles, in the dispensary and in the homes of the people. While attending to the bodily needs of the people, they are also getting needed experience in spiritual work.

Here are two incidents given in the paper. "We went recently to see a young man of twenty-nine, whom we found far advanced in consumption. His body had been wrecked with intemperance, and his soul was dark and hopeless. After inquiring carefully into his case, and prescribing for his needs, we sat down to read to him the story of Calvary, and sought to explain the relation of the dying Saviour to the two dying thieves. The theme was new to this poor Roman Catholic, and as he listened and saw how able and willing a Saviour was Jesus on the cross he brightened up and said: 'Then there's hopes for the likes of me.' His state of 'no hope,' was exchanged for the hope of the Gospel.

Another interesting case was that of "a married woman with a small young family, who was suddenly seized with an illness which ended in rapid consumption. Her husband had proved unfaithful, and had left her for a time, going off with someone else and threatening never to return. To the eye of man her case was hopeless; for she was too weak to earn anything herself, and the man had been brutal enough to express the wish that she might soon die. The Gospel was a new sound to this poor woman, and she joyfully received the Saviour as her eternal hope and comfort. Peace filled her troubled heart so that we were constantly cheered by our daily visits to her sick room. We were able to give her all the nourishment she needed. In answer to prayer the husband came back, was much softened, and did all he could for her."

Gosport Seamen's Mission.

The anniversary of this mission has been held in the Bethel, South-street, Gosport. A large and representative gathering was presided over by Mr. W. Scott. Revs. C. Tanner, T. Stringer, J. S. Wyard, C. J. Pitman, Captain Riley, Dr. Poynder, and Mr. W. Spriggs were present and spoke of the value of the work and their sympathy with it.

Mrs. H. Cook read the year's report, which has been one distinctly marked by Divine guidance. Although the coasting work was suspended through multiplied difficulties, yet nearer home the work has been efficiently and successfully carried on. The balance-sheet showed a deficit, and funds are much needed.

Mr. W. Durrant gave details of work done on the waters, and the manifest blessing of God.

Manchester Wesleyan Mission.

Very crowded and enthusiastic meetings marked the recent anniversary of this Mission. At noon there was the customary religious service in the Central Hall, Oldham-street, where Rev. J. H. Jowett, of Birmingham, delivered an expressive discourse upon the words, "The love of Christ constraineth us" (2 Cor. v. 14). In the afternoon the hall was again crowded to hear addresses on the work in which the "Sisters of the People" are engaged.

The annual public meeting was held in the Free-Trade Hall in the evening. The great building was densely thronged. The chair was occupied by Mr. Alderman Agar, of York.

After a speech from the chairman, Rev. S. F. Collier gave a brief review of the year's work and a statement of the present position of the Mission. It had been their aim, he said, in all their work not to overlap any other organisations, but to co-operate with and make use of them. One or two facts in the report he wished to emphasise. Over 12,000 persons were found in their congregations every Sunday, and during the past few weeks the number had reached 14,000. Over 3700 met in fellowship, and from their lips they learned that 75 per cent. at least had not been connected with other Churches. Another encouraging fact with reference to this year's work was the remarkable increase in voluntary workers. Yet another cheering fact—perhaps the most cheering of all—was the success they had had this year in reaching the very lowest and in helping the very neediest. To all this direct effort in teaching, preaching, and visitation let them add the rescue, relief, and preventive work which formed their social department. In conclusion, Mr. Collier announced that a site had been bought in Oxford-street, and that ere long they hoped to have a hall established in that "Vanity Fair" of Manchester.

The President of the Conference said he was delighted with the spirit of aspiration found in connection with the Methodist missions in Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, London, and elsewhere. It was a breaking away in many respects from their old methods—but only the methods. It was no breaking away from the old Gospel. It was simply a change of method, an adaptation. And if they were to live they must do this; they must be able to keep themselves in contact with the masses of the people. This was a changing world and a changing age. Their grandfathers never listened to a sermon through the telephone, and their grandmothers never went to church on bicycles. The Church was master of its methods, and they must prove their loyalty to their Master, by suiting their methods of evangelisation to the prevailing arrangements and tastes.

Rev. Dr. McLaren mentioned some reasons why the Manchester Wesleyan Mission commended itself to him. They had, he said, solved the awful problem of how they were to get at the populations of our great towns. He did not make the mistake of confounding church-going with religion, but there could be no question that the appalling percentage of non-churchgoers in the great cities represented an awful proportion of men and women utterly indifferent to religion, and he believed that the problem of how to get at these people would never be solved except in some such fashion as that which this Central Hall Mission was adopting. Above all other reasons for rejoicing in this movement he for one put this—that it was a standing demonstration of the undying, youthful power of the old Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Rev. J. H. Jowett remarked that these great missions had not only solved the problem as to how to reach the lapsed; they were opening the eyes of the Church to know and to see that there was the lapsed. This was what they were doing for the modern Church. They were giving them vision, helping them to see outside their own walls, helping their outlook to be inclusive and comprehensive. Short addresses were also given by Gipsy Smith and Rev. F. L. Wiseman. The collections for the day amounted to £2565.

Jews in Whitechapel.—The Presbyterian Mission to the Jews in Whitechapel is under the care of Mr. Mark Polan, who is meeting with great encouragement. A goodly number of men attend the reading-room nightly, also the Evangelistic services. Rev. James Macintosh, M.A., of Stepney, presided over the annual meeting a few evenings ago, when addresses were given by Revs. I. Levinsohn, S. Hester, and other friends. During the evening Mr. Polan gave an address in Judeo-German.

Scripture Gift Mission.

The operations of this well-known agency for the circulation of the Holy Scriptures are likely to be materially widened by a measure which has recently been effected, namely, the incorporation therein of the work of the Crystal Palace Bible Stand. During the past thirty-five years the Bible Stand has circulated millions of portions of Holy Scripture, with many Bibles and Testaments, in various languages; but, by reason of the advancing years and failing health of its director, Mr. W. Hawke, new arrangements became desirable, and in effecting the amalgamation Mr. Hawke heartily co-operated with the members of his committee.

In a circular announcing these facts Mr. Walters, secretary of the Scripture Gift Mission, thus writes on the development of the work of circulating illustrated editions of the Gospel: "Numerous instances of blessing through the circulation of these Gospels have been recorded; and some idea of the interest shown by the Lord's stewards may be formed from the fact that one lady bore the entire expense of printing the first edition of the Gospel of John in modern Greek; another, half the cost of the Epistle to the Romans and the whole of the expense of printing the first edition of the Epistles of Peter, for circulation mainly in Roman Catholic communities; a gentleman also made himself responsible for part of the cost of the Gospel of John in French; and a member of the committee has just promised to defray the entire cost of a German edition of the Gospel of John, besides substantial contributions towards the Portuguese, Spanish, Italian, Arabic, and other illustrated editions of the Gospels."

Mr. Walters adds: "The greatest need of our fellow men is the Word of God. Apart altogether from the heathenism in distant lands, the spiritual darkness in our own country is appalling. Shall we not flood the world with the light of truth, that superstition and error may be dispelled, and that the message of salvation may be placed in the hands of sinners for whom Christ died?" The address of the mission is 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

A Good Work in Spitalfields.

A large company assembled at the Albert-street Institute on November 23 to celebrate the fifty-second anniversary of the King Edward Schools and Mission, of which Mr. Charles Montague has been the secretary and hon. superintendent for over thirty years. Mr. F. A. Bevan being unable to attend, the chair was occupied by Mr. W. M. Cross.

Mr. Albert Montague read an abstract of the report, showing that more than thirty sections of the work were being vigorously carried on. The Sunday-school has 1500 children; 3000 adults in the district are reached by the band of voluntary workers, who number 100; and about 600 children and others were sent to Holiday Homes during the season. In addition to the schools, there are evangelistic services every Sunday, as well as fully-attended Bible-classes. In the industrial classes for young people, boys learn various arts and crafts, and girls are taught to cook and to make their own dresses. Much is also done in the way of feeding poor children, and in relieving the destitute aged and sick during the winter.

The Chairman spoke of the report as very encouraging. Looking back on the history of that institution for more than half a century, he felt they had cause for joy and praise, and he wished the institution God-speed, rejoicing that Mr. Montague continued in such good health to superintend it. Rev. Thomas Evans, of Bournemouth, who formerly laboured in East London, referred to the origin of the work which taught them not to despise the day of small things. It was better to have a wall of protection about a hill than an ambulance at the bottom. While thankful for such lighthouses, they must remember that they were not an experiment. As regarded the good Lord Shaftesbury, president of the work until his death, he would be more popular in the next century than even he was now. It was shown how the great philanthropist might have served in the Cabinet as one of the Queen's Ministers, to win political distinction; but he nobly turned his back on that for the sake of befriending poor and neglected children, and he did so in days when it was almost better to be a little dog than a little child.

Addresses followed by Revs. T. Sissons, T. P. Lansdowne, and Messrs. J. Kirk and G. Nokes. The prizes for good conduct were distributed to the children by Mrs. Stanley Williams.

The Pastors' College.

The annual meeting of this College, so closely identified with the late C. H. Spurgeon, was held on Thursday at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. The attendance was encouraging. During the evening various sacred pieces were sung by the Students' Choir.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who presided, said that the past year had been an exceedingly satisfactory one, with blessings all round. All had gone on happily and harmoniously. He rejoiced that his brother had become his vice-president. They had a happy time at Westwood, where he had received eighteen fresh students. During the year nine students had become pastors of churches. This brought up the number to 965 who had been educated in the College, exclusive of sixty-five now in the College. Reports from 427 pastors gave a total of 4762 members, being an increase of 3417. The students were not made into preachers, for only those who could satisfy the presidents that they were truly God's men were admitted, and they were helped the better to preach faithfully the old Gospel.

The meeting was also addressed by Pastor Charles Spurgeon, Professor A. McCaig (one of the tutors of the College), Pastor B. J. Gibbon, of Bloomsbury, and several of the students. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon afterwards delivered a lecture on "Sleep."

Homes for the Aged Poor.

The year 1897 will be memorable as the one in which the last remaining mortgage debt of £500 on the permanent Homes was paid off. The handsome block of six freehold houses, 7, 9, 11, 13, 15, and 17, Minford-gardens, West Kensington Park, and the large model home at Paddington must be looked upon as a wonderful result of twenty-eight years work, the time the charity has been in existence.

Nor is this all. In the month of October an extra home, 39, Penge-road, South Norwood, was opened, and eight aged inmates admitted, making a total of fourteen homes (seven permanent and seven rented), with 170 inmates in the 136 rooms.

The increased number of Homes gives rise to special need for help to the coal, sick, and nursing funds, which, alas, have not grown in proportion to the work. A cheery fire is the greatest earthly comfort to the aged, but 136 tons of coal are needed if this want is to be adequately supplied. Sickness is ever present among so many aged ones, and nursing and extra comforts must be provided if health is to be restored, or the last days of the sufferer made comfortable. Clara E. Harrison.

Barnwell Mission, Cambridge.

The old Theatre Royal, Barnwell, was crowded—stalls, pit, circle, and gallery, and proceedings of a most enthusiastic character took place. The occasion was the nineteenth anniversary, and a tea started the celebration. Then came the big public meeting, at which the speakers were in front of the curtain, above a beautiful collection of flowers, which were banked in front of the platform, and surrounded by a veritable sea of faces. Rev. J. Eames offered prayer.

Rev. J. Gilbert Dixon gave an address on Progress in the Christian Life, and he did so in a manner that thoroughly held the attention of his audience, who followed his apt illustrations with ardent interest.

Mr. W. K. Vawser said he would not dwell upon the annual report, which would shortly be printed, but it was clear that this document will be both satisfactory and interesting when it is issued.

The new pastor of Zion Chapel (Rev. W. Bampton Taylor) gave an earnest address, urging the audience to be true in their spiritual life, prompt in their dealings with God, and to show by their life that religion was not a mockery, but a genuine and real article. Revs. C. J. Procter and A. Hart delivered evangelical addresses, and Rev. W. R. Mowll enforced lessons upon temperance.

"Loving Service League."—Miss Ballard, hon. sec., reports that £70 was received from London branches for the "Women's Offering to the Women and Girls of India" (Indian Famine), and £69 9s. also was contributed for Jaunpur.

Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway.

The Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, is so well known that there is no need to describe its work or advocate its cause. It is now twenty years since the work was begun on a small scale, and since then several who were among the founders have entered into rest. The institution has grown considerably in the meantime, always maintaining its threefold character of (a) a mission for sailors, (b) an agency among the inhabitants of Ratcliff Highway and district, and (c) a centre of Christian activity whose influence extends wherever its sailor converts and workers may, in the providence of God, be led forth into the heathen world.

The annual meeting has of late years become two, one in the afternoon and another in the evening, and these were held on Friday last, and attended by a goodly number of friends and supporters. In the afternoon, Mr. John McCall presided (in the absence of Mr. J. E. Mathieson) and regretted that the balance sheet showed a deficit of £27. Among those who delivered helpful addresses were Mrs. M. Baxter and Rev. John Wilson. In the evening, Mr. W. F. A. Archibald occupied the chair, and in the course of a stirring address, referred to the bad old days anterior to the starting of the Rest. Other speakers were Rev. R. Balgarnie, Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, and Mr. A. Churchill, all of whom dwelt upon the importance of the work.

At both meetings an address was delivered by Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, the untiring hon. sec. of the work. From his remarks it appeared that during the past year 1028 meetings were held, at which the Gospel was proclaimed in various languages. The attendance had been varied, according to the character of the meetings, but the aggregate of those who attended was 10,342. Mr. Isaac spoke of the distribution of wholesome literature, made up in bags, among the sailors, and asked for a continued supply of suitable papers, magazines, and books. From this he passed to an account of the well-known Christmas feasts, so greatly appreciated by seamen far away from home. He asked for gifts for the feast and the Christmas tree (Dec. 25 and 27), specifying rounds of beef and plum puddings, mufflers, scarves, socks, helmets, housewives, steering gloves, and articles of clothing for sailors' families. This appeal is sure of a hearty response from all parts of the country.

As to the Zanzibar Rest, Mr. Isaac was able to give an encouraging report. The work in Ratcliff Highway involves an expenditure of less than £400 per annum; that at Zanzibar costs still less. On the whole, the meetings were encouraging, and should greatly help the work at the present time.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

Through the kindness of a lady deeply interested in the welfare of the blind poor of London, a special effort is now in progress for the temporal comfort and spiritual good of this sadly afflicted class of the community. The effort takes the form of meetings held in the great centres of population, at which tea is provided and other acts of kindness brought to the support of Gospel addresses and appeals. The meetings are being organised by Mr. W. Mead, superintendent of the eastern division of the Society's work.

Recently there have been gatherings in the Bow, Shoreditch, Canonbury and Westminster districts of the metropolis. The undertaking will involve by the time it is carried through the assembling in various centres of about 2500 poor blind people and guides. To the needy a present of five shillings is given; to the guides a copy of Rev. P. B. Power's striking book, "The One-Talented People"; while cases of sickness are sought out and also helped.

The kindness of the lady referred to enables the Indigent Blind Visiting Society to work on a scale that otherwise would not be possible; it also presents an admirable example to others who are able to reach out hands of help for the succour and support of classes of the community that are specially afflicted and needing exceptional consideration. One feature of the meeting is that blind vocalists cheer their fellow-sufferers by sacred song. The office of the Society is 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.

Omission.—By an oversight in the interesting letter which appeared in our last issue on "The Wail of the Village Pastor," Mr. G. H. Mawer, it was not stated the society of which he spoke, and of which he is the secretary, was the Country Towns Mission, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

A Churchman's Notes.

The recent action of the Church Pastoral Aid Society in emphasising afresh the truly Scriptural and Protestant character of its principles and work will be of real service, even though there has never been any doubt on the subject. But in the present tone and temper of Romanism and Ritualism it is almost impossible to "protest too much," if only it be done lovingly and positively. The C.P.A.S. will benefit by a legacy of £500 owing to this welcome and fresh expression of its position.

Great efforts are being made to "acclimatise" in this country the American Episcopal Church Society called The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, an organisation of young men for young men. Each member pledges himself to do two things—to pray daily for the spread of Christ's Kingdom, and to endeavour definitely each week to bring someone to Christ. There is something very simple yet distinct in this, and it ought not to be difficult to make it useful in England. The present writer was in America about the time when the movement was started, and has noticed that from the very first it has been a great success and a real blessing. It has also been imitated in America by the formation of another brotherhood not limited to the Episcopal Church, called The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. The only thing is that it means something like a new organisation, however simple and elastic in methods, and this is in itself rather to be deprecated. The Bishop of Rochester has recently been in America observing the movement, and has written in his Diocesan Chronicle for November an article well worth consideration.

How touching, and yet glorious, the details just to hand of the sudden home-call of that noble missionary, Rev. A. H. Arden. On his way to resume work in India he was voyaging through the Red Sea, and was just finishing preaching at the Sunday morning service from the great commission of St. Matt. xxviii. 19, when he suddenly leaned forward as for if prayer, but really was at once taken home to the Master. His little books, "Are Foreign Missions Doing Any Good?" "Foreign Missions and Home Calls," and "Objections to Foreign Missions," are simply invaluable to every Christian worker. They are perfect storehouses of fact, illustration, and argument.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel crowded Exeter Hall last Thursday with a missionary meeting, with the Bishop of London in the chair. The combination of S.P.G. and Exeter Hall is quite refreshing and delightful! A few more methods of the altera pars, and this old Church society will renew its strength. Among others, High Churchmen should be made to realise more fully and as a body their duty to foreign missions. In one place of twenty-four churches, nineteen being High or Broad and five Evangelical, the five Evangelical contributed year after year to the C.M.S. three times as much as the other nineteen did to the S.P.G. And yet, Deo soli gloria.

It is a great satisfaction to hear of the rapid and large circulation of the new manual issued by the National Protestant Church Union, called "English Church Teaching." Canon Girdlestone, Dr. Moule, and Mr. Drury have produced a clear, able, and convincing book, and it will be an effective antidote to the specious and unscriptural manuals of the Ritualistic party.

Bishop Tucker is making an earnest appeal for men for Kikuyu, a place about four hundred miles from the coast, with very special claims on our interest. As the Bishop says:—

> In the first place, it forms part of the British East Africa Protectorate. It is thickly populated, and is also in close contact with the great Masai nation. This latter fact is of very special significance. Kikuyu will, I hope, in God's providence, in time to come form a base whence the evangelisation of this great and dominant race may be undertaken. Its value from this standpoint can scarcely be overestimated. Besides this, it is on the high road to Uganda. Our missionaries in their journeyings from and to the coast pass through it. They one and all speak of the pain with which of necessity they leave the Wakikuyu behind them in all their heathen darkness. These people have learnt from frequent inquiries as mission caravans pass through their country that we go to Uganda with a message of glad tidings, and now they ask us continually the question, "Why do you not stay and teach us? Have you no good news for us? Is your message only for the Waganda?"

May this appeal have its full and immediate effect.

Dr. Wright, of Liverpool, has just published some notes of a recent sermon on "Prayers for the Dead." They are brief but masterly, and cannot fail to be of service to all who meet with those holding this "dangerous deceit." E. C.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

THE University sermon on Sunday week was preached by Canon Gore. He has written some things which are rejected by a large section of the Church to which he belongs, but none can deny that he is a great teacher. His message on Sunday evening could only have been born of conviction, and it is not too much to say that it carried conviction to the heart of many an undergraduate present. "I will declare thy name unto my brethren" (Ps. xxii. 22) was the text, and he based upon it a stirring appeal for personal and distinctive testimony for Christ.

Monday evening found representatives of the Evangelical Churches in Hannington Hall for the annual C. P. A. meeting. The principal of Wycliffe presided. Rev. J. Draper, the rector of Whitechapel, illustrated the power of the Gospel on the most hardened by giving some striking cases of conversion in his own parish, and Rev. W. Hewitson, Association Secretary, described his work in Birmingham.

The Bishop of St. Albans presided at a meeting on Monday in connection with the Universities Mission to Central Africa. Rev. F. R. Hodgson, quoting Dr. Livingstone, said that as the Universities were the centres of light, should they not send some of their light to the lands he had discovered. Ought they not to take to heart the appeal for more help when they remembered that a College often spent more on one ornament of its building, and some of the undergraduates more on their luxuries in one year than they contribute to the African Mission.

Viscount Valentia presided on Wednesday over a meeting held in support of the Church Army Labour Home, the Bishop of Reading and Rev. Wilson Carlile were among the speakers. Valuable testimony was borne to the good work done, notably that by Rev. G. C. Bowring, chaplain of the Oxford Prison, who showed what a loss would be felt if there was no home for discharged prisoners. There is a growing feeling that the work in Oxford should be extended.

Miss Weston had an enthusiastic audience on Friday at the Hannington Hall, when Mr. Chavasse welcomed some eighty or ninety men to meet her.

The speaker at the missionary meeting on Tuesday evening was Dr. Douthwaite, of the C.I.M. He gave a deeply interesting account of his work at Cheefoo during the Japanese invasion of China. The Emperor of China recognised his work by decorating Dr. Douthwaite and his helpers with the Order of the Double Dragon.

How?

How shall I keep my treasure safe
From thief, and moth, and slow decay?
Go, lay them up with Christ in heaven,
And they shall never pass away!

How shall I have my wants supplied,
And still secure my daily fare?
Make God's sweet service thy delight,
And then thy wants shall be his care!

How shall I cast my care away,
Which crushes down my anxious soul?
Live for the Lord from day to day,
And look not to the distant goal!

How shall I shield my name and life
From every slanderous, lying tongue?
Judge not, and thou shalt not be judged;
Forgive the man who does thee wrong!

How shall I help my brother man,
And save him from his evil way?
Amend the faults which stain thy life,
Live always in the light of day!

How shall I face life's angry storms,
And stand secure and strong at last?
Build on the Rock in steadfast faith,
Then fear not flood nor roaring blast!

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, December 5.

"I will go and return to my place till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face." —Hos. v. 15.

THE withdrawal of God's countenance and protection involved the exile of Israel from their own land. No weapon formed against them could prosper so long as they walked with their Almighty Friend; but sin severed them from his care, and cut them adrift to be swept before the storm of the invader.

There is always a "till" in God's withdrawals. He leaves, that He may return so soon as the afflicted soul turns to seek his face. May not this be your lot? You seem deserted by man and God, life is going very hardly with you, thick darkness broods over your soul, and sore affliction devastates your life; yes, and worse is threatened. But is there not an offence somewhere that needs to be acknowledged, a sin that should be confessed?

Search yourself by the suggestions of this chapter. Have you in any way been a snare or a net to other souls, injuring them by your example or conversation (1)? Have you been unfaithful to your immortal lover, Christ (3)? Have you become proud of any of God's gifts, or the position to which they have lifted you (5)? Have you been grasping and fraudulent, like those who secretly remove the landmark to include a little more of their neighbour's lands with their own (10)? Have you willingly walked after the statutes of Omri (11, and 1 Kings xvi. 25)? Have you gone for help away from God to some unhallowed alliance, such as is represented by King Jareb, the Assyrian, whose alliance Israel sought (13)? Ask God what controversy He has with you, and put it away; so shall He cause his face to shine, and you shall be saved.

MONDAY, December 6.

"Let us know, let us follow on to know the Lord; his going forth is sure as the morning." —Hos. vi. 3. (R.V.)

You may always count on God. If there is variation in his relations with us, it is on our side, not on his. Just as surely as we return to Him, we shall find Him running to meet and greet and receive us with a glad welcome.

The exquisite words of the text derive additional beauty when we consider them in the light of modern astronomy. The spot on which we live, when the day is done, slowly turns away from the face of the sun, and as each moment passes plunges further and further from its wholesome, blessed light. At midnight we look out into the abyss of space in the opposite direction to the solar throne. But from the moment we begin to return we follow on as quickly as the revolving planet will bear us towards the old position beneath the smile of the orb of day. And is there any doubt about our reaching it? No, that cannot be. During our absence the sun has not shifted from his place. We shall find him waiting for us; his going forth is prepared. We have but to pass into his blessed beams, which had not ceased to pour forth through the hours, which to us were cold and dark.

God is always waiting for us. He is just where we left Him. In Him can be no variation, neither shadow that is cast by turning. No parallax, as the Greek might be rendered. Come; let us return unto the Lord: his going forth is sure as the morning. As certainly as we count on the day-spring may we count on God. Follow on, then, to know Him. Open your heart to Him. Wait for Him, though it be two or three days. On the wings of the morning the Sun of Righteousness arises, with healing and blessing.

TUESDAY, December 7.

"Grey hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth not."—Hos. vii. 9.

Sin in its worst forms was prevalent among the people, and secretly deteriorated their strength. Of this, however, they were unconscious, but imagined that they were as strong as at other times, anticipating long years of national prosperity. They little weened that they had reached the old age of their history, with its attendant decrepitude and helplessness. What a striking illustration of the insidious process of decay, of unconscious deterioration, of the departure of the Samson-might while we wist it not.

But is not this always the case with the initial stages of backsliding, of which this is the most dangerous element that we are so largely unaware of the change that has come over us? Gradually and almost insensibly we lose our watchfulness over our thoughts, our relish for the society of God's people, our delight in God's house, our interest in the salvation of others, our sensitiveness of conscience as to the conventionalities of trade or society. We do not realise it, we are not specially concerned, we have no idea that the white ant is eating out the substance of the wood, and the dry-rot undermining the rafters of our house. Strangers are devouring our strength, grey hairs are indicating our decay—to all eyes but our own. We grow grey almost imperceptibly: the strength of our manhood is very slowly undermined: the degrees of backsliding unnoticed. It is because we do not regard ourselves enough in the mirror of God's Word.

It is strange: but life's currents drift us
So surely and swiftly on,
That we scarcely notice the changes
And how many things are gone.

But the contrast of bygone hours
Comes to rend the veil away,
And I marvel to see the stranger
Who is living in me to-day.

WEDNESDAY, December 8.

"Though I write for him my law in ten thousand precepts, they are counted as a strange thing."—Hos. viii. 12. (R.V.)

The A.V. slightly differs here: "I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing." God's will is so all-sided and far-reaching in its scope that it cannot be contained in one precept or a thousand. It needs 10,000 precepts to set forth its heights and lengths and breadths, and to cover all the circumstances of our lives. But how thoughtful God is in anticipating our 10,000 difficulties, perplexities, and questions, and in directing us how He would wish us to act. Anticipating all the steps of our life, God has written 10,000 directions for every possible combination of events.

But what great things have been unfolded to us in the Law of God (using that term to cover the entire compass of revelation). Mysteries which pass the conception of angels have been placed within the reach of men. Our Father has beckoned us to share with Him the sublimest secrets of his government and council.

Let us not count them as strange things. We often say to one another: "Do not treat me as a stranger," and is not this the sense in which we may get estranged from the word and thought of God, keeping them only for special times, giving them courtly entertainment, but refusing to admit them to the familiarity of daily intercourse? Nothing hurts God more than this!

THURSDAY, December 9.

"Ephraim was a watchman with my God."—Hos. ix. 8. (R.V.)

To watch with God is the privilege of comparatively few. Eight were left outside the garden; to three only did Jesus say, "Come and watch." To watch for the morning star, for the first flowers of the coming spring, for the coming of the Bridegroom, for the setting up of the Kingdom—such is the privilege of those elect souls who are bidden to take their lamps, and go forth to meet the Bridegroom. It is a high honour to be appointed to watch with God the slow evolution of his purpose; to stand on the watch-tower and see what He will say; to be a watchman for the people, a spokesman of their danger when the sword approaches; to be allowed to enter into some of his tears, and yearnings, and prayers, as He beholds the city and weeps over it.

But we may be displaced from that position of privilege and responsibility as Israel was. We learn that the chosen had deeply corrupted themselves, as in the darkest days of the Judges, and we may fall into similar corruption and rebellion, unless we watch ourselves, whilst we watch with God. Let us watch and pray lest we enter into temptation. Corruption is always around us in this world of death. Its germs float on every breeze. We need, therefore, to steep ourselves in the antiseptic of the Holy Spirit's grace. This is the eucalyptus in which the germs of disease cannot live.

FRIDAY, December 10.

"Break up your fallow ground; for it is time to seek the Lord, till He come and rain righteousness upon you."—Hos. x. 12.

There is a great deal of fallow ground in our hearts and lives; it has borne no crops of righteousness. Weeds have covered the unfruitful acres with their rank growth, and have scattered their thistledown into other lots. The rain has fallen and the sun has shone in vain. In some cases our daily business life, in other cases our social life, is a blank so far as religious usefulness is concerned. God gets no revenue from these barren fallow tracts. But the prophet bids us ascertain what they are, and break up the hard, caked surface by ploughshare and spade.

Is it not time to seek the Lord? The days are passing over us so rapidly, and we shall be at the end before we are well aware. May not the time past suffice us to have been barren and unfruitful, and shall we not make the best of the time which remains?

In his great sermon on this text, Finney exhorts to break up the fallow ground by the payment of neglected debts, the putting aside of evil habits, the righting of old wrongs, the forgiveness of old injuries. Let us open up our heart's secret depths to God, that He may rain down righteousness. It is quite clear that it will never spring up in our hearts till it has been rained down from heaven. That which ascends from us to God must first descend from God to us.

SATURDAY, December 11.

"I taught Ephraim to go."—Hos. xi. 3.

This is very touching. It is one of the sweetest, tenderest words in the Bible—a metaphor borrowed fresh from the nursery. What an epoch it is in the child's life when it first gets up on its feet! The mother sets it there, or it manages to get up by itself. But it dare not walk; it must be taught to go. Sometimes the mother holds the clothes from behind, or reaches out her hands in front, or hovers around the little hesitating figure with outstretched arms to guard against the first sign of tumbling. The lesson is not learnt all at once. Sometimes many a sad fall tutors the venturesome pupil, but the mother is not discouraged. With a kiss and a "never-mind" she puts the little one on its feet again, and teaches it to go.

God is teaching us to go. He holds our hands in his; walks beside us with outstretched care to see that we do not fall to our entire undoing; catches us when we are about to stumble, and picks us up when we have fallen to our hurt. God is never discouraged, any more than the mother is, and the more weak our ankle bones and nervous our gait the more care does He expend. He does not chide except when we persist in our efforts apart from his bidding and assistance. Oh, trembling, dispirited, fallen one, be of good cheer; God will teach thee to go! F. B. M.

"If I could only get back, I know mother would forgive me for running away from home." So said a young French girl, only sixteen years of age, the other night to a number of Christian ladies who visited certain West End thoroughfares, to gather in some of the fallen frequenting the neighbourhood to the Dowager Countess of Aberdeen's Schools in Foubert-place. The majority were French girls, two under seventeen years of age, who felt their position very keenly. The ladies present conversed with them in their own language, and every particular was taken with a view to their return, as soon as arrangements could be made. It was past one next morning before the efforts of the friends were suspended. This was in connection with the Midnight Meeting Movement (Mr. Wilson McCree, 8A, Red Lion-square, W.C.).

The Awakening of India.

By Rev. T. WALKER, C.M.S., Tinnevelly.

FOR many years the Gospel has been preached in Hindustan. We have covered India, or at least large portions of it, with a perfect network of Christian colleges and schools and congregations. Thank God for all that has been accomplished in the past! Praise Him for every true and earnest convert who has learnt by experience the power of Christ to save from sin! But, as we look round on whole districts where little or nothing has been done to evangelise the people, as we see large cities where idolatry still reigns supreme, as we behold the strong fortresses of Hinduism still frowning down upon us, proudly conscious of their strength, as we look at our Christian congregations, bearing often but a feeble and uncertain testimony, and lacking sadly the power of the Holy Ghost, we have to face the truth—India still sleeps in heathenism and superstition.

What is the remedy? India can show a missionary army of hard-working men, and women. Go where you will throughout the land, you will find Christian workers incessantly busy at their work, and the cry is heard from every quarter, "Over-worked!" No charge of idleness can be truly laid against us, as a whole. But how is it that so much of our busy energy appears to be expended all in vain? Holy Scripture, personal experience—the voice of conscience—all these alike suggest at least one answer: We have neglected largely the means which God Himself has ordained for true anointing from on high. We have not given prayer its proper place in the plan of our campaign. The energy of the flesh, of the intellect, of our position, of our very enthusiasm—this has been allowed to usurp, to a lamentable extent, the place of immortal souls from the slumber of eternal death—the might of the living God, the energy of the Holy Ghost. How many a day passes by in hundreds of missionary bungalows in one ceaseless, busy stream of work, without any time for quiet intercourse with God, except a few brief minutes snatched in the early morning before the rush begins, or the short space allowed in the late evening by exhausted nature. Do many of us plead for India, as Robert Murray McCheyne pleaded for his Dundee congregation—never ceasing to pray for them, even when sickness drove him from them for a time, and turning the very shores of the Sea of Galilee into an oratory, till God opened the windows of heaven and poured down upon them showers of blessing?

Or again, how many of us pray for souls around us in this heathen land, as Robert Aitken prayed for those congregations in which he carried on his mission work, spending hours upon his knees, after a day of busy preaching, beseeching God with strong crying and tears to save the souls of men? We all know the importance of prayer, and can preach discourses on its efficacy, but do we practise what we preach ourselves?

Let us recall

history which reveal to us quite clearly God's plan for the awakening of the souls of men. A lad is lying in the prophet's chamber, still and motionless, in the deep sleep of death. The servant of the man of God, in obedience to his Master's bidding, runs in eager haste and lays the prophet's staff upon the face of the child, apparently expecting that the first contact of the rod would restore the dead to life again. The result is told in graphic language, pathetic in its simplicity and truth.

"THERE WAS NEITHER VOICE NOR HEARING."

Then came the man of God himself, but, as he looked upon the scene before him, it was the still and awful scene of death. What will Elisha do? His rod has wrought no miracle. His servant's rush of haste has done absolutely nothing. Notice well the words which follow: "He went in therefore, and shut the door upon them, and prayed unto the Lord." What the eager haste could not do, what the touching with his rod was unable to effect—believing could bring to pass.

His prayer was fervent, believing, and full of yearning sympathy for that poor sleeper. We may well pause to ask whether we have not failed in getting into loving touch with those amongst whom we live and work. We may run about our work in one long rush of busy labour, we may take our wand of missionary office and place it in every zenana, and wave it at every street corner, but if that is all we do Satan will rejoice and we shall be ashamed before him. Lift up your eyes and look on the fields! Is it not true to-day that

"INDIA IS NOT AWAKED?"

Let us go in therefore, and shut the door and pray unto the Lord.

Come to that grave-side scene at Bethany. A greater than Elisha is standing there, One who is mighty to rouse and save. We mark the tears of sympathy which flow down the Saviour's cheeks, and we learn in passing the selfsame lesson of love and yearning over sleeping souls, if we would see them raised and quickened into life. The disciples are at hand, ready to assist their Lord in any way which He directs. Above all, the Son of God is there, full of omnipotence and love. One word from Him, "Lazarus, come forth!" and the thing will be accomplished. But before the great awakening could take place, the Almighty Son of God must pray. "And Jesus lifted up his eyes and said, Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard Me. And I know that Thou hearest Me always." The will to raise the dead might be there, and the stone of difficulty might be gone, but the eye must be uplifted—the arm of heaven must be leaned upon—the power of God must be invoked—the Father's energy must be claimed by earnest and believing prayer.

"The disciple is not greater than his Lord!" Some of us are full of pity for the heathen round about us. We have laboured hard—following in the wake of good men gone before us who had difficulties to deal with of which we know but little now—to take away the stones of prejudice and superstition which have to India's spiritual resurrection. But still Lazarus is asleep! What lack we yet? To a large extent, we have forgotten to lift up our eyes and seek the resurrecting power which God gives only in answer to earnest and believing prayer.

This little paper, then, is a loving appeal to all Christian workers to prove God's faithfulness and power by united and believing prayer for a blessing upon India and upon the whole wide world. God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, yearns over India. And yet our work hangs heavily upon us, and India is not awakened. There are signs not a few that some of God's missionary servants in this country are stretching out hands of faith and expectation after greater tokens of the Spirit's power and presence than we have seen as yet in India. Here and there missionaries are experiencing a fuller sense of God's faithfulness and receiving a great fulness of the Holy Ghost. They are beginning to realise the need of prayer, with a distinct view to the awakening of this mighty continent. Hence this appeal to others to join the ranks of prayer.

Do not many of us need first of all a personal awakening? We have got into a routine of work, and can show an honourable record of business accomplished, visits paid, classes taught, addresses given; but in the light of eternity, are we satisfied with that? Have souls been really sought, yearned over, loved and won? Is ours fruit that will remain? We may even persuade hundreds, especially of the poorer classes, to accept baptism and enrol themselves as Christians, but are we sure that they are God's converts and not merely the manufactured article? Are we working ourselves with the fire of God, and not merely using the artificial fire, the "strange fire," of our own fleshy energy?

ARE WE AWAKE OURSELVES?

We shall never evangelise this country, in God's sense of the term, by flooding it with legions of Christian workers, but only by having living witnesses, workers who are wide awake, and who know by personal experience how to find and use the holy oil. To such the promise of a faithful God will stand, "Who art thou, O great mountain? Before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain."

Do we not also need, all of us, a stronger faith in God's power and willingness to save, and a spirit of more earnest and believing prayer? Awake ourselves, by God's great mercy, we want to see God's arm awake and his power at work. We cannot do better, then, than get us to the dust before our Master's feet, there to importune Him and to give Him no rest till He make India "appraise in the earth." It is under dark clouds just now. God's sore judgments have been abroad this year. Many voices are accusing India of ingratitude and perfidy. But God can alter all this and make it, in the truest sense, a praise in the earth. To this end, it is ours to pray for a great awakening in these latter days. "Awake! Awake! Put on strength! O arm of the Lord. Awake as in the ancient days." Will all readers of this appeal join in this prayer, and lay hold of God's power and blessing for India, in his appointed way? Better, far better, do less work if need be, that we may pray more. Work done by the rushing torrent of human energy will not save a single soul, whereas work done in vital and unbroken contact with the living God will tell for all eternity.

The Sydney Rescue Work Society carries on energetic work in the capital of New South Wales. The report states that the Home of Hope has been the means of saving many despairing girls from the police courts and gaol-gates. Young women have been received as inmates, and success has attended these efforts for the reclamation of at least some of them. Details follow of the Home-training School and Lying-in Hospital, and the open all-night shelter, the prisoners' branch, and the Babies' Home—each doing important and useful service. The Woman's Crusade undertakes the work of visitation of the opium dens, houses of ill-fame, police cells, courts, asylums and hospitals, and parades of the lost and erring. The Mission House, where the mission visitors reside, is situated right in the midst of these evils, and sheds its beams of light across the angry waves of human rebellion and sin against God, directing the tempest-tossed on life's troubled sea to the haven of rest. Every Sunday morning the messengers of mercy have visited the various police-stations of the city and suburbs, carrying with them bread-and-butter and tea for all who were locked up in the cells. Definite results have followed the effort thus made to reach the lapsed. A considerable amount of relief work is also done by this vigorous society.

The late Rev. W. Rogers, LL.D.,

WHITEABBEY, BELFAST.

A SAINTLY servant of Christ in the ministry of the Irish Presbyterian Church recently passed to his rest and reward in the person of Rev. Dr. ROGERS, of Whiteabbey, Belfast. He was pre-eminently a man of God, reminding one of the gifted and gracious McCheyne in his prayerful, persevering devotion to the great work of winning souls and edifying believers.

Dr. Rogers was a son of the manse, indeed came of a race of godly ministers distinguished for their high spirituality. He was a man of uncommon mental gifts. His college career was a series of brilliant successes. He took and maintained the lead over all competitors through his entire university course, and was considered—as he was—one of the most distinguished students ever educated for the Christian ministry. Gold medals and large money prizes came to him in rare plenty for his unique intellectual attainments.

These great gifts were all lovingly and loyally laid at the feet of Jesus for his use alone. He was absolutely abandoned to the work and will of God. His whole life was spent in compassing the salvation of men. He might have said, like Zinzendorf, "I have one passion, and it is He," for his burning, unquenchable desire was to give Jesus joy in his seeing of the travail of his soul by the ingathering of the lost.

He was a man of extraordinary prayerfulness, and frequently quoted what Fletcher of Madeley used to say to any friend whose path he crossed: "Do I meet you praying?" He had such a sense of the presence of God as led one instinctively to know when he began to pray, "God is here." A hush fell on the meeting in which Dr. Rogers breathed out his soul to God. It was a most real exercise to him, and he pronounced the word "Father" with such an amount of love and filial regard in the tone of his voice as led one to notice not only the reality but the blessedness of his communion with the Unseen. No preacher's sermons were ever more abundantly saturated in prayer than his. He frequently said: "If we honour the Holy Ghost in the study He will honour the sermon in the pulpit." His ideal of the Christian ministry was of the highest, and in his pulpit utterances, and visiting from house to house, he presented the Gospel with a zeal, earnestness and affection apostolic in its directness and holy urgency.

His soul burned with desire to have the Church of God raised to a level of Christian life more in accordance with the Divine promise. The low type of Christianity which abounded stirred his soul to its very depths, and led him to incessant prayer for God to lead believers out into the life of fullest blessing possible here below.

Dr. Rogers was the author of several striking booklets, one of which has already reached a large circulation, and is an invaluable and Spirit-given Gospel message. It is called "The Unspeakable Gift,"* and has already been much used in leading sinners to the Saviour.

Called by his church to occupy the position of convener of the committee on "The State of Religion and Evangelisation," he took the deepest interest in everything which led people to concern about salvation. He was himself a much-honoured evangelist, who gave all the spare time at his disposal to this well-loved work. He was a strong and fearless, yet tender, messenger of the Master, and could put the truth in such a way as to rouse to reflection, and lead to decision. In different parts of the land may be found numbers to-day rejoicing in the Saviour who own the subject of this sketch as their spiritual father.

He was called home by an insidious and lingering illness, but he was so brave, so patient, so calm that one could only glorify God in the man whose bed of pain and weakness was turned into a throne of triumph. God was shining in his face. His confidence in the Lord was so unwavering and his peace of soul so deep that his bedroom seemed to be a kind of annex to the unseen world of bliss. Any hint either as to the severity or duration of his trial was at once stopped. Thus calmly and trustfully did this brother beloved wait the summons home. It came as the birds were singing and the day breaking one lovely morning in May last, and it found him ready. The silver cord was loosed very gently, for liked a tired child he fell asleep, and woke up to find himself in the saint's everlasting rest.

Bible Flower Mission.—The mild weather in October was beneficial to the continuance of many kinds of flowers, so that up to the present time we have even had sweet peas, and this week some primroses and polyanthus have arrived, an unheard of experience for November. We trust the supply may be kept up until Christmas, and that when the outdoor varieties are over, we have have those from greenhouses and conservatories. We are rapidly approaching Christmas, and beg kind friends who send us parcels of clothing to let us have them in good time, so that the work of preparing for the Christmas week may be forwarded, and the gifts got ready for distribution. We are also in need of all kinds of ornamental cards, lavender bags, pincushions, evergreen, and wool for making up the bouquets. Help is required at the depôt, and even more for visiting the hospitals and infirmaries, etc. We are constantly cheered by hearing of one and another person testifying to the blessing they have received through the messages from God's word, distributed through the various departments of this mission.

A Modern Dorcas.

PREACHING on Sunday morning last week at the Presbyterian Church, Hexham-on-Tyne, Mr. James B. Wookey, commenting on the words, "There are last that shall be first," related the following pathetic incident:—

Yesterday, from one of the humblest homes in one of the poorest streets of Burton-on-Trent, there was carried forth the mortal remains of one of the most remarkable women it has been my privilege to know. Had she lived to see her next birthday she would have completed her eighty-third year. Socially she had never risen above the level of a washerwoman, at which employment for many years (being a widow) she supported herself and family. During the last ten years her income has been six shillings a week, out of which she paid one-and-sixpence for rent, leaving four-and-sixpence for fuel, food, and clothing. But she "walked with God," and the story of what He enabled her to do for the extension of Christ's kingdom is "marvellous in our eyes."

For very many years she was one of Dr. Barnardo's most energetic helpers, sending on an average nearly three hundred garments annually to the Homes, the greater portion of which her own frail fingers had made, and the material for which she got from friends. Nor was this all. For some years past she has collected upwards of ten pounds each year. In addition to her warm interest in the children under Dr. Barnardo's care, her whole soul was ablaze in all true Christian work carried on in the famous brewery town. Mothers' meetings, cottage meetings, and even work amongst the Jews, had her sympathy and practical help.

A few days ago, under the pressure of great pain, she was obliged to take to her bed, being seriously ill. Before she would do so, however, she worked strenuously to complete her stock of garments (making nearly two hundred and fifty for the year) so that they could be packed up and sent to the Homes by her friend Mr. Smith, a devoted missionary. At the same time, a cheque for ten guineas, the amount she had collected, was despatched to Dr. Barnardo.

On hearing from a friend that Mother Fisher (the name by which she was affectionately and familiarly known) was nearing her end, I made a pilgrimage so as to be with her before the last of the last. Dear old saint! I can see her now, propped up on her lowly bed, her face beaming with peace and benediction. Speaking to me with great difficulty, she said (pointing upwards), "I am going home. I shall see the dear children in heaven, sha'n't I? Tell Dr. Barnardo his work needs persevering in." When I suggested that I might have a little prayer by her bedside, she said, in a voice full of emotion, "Don't ask the Lord to spare me. I want to see Jesus. Blessed, blessed Jesus." And to-day she is with Him, whom she served so faithfully and so lovingly during the greater part of her earthly pilgrimage. The thought of her holy and beautiful life, of her self-denial, and her hard work, greatly humiliates me, as it probably has many others, and reminds us that "There are first that shall be last, and last that shall be first."

The National Industrial Home for Crippled Boys, Woolsthorpe House, Wright's-lane, Kensington, London, W., receives and trains crippled boys from all parts of the United Kingdom. The boys are received into the Home for three years, and instructed in trades. Two masters, both certificated, undertake the education of the boys in elementary and class subjects, and special classes are held for religious instruction. An educational inspector holds a yearly examination in Holy Scripture and in secular subjects. Over 800 boys have passed through the Home since its foundation. Owing to the heavy debt incurred in erecting the buildings, the committee have not as yet been able to receive the full number of 100 boys for whom accommodation is provided. As the debt has from time to time been reduced, the number of inmates has been increased, and at the present time there are ninety boys being maintained and trained in the Home. A recent appeal on behalf of the Home is endorsed by H.R.H. Princess Louise. The resident secretary, to whom correspondence should be addressed, is Mr. F. J. Bovis.

Isaiah and the Inscriptions.

As the number of monuments bearing inscriptions rescued from the Assyrian mounds rapidly augments, and the interpretation of the texts upon them becomes increasingly accurate, it has been confidently anticipated by scholars that some direct literary connection between these memorials and the contents of the Old Testament would be forthcoming. A part of the book of Isaiah is strikingly confirmed and illustrated by an Assyrian inscription.

For this interesting fact we are indebted to M. B. Sax, who has published his discovery in the "Revue d'Assyriologie" of the present year. In Isaiah x. 12 it says, "When the Lord has performed his work upon Jerusalem, I will punish the stout heart of the king of Assyria. For he" (the king) "said, I have removed the boundaries of the people, I have robbed their treasures (or provisions) and my hand has found as a nest the riches of the people, and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth."

It is evident upon close perusal of this that an historical fact is alluded to, namely, the boast of Sennacherib that he had altered the boundaries of countries he had conquered; pillaged them, and, like eggs in a nest, collected their wealth and treasures. The Bible distinctly accuses him of using this bombastic language. When he did so, his own inscriptions now tell us, in the text upon the Taylor Cylinder, which is repeated with some alterations upon the winged bulls at the palace of Kouyunjik, regarding the very campaign against Hezekiah in reference to which Isaiah is writing—after enumerating the human captives—"I have taken their horses, asses, mules, camels, oxen, and sheep, without number; as for Hezekiah, I have shut him in Jerusalem like a bird in a cage. I have separated from their countries the towns I have taken, having given them to Mitinti, king of Ashdod; and to Padi, king of Migron, and to Ismi-Bel, king of Gaza, I have divided his (Hezekiah's) kingdom." Then follows of treasures of pearls and gold, metals, precious stones, ebony, and slaves.

Isaiah tells us Sennacherib said he had removed and changed the frontiers, and the king asserts that he had taken away portions of the kingdom and given it to other princes. Isaiah informs us that he said he had pillaged them and taken away their treasures; and here he recounts and enumerates the very articles he robbed them of. Isaiah refers to the simile of a bird's nest, and Sennacherib to a bird in a cage! This allusion, strange to say, to a nest is to be found in another still more interesting inscription of Sennacherib corroborative of Isaiah. In chapter xxxvii. 24, 25, Sennacherib is stated to have declared:—"By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the summit of the mountains to the sides of Lebanon; and I will cut down the cedars thereof and the choice fir trees, and enter the height of his border and the forest of his carmel. I have digged and drunk water," and so on.

Now these words of the Assyrian cannot be traced as relating to any actual invasion of the Lebanon, and they appear only to be a record of the vauntings or threats of Sennacherib. If, however, we turn to that monarch's records, we shall find their counterpart. After his army was partly destroyed by disease at the end of the Judean campaign, he proceeded to invade the country of Nipour, perhaps because it promised an easier prey. Upon the Taylor Cylinder we have also an account of this war, and in it occur these sentences:—"They" (the people of Nipour) "had perched their houses like birds' nests in impregnable citadels on the summits of the hills on the high mountains. From the stones of the torrents and fragments of the lofty and inaccessible mountains I have fashioned a throne. I levelled one of the tops to plant thereon my throne, and I drank the pure water of the mountains to quench my thirst. As for the men, I surprised them in the folds of the wooded hills."

The striking analogies between these two documents are evident. The two allusions to drinking the mountain water cannot be accidental; the symbol of the birds' nest in the cuneiform text corresponds with the like expression in Isaiah x. A Phœnician inscription recently found in Cyprus speaks of a "carmel" there; evidently "carmels" or sacred summits, were common in Western Asia.

MILDMAY DEACONESSES' WORK.

Whatever changes come with the lapse of years, one fact remains—"the poor never cease out of the land"; and in regard to our great city, it has been truly said that "the poverty of London is even more astonishing than its wealth." A few representative cases are again furnished from the notes of deaconesses who, in the Mildmay Missions, personally visit the struggling ones in their humble homes and become well acquainted with the privations they endure.

AMID EARTH'S SHADOWS.

Come with me to a three-storied house (which is tenanted by several families), and through one of its dark passages, enter two back rooms where you will find a family of eight living—father, mother, and six children. Before passing through the first small room to an inner room, we must wait and get accustomed to the dull light. In that inner room a sad sight awaits us; for on the bed lie two dear children, one, six years old, the other, a babe, suffering from bronchial pneumonia. The poor tired mother (who has been up most of the night) is busy at the table by the bedside making matchboxes—and it is the old story: she is paid for these twopence farthing a gross.

"NO LUXURIES."

"How do you live on 1s. 6d. a week?" I asked an old friend one day, for, after paying her rent, this is the exact sum she has to spare for food and clothes. "I can just make both ends meet, Miss, by having no luxuries. I buy a bit of meat for Sunday, and that serves till the next week comes round." This is how she manages in the summer, but how she gets coals and clothes in the winter we cannot tell. Her working days are nearly over, for she is about seventy years old.

DAY AFTER DAY.

In a small room, for which she pays 2s., a woman sits day after day making brushes. Having lost the use of her right hand it makes her work harder, yet she is pleased if she can earn three-halfpence or twopence for a brush—putting 300 hairs into it. It is very hard work, and such small pay; yet she never complains in her monotonous work, but leaves all in the hands of God.

All gifts to provide food, firing, and clothing for such as these will be heartily welcomed and carefully distributed not only before Christmastide, but through the weeks of winter.

MISSION TO SUFFERING POOR.

We should like to draw the curtain aside and reveal many a picture from life that could not fail to enlist the sympathy and help of friends. The following cases are only typical of scores of others:—

In this room at the top of model dwelling-houses lives a recently-widowed German woman and her three small children. Mother-love is nerving her for the desperate fight for bread. She has written hundreds of circulars by hand asking for work, and has distributed them in the neighbourhood. "It matters not at all de vork dat I do, how hard it is; de goot God vill help de poor vidow and leetle vaderless ones." But work comes so slowly to the brave, though heart-broken woman, and she must be helped through this, her first winter of widowhood and poverty.

Here in a crowded room a tall, gaunt woman works with flying fingers through the long hours to pay the rent and provide for her three children. Many a thought she sends to a ward in the workhouse infirmary in which her husband lies, stricken with lingering illness. But there is a sorrow of which she seldom speaks, for it is the skeleton in the cupboard whose door is always closed to outsiders. We, her friends, listen with tender sympathy when she talks about her big boy in the asylum, whom she retained in the poor home until it was impossible to do so any longer. She, too, must have occasional help to eke out her scanty earnings through the winter season.

Clothing should be addressed to our temporary clothing store, 20, Waterloo-road, Bonner-road, London, E. All letters should be sent direct to

WANTED! HALF-WORN CLOTHING.

Winter is once more with us. Warm wraps and furs are being brought out of their summer hiding-places, and thinner garments stored away. If the owners of unemployed attire could but realise what a boon it would be to many respectable poor—people who do not pawn, but who have seen better days and must keep up a certain appearance to retain their situations, or who could get better employment if they only had a "decent coat"! Around us here in East London there are thousands who try to hide their poverty; and whom ordinary "poor relief" does not touch; these we are constantly meeting in our mission work, and it is heart-breaking to have to refuse really needy cases because our stock of garments to give away is exhausted.

The jacket that is just a bit too old-fashioned for family wear would keep some delicate, half-fed seamstress comfortable and warm all winter; the boots that are a "bit worn and shabby" would be the greatest help to some poor toiler, whose weary miles of tramping occasion a serious outlay in shoe leather; and the dress that is slightly "faded and frayed" would turn and "do up" and be worn for best by some poor woman who has not had a new gown for years.

Boots and shoes are greatly needed, but men's and boys' suits, dresses, and jackets would be gratefully received for the East London Institute by Miss Hyne, to whom parcels should be addressed, care of Dr. Guinness, Harley House, Bow, London, E.

A NEW TRANSLATION.

Our God's a tower of strong defence,
A trusty sword and armour;
He freely helps, in all our need,
From hater and from harmer.
The old wicked foe
Would fain lay us low,
Great force and deep guile
His weapons are the while;
No foe on earth so dreadful.

With all the strength that we possess
Just nothing is effected;
But lo! the right man for us fights
By God Himself selected.
Ask'st man whence He came?
Christ Jesus his name;
Of angels the Lord,
The mighty God, the Word—
That fight He must maintain it.

And were the world with devils filled,
Wild raging to devour us,
No need that our poor hearts should sink;
Thou shalt not overpower us!
The prince of our foes
Will fiercely oppose,
But quickly he's shamed,
For why? his doom's proclaimed—
A word can overwhelm him.

The Word of God they shall let stand,
And small the marks they'll merit;
Lo! He to victory leadeth on
All with his gifts and Spirit.
Rob they us of wife,
Child, goods, honour, life;
Let all go away!
And then, what gained have they?
Still, ours remains the Kingdom!

Our Hundredth Week.

THIS week we celebrate our centenary of Bible Searchers, and it is just one hundred weeks ago since we, my young friends and I, were introduced to each other.

I think, therefore, that you would like to know what progress we have made in that time. The first Bible Searcher was done correctly by thirty-two children; last week included in its first and second lists no fewer than 482. These ninety-nine Searchers have brought in a total of some 44,727 correct answers, and if we were to add to that those that were sent incorrectly you would see that the number received altogether would be very large indeed.

Then as regards your thought for others. You have given in all £527 10s. 11d., of which over £500 was for the famine-stricken children in India. Surely God will bless the givers.

All this is very encouraging, and I feel quite proud to think of what a large circle of nephews and nieces I now possess. You know that if you throw a stone into a pond it makes first a very tiny circle which goes on getting larger and wider until it may be several feet across. This is how the circle of my young readers has grown; and I hope that every week now there will be others saying, "Please make room for me; I want to join."

I wonder sometimes how many of you have yourselves induced other young people to become members. It would be a good time now to try hard for this, so that we may have a really good start for the New Year. But this page has another and more important object than merely swelling up numbers; and I hope that very many, if not all, of you have found it useful in helping you to know your Bible better. There are, of course, many things in it that you cannot understand just yet; but it is good to learn them nevertheless, and you will find as you grow older that some parts which you have, as you thought, quite forgotten will come back to your mind some day. And even now I am sure you may find a great deal in what you read which will help you to conquer sin and live to please and love Jesus.

Read the article (by Mr. C. Edwards, of Winchester), "Thy Word is a Lamp," and you will see how useful God means the Bible to be. UNCLE TOM.

"Thy Word is a Lamp."

THE Bible is compared with a number of practical every-day things in order that we may understand its importance and use. It is a Hammer to break us, a Fire to purify us, a Sword to pierce us and a Lamp to guide us. As there are different uses for the lamp, so the Bible is manifold in its light and blessing.

THE BIBLE IS LIKE—

1. A Policeman's Lamp
   With a Search Light..... Ps. cxix. 130.
2. A Postman's Lamp
   With a Clear Light ..... Ps. xxvi. 9.
3. A Guard's Lamp
   With a Signal Light ..... Ps. xix. 11.
4. A Watchman's Lamp
   With a Protecting Light Ps. cxix. 11.
5. A Traveller's Lamp
   With a Guiding Light ... Ps. cxix. 105.
6. A Miner's Lamp
   With a Safety Light..... Prov. vi. 33.
7. A Home Lamp
   With a Useful Light..... Prov. xiii. 9

The Search Light touches our conscience and shows us our sin. The Clear Light touches our minds and shows us our character. The Signal Light touches our souls and shows us our danger. The Protecting Light touches our hearts and shows us our safety. The Guiding Light touches our path and shows us our way. The Safety Light touches our life and shows us its value. The Useful Light touches our service and shows us its power.

Good Thomas Watson says:—"The Bible is a Rock of Diamonds; a Chain of Pearls; the Sword of the Spirit; a Chart by which the Christian sails to Eternity; the Map by which he daily walks; the Sundial by which he sets his life, and the Balance in which he weighs his actions."

"Read the Bible till you love it, was the advice given to a young man who was just setting out from home to face the world. He smiled at the idea of ever loving the Bible, but he promised his old father that at least he would read it daily. It became so interesting to him, as he read, that everything was thrown aside for it, and ere long he became a preacher of the Gospel."

"The Word is the Holy Spirit's cloudy pillar, and those who follow it find guidance, safety, and comfort" (Rom. viii. 14).

"To be a pilot without a chart, or a soldier without a sword, or a traveller without a lamp, is ridiculous; but more so to be a Christian without the Word of God and skill to use it" (1 Tim. i. 7).

"Unto Me."

BY MRS. HARVEY-JELLIE.

CHAPTER III.

IT was a thrilling story that Morris Randal told Mr. and Mrs. Claughton about his conversion and the consecration of his wealth, and after much prayer and consideration he bought a house near to the Claughtons, and sent for a niece to come and stay with him. Rosa soon became a companion with Muriel and Janie, and greatly beloved, for she was gentle and delicate and younger than they.

As they went up the garden path one morning they saw "Uncle Morris" cutting some flowers. "I wonder if you can keep secrets," he said. "If so, come with me."

Then Rosa came laughing up to them, and helped Mr. Randal to lift the sheet off, displaying a comfortable bath-chair.

"Oh, Uncle Morris," they both exclaimed, "is that yours?"

"No, it is yours."

"But how? We only have half the money." They looked serious with excitement.

"I thought you could do something else with that, and let me buy the chair. Now you are to do as you like with it."

Their delight was unbounded as they examined the soft cushions, and then they went off with Rosa, first to tell their parents; and then to Grannie and Harry. To both of them the news seemed too good to be true, and the thought of a ride was delightful.

"I like dear old women," said Rosa, "how happy they seem to be when you go. I never thought about trying to make any one like that glad, but uncle has told me about it, and why he wants to do good."

The day for Harry's first outing came, and the sun shone over the country lane as the three girls gently wheeled the chair along. With his pale face resting on a crimson cushion, he looked a picture of contentment, as he gazed on the trees and flowers, and received the bunches they gathered for him. The fresh air did wonders, and many happy rides he had, so that his poor mother would cry with gratitude as she told of the "dear young ladies."

Grannie, too, occasionally went out, and Mrs. Claughton helped to get her ready.

"You dear," said Muriel, as the old woman sat for the first time in the chair, "isn't it a nice change?"

"How good the dear Lord is to put it into your hearts to make an old body so happy, and it's all because you love Him," said Widow Norley.

It would seem astonishing to those who are selfish and indifferent how ever those girls found time for all they managed to do, but after all—

'Tis love that makes our willing feet
In swift obedience move.

And their hearts knew something of the love of Christ—that love which must go out in helpful deeds of kindness, and find its happiness in gladdening lonely lives.

Thus the happy life of doing good went on, as the circle of those who received loving care widened, and the girls grew fonder of each other. Uncle Morris was the centre of all good work; and Rosa's mother came to stay with her brother; as she was a widow, it seemed likely she and Rosa would stay altogether.

The Claughtons were happier since taking the orphans to live with them, and the joy of the three girls, Muriel, Janie, and Rosa, was unbounded as they busily prepared for Christmas surprises, and a pleasant evening with the dear ones at "The Home." For they are glad, indeed, and paid a hundredfold, who seek to gladden other lives and put sunshine into gloomy hearts. Remember, dear young people,

We lose what on ourselves we spend.
We have as treasure without end
Whatever, Lord, to Thee we lend,
Who givest all.

Paul's Last Words.—2 Tim. iv. 1-8, 16-18.

Golden Text.—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith." —2 Tim. iv. 7.

In our Lesson (Nov. 14, Acts xxviii.) we left Paul in a Roman guard-room awaiting his trial. From statements strewn throughout the Pastoral Epistles (Timothy and Titus) we may conclude that he was released and spent the following three years in a visitation of the churches he had already formed. Shortly after Paul left Rome there broke out the great Neronian Persecution, which was prompted by such intense hatred, performed with such unspeakable cruelty, and pursued with such diabolical perseverance that the very ends of the empire trembled. Paul was tracked (probably to Troas) and taken prisoner; he was brought back to Rome. No leniency was shown him this time, he was cast into the damp, dark, dreary Mamertine prison. Of his friends, some were sent away to bear messages to the churches, some left him through fear. Only Luke stood by him to the end (2 Tim. iv. 11). It was during this imprisonment that Paul wrote the Pastoral Epistles. Our lesson gives us the last words of this great Apostle of Jesus.

I. Paul's charge to Timothy (2 Tim. i. 1-5). We who are young should always give heed to the advice of the aged. Paul is standing on the threshold of eternity, and while "in the sight of God and Jesus Christ" he calls Timothy to constant, ardent endeavour in the work to which he had put his hand. Timothy was nervous and shy—disposed, perhaps, to be tempted by the glitter and show of pagan Ephesus, but this voice from the grave comes as a summons to new exertion. He is to preach in all places and occasions; in prison or out of it; in sorrow and in joy; in the street and in the meeting-house. With patience towards those who do not accept it at once (iv. 2). Paul sees a time when the people would long for things novel and pleasant, and would not accept the stern morality of Christ (3 and 4). But the preacher must be faithful—preach what is right and true, not what people merely like. He is to be a voice not an echo. By so doing he will prove that God has sent him (5). Teacher should emphasise that all his scholars should be ministers in their lives, always speaking and living for Christ.

II. Paul's verdict on his life (7-8). He was now about to be poured out as a drink-offering. He sees that he is drawing to the close of his life's pilgrimage; but he does not regret the early choice he made. He sees now more clearly than ever that it was "a good fight." He had kept his faith in God all the way through, and his shield was more to him now than ever. He is not afraid of death; it is the narrow portal which admits him to that Judge who will place on his head a crown that fadeth not away. From the vantage ground of the dying hour a man "sees life steadily and sees it whole." Compare Paul's verdict on his life with that of Solomon's: "Vanity of vanities—all is vanity." With Paul stand all the righteous saints of God; their death has proved that the life they lived was the best. Others who have followed after pleasure, wealth, and fame have been disappointed. Lord Byron wrote on his last birthday:—

> My days are in the yellow leaf,
> The flowers, the fruits of life are gone,
> The worm, the canker, and the grief
> Are mine alone.

But the righteous triumph in death. If we wish to "die the death of the righteous" we must live the life of the righteous now.

III. He is faithful that promised (16-18). All Paul's friends forsook him—even Luke could not or did not stand with him at his trial. He was alone and yet not alone. God was with him. He was delivered from the mouth of the lion (Nero) at his first hearing, but he knew now that death was no "evil thing." His work was completed, and he courted that which should bring him into the "Heavenly Kingdom." Point out (and illustrate by Luther before the Diet of Worms) that in all our trials and temptations God will be our strength. We fail without Him. With Him we can do all things, and shall come off more than conqueror. Paul's last word is one of praise to the God whom he had found faithful. Now better than ever he could say, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which he committed unto Him." For God had kept him true and faithful even unto death.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN WINCHESTER.

The time to which we have been looking forward with prayerful expectation for months past has come and gone, and we ask the whole Church to rejoice with us in the manifold tokens of God's convicting, converting, and sanctifying grace, which have been vouchsafed through the ministry of his servant in our midst. For sixteen days past there has been no doubt in our minds that Jesus Christ has come in power to Winchester, and the whole city has been moved in such a way as has not been seen before.

May we crave a little space to tell how all this, humanly speaking, came about? It may encourage other places to seek the same gracious results. In connection with the Week of Prayer at the beginning of the year a spirit of deep unity was manifested. Christians came together as they had not for many years past, and a time of great blessing was experienced. The leaders of the Churches felt that something should be done to follow up this visitation of the Spirit by an earnest united effort for the salvation of those outside. Mr. Clarke was invited, and being impressed with the hopeful conditions consented to come. Monthly united prayer-meetings have been held through the year, and suitable means taken to bring the mission before the attention of the people. Previous to the mission every house was visited and a personal canvass made, the city being divided into districts for this purpose. A week of united prayer was held, and was well attended. All the Free Churches, the Soldiers' Home, and other undenominational missions, and the various young people's Christian societies gave up their usual services (except on Sundays) both for the week of prayer and the mission proper. From the first several leading Evangelical laymen of the Established Church have joined heartily in the movement, and some of the clergy have taken part in the mission services.

With some trepidation we had done what Mr. Clarke urgently wished—taken at great expense the largest hall in the city, the Guildhall, with its side rooms. It was soon evident that this was the right thing, and the necessary funds have come in by voluntary contributions. From the first the body of the hall was full, and after the first few days gallery and platform, too, have been crowded out; latterly on several occasions hundreds have been unable to obtain even standing room. Over 400 have openly gone into the inquiry-room, and given in their names in testimony of their decision for Christ. Of these some were professing Christians who had been convinced of lukewarmness or backsliding; indeed, a striking feature of the mission has been the deep work in the hearts of Christians. The afternoon "Bible Talks" have been largely attended, and have been searching and helpful. On the other hand, multitudes who usually have "cared for none of these things" have been gathered under the sound of the Gospel night after night, and in many cases have been led to Christ. Mr. Clarke's address on "The Christian Athlete," when the body of the hall was packed with men, was specially used in awakening interest among this class of the community.

On the first Sunday our faith was tried, for Mr. Clarke arrived with a bad sore-throat, the doctor forbidding him to take the services. But much prayer was offered, and in dependence on the healing power of God Mr. Clarke began the mission, and from the first his voice has been equal to the heavy strain put upon it. We thank God for sending him among us; he has proved, as we expected, "the very man for Winchester," and the Gospel through his lips has been "with demonstration of the Spirit and with power." Our prayer now is that the flood of blessing which has thus come to our city may flow on in our various churches, and that we may have grace given to us to feed the lambs, which the Great Shepherd has thus gathered with his arm.

MR. W. R. LANE IN BLACKBURN.

An eight days' united mission has concluded in Blackburn, conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. The missioner was supported on the platform by most of the Nonconformist ministers of the town and seven of the Church of England.

It is believed that a lasting impression has been made in the town, the interest in the meetings increasing each day until the fourth, after which the hall (although having a seating capacity of 1800) was totally inadequate to cope with the numbers that flocked to hear the Word. There must have been fully 2000 in the hall, many having to be turned away.

In one and all of the meetings the power of the Spirit was very evident, but if any might be said to be particularly impressive it was the Thursday evening's gathering, when the hall was packed with a congregation of men, Mr. Lane's subject being impurity.

There must have been fully 500 men who remained in the hall for the prayer-meeting. Indeed one special feature of the mission has been the very large proportion of the audience remaining to the second meeting for prayer each night.

On the Saturday evening Mr. Lane gave a most telling and beautifully illustrated lecture on "John Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress."

The whole of the expenses of the mission have been fully met by the freewill offerings.

Evidences of blessing have come to us from every quarter of the town, and at the Y.M.C.A. rooms this week services have been held each night for the purpose of helping those who decided for Christ during the mission, at which services striking evidence has been given of the wonderful way God has been pleased to work and is still working through the faithful message delivered by his servant last week, and by Rev. G. White, who has conducted this week's meetings.

The Young Men's Christian Association has largely shared in the blessing, many of the members having been greatly helped in the Christian life, whilst the membership roll is also being steadily augmented.

We are sure that many with us will praise God for sending his servant to Blackburn, and will also remember in prayer Mr. Lane and his labour in other towns. H. W.

A minister also, after describing some of the features noted above, adds:—

It is too soon to talk of the results of the mission, but it is not too soon for one to give his impressions of the work and of the worker. Mr. Lane was quite unknown to me except by name and reputation prior to his coming, but the way in which he put himself into touch with the ministers of all denominations, with their work and workers, and with those who love the Lord Jesus Christ make me glad that we have had the pleasure of hearing him for ourselves. He will be heartily welcomed back to Blackburn at any time. Any who believe in the teaching of John's Gospel, chapter iii., and who regard "evangelists" as one of God's gifts to the Church, may heartily invite Mr. W. R. Lane to do work in their midst; and those who wish to get an application of the truth of God to daily life and an answer to the question, "How ought we to live?" will not be disappointed in his treatment of the subject.

Mr. Lane was at Hastings on Sunday, and spoke to the P.S.A. at Mr. New's church. About 200 stayed to a second meeting, and many of these stood up asking for prayer, seeking the Lord.

REV. H. MONTGOMERY IN INVERNESS.

A packed meeting in the Music Hall closed a most helpful series of meetings in Inverness, conducted by Rev. H. Montgomery, Belfast. They began on Sabbath, November 14, with a service in the Free High Church in the morning, and at eight o'clock in the Music Hall. During the week they were continued every evening in the Free High Church, with afternoon Bible readings on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Open-air meetings were also held.

From the first the power of the Holy Spirit was felt. His blessed work in the hearts of saints and sinners has been very deep and real. Mr. Montgomery came with a clear message from God, and got great strength to deliver it. The Bible Readings were seasons for looking at what God desired his people to attain to, and for pointed asking if they were willing to take "the best He had to give." Many at these meetings yielded to God.

There was held on the Friday night, from 9.30 to eleven o'clock, one of the most solemn services we were ever present at; when a large company spent most of the time upon their knees crying to God for power to yield unreservedly to the working of the Spirit, and henceforth promising to live only to God. Truly the Lord was in that place. We hope and believe the effect of that most solemn league and covenant will be felt in our midst.

Much blessed work was done in the open-air, where Mr. Montgomery seemed particularly at home. He also presided at a large Christian Endeavour meeting on the Saturday, and addressed a crowded gathering of the Sabbath schools on Sabbath afternoon. Through all the mission the power of the Spirit has been clearly set forth.

MARGARET BLACK.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

A ten days' mission to men was held in the City of Dublin Y.M.C.A. during the Week of Prayer. Mr. J. CRAWFORD was the evangelist. From night to night the young men were gathered in from the streets, and many professed to trust the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Saviour. Roman Catholics attended, and several told the workers they would come out for Christ.

A special series of meetings has been held in Free St. John's Church, Edinburgh, by Mr. James McKendrick, from Nov. 7 to Saturday last (27th). About five years ago the Cowgatehead Free Church united with St. John's, the church of which Dr. Thomas Guthrie was the first minister; and after the union Rev. R. L. Jaffray was called. In the Cowgate premises home mission work has been vigorously carried on, and here Mr. McKendrick began his special mission. A prominent feature has been open-air preaching, for which the evangelist is peculiarly adapted, large gatherings being held in the historic Grassmarket, and other places, before every indoor meeting. His addresses have been greatly appreciated, not only by those gathered in from the highways and hedges, but by many churchgoers.

Rev. John McNeill is drawing great audiences to hear his addresses in the new Public Hall, Arbroath. He closes the Mission there on Friday.

Special services have been held in Munlochy Free Church, where Rev. Mr. Lamont, of Snizort, and others assisted. In connection with the Maryburgh Free Church, special services have been held at Maryburgh and Conon for upwards of two months. These meetings were begun by Mr. Maccoll, of Glasgow, and two students from the same city, and a good work has been done.

Mr. and Mrs. Gordon, Forres, with a Glasgow student, have been holding special meetings at Carr Bridge, where the people are attending night after night in considerable numbers.

In some Free Churches in Sutherlandshire the special services recently have been marked by much blessing. Rev. John Ross, of Rosehall, recently conducted a ten days' mission in the Scourie district, and occasional meetings have lately been held in other parts of the country.

Rev. Donald Mackay, of Tiree, has entered upon special evangelistic work in Ullapool and neighbourhood, in which he is to be engaged for some weeks.

Rev. Seth Backhouse has conducted, in Welshpool, a united mission, promoted by a united council of I.O.G.T. lodges. Many of the ministers of the town and district took part in the services.

A three days' mission was held last week at Pontymoile, by Mr. W. S. BUCKOLL, of Nottingham. Sinners were converted, backsliders restored, and Christians greatly cheered. The Lord is doing great things at each of the mission stations in connection with Mr. Thos. M. Wintle's South Wales Christian Mission.

A month's special work has been closed at the Vale Mission Hall, Guernsey, by Mr. B. H. ANGEL. Much blessing has been realised through the Word preached to large gatherings. Many have confessed Christ as their Saviour. Prayer is asked for similar evangelisation in other parts of the island.

Evangelistic services have taken place in Richhill, Clonliffe, Portaferry, and Comber Methodist churches, and in Agnes Street (Belfast), Balteagh, Magherafelt, and Clontibret Presbyterian churches. In each case some professed to have been brought to decision for Christ.

The Newcastle Open-air Mission Band has been giving special attention, during the past season, to work in the villages—Saturday afternoons being given to this rural evangelisation. For the most part the preachers have been well received, Amongst the places visited have been Swalwell, Dudley Colliery, Denton Burn, Wardley Colliery, Whicham—each village being canvassed from house to house in order to arouse the inmates to interest in the open-air preaching. Here is our correspondent's account of what was done in one place, and it illustrates all the rest:—"We had a muster of eighteen, five being ladies. We missioned the village first, spreading the news, then settled in a large open space beside the central inn of the village and had a good open air meeting, having three addresses and plenty of singing. At the evening meeting in the chapel we had a goodly company and a good meeting, having three speakers, solos and a recitation. A prayer-meeting held afterwards closed with one convert, a bright lad of seventeen or so."

An eight days' Gospel mission has been concluded at the Gospel Hall, High-street, Wood Green, N. From the commencement until the close the presence and power of the Holy Spirit have been manifested, and through the preaching of the Word some have been brought to Jesus. Believers have also been edified and stimulated in their work. The mission was conducted by the Walthamstow Open-Air Gospel Mission.

A fourteen days' Gospel mission is being held by Mr. Monro Collings in Monmouth, where he held an encouraging mission last winter.

Mr. J. J. SMITH has closed a successful mission in Comber, eight miles from Belfast. The church was crowded every night and souls saved at every service; the whole town seemed to be moved. Mr. Smith is now at Bushmills conducting a ten days' mission. Several Roman Catholics have been among those who have waited to the after meeting.

Mr. A. C. FREW, formerly of China, has been conducting meetings during the past two months in the dales of Yorkshire, and also in several villages around Derby, with much spiritual blessing, many being converted through the preaching of the Gospel.

Mr. J. BENNETT ANDERSON has conducted a three weeks' mission at Crewe, in the Town Hall and the London and North-Western Dining Rooms. On Sunday, Nov. 28, Mr. Anderson commenced a three weeks' mission among the Midland Railway men in Derby in the Victoria Hall (Y.M.C.A.).

Mr. W. R. Lane is now at Worcester.—Gipsy Smith, who closed at Lambeth Baths on Monday, starts at Stafford, on Sunday, 12th inst.—Mr. Geo. Clarke is this week at Wigan.

The following, amongst other missions, will be held (D.V.) between this and Christmas by the Evangelization Society:—Saltcoats, D. M. Bayne; Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, H. Collins; Takeley, J. Harris; New Prestwick, F. Holmes; Portslade, A. Clark; Blofield, F. Tarrant; Marshfield, C. B. Jolliffe; Inverness, J. W. Moodie; Burgh-by-Sands, G. J. Roger; Hucknall Torkard, J. Whiting; Barrhill, H. Young; Arnewood, F. Walter; North Kelsey, C. Noakes; Ipswich, J Johnson; Leeds, J. Lovell; Torryburn, J. W. Galletly; Quinton, N. Taylor; West End, Southampton, James Clark: Newhaven, D. Pittendrigh; Ash Vale, M. Aspland; Llangrove, S. Vivian; Mattishall, C. Lazenby; Overton, R. Williams; Tain, R. Lapsley; Ross, J. B. Rochfort; Fosbury, J. Shields; Rothesay, T. Canning; Tuddenham, J. Brown; Breachwood, J. Greenwood; Battersea, J. Bellchambers; Cricklewood, H. Bray; Harby, G. Pell; Great Totham, J. H. Cooke; Whittington, A. E. Knight.

Requests for Prayer.

For blessing on a twelve days' mission at Sale, Dec. 4 to 15.

For a mission by Rev. T. J. Hazzard, in his native village (Templecombe, Somerset), Dec. 6 to 12.

For blessing on a mission for young people at Yatesbury, Wilts, Dec. 5 to 9, to be conducted by Mr. J. H. Greene.

For blessing on meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life by Mr. William Hill, in East London, Cape Colony, Dec. 12 to 19.

For two weeks' special meetings at Hawick, beginning Nov. 28, conducted by Mr. W. W. Dunn.

That there may be larger blessing in connection with Prison-gate work in Birmingham.

Boys Wishing to go to Sea.—The committee of the Arethusa and Chichester Training Ships, Greenhithe, Kent, will be grateful if you will allow them to state that there are vacancies on board these ships for poor boys of good character who wish to go to sea. The vacancies arise because so many lads have recently been sent into the Royal Navy and Mercantile Marine. Mission workers and school teachers, as well as the clergy and ministers of all denominations, may be thankful to hear of these openings for aspiring young sailors of good character, and are particularly asked to note that the Arethusa and Chichester are not reformatories. The ages should be between fourteen and fifteen and a-half, and applications may be addressed to me as below, at which address also I interview candidates every morning at eleven o'clock.

H. BRISTOW WALLEN, Secretary,
164, Shaftesbury-avenue, London, W.C.

Mistress and Maid.

IN these days, when servants are scarce, and good ones scarcer, when the old spirit of consideration on the one hand, and loyalty on the other, seem to be dying out, it is refreshing to read such letters as the following. They speak for themselves, and reflect, on the one hand, the sentiments of a considerate mistress, and on the other hand, the gratitude of a worthy maid. Parents hardly realise perhaps how much they and their children owe to a careful and godly nursemaid:—

"Feb. 13, 1838.

"MY DEAR AGNES,—Do me the favour to accept this shawl as a trifling proof of the grateful sense I entertain of your unwearied kindness by night and day to my dear children. May the Lord repay you 'full measure pressed down and running over,' not only in this world but in that which is to come.

"I think I need not say we shall at all times be happy to see you, and if I can serve you at any time I shall not only feel it my duty, but a real pleasure to do so.—Your sincere and affectionate friend, "T. P. B."

"February, 1842.

"Believe me, my dear Agnes, your pretty note of thanks is quite understood and appreciated by me. I join with you in thanks and praises to our heavenly Father that He has again raised you up from a bed of sickness, and if anything could add to my satisfaction on the occasion, it is that I was permitted in any way to minister to your comfort.

"Do not suppose, my dear Agnes, that your watchful and tender care over my beloved children in the days of helpless infancy is forgotten; I must ever be your debtor. My prayer is, in 'that day' I may be found to have been as faithful in my discharge of duty to you, as you have ever been in your responsible position to me. He that searcheth the heart knoweth my desire, and will, I trust, help and pardon my infirmities, and accept us both in his dear Son, according to the riches of his grace. To his love I commend you for time and eternity, and am, your affectionate mistress and friend,

The above are dated many years back, but the next belongs to the present:—

"Dear Mrs.——, I was so pleased to hear from you this morning, and to get such a kind and beautiful letter, to think that none of you forget me and think so highly of poor me; I am afraid I don't deserve such praise. I know I always loved you all, and if I had my health I feel sure I should have been with you now; for it was always a pleasure to me to do anything for both you and Mr. ——. You treated me more like a brother and sister, and I do thank you both for all the help you have given. Also my mother, she cried when she read your letter, for your kindness to me. I am sorry to tell you I am very weak and ill, and it is difficult for me to write this as my hand shakes so; my cough has been and is now something terrible sometimes, and I can't eat anything. The doctor here says I am in consumption.

"I was so glad to hear that you and the children are quite well. I only hope you may all keep so. I should so love to see you all again, but I am afraid not in this world. I will write again, and let you know if I am better. I can't even walk out of doors at present, it seems such weakness. Please give my love to the dear little children.—I remain, yours faithfully," "B. F."

Rescue Work in the West-End.—Mrs. Kitto writes from St. Martin's Vicarage, Charing Cross:—"Through your great kindness in allowing me to make known the needs of our Rescue Home we have been very greatly assisted in carrying on its work for the past eight years. The house, which was opened as a rescue home in the neighbourhood of Piccadilly in 1889, has been such a blessed means of escape from their terrible lives to many poor wandering ones that, in spite of the fact that our funds are exhausted, we have been bold enough to renew our lease, and we trust that money may be forthcoming to carry on the work. This home is literally an 'open door.' We receive young women who come to us and keep them in safety until they can be placed in training homes, restored to their friends, sent into hospitals, or otherwise provided for. It is hardly necessary to point out how terrible is the evil which we seek to diminish, or how great is the need for places of refuge such as this home is; but it is, alas! necessary to make known how hard it is to get the money to carry on this work.—The Times.

Scottish Notes.

CARRUBBERS CLOSE MISSION, EDINBURGH.

The report of the past year is one full of encouragement, and calls forth praise to God for the manifest tokens of blessing vouchsafed. It is impossible to do more than refer to the more outstanding features of the many-sided work carried on by this well-known Mission. An open-air meeting is held every night in the High-street. During the summer there are similar gatherings every Sabbath on Calton Hill, the Meadows, and in other parts of the city. Much fruit has resulted from these gatherings. There are nightly Gospel meetings in the hall, a Gospel temperance meeting every Saturday, a Gospel meeting every Sunday evening, attended by 1600 people. There are mizpahs and foreign mission bands and work amongst the young. During the year some 1700 prayer meetings have been held, and the members of one section have taken part in no less than 272 meetings in town and country.

The annual meeting was held on Thursday last, Professor Simpson presiding. The report stated that the finances were in a prosperous condition, and in no previous year had the work been more successful. The Rev. Hugh Black gave an address to workers, pointing out the need for waiting upon God in faith and patience.

Prof. Simpson was presented with a substantial mark of regard for the interest he has taken in the work of the Mission for over twenty-five years.

Rev. W. M. Mackay, of Troon, is invited to accept the pastorate of Free South Church, Aberdeen, recently vacated by Mr. Clow.

For the past seven years the Piershill Soldiers' Home, Edinburgh, has been a centre of good work among the army detachments stationed in the city.

The Free Church congregation at Creich is sending a call to Rev. Charles Lamont, probationer, Glasgow, as colleague and successor to the venerable Dr. Gustavus Aird.

A friend of the Sailors' Orphan Society of Scotland has lately given £3500 in aid of the erection of a new Home, making £17,000 received or promised towards the £20,000 needed.

At the annual missionary meeting in Glasgow of the Free Presbytery, deeply interesting addresses were given by Rev. A. G. Macalpine and Dr. Elmslie, of Livingstonia; Dr. E. M. Macphail, Madras; Mr. Roberts, Lovedale; Dr. Dalziel, Natal; and others.

Mrs. Bishop, the well-known traveller, has been addressing a large number of meetings in Edinburgh. At all of these she has given valuable testimony in favour of foreign missions, especially Medical Missions. Her experience is that doors are open on every hand, and what is wanted is for the Churches at home to send forth the needed labourers into the great harvest fields.

A very hearty welcome has been accorded to Rev. W. Ross, of Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, on his return from a visit to South Africa after an absence of nearly four months. Mr. Ross's health is greatly improved by the change. He has laboured in Cowcaddens for fourteen years, and has been privileged to see great things as the fruit of the devoted labours of himself and his helpers.

A census of the attendance at all the religious services at the twenty Protestant churches in the town of Inverness was taken on Sunday week. The total population is set down at 23,895, out of which there were 13,222 present at all the services of the day, or, taking the forenoon alone, there were just 6465, which is one out of every 3·7 of the total population. Taking the individual congregations, the Free Church had 7413 at all their services; the Established Church, 3108; the Episcopal, 789; the U.P., 692; the Secession, 432; and the Wesleyan, 302.

The seventeenth annual report of the Highland Orphanage shows that the past year has been an eventful one in the history of the institution. It has witnessed the commencement of the building of the Diamond Jubilee Cottage, the foundation of which was laid in June. The addition to the Orphanage buildings will cost about £2000, and when it is finished it will increase the value of the Orphanage property to about £5,400. The children in the Homes number fifty-eight in all, of whom thirty-three are girls and twenty-five boys, the total being two fewer than last year.

A demonstration marked by much enthusiasm took place last Thursday in Leith, under the auspices of the Christian Fellowship Union. The object of the Union (the members of which are connected with all the churches) is to win for Christ young men and women in the town, and in this it has been singularly successful. Lord Overtoun said that sometimes the churches looked askance a little at work not done exactly on Church lines, or under the auspices of the churches. He thought many young men required more liberty than the churches gave them. They are to be won. We must adapt ourselves to their needs and conditions.

During the present year a considerable number of the Highland Free Churches have gone in for special evangelistic services among their people. Indeed, not for many years do we remember to have known of so large a number of churches devoted to such work as has been the case since the beginning of this year's summer. This is as it should be, and we have no doubt that the result will yet be apparent in a widespread awakening among the Highland people—when there shall be the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, and when the Lord's own goings in the land shall be both mighty and glorious.—Northern Weekly.

"The Filching of the Sabbath."

Sir,—My attention has been called to a letter from Mr. Chas. Cook in your issue of November 11, in which he says: "At Forest Gate a Methodist Church was given over to the secretary of a trades union, who discoursed on the Eight Hours Struggle on the same (Sunday) evening." The meeting was not on Sunday evening, but on Sunday afternoon, and the church was not "given over" to the secretary of a trades union, but the usual P.S.A. religious service was held in the United Methodist Free Church, and presided over by its minister, Rev. Jas. Wright.

It is true that Mr. Barnes, the secretary of the A.S.E., gave an address on "The Eight Hours Struggle," and took away the collection, in the shape of a cheque for £14 2s., for the locked-out men.

At the time this meeting was held the men had agreed to let their case be decided by an impartial board of arbitration, and the masters had not. As professed followers of the Prince of Peace, we consider ourselves bound to support this effort of the men to discontinue the barbarous war.

We hold that the Church has to teach the principles of the Kingdom of God, and also under some circumstances to show the application of them.

Christ Himself gave relief to men's bodies on the Sabbath, as well as giving spiritual instruction to their minds. I am all in favour of saving our Sabbaths for what are usually considered religious objects, viz., to preach the Gospel to the poor, to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, the receiving of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord.—Your sincerely,

W. A. Lang, Hon. Sec.,
Forest Gate U.M.F. Church P.S.A.

32, Capel-road, Forest Gate, E., Nov. 21.

The Ladies' Irish Association continues to do good work in all its three branches—evangelising through Scripture readers who can speak the Irish language, teaching by schools in lonely places, and relieving cases of poverty. The report gives interesting details of the work of leading darkened ones into Gospel light and peace. It also gives pathetic examples of the relief work. The secretary of the Association is Mr. W. Mollan, 24, Clare-street, Merrion-square, Dublin.

"The Wail of the Village Pastor."—Several correspondents, writing in reference to our recent article on the subject of evangelising the villages, call attention to the good work carried on by the Evangelisation Society, 21, Surrey-street, Strand. This goes without saying; but the original plea was that some of the more prominent evangelists who are accustomed to draw large crowds in important centres of population should now and again make a tour of the villages. Meantime excellent work is being done by such agencies as the Evangelisation Society, the Country Towns Mission, and various Bible carriages, all of which are only limited in their usefulness by the inadequate supply of funds for their maintenance.

A Great Singer's Testimony.

About fifty years ago the great singer Jenny Lind literally thrilled the whole world with the richness of her voice. Crowds gathered to hear her, high prices were paid for any place that could be got to hear this wonderful lady. Everyone was captivated by her simplicity as well, for she was not spoiled by her unprecedented popularity, and was kept in the balance by wise, weighty principles whilst on the top of united and general applause. During some touring in America someone asked her to write her name in her album, which she did and added the following words:—

In vain I seek for rest
In all created good;
It leaves me still unblest,
And makes me cry for God;
And sure at rest I ne'er can be Until my soul finds rest in Thee.

This is a beautiful testimony, and is, we have reason to believe, the heart's experience of one who had every opportunity of testing the reality of what the world at its best is. Her voice had charmed the thousands that had heard her all over the world, but the voice of Jesus had charmed her when He said to her, "I will give you rest."

What does this rest include? Does it not speak to us of a true heart-ease. How can I love Him who wants my affection and my heart, who seeks to win me for Himself. He wants to find rest in us, and we naturally will not let Him. Is this not because we do not allow Him to love us, or at least to let that love into our hearts, for love must have an object to rest on. "We love Him because He first loved us." That is the secret. He will be the faithful Friend of the friendless, and share the trials of his own; nay take them, that we may have present and eternal rest.

It is said that the reason why the soldiers of Alexander the Great loved him so enthusiastically was that, if they were upon a long march, Alexander did not ride, but tramped along in the heat and dust with the common soldiery; and when the day was hot, and they brought his majesty water, he put it aside, and said, "The sick soldiers want it more than I do, I will not drink till every soldier has had a draught." This was love combined with sympathy. Does not our Lord Jesus far more feel for us, "And in our sorrows bears a part"? Why? Because He loves us, and He wishes us to have confidence in Him by inviting us to take his rest and his yoke. O perfect rest! Then there is the peace that comes when his rest is received. Peace that is eternal; even when the agonies of death are upon you, you will have Him stepping with you through the dark river, till glory dawns and you are with Him who is the rest and peace of his own people—

Come then to this Physician,
His help He'll freely give.
He makes no hard condition,
'Tis only look and live.

H. R. Francis.

The Industrial Missions Aid Society.—The secretary draws attention to certain securities in connection with missionary work now offered. (1) £1,000 is required for five years at five per cent, upon security of land at Penang, which has been purchased for £1,200, with school buildings in course of erection. (2) £5,000 is required at four per cent, for important work in connection with a well-known Christian institution in Calcutta. (3) £20,000 is required at four per cent, for educational and industrial work in Calcutta. Full particulars may be obtained on application to W. H. J. Hatch, 10, Paternoster-row, E.C.

Hebrew Conference Hall, Whitechapel.—The thirty-sixth anniversary of the Gospel and temperance work carried on by Mr. Herman Ehrlich was celebrated on Friday last. Among those who attended the meeting were several friends from a distance, who desired to show their personal interest in the work. Rev. J. H. Draper, rector of the parish, presided, and spoke words of hearty sympathy, Rev. A. Bernstein, who has been associated with Mr. Ehrlich for a quarter of a century, remarked upon the good influence of the work among the young, who are taught Gospel hymns and verses of Scripture, which they take into homes where Christ is unknown. Addresses were also delivered by Mr. George Nokes, Mr. J. A. Cruikshank, and others, all bearing testimony to the untiring labours of Mr. and Mrs. Ehrlich for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the poor Jews of the district. The mission is now preparing for the annual Christmas tree to the Band of Hope children, the success of which is largely dependent upon the gifts of sympathising friends.

ALPHA AND OMEGA:

OR, GOD IN HUMAN LIFE.

With Introduction by Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge.

Cloth Boards 2/6 | Presentation Edition 3/6

From Principal H. C. G. MOULE'S INTRODUCTION.

"ALPHA AND OMEGA is a noble series of testimonies, teaching, and appeals. It rings grandly true to the foundation truths of the everlasting Gospel; to the glory of Christ, the blood of the Cross, the power of the Spirit, the hope of glory, the divineness of the written Word. It is altogether explicit about the guilt of sin, and the need of conviction, and the blessed, inexorable call to present practical holiness and service. Withal, it puts all it has to say in forms and colours admirably true to the needs of the present day. It is written by one who knows and understands his own generation, and how to speak to it."

Temperance Notes.

The U.K.A., the Band of Hope Union, and the Temperance Hospital have each received a legacy of a thousand guineas, bequeathed by the late Mrs. Caroline Wallis.

Baron Pollock, who died last week, was an active temperance worker in connection with the Putney branch of the C.E.T.S. and frequently spoke from his judicial experience of the close connection between drink and crime.

The new Brixton Shaftesbury Institute in the Railton-road has been acquired by the Gospel Total Abstinence Association for the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic, as a centre for work in Brixton, Streatham, and Camberwell.

"Temperance Sunday" was widely observed, on Sunday last, in many Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian, and Congregational churches. Special reference was made to the evils of intemperance and advantages of Sunday Closing.

It is noted that of the 1955 Baptist ministers in Great Britain and Ireland, no fewer than 1556 are reported to be total abstainers, in addition to a large number in the mission field; while out of 2847 Congregational ministers in England and Wales, 2364 or 83 per cent. are in the same category. In some of the Methodist bodies the percentage is still larger.

In connection with a Band of Hope Jubilee demonstration at Rochester a conference of medical men was held, at which Dr. Walmsley, medical superintendent of the Darenth Idiot Asylum for Children, stated that in that institution there were 1000 patients deformed and maimed in body or mind owing very largely to the negligence of parents. About 75 per cent. of the cases of insanity were due to drinking.

Preaching in Manchester Cathedral in connection with the Band of Hope Jubilee, Canon Hicks said temperance reformers were doing more than rescuing individuals from an impoverishing and degrading vice. They were fighting one of the most terrible causes of disease and death that could curse any community. They were fighting for the liberty of the people, whose bodies and souls, whose homes and happiness were virtually bought and sold by the great brewer capitalists.

A correspondent calls attention to the fact that Bermondsey—one of the largest and poorest South London parishes—while abounding in public-houses, is destitute of any safe temperance resort where factory girls and others may have necessary refreshment without temptation to drink. A few lady workers, feeling this need greatly, are hoping with the rector's help soon to open a small coffee and cocoa room. Friends should communicate with Mrs. A. D. Atkinson, 7, Church-terrace, Lee, S.E.

The Jewish Almanac, issued by Mr. Henry Barnett, is becoming an annual visitor. The issue for 1898—5658 is now ready. The left hand page is devoted to an English calendar with Scripture texts; on the right side are the Jewish dates, feasts and fasts, the lessons read in the synagogue in each month. At the same time, teaching on the person of Christ, as set forth in the Old Testament, is given in Judeo-German. This almanac will be of special service to Christian workers who have Jews in their districts. Information as to cost, etc., may be had from Mr. Barnett, 94, Malmesbury-road, Bow, E.

A Juvenile Offender's "Religion."—At the Mansion House on Wednesday last week, Edwin Macdonald, an errand boy of fourteen, was charged with receiving a stolen watch. He had been remanded, in order to be sent to a reformatory or industrial school. On former occasions he had said he was a Roman Catholic, but at the last hearing it was stated that his parents were both Protestants. The father, in reply to the Lord Mayor, said the boy could be brought up in whatever religion he chose; but he produced some papers, remarking that they would explain the boy's reasons for saying he was a Roman Catholic. The Lord Mayor, after perusing the papers, said it was simply monstrous that a priest should have visited the child under remand, and persuaded him to become a Roman Catholic, or say that he was one. It was not the duty of a Protestant prison chaplain to persuade Roman Catholics to change their faith, and the same rule against proselytism ought to be applied to Roman Catholics. The Lord Mayor added that he should decline, under the circumstances to send the boy to a Roman Catholic training ship, as was proposed, but would place him in the hands of the St. Giles's Christian Mission. The boy was then handed over into Mr. Wheatley's care.

Nearly 100 sermons were preached by clergymen and ministers in Birmingham on Young Men's Sunday in connection with the association work.

In Germany there are now 1250 Associations, with nearly 80,000 members. The number of members in the Eastern Alliance is 13,831, of which Berlin counts 3231, and the rest of Brandenburg 3998. The number of members in Germany of the White Cross Society is 10,500.

The South-Eastern District Union held its annual conference at Brighton. There was a good representation of delegates from the various counties comprised in the district. Mr. Joshua Smith took the chair in the afternoon, and Mr. Walton Langton, of Tunbridge Wells, the president for the ensuing year, in the evening.

The report of Shaftesbury House, Margate, states that a good many young men have again spent their holidays here, and have greatly enjoyed the comforts and privileges of the Home, and not a few have also received spiritual blessing. The services on the sand for children and in the Hall-by-the-Sea for adults have been full of interest.

Mr. Frank Anderson, who is working among the students of India on behalf of the Y.M.C.A. and the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, writes that numbers of missionaries and Christian workers in India are proposing to set apart Sunday, Dec. 12, as a day of prayer for the awakening of India. Many, not now in India, will gladly unite in this special prayer.

Movements are on foot for an extension of Y.M.C.A. work among Red Indian young men. A young Sioux, named Arthur Tibbets, is already studying at Springfield, Mass., to become secretary of the Associations in his tribe. Dr. Eastmann, American secretary for this work, has also made great efforts in favour of Y.M.C.A.'s among the Crows of Montana and the Nez-Percés.

A conference was held at Ramsgate on Wednesday, when representatives from several neighbouring Y.M.C.A.'s attended and took counsel together as to the best means of strengthening existing associations and of extending the work to new centres. The annual meeting of the local association, of which Mr. Pygott is president, was held in the evening, and was addressed by Mr. W. Hind Smith.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., addressed a meeting of men on "Impurity" at Stafford Rooms, Edgware-road, on Thursday evening. Dr. Parker Young occupied the chair, and there was a large attendance. The meeting was one of a series which is being held during the current winter, both in London and at many centres in the provinces, upon the prevalence of the great social evils of betting and gambling, impurity and intemperance.

As one of the extended series of demonstrations contemplated by Associations in various parts of the country this winter, the Hereford Y.M.C.A. has just gathered about a thousand persons together at a meeting in the Shire Hall, where addresses on "Betting and Gambling" were given by the Bishop, Rev. J. W. Horsley (ex prison chaplain), Mr. Alderman Carver, and Lieut.-Col. Scobie (representing local football clubs), Mr. O. E. Cresswell, and Rev. Basil Martin.

The Derby Association held its anniversary on Tuesday week. In the afternoon a drawing-room meeting was held in the Victoria Hall, at the invitation of the president, Sir H. H. Bemrose, M.P. The evening meeting was presided over by the Mayor of Derby, and was largely attended by young men. Amongst the speakers were the High Sheriff of Lincolnshire (Mr. T. Cheney Garfit), Sir Henry Bemrose, M.P., and other supporters of the Y.M.C.A. Altogether the anniversary was most successful.

The summer conferences of students at Northfield, Lake Geneva, and Knoxville have been factors in the development of the work of the Y.M.C.A. college, and now what has been done for the students is proposed for the city and town Association men. A ten-day conference of the officers of the Association is being arranged at Lake Geneva, July 15-25, in order to strengthen personal religious life, train for better Christian service, and instruct in the fundamental principles and established methods of the Association. Bible study will be a leading feature.

The Y.M.C.A. Training School, at Springfield, Massachusetts, opened its winter session with the largest number of students ever enrolled. Sixty young men are now engaged in pursuing a course of study in preparation for the various lines of work in the Young Men's Christian Association. One of the most important advances in the work of the institution has been the recent development in the course of Bible study. Rev. W. G. Ballantine, D.D., LL.D., who has recently resigned as president of Oberlin College, has been called to the work of instruction in the English Bible.

The Y.W.C.A.

The Westbourne Branch has been restarted with Mrs. Hitchcock as hon. secretary.

At the annual meetings of the Richmond branch, Mr. Albert Head presided. The report showed the year to have been one of progress.

At the annual meeting of the Leeds branch, Rev J. C. Wright presided. Miss Lambert presented the report, which was a satisfactory one.

A four days' mission for the deepening of the spiritual life was concluded on the 19th ult. at the Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton branch.

The work at the Percy Institute, King's Cross, has been recommenced after having been closed for some time through sanitary repairs.

Miss Collins has succeeded Miss Wilmot at the Central Institute, George street. The attendance at the Bible classes, social evenings, etc., is good, and some new classes have been started.

A very interesting event took place the other evening at Yeovil, when the united Y.M. and Y.W. Christian Associations held their united opening meeting in the Baptist schoolroom, Rev. H. Hardin presiding.

The Hon. E. Kinnaird delivered a lecture in the Dundee Association's Hall on "The History of the Y.W.C.A. during the Sixty Years' Reign." The lecturer spoke of the careers now open to women, and of the work in the Colonies and abroad.

The Bible-classes at the Cloudesley Institute are attended by about 100 or 120 young women every Sunday afternoon. Much of the work is done by the members themselves, and many cases of definite conversion are recorded. Prominence is given to temperance effort.

Two very interesting meetings were held at Norwich, Nov. 18. That in the afternoon was presided over by Canon Ripley, and addressed by Rev. W. Middleton. The evening meeting was specially for the members and their friends, and was conducted by Miss Ardill and Miss Miller, hon. sec.

At the annual meetings in connection with the Reading branch, in the Abbey Hall, Mr. F. Hunt presided over a large attendance. Miss Bazett read the report, which showed a membership of 203, being an increase of 32. The working girls' club, with eighty-three names on the books, is doing an excellent work.

Dr. Shann presided at the fourteenth annual meeting of the Lowestoft branch. There was a large attendance. The year had been an exceptional one. The memorial-stones of the New Home and Institute had been laid, and the boarding-house was opened in July. Active work had been carried on in all the various branches of the Institute.

The annual gatherings in connection with the third anniversary of the Bexhill branch have been held. Mrs. White, of Eastbourne, presided over the preliminary meeting. Miss Pacy, of the Finsbury Institute, gave a Bible-reading in the afternoon, and presided at the evening meeting. The institution has carried on a useful work during the past year, and the Home of Rest has been much appreciated.

The annual soirée of the Callander Association was held in the Mission Hall, Callander, on Monday, November 15th. The president, Mrs. Colonel Robertson, and the secretary, Miss Chenevix-Trench, had an encouraging report to give, after which the Countess of Moray and the Hon. Emily Kinnaird gave addresses, which were of a most profitable and stimulating character. The gifts from the members were received for the Patna Medical Mission, the special field of foreign mission effort which this branch is interested in.

The public meetings of the Brighton branch were held on the 18th, at the Royal Pavilion. In the afternoon the Countess of Chichester, who presided over a large gathering, referred to the work that was being carried on in Brighton, at Victoria House, and at the three branches, east, west and north, speaking of the re-establishment of the servants' home and registry, which were working very well. In conclusion, she drew attention to the need of increased support, and earnestly commended the claims of the Association to all those present. Prebendary Webb-Peploe followed with an interesting address. Another largely-attended meeting was held in the evening,

Several changes have to be recorded in London branches. Miss Cloude has resigned at Princess House. Miss Ellis, an old and valued worker, has resigned at Gipsy Hill. Miss Peacock is secretary at St. Andrew's, Lambeth, in place of Miss Broughton. At the "Cambridge," Holloway, Miss Freeman has resigned after many years of valuable service. Miss Turner's connection with the Mile End Branch as hon. secretary will terminate at the end of the year. Miss Barlowe, secretary at Kensington, and an active worker in other directions, died recently, and another to take her place is much needed.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE INNER LIFE.

Two books,* revealing much of the inmost spiritual experiences of devout and humble souls are before us, and both come with the warm endorsement of Dr. Alex. Whyte, of Edinburgh. Perhaps he is the greatest and most consistent mystic among all our living teachers, and he has the faculty of discerning souls that are kin to his own. Close dealing with God is not a matter either of sex, age, occupation, or country; of these two saints who wrote such bitter things against themselves, one was a Spanish nun, of the early part of the 16th century, and the other was a Scottish pastor who died between eleven and twelve years ago.

The monograph on Teresa is a very slight one, being intended by Dr. Whyte only as an introduction to larger and more elaborate biographies of her, of which there are several in existence. But the good Doctor's "appreciation" is so whole-souled, and we might say so virtually unqualified, that the interest of the reader is thoroughly awakened, and many will wish to know more fully the character and the too rare experiences of this truly remarkable woman. The selected passages from her writings also help to fan the flame of desire for something of the near vision of God vouchsafed to Teresa, and the consequent realisation of self-unworthiness and shortcoming.

The Highland minister whose private and personal memoranda have been judiciously edited by Mr. Taylor Innes was Rev. Wm. Taylor, a native of Ross-shire, and for some years pastor at Wick, in the far north. He suffered from poor physical health, and during the last sixteen years of his life was unequal to regular ministerial work. The consecutive quotations given from his occasional memoranda show a spirit deeply sensitive to the presence of indwelling sin, as well as a mind much given to independent but reverent thought on the great problems of life and salvation. Perhaps the religious atmosphere of the far north, which, up to recent years at least, helped to foster the lack of assurance, may have coloured his thinking and made him too introspective. But he seems to have come well out of the long struggle in the end, for we read that "during the last year of his life he seemed to those around him to be suffused almost continuously with the glow as of a divine presence." This is eminently a book for our generation, on which the sense of sin and its consequences seems to sit lightly.

* SANTA TERESA: an Appreciation, with selected writings arranged and adapted by Alexander Whyte, D.D. (2s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A HIGHLAND MINISTER; edited by A. Taylor Innes, with a letter of appreciation by Alexander Whyte, D.D. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

A HOMILETICAL COMMENTARY.

We have already noticed several volumes of The Preacher's Homiletical Commentary on the New Testament. It is a pleasure now to announce the completion of the work. The ninth volume, containing from 1 Tim. to the Epistle of St. James, has been prepared in part by Rev. G. Barlow (Newark-on-Trent), and in part by Rev. R. Tuck, B.A. (London); and the tenth volume, giving the six remaining Epistles and the Revelation, is entirely the work and compilation of Mr. Tuck. It is nothing against this commentary to say that it is not erudite, and, in the ordinary sense of the word, "up-to-date." It is just what it professes to be, a work by practical preachers, designed to help hard-worked pastors in their pulpit studies. There are brief introductions to every book, also critical and explanatory notes of the chapters. Then follow homilies on the sections, with added germ notes, sermon outlines, and illustrative matter in profusion.

These various departments are enriched by copious extracts from the works of great preachers and expositors, Puritan and modern, and taken as a whole, the work is a mine of sermonic thought and suggestion. In no such undertaking could absolute uniformity be expected, but generally speaking the matter is good, and this is particularly the case in the sections edited by Rev. R. Tuck. In order to make the contents of the commentary easily accessible for topical as well as textual study, an INDEX has been prepared as a supplementary (eleventh) volume, and it will be of great service to all who possess the work. The bold type and clear printing will make this commentary a favourite with those to whom these are important considerations. Many a poor preacher would be helped materially by receiving the set as a present. (Funk & Wagnalls Co., 44, Fleet-street.)

THE GREAT NEED OF TO-DAY.

"The Church's greatest need to-day is a new investiture of Divine life and spiritual power. The Holy Ghost...must be acknowledged and honoured." So Rev. John Morgan, of Edinburgh, claims in a prefatory note to his new volume on The Ministry of the Holy Ghost. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Towards the fuller acknowledgment of the work of the Holy Spirit this book is a worthy contribution. The author will command sympathy when he says that:—

> The trend of much modern preaching is in the direction of an ethical revival. And, indeed, it is sorely, sadly needed. But how is it to be attained? It seems to me that evangelical revival must, of very necessity, underlie the ethical, giving it true character, and providing for it firm foundation, force, and vital energy. For, after all, the Gospel is the "power that makes for righteousness." What we need at this time is a deepened sense of sin and an intensified conviction that human nature is a moral wreck and ruin.

The opening chapters do not directly and obviously touch the great theme, but they lead on to a clear exposition of the spirit's mission to Church and world. In illustration of the author's searching message we quote a paragraph from a chapter on "Praying in the Spirit."

> The very delicate and sensitive relationship of the Spirit to the believer needs careful watching and tenderest guardianship. A querulous spirit, a morbid feeling, an impenitent frame, an uncharitable word, an impatient thought, some failure of the temper or tongue—oh, how easy to bring down on ourselves the clouds that darken the windows of the soul, and shut out from our hearts the pure white light of heaven.

The Navy A.B.C. is one of Dean's Gold Medal Series of books for children. A companion work, equally gay, is The Army A.B.C. (Dean and Son, 160A, Fleet-street.)

Early Days, 1897. (2s. Wesleyan Methodist Book-room.) Tastefully bound, this volume will be found a pleasing gift for the little ones, who will turn over its pictured pages with much delight.

My Nightingale; or, the Story of Little Holger, by Bella Sidney Woolf, introduces us to life in Denmark, and the fairy tales of Hans Christian Andersen. Two are tales for children are "thrown in." (6d. Nelson.)

The Pathway to Peace; or Salvation Full and Free. By James Wharton. (Paper 3d., cloth 6d. Alfred Holness). Scriptural teaching on elementary truths. Mr. Wharton points his instruction with striking analogies and illustrative references.

We Endeavour. By C. H. Spurgeon. (Passmore & Alabaster.) Helpful words (selected from the late Pastor's writings) for Christian Endeavourers. While the C.E. movement was unknown to the preacher, his exhortations ring with the spirit which throbs in all true Endeavourers.

For the Queen's Sake. By E. Everett-Green. (2s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.) A story of child-life and adventures, with their little secrets, and their "new mamma" who brings sweetness and joy into their lives. Caspar, the hero, is a fine, spirited boy, who will charm the youthful readers.

Illustrations and Incidents, for Preachers, Teachers, and Christian Workers. Being a Collection of Anecdotes and Facts, arranged and compiled by J. Ellis (1s. H. R. Allenson). This little book is a worthy successor of the "Tool Basket" and "Seed Basket," and will doubtless meet with a like success.

Philip Melanchthon, 1497-1560. By the late Rev. George Wilson. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) Though through the lamented death of its author this little work lacked final revision, it is nevertheless a well constructed and compact biography of the great Reformation scholar. Several illustrations embellish the book.

Mother, Baby, and Nursery, by Geneviève Tucker, M.D., is a practical manual for mothers, admirably summarising information on the hygiene and physical development of infants. Young and inexperienced mothers will find this book of real service; scores of baby pictures invest the pages with peculiar interest. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.)

Dorothy Darling, by Minnie E. Paull, is a capital story for a little girl, depicting with fine illustrations and admirable letterpress the quaint and pretty ways of more than one Dorothy Darling. The little woman is well known in many a circle, and in this book she will be delighted to read of herself and learn her duty. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

Wine and Oil from Immanuel's Land: Being a series of Palestine Narratives, by Rev. James Ormiston, rector of St. Mary-le-Port, Bristol. We welcome a second and cheaper edition of this deeply-interesting volume of observant travel and spiritual reflection. The illustrations are numerous and helpful. (1s. and 2s. London: Partridge; Bristol: W. F. Mack.)

The Sinner's Seven Greats. By Rev. P. B. Power, M.A. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) This little book is in seven chapters. It deals with (1) a great salvation, (2) from a great destruction, (3) for a great sinner, (4) by a great God, (5) through a great Saviour, (6) at a great price, (7) for a great end. The treatment is terse, and the book has good thoughts for evangelists.

Christ at the Well. By Rev. Ebenezer Morgan. (C. H. Kelly.) We have dipped into these "devotional studies on the fourth chapter of the fourth Gospel" with real pleasure. They are pointed and pertinent, bringing in clear outline the wonderful lessons of our Lord's interview with the woman of Samaria. Both preachers and teachers will find them helpful models of exposition.

Village Life in Palestine. By Rev. G. Robinson Lees, B.A. (Elliot Stock.) This little work describes the social characteristics and religious life of the peasants of the Holy Land. There are twenty-six illustrations from photographs by the author, who is widely known as a lecturer on Oriental customs. The book explains many Biblical figures and allusions, and should have a wide circle of readers.

From Messrs. Nelson & Sons we have Soldiers of the Queen. By Harold Avery. (2s.) A tale which has won plaudits from our own boys, who have read it with avidity, and declare it "first rate." All look on "Aunt Mab" as a charming conception. Beginning with home and school life, the story leads in the end to the Soudan desert and "the Dash to Khartoum." From the same firm come Jack's Hero, by G. E. Wyatt, and Willie's Gift (6d. each)—pleasing tales for younger folks, and well adapted for Sunday School rewards.

Lessons from Life: Animal and Human, is a budget of illustrative matter, judiciously selected from a wide field of literature and independent observation. A companion to a well-known book, "Encyclopædia of Nature Teachings," it presents a large number of curious and interesting facts and phenomena concerning the nature, functions, relations, and ministries of men and animals, arranged as illustrations of social, moral, and religious truths and principles. Dr. Hugh Macmillan writes an introduction to this very useful work. (7s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have issued, amongst their season's books, Princess Sarah, and other stories, by John Strange Winter (3s. 6d.). The title story will charm the girls who will find much to interest in the experiences of an orphan girl, adopted by an aunt, and thrown among cousins, some of whom are unsympathetic. All the same, to quote—"The Ugly Duckling turns out a Swan after all." Miss Bobbie, by Ethel S. Turner (3s. 6d.), tells of an Australian girl, dumped down among a family of motherless and undisciplined boys. Her entrée is unceremonious enough, her experiences chequered, but her influence in the end is for good.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.—The smaller annuals of the Religious Tract Society are always attractive in exterior and good in contents. For the nursery there is Little Dots, and for children in later stages of growth The Child's Companion (1s. 6d. each). Light in the Home (1s. 6d.) is the old "Tract Magazine" down to date and greatly improved. Friendly Greetings (2s. 6d.) is rich in readings for the people, and should prove of great service to those who conduct mothers' meetings or organise lending libraries. Then there is the Cottager and Artisan (1s. 6d.), with its large pages and bold pictures, calculated to stimulate thought and promote happiness in many a humble home during the winter months.

Under the somewhat curious title of THE CHRISTIAN SITUATION, Dr. Parker's brief address at a recent meeting of the Croydon Y.M.C.A. is published by Messrs. A. H. Stockwell and Co. (1d.).

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. T. B. Waters has been offered the vicarage of Jesmond.

Rev. J. Rooker has been appointed vicar of Christ Church, Beckenham.

The vicarage of Exmouth has been offered to Rev. H. P. Cronshaw, late prebendary, Hereford.

Rev. J. E. Griffin, missioner at Mbweni, Zanzibar, has been appointed Archdeacon of Zanzibar.

Rev. B. R. Wilson succeeds Canon Winnington-Ingram as head of the Oxford Mission in Bethnal Green.

Feeling that his work in Australia is not yet done, the Bishop of Ballarat has declined the charge of St. Matthew's, Brixton, offered by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

A meeting was held last week, under the auspices of the Manchester Junior Clergy Missionary Association, at Newton Heath. Rev. E. F. Letts presided, and there was a large attendance.

An interesting service was held at St. Dunstan's, Fleet-street, last week, in connection with the Church Volunteers of the C.P.A.S., when an address was delivered by Rev. W. H. Stone.

At the request of the Government, one of the Church Army working-men missioners commenced a ten days' special mission in Pentonville Prison on Sunday. Arrangements are being made by the society for similar missions to other large prisons in different parts of England.

The vicar of St. Peter's, Cranleigh Gardens, S.W., Rev. Dr. Ridgeway, has selected from his wealthy congregation a band of entertainers, who will visit the poorer districts during the winter, giving free concerts in connection with churches and charitable institutions.

Members and friends of the Church Missionary Society are invited to meet the members of the Committee for Prayer in connection with the Day of Intercession for Foreign Missions at the Church Missionary House, Salisbury-square, at 3.30 p.m., on Thursday, Dec. 2.

The Bishop of Sierra Leone was present last week at the meeting of the Younger Clergy Union for London in connection with the C.M.S. held at the Society's house, Salisbury-square, and in the course of an address spoke of the great lack of clergy for service in the foreign field.

The autumn conference of the Craven Evangelical Union was held in Bradford last week. Canon Thompson, vicar of Hunslet, Leeds, presided, and there was a good attendance. Papers were read by Revs. G. B. Jones (rector of Levenshulme), G. C. Martin (Southport), J. Hewetson (Measham), G. E. Ford (Bristol), and J. W. Dunne (Laisterdyke).

The Bishop of Carlisle (Dr. Bardsley) and Miss Bardesley will leave England in a few days, for two months on the Mediterranean. Bishop Bardsley has accepted an invitation from Mr. Woolrych Perowne to join the s.s. Midnight Sun at Marseilles on Dec. 2, and will lecture to the members of Mr. Perowne's party in Palestine on the tablets of Tel el-Amarna.

Congregational.

Clifton Church, Peckham, reports a membership of 554.

Rev. H. Butler has been welcomed at South Bar, Banbury.

Mr. Lorenzo M. Abbott has been ordained at Hucknall Torkard.

Rev. G. Thompson, of Eastbourne, has recovered from serious illness.

Rev. T. S. Ross has been welcomed as pastor of College Chapel, Bradford.

Mr. C. F. Rich has been accepted for service by the London Missionary Society.

"Missionary Day" was observed with great enthusiasm n Southport on Sunday week.

Rev. J. B. Nicholls is being greatly encouraged in his work at Haverstock Chapel, Maitland-park, N.

The hundred-and-forty-first anniversary of Whitefield's Tabernacle, Tottenham Court-road, was celebrated last week.

Miss Unwin, for several years lady principal of Walthamstow Hall, Sevenoaks, for the daughters of foreign missioners, has resigned for family reasons.

Under the will of the late Mr. John Garrett Good, of Nottingham, £500 is bequeathed to the London Missionary Society and £100 to the China Inland Mission.

Carr's-lane New Mission Hall, Moseley-street, Birmingham, has been "dedicated to service in Christ" in the presence of a large audience. Rev. J. H. Jowett, who presided, said although the work would be pre-eminently and predominantly religious, cleanliness would also be taught, and the thoughts and ideas of the people of the neighbourhood would be elevated by homely talks. There would be hints on practical nursing and education of the people in the simple ministries of healing.

Calls.—Rev. W. Stacy, of Gomersal, to Castle Green, Bristol; Mr. J. B. Uppen, of Thornaby-on-Tees, to Anvil-street, Bristol; Mr. R. Maple, to Stockton-on-Tees; Mr. T. S. Phillips, to Glyn Chapel, Risca.

Resignations.—Rev. J. Stockwell Watts, of Victoria-road, Southsea; Rev. W. Joseph, of Westbourne, Bournemouth.

Baptist.

Mr. Henry Smart has been recognised at Hatherleigh.

Rev. W. Bampton Taylor has been recognised as pastor of Zion Church, Cambridge.

In busy growing Littlemoor, Pudsey, a new chapel has been opened by Alderman Joseph Brooke.

A new chapel has been opened in Queen's-road, Wimbledon, for the church under the care of Rev. C. Ingrem.

A new chapel is being built at Preston, Brighton, for the congregation under the pastoral care of Rev. D. Llewellyn.

A new Baptist cause has been founded in the Town Hall, Portobello, the honnrary pastor being Lieut. A. A. McGill.

At Beulah Chapel, Thornton-heath, during the five years' pastorate of Rev. T. Lardner, 111 persons have been received into membership.

The new editor of the Sunday School Chronicle is to be Rev. James Black, who has resigned the charge of the Baptist Church at Millport, on the Firth of Clyde.

Dr. Rouse, of Calcutta, who is visiting the colonies, has been preaching with much acceptance in South Australia. He has also attended the annual meetings of the New South Wales Baptist Union. At the session of this Union Rev. E. Price was elected president for the ensuing year.

The Triennial Conference of the Baptist Missionary Society has been held in Calcutta, fifty-five missionaries, from all parts of the land, being in attendance. The most important subjects discussed were the present policy of the mission in its dealings with the Indian Church, the revision of the Urdu New Testament, and the development of spiritual life in the native agency. During the conference much preaching took place in the squares and bazaars of the city. The opinion was very strongly felt on every hand that India is awakening to the claims of the Christian faith.

At Hulme (York-street) Meeting House, which takes the place of the meeting-house in Hamer-street formerly conducted under the leadership of Mr. William Birch, jun., was opened by the Lord Mayor of Manchester on Tuesday week. Mr. J. Allan Jamieson (a blacksmith) is the pastor, and all the officers and members of the mission are of the industrial classes. It is from the working people that the sum necessary for the building of the new meeting-house has in the main been obtained. Dr. Maclaren said he knew no man whose work for Christ was more simple, earnest, self-sacrificing, and devout than that of Mr. Jamieson. He believed with all his heart that if ever they were going to evangelise the great cities it was by mission halls more than by churches and chapels that they would reach the lowest layers of the population.

Calls.—Rev. J. Burton, of Gloucester, to Middlesbrough; Rev. J. Horn, of Redcar, to Clayton; Mr. R. C. Law, to Surbiton; Rev. John Chrystal, of Dunnington, to Kirkintilloch.

Resignations.—Rev. Howard Parker, of Holbeach; Rev. W. J. Tomkins, of Old Chapel, Rushden.

Methodist.

A special mission has been held in Norfolk-road Chapel, Brighton, by Rev. G. C. Morgan, of New Court Chapel.

The President (United) F.C., Dr. Swallow, is bringing the influence of his office and the weight of his experience in foreign mission work to bear upon the Foreign Missionary Forward Movement.

A conference is to be held shortly in Upton Park Chapel, at which Mrs. Buckenham, from Central Africa, will advocate the organisation of a Women's Home and Foreign Missionary Society in London.

The secondary of the London Wesleyan Mission Band Union, Mr. J. Gracie, has, owing to stress of business engagements, resigned the post. His successor is Mr. W. D. F. Vincent, of 115, Percy-road, Shepherd's Bush, who has had considerable experience in connection with Mission Band work.

The Leeds Mission, of which Rev. John Pickup is the superintendent, stands amidst the Jewish and Catholic part of the city. At the anniversary on Sunday Rev. W. H. Heap, of Manchester, preached; and on Monday two women's meetings were held, at which sisters belonging both to the Leeds and the Manchester Missions delivered addresses.

The twenty-four districts into which Primitive Methodism is divided have all held special meetings to consider the question of organic union with the Bible Christians. The attendances have been remarkably large, and in some cases the discussions have been lively. There is a large preponderance of opinion in favour of union, but unfavourable as to some points in the basis suggested by the joint committee.

At the annual meeting of the Birmingham Central Mission, Rev. G. Greenough was the preacher in the morning. In the afternoon a public meeting was held, over which Mrs. W. Bunting presided. Sister Annie spoke of distressful cases which, as an agent of the mission, she had been able to relieve, complaining bitterly that the want of funds set strait limits to the amount of good able to be done. Sister Bessie, in charge of the Havergal House Evening Home for Girls, described what the home is doing. The Town Hall was the scene of the evening meeting, which was presided over by Mr. T. Barclay, of Birmingham. Mr. Wiseman said that they were seeking to raise a fund of £1000 for extension of mission premises, which were already crowded out. Towards this sum £974 was forthcoming in connection with the anniversary, and the remainder was guaranteed.

Presbyterian.

Dr. McGaw is now improving in health, but still unfit for his duties.

Rev. W. J. Thomas has been inducted to the pastorate at Holton-street, Bridgend.

Rev. Francis Jones has been elected Moderator of the North Wales Association for the ensuing year.

It is interesting to note that the Mayors of Bootle, South Shields, North Shields, Morpeth, and Berwick are all Presbyterians.

The twelfth anniversary of the settlement at Streatham of Rev. W. M. Macphail has been held with much encouragement.

Rev. John Williams, of Rhyl, one of the oldest ministers in North Wales, has been presented with a cheque for £300 in recognition of his long and valuable services in connection with every important movement in the district.

Presbyterian union has made progress in South Africa, and the first General Assembly of the "Presbyterian Church of South Africa" has been held. Three Presbyteries are still outside the Union, but will probably ere long be included. The United Church, recognising the vast needs of the scattered colonists of the South, have entered on a large extension scheme. A fund of £20,000 is proposed, and two brothers have given £1000 each to start it. The Assembly has issued to the home churches an urgent plea for help.

Calls.—Mr. James Whyte to Deerness F.C., Orkney; Rev. W. M. McGregor, to St. Andrew's F.C., Edinburgh (as colleague); Rev. B. T. Salmon, of Maesteg to Gilfachgoch; Rev. D. Jones to Penarth; Rev. T. Walkins to Beaufort.

Society of Friends.

Dublin Friends will feel bereaved and true sympathy will be extended to the widow and family left behind. He has left the shadows of time for the glories of eternity with Him whom he loved and served.

Another link with the past has been broken by the death, at the age of seventy-five years, of the well-known and devoted Henry Wigham, of Dublin. The cause of temperance in the United Kingdom has sustained an irreparable loss in his removal, and as an earnest Christian, liberal and large-hearted, he will be greatly missed. One of his sons is a successful missionary in China, and another is soon going out to Pemba, in Africa, for similar service.

It is difficult to describe the loss sustained in the West by the death, on the 18th ult., of Anna Maria Troy, the noble hostess of Penjerrick, Falmouth. Her queenly hospitality, her beautiful grounds, and her large-hearted charity, left an indelible impression on very many, and though she had reached the ripe age of eighty-one years, she did not seem to be old. Her life and character were beautiful indeed, and her interest in Divine truth fresh and strong, and now she has reached her native element and home at her Saviour's feet in the better land. Many will mourn their great loss, though it be her great gain.

Salvation Army.

Additional officers are leaving this week for British Guiana. The work there has met with large success.

A party of five sail this month for Hong Kong, where work is to be begun. Upon their arrival a home for naval and military men will be opened.

The extended work of the investigation and inquiry department continues to be remarkably successful in tracing missing friends and in assisting women who have been wronged.

A party of twenty missionary officers has sailed for India and Ceylon. Among them are specially trained officers for rescue and maternity work, and for efforts on behalf of naval and military men.

Mr. Bramwell Booth has been conducting remarkably blessed meetings in London and the larger provincial cities among younger salvationists, with a view to their devoting their lives to officership.

The extensive junior soldier work in this country is to be further developed. Special officers for this purpose are to be attached to each of the 49 divisions in the United Kingdom, and buildings entirely set apart for work among children are being erected in many centres.

Fallen Asleep.

In St. John's Wood, Mrs. Galbraith, a most devoted worker in connection with Dr. Monro Gibson's Church.—At West Green, Tottenham, Rev. E. F. Coke, aged eighty, vicar of St. James the Great, Bethnal Green.—At Porchfield, Isle of Wight, Mr. Robert Atkins, aged seventy-five, a devoted Sunday-school superintendent.—At Alnwick, Mr. James Heatley, a highly respected Presbyterian elder.—At Johnstone, Rev. Andrew McGregor, minister of the parish church.—At the Manse, Renfrew, on 22nd ult., Rev. R. Stephen, minister of the parish since 1858.—At Wallingford, Mr. E. J. Upton, an earnest worker.—At Bythorn, Rachel Bunyan, an earnest Christian, and said to be a direct descendant of John Bunyan.—At Modbury, Mr. S. Callard, a valued worker in Church and Sunday-school. At Spring Hill, Accrington, on 20th ult., Rev. John Gibson, aged fifty, a faithful Methodist minister, and an able evangelist.—At Greenwich, Mr. William Charles, a well-known worker at London-street Church.—At Trowbridge, Mr. J. W. Gabriel, S.S. superintendent and Christian worker.—At Monument-road, Birmingham, Rev. G. H. Harrison, aged 60, formerly Methodist minister at Falkirk.—At Leyton, suddenly, Rev. Isaiah Birt, B.A., pastor successively of the Baptist churches at Weymouth, Penzance, and Devizes, sixty-five years of age.—At Hafod, Rev. W. Jones, for eighteen years minister of Philadelphia Baptist chapel.—At Streatham, S.W., on 20th ult., Professor H. C. Banister, well known as a teacher of music, and especially to the blind, but also beloved as a humble, earnest, and well taught believer, ever ready in Christian usefulness.—At Derryboy, Crossgar, Mr. John Stevenson, a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church.—At Louth, Rev. P. L. Jameson, for several years rector of the parish, and an ardent supporter of missions.

Personalia.

Rev. J. B. Figgis begins his pastoral charge of Emmanuel Church, Hove, Brighton, on Sunday next.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis has returned from India, and may now be addressed 131, Blenheim-crescent, Notting Hill, W.

Lady Henry Somerset is said to be very unwell. All her engagements have been cancelled, and she is to go to Neuheim as soon as she can travel.

Rev. James Legge, professor of Chinese in the University of Oxford, is dangerously ill. On Sunday morning he was unconscious and unable to take any nourishment. The professor is eighty-two years of age.

Mrs. J. R. Hall, of Newport, Mon., writes us that, though feeling acutely her sore bereavement, she wishes thankfully to testify to God's sustaining grace. Mrs. Hall is thankful for all the kind letters of sympathy sent her by many friends.

Rev. F. Frost, formerly at Sheguiandah, is now the Colonial and Continental Church Society missionary at Garden River, in the Diocese of Algoma. The work is similar to that at Sheguiandah. There are some out-stations in addition, notably a small church at an English settlement thirteen miles distant. He also carries on work among those who are working in the woods around.

Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Needham write:—After a season of changes we can again raise our Ebenezer in "our own hired house" at 3, West Upsal-street, Germantown, Philadelphia, Pa. Our work will continue as before, visiting fields both far and near. Harrisburg, Boston, Brooklyn, and Cleveland now await our services, both for evangelisation and edification. We devote November and December to these cities. Later on we may be led to wider regions beyond.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, New Hebrides, is staying for a while in New Zealand. The recent death of his beloved wife has evoked much sympathy for him. In a letter, dated Dunedin, Oct. 6, he says: "When I left Tongoa everything looked most hopeful, and it was a great grief to me to disperse my candidates' class of eighty. It was with no less regret that I had to close a children's school with 230 scholars on the roll. This was the English school first taught by Mrs. Michelsen, and afterwards by our lady-teacher, who, owing to private affairs, had to go up to Sydney in June. I trust we shall be able to take up the school on my return, even with more strength than before. The future success of our mission will depend very much on the way we attend to the lambs of the flock."

Famine Widows and Orphans.—A correspondent in Bombay writes on November 3: "I have just received news of the confession of Christ by baptism on the part of seventy-five of Pundita Ramabai's famine widows and orphans at Poona. I trust they will stir up other missionaries who have famine orphans in charge to win them for Christ."

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

ARRANGEMENTS are in progress for Rev. John McNeill's London Mission in January next. Ladies and gentlemen willing to help in the choir are asked to secure forms of application from Mr. N. R. Hughman, Room 20, Exeter Hall, Strand. Gentlemen wishing to serve as stewards may also have application forms.

The destructive gales of the last fortnight have given occasion for another instance of the heroic self-sacrifice with which our lifeboat work is carried on, though the result has been the loss of nine valuable lives. At Margate, one of the boats, well named "The Friend of All Nations," had done splendid work during the earlier gales, having saved three lives and four vessels at the beginning of last week; but during the later visitation was overturned by the terrific wind, and all but four of the crew were drowned. Among those lost was a young man who was a volunteer, and took an oar whenever his services were required in a forlorn hope. It is by such characters as these that the real greatness of our country is sustained. The nation is not decadent that can produce noble and self-forgetful qualities of this kind. When monuments are erected to the heroic dead, the names of such men deserve a high place, and should be held in everlasting honour.

The Bishop of Chester, at the request of his clergy, has written a pastoral letter on the subject of Sunday observance. He believes that the "Lord's Day" was meant to embody the essential and abiding aspects of the Jewish Sabbath, but in a freer spirit, and under the dominance of holier principles. His views of liberty include a certain amount of recreation, provided that it be not subtracted from the hours of worship and the call for service, and that it does not cause Sunday labour beyond what is absolutely necessary. But it is impossible to provide safeguards against the abuse of these concessions in a mixed community. Those who are looking forward to an afternoon of amusement cannot properly disentangle their thoughts during worship from worldly matters, nor set their minds on sacred things. The Creator has provided natural barriers of light and darkness between one day and another, and any dividing of the day between the things of the spirit and those of the body is sure to result, at best, in a half-hearted worship; at worst, a loss of interest in the things of God.

The bicentenary of St. Paul's Cathedral recalls the dingy, dull, forsaken aspect of cathedrals generally some forty to fifty years ago. A handful of persons at daily lessons and prayers; small congregations on Sundays, and large ones on grand occasions, when the assizes were held, and the judges went in state. In those days, and farther back, some of the judges and many of the barristers might be seen at night at some Nonconformist chapel listening to a powerful preacher. All that is changed now. We may grieve over a good deal that is taught by word of mouth, as well as misleading rites and ceremonies; but it is a good thing that these grand buildings should be held in trust for the people. How much their utility might be increased by a more systematic and powerful preaching in them of the glorious Gospel of Christ! What scenes they would have witnessed had Wesley and Whitefield preached in them! Would they not have been honoured had Spurgeon done so, and is it not a loss to the nation that they are closed to men like Maclaren, Parker, and a score of others?

The work of Christianising the National Anthem goes forward promisingly. The second stanza, which has been regarded as too rough to be sung, and has long been omitted, is at length being reconstructed on Christian lines. The Jubilee version was again sung at St. Paul's on the occasion of the Masonic festival :—

O Lord, our God, arise,
Scatter her enemies,
Make wars to cease!
Keep us from plague and dearth,
Turn Thou our woes to mirth,
And over all the earth
Let there be peace!

This is a great improvement upon the old vindictive tone. One more change, rendering the second line, "Bless all her enemies," and the whole stanza will harmonise with the Sermon on the Mount.

The riots got up by Catholic mobs in Manchester and Sheffield to prevent free speech on the subject of Romanist errors have excited widespread indignation. A committee composed of Churchmen and Dissenters has been formed for the defence of liberty, and the Watch Committee is charged with the task of sifting the matter to the bottom. The movement was well organised, and the mob thoroughly under the control of its leaders. These riots are the effect of the late Cardinal Manning's evil work in enlisting a body of "Ransomers," whose business is to interfere with Protestant free speech. This sort of thing will have to be seriously dealt with. The evil is so audacious, and threatens so many forms of public life, that at any pains its development must be checked. If a speaker may not speak, the next thing will be the attempted muzzling of the newspaper editor.

The extent to which betting is being carried on among the working classes was shockingly demonstrated at the Thames Police Court on Saturday. A police raid on a baker's shop ending in proving that the place was used for nefarious purposes. It was shown that fifty men and women entered it on a certain day, within an hour and a-quarter, to make bets; that in a fortnight over £600 had been paid in bets won by the customers (what of the losses of these poor people?); that many of the customers were lads of twelve years old; and that in the East-end it was common to find boys of that age acting as "bookies" on their own account. The magistrate imposed a substantial fine of £400 on the defendants. This is a large sum, but the extent of the business makes it questionable whether it was enough. The only way to stop such practices is to enforce imprisonment for the fullest possible time. It is, indeed, appalling to realise how terribly this evil is eating into the habits of the nation; for these revelations bear witness to an immense and broadening tendency.

It is cheering news that the prevalent conception that Free Libraries are merely used for the circulation of shallow and more or less prurient fiction is to some extent erroneous. At the opening of a free library in the South of London last week it was stated that out of half-a-million books 220,000 were "solid works"; that among the most popular were Farrar's Life of Christ, Ruskin's and Carlyle's works, and Green's "Short History of the English People," etc., the first-mentioned having already been taken out 169 times. A little more evidence of this kind would greatly multiply the friends of free libraries, for many are under the contrary impression, and have withheld their support mainly because they do not think it right that the public rates should be used to furnish an indulgence to the frivolous and the idle.

With characteristic daring Mr. W. T. Stead has issued, as a Christmas extra, "Satan's Invisible World Displayed" (1s.), a vigorous and even startling exposé of the unspeakable corruption of Tammany government in New York. The evidence furnished is appalling. When the action of law and police become mainly a question of blackmail—when lawbreakers who can afford to bribe are unmolested, and those who cannot are prosecuted; when the administration seems to be worked for the private profit of the officers, then the whole morale of the executive becomes debased Unhappily timeliness is lent to this new issue by the fact that the recent mayoral election in New York has resulted in the replacing in power of the Tammany party, whose corruptions became proverbial when last they were in office We doubt not this spirited protest will arouse considerable attention.

Joseph McCabe's utterances on monkish life are attracting a great deal of attention; his book (TWELVE YEARS IN A MONASTERY) is being widely noticed by the Press, and he has also written for the Echo some articles on "Why I left the Friars." Although he may not be said to indulge in wholesale blame, his censures, discriminating and carefully balanced, are all the more crushing. He speaks as one who had a full opportunity of examining monasticism on the Continent; and monasticism in Belgium he thinks is more contemptible than in England: "indolence, sensuality, and uncharity are broadly written on its face." The friars of Holland and the friars of Ireland depart still further from the Franciscan ideal. "In fact," he says :

> Intimate communication with friars from all parts of the world, and members of many different monastic bodies, soon convinced me that modern monasticism (if I except the Carthusians) is everywhere a mockery and a miserable compromise.

This sheds a lurid light on the sanctity of monasticism; nor, be it remembered, is the author dealing with the Middle Ages.

That internally the boasted unity of the Roman Catholic Church is a fiction rather than a reality is argued by "Romanus" in the current Contemporary Review. In an article on

"Liberal Catholicism," he points to the rise of an independent spirit in the very heart of the "true fold," which acts in defiance of the Pope's authority and refuses to be bound down by the decrees and encyclicals of the Vatican. In spite of the popularity of the present Pope, the writer says :—

Nevertheless, some men who are deemed exceptionally clear-sighted, or who may occupy positions at headquarters giving them peculiar facilities for observation, agree in declaring there are "breakers ahead," and indications of storm and tempest on the horizon.

These indications point to the impossibility of repressing the right of private judgment on the part of intelligent believers, especially as to the study of Scripture and the relations of the Bible to scientific culture. The writer professes that this rebellion is in non-essential matters ; but we know historically how impossible it is to keep in fetters this faculty when once aroused, and how any genuine exercise of it must, in the end, be fatal to all such claims of authority as are made by the Pope and his councils. We note further that the enclosure of nunneries is arousing attention in the secular Press. This shameful exemption of places of confinement from the inspection of legal officers ought at once to be brought to an end. The age has no real sympathy with priests and their exclusive pretensions.

The demand for the Paragraph Bible, as offered by our publishers (see p. 7), increases every week. An evangelist in Sussex writes :—

"The printer and binder have done their work well. I specially value the spaces it affords for private jottings, etc. It will be a favourite in the study and in the pew."

Fom the West of England comes this: "It is a wonderful book for the money. The paragraph arrangement brings an additional interest and instruction when reading."

A Glasgow reader writes: "Its cheapness is remarkable ; its advantages many. The bold, clear type, with the paragraph arrangement, enables the eye to catch the various points in text and context with ease.

As further testimonies to the value of The Christian, we are glad to record the following :—

"Miss E. believes the editor will like to know how much she enjoys his paper ; it is her chief pleasure and makes 'Friday' the red-letter day of the week. She takes an extra copy for lending, and it goes the round of about twenty houses."

A colporteur, working in connection with a well-known mission in the East of London, reports :—

"A Christian woman, who is poor and often ill, takes The Christian each week. She says, 'I cannot do much for my Lord, but I give my paper to those I think will read it. I gave one to a blind man, who got some one to read it to him. There was an evangelistic address in it, and it was the means of his conversion.'"

The question of qualification for Christian service deserves a much larger recognition than it is at present receiving, especially in fairly well-to-do churches. The other day a fond mother, whose son was rather wild, suggested to the minister that the youth should be given a class in the Sunday school by way of keeping him in touch with church life. The spirit of this mother we heartily commend, but her action shows a lamentable ignorance of what Sunday schools are for, and as to what kind of people should teach the children. The Alpine traveller is very careful to employ a certificated guide. So those who are to lead the children from the misty valleys of earth's sin to the mountain tops of communion with God must themselves have been to that mountain top before, and must know Him who is "The Way, the Truth, and the Life." The same is true of all Christian service. For its adequate accomplishment means the possession of faith in God and in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The difference between a theological education and a pastoral training has been realised all too late by many a young minister of the Gospel. In many institutions the sermon class is the only point where college preparation touches ministerial life. Even there the sermons are criticised mostly from the academic point of view, and the occasion is usually regarded by the other students as a splendid opportunity to take the conceit out of the sermon reader. Young ministers sadly need instruction in church management, dealing with inquirers, visitation of the sick, etc. A course of practical lectures on the Pastoral Epistles, given by a man of experience, would be remembered with gratitude by many a young minister when he finds himself for the first time face to face with the difficulties which are inevitable in the management and leadership of men.

The obstinacy of racial antagonisms, in spite of enlightenment and civilisation, is sadly illustrated by the disturbances in the Austrian Reichsrath. The dividing lines of language and nationality have split Germans and Czechs of the Dual Empire into raging mobs on a question that to us appears of minor importance ; while Slavs, Croatians, Poles, and Roumanians take violent sides with one or the other. It is humiliating after so many centuries of Christianity to find the primal instincts and antipathies of races so easily aroused. There is no levelling force that can bring harmony into the world short of the loving Christ, in whom there is neither Greek nor barbarian, and neither bond nor free, but all are brethren. The power that broke down the "middle wall of partition" between Jew and Gentile in the early Church, and of "twain made one new man," can alone solve the deep-rooted dislike felt by men of various nationalities against one another. Would that this Divine force had as much might as it has right in the affairs of man !

The Belgian troubles on the Congo, in which the native Belgian troops have mutinied and many lives have been lost, is clearly due to the treatment these natives have received at the hands of their officers. The leader in the insurrection told a Roman Catholic missionary who has sent home an account of the disaster, "We have killed the Belgians, who called us animals, and slaughtered our chiefs and brothers like goats." Other leaders, we are informed by the same witness, gave out the watchword "Mutiny," "in order to escape from the god of the Dervishes, and the bludgeon and rope of the Belgians, and to take revenge for their countrymen who have been flogged, and hanged, and shot for years." As these charges seem to be substantially true, we cannot wonder that the tyranny of the white man has brought about such a Nemesis. Behind the "civilising" work of Christian nations there stalks too often the blood-stained foot of a brutal oppression, and a pitiless cruelty. Europe has a sad account to pay in Africa.

In these days when so much is made of the opening of new markets for British goods, it is well to listen to one who can tell us how markets are destroyed. Captain Lugard, who has special knowledge of his subject, reminds us, as against those who think that drink is doing little or no harm in Africa, that African administrators, missionaries, and travellers, with few exceptions, all condemn it. Even were the demoralisation of the natives a chimera, he would still stigmatise the liquor traffic as a bar to civilisation and progress in Africa, a short-sighted and perilous commercial venture, and as destructive of that legitimate expansion of trade and creation of new markets which is the ostensible reason of our presence in Africa.

The ideal (he says) which all who think as I do wish to achieve is the total abolition of the spirit traffic in Africa.

And so far as South Africa is concerned, he thinks it perfectly feasible, by putting the existing law into operation. It is time commercial men came to see that the greatest enemy of all trade, home and foreign, is drink.

South African settlers have received rather rough treatment in newspapers and books, being often described as cruel to the natives, immoral in their habits, and avaricious in their aims. It is refreshing to find so keen and impartial an observer as Mr. Bryce, in his new book on South Africa, paying a hearty tribute to the character of the average white population of Rhodesia, describing them as, on the whole, industrious, cheery, persevering, thoughtful, and possessing other qualities that go to the founding of a true nation. What is wanted, to turn this vigorous young life into the highest channels, is a better provision for religious worship and education. Several societies are at work, and they are being heartily welcomed by the inhabitants of the growing towns. There is no nobler opening for those who can help than to provide for the spiritual needs of these towns of the future in South Africa.

It is a pleasure to observe the testimonies of literary men to the worth of Christianity and of missionary work among heathen peoples. To Stevenson, Becke, and others, who have spoken recently, must be added Julian Hawthorne, who has been visiting the famine-stricken districts of India. He has been so impressed with the degradation and misery connected with heathen worship that he says, "Visiting India makes one value Christianity." He has a high opinion of missionaries and their work, and gives a striking account of one of them and of his wife :—

The husband worked with all his might from dawn to dark, and after dark in his study, helping distress, averting evil, cheering sorrow, enlightening ignorance, and praying with heart and soul to the God and Christ who was more real to him than any earthly thing. His lovely, artless, human, holy wife, with faith like a child's, and innocent as a child, yet wise and steadfast in all that touched her work, laboured as untiringly and unselfishly as her husband.

And the equals of these devoted labourers, we believe, are to be found all over the mission field.

A great deal of uneasiness has recently been created in many minds by articles and speeches in favour of strengthening the Army, for it has been thought that everything was tending towards conscription, or some form of enforced military service. Against such a system we should unhesitatingly raise our protest, as a thing calculated to sap and destroy all that is best and most hopeful among us. The testimony from the Continent, as to the demoralising effects of army training there, is too serious to be set aside. However, we are being earnestly assured by some of the foremost members of the Government that they have no intention of rivalling in the British Army the enormous hosts that are brought together in Continental forces, nor of altering the system by which the Army is raised, nor of imitating the policy of conscription or compulsion. All this is so far good. Nevertheless it must not be forgotten that Governments have great facility in finding justification for an absolute change in policy and method in "necessity," of which they make themselves the sole judges.

AN INDIAN SURVEY.

Devotees of East and West.

By Miss Lucy E. Guinness.

BEHOLD the holiest place in all Bombay. This beautiful "tank," down to whose clear waters flights of wide shelving steps lead, and where bathers and little children play among reflections of the cloudless skies and picturesque masonry, is to the minds of millions a sanctuary, a shrine. Round it a group of little temples rises among odd buildings, priests' houses, pilgrims' lodgings, native homes. From time immemorial Walkeshwar has been a sacred spot. One thinks how many pilgrims have tramped through weary journeys to reach these shining waters, how many anxious, clouded lives have been strained to the utmost to seek what here they seek, but never find!

Four or five of the weirdest fakirs, covered with filth and ashes, sit at one end in the hot sun, looking almost more like beasts than men. We can scarcely believe our eyes as we catch sight of them—the first fakirs we have ever seen—sitting there almost naked on the rough ground, surrounded by the various little pots and odds and ends they employ for life and worship. One or two are smoking a powerful drug which partly stupefies them. One talks to us by translation; and another—the most hideous of them all, an animal-looking creature, with masses of matted hair full of dust and ashes, who seems half insane—makes us a great oration all in his unknown tongue. Louder and louder he talks away, preaching at last at the top of his voice to the little crowd around us, and pausing now and then amid his eloquence to blow shrill blasts on a cow's horn by his side.

"What does he do that for?" we ask our boy.

"Whenever the holy man is hungry he blows his horn, mem Sahib. The people come out then and bring him food."

What must the faith be whose ideal is before us?

Standing here bewildered in the sunshine, trying to realise that it is not a dream—that to these men, our brothers, this filth, this degradation, this naked idleness, is the embodiment of sanctity—our hearts go out to India, the first glimpse of whose greatest faith meets us in such a form. This is Hinduism, hoary Hinduism, three thousand years old, and ruling to-day more than 200 million Hindus. And the spectacle before us is the outcome of her teachings!

This is the highest thing that you can do. Existence is an evil; emancipation from it in this life and in countless future lives is your one hope. Detach yourself from earth—go without clothes; have no home, no friends, no people; do no work; take no interest in anything at all; enjoy nothing, feel nothing, hope for nothing. Detach yourself—to do this, suffer pain; sleep on spikes, starve yourself, or eat carrion and nameless abominations; hold your arms up till they wither and the nails grow through the hand; do anything and everything to get rid of your

SUPREME CURSE, CONSCIOUS EXISTENCE.

It is difficult for us under the influence of Jesus Christ to understand and grasp this Hindu theory. To those who know and follow Him, Christ makes sheer living beautiful, life on earth a privilege, and everlasting life beyond the gift of God to men. But to the Hindu living without Christ—as to many, alas, in our own lands who live without Him—mere existence seems a curse.

This poor soul believes himself burdened with being because he is not good enough not to be. Hence he must accumulate merit, raise himself laboriously by weary years of good works until he can at last escape existence.

"The Hindu devotee," writes Bishop Thoburn,* "flatters himself that he can by his penances of various kinds accumulate merit. The word penance to his mind conveys no idea of repentance, but solely that of a means of acquiring personal merit. In the next place he is possessed with the idea that matter is inherently evil, and that, since his union with a material body is the source of most of his misfortunes, he must make war on the body in order to liberate the soul....no doubt a large number of both sexes choose a life of asceticism because they find it the simplest and easiest way of securing their daily bread...,but many of them show abundant evidence that they are sincere in their purpose, and persist through long lives of severe suffering and privation in faithfully following the course which they have chosen.

At nearly every great fair a number of men will be seen going through the self-inflicted torture of what is called the five-fires. Four fires are kept burning constantly around the devotee, while the sun, which makes the fifth, pours down his burning rays upon the head of the sufferer. Others, for months at a time, never allow themselves to lie down to rest, but permit themselves to be supported in a half-reclining position, or sometimes suspended upon a cushion, with their feet dangling down at a distance from the ground. Some sleep on beds made of broken stone, others on spikes; while others again seek torture for the body by abstaining from sleep altogether, or at least reduce their sleeping hours to the narrowest possible limits.

This nightmare dread of existence is the natural outcome of the transmigration theory—that saddest and most hopeless of all human explanations of life. Did you ever quietly think for one minute what it would mean to believe that everything on the face of the earth was the body of some soul—stocks and stones and trees and rivers, birds, beasts, insects, reptiles, men, mountains, oceans, grains of sand—all alike soul-houses; and that human souls were ceaselessly shifting through countless lives, and must for ever shift, according to their merits or demerits, among these? Think what this faith would mean! Transmigration we call it, and dismiss the idea with a word. But to believe that idea, to think that the souls you love best, and that death has called away, are —that of ajackal, a cow, or a cabbage—perhaps, and will be bound there, feeling, suffering, enjoying if they can, until death smites them again, and once more they change their house and pass into some other form, as coolies, kings, or whatnot, to believe that idea, what must it mean?

PENT UP IN SOME BODY

Think of the burden of it, the endless, restless, weary round, from which there is no escape; the grip of Fate that holds you and drives you on and on; the inexorable sentence, from which is no appeal, consigning you to grovelling reptile life or loathsome being. Who knows? You may be born to-morrow a leper, an idiot, a murderer, anything. Karma, your fate, determines what shall be. And your fate depends entirely on your merits. There is no pity anywhere. There is no forgiveness. Trouble comes to you to-day? Ah, you earned it yesterday, back in your last body. Then you sinned, and you are punished now.

It is so apparently just, this theory. It explains everything—all the crookedness of life, all the strange chances of destiny. It is so hard, so hopeless. Eighty-six million times you will be born and reborn, to suffer, live, and die!

"Let us shorten the eighty-six!" you say.

What more natural? You become a devotee, perhaps even a fakir. By so doing you detach yourself. You gradually escape re-incarnation. You stand a faint and far off chance of sooner finding rest—the oblivion of Nirvana: not to be.

Standing in this sunshine, looking down on the spectacle before us, on these scarcely human creatures, in their filthiness and ashes, realise the burden of belief that makes them what they are; and let your heart go out to the 26,000,000 people living in the Bombay Presidency only, in this one strip of country along the western coast of India stretching around us from where we stand in her beautiful capital city. Think of the waiting harvest in this one Presidency. Look on her fields. And look beyond—away across the continent of India, with its 290,000,000 souls. Two hundred and eight millions of them are Hindus, living in the darkness of the faith we have just thought of—208,000,000 still Hindu at this hour, as many as the whole Protestant population of the world, and over 60,000,000 more.

We are looking on the devotees of the Eastern world. Where are the devotees of the West? Thank God, there are many of them toiling round us here in India and scattered in his service in every heathen land, many who are sleeping in Central African graves, many working bravely on at home. Are we among their number?

Had we but one-half the devotion to Jesus Christ that the fakirs before us have to their gloomy faith, should we not do more to reach India's waiting millions? Should we not hasten to give Him our time, our means, our strength, ourselves—to suffer daily loss in that devotion, and to sacrifice it may be all that we hold most dear—that we may help to bring to these hearts the knowledge of his love?

Our Countrymen in India.

The report of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society shows that steady progress has been made in spreading the Gospel among the isolated Europeans scattered throughout India. Rev. I. F. Row, the society's secretary in India, has recently travelled 750 miles, going and returning, to minister to a score of people who are as "sheep without a shepherd," and who thankfully appreciated his flying visit. More labourers are greatly needed for this work. During the past fifteen years Mr. Row has travelled over 300,000 miles in this land, preaching in hundreds of places, large and small, and has again and again visited those who had not since their residence in India been visited before by any minister of the Gospel, and many of these have not been similarly visited since. The spiritual destitution on our great railways in many of the planting districts is simply appalling, and the results most disastrous.

The Indian Witness of Calcutta says:—"We should like to see at least fifty well-equipped agents of this society on the wing in India. While something is being done for railway people, the fact is that they are sadly neglected as a whole. Were the religious condition of the Anglo-Indian Railway Community of India investigated, the Christian world would have a painful revelation furnished to it. The progress of mission work among the natives is largely affected by the character of the Anglo-Indians with whom they are in contact."

The Harvest Field of South India, says in its issue for November: "In view of the great need for evangelistic work of this kind, the sum of £1400 must be regarded as paltry and wholly inadequate for the purposes for which it is intended to be used."

The secretary of this mission is Rev. D. C. Boyd, 3, Queen Margaret-crescent, Glasgow.

Lepers in India.

A most encouraging report of the work of the New Purulia Leper Asylum has been received by the Mission to Lepers, from whose funds it is entirely supported. This asylum was founded some ten years ago by Rev. H. Uffmann, who is still its devoted superintendent. Rev. F. Hahn, who has visited Purulia on behalf of the committee, writes: "The progress made is almost marvellous. Eleven months ago, when I first saw the site for the new asylum, there was no trace of a building, and now one looks, as it were, upon a whole village."

The work is a severe strain on Mr. Uffmann, as, in addition to the completion of the buildings and the erection of a larger and permanent chapel, he has to teach the leprous children and to visit the Home, in which he has some seventy children whose parents are lepers, but who have not themselves developed the disease. He sorely needs some capable assistance, and for this, as well as for the extension and maintenance of the work itself, funds are urgently needed. Mr. J. Jackson, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., is hon. sec. for London and district.

Travelling in the East.—Messrs. Thos. Cook and Son have published their programme of arrangements for winter tours in Palestine and Egypt for the coming season. The booklet is illustrated with photographs and maps, and contains details of personally conducted and independent tours to Lower Egypt, the Nile, Palestine, Turkey, Greece, &c. "Miscellaneous Notes for Eastern Travellers" are also included, which should prove useful for those who intend travelling in the East.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Touring in North China.

In a letter from Chi-Chou, Tientsin, Mr. Arthur D. Peill describes medical work among the Chinese. He says:—"It is hard to get the people to believe that we are working out of love to Christ and to them; they think we must have been banished from our own country, or be in some way serving our own ends. But when they get to realise the true state of things can you wonder that the object-lesson impresses them more than preaching regarding the truths and reality of Christianity?

"There is preaching every day in the wards of the hospital, also in the waiting-room where the out-patients gather. I have been very fully occupied, and have not entered upon particulars of the cases. The other evening an old Christian was brought in from a neighbouring village in a comical condition. He had been to a meeting there, and while singing rather vigorously had dislocated his jaw! We soon put him right, and he went back with a light heart. The deep-rooted prejudice of the people occasions much difficulty in treating their ailments. Chinese plaster is preferred to skilful medication, and often the case is when it is brought to the Mission Hospital. A lad whom I attended with care was withheld from complete treatment by 'the old folks at home,' who utterly distrust us. He was an only son, and had had his head shaven in order that evil spirits might not be able to carry him off by his pigtail! This, I am told, is often done in the case of only sons; 'carrying off,' of course, is only another term for dying. It needs a lot of patience to bear with some of the doings of the Chinese, but it is wonderful how much good may be done in spite of all hindrances.

"There is a woman who has been coming pretty regularly to Sunday service, though she knew she would get a severe beating on returning home. One day Mr. Rees was going home from Chi-Chou city, when he quite unexpectedly met with an elderly Christian lady going along in her donkey cart, with books under her arm. When questioned, she said that she was only going to a neighbouring village to TELL THE WOMEN ABOUT JESUS.

This was an act quite voluntary on her part, and all unknown to us but for the chance meeting.

"I must mention my journey to Tientsin and Yen-San. We left here on Monday, and were blown gaily down the river. Early the next morning, having arrived at an out-station near the river bank, Mr. Rees and I visited the village. We had a most enthusiastic welcome. Continuing our journey for several days, we were sometimes towed, at other times rowed. We passed stretches of country that have been under water ever since the last big floods. When at length we reached Tientsin, we had a delightful reception from many friends. I went to Yen-San with Mr. Murray down the Grand Canal. It is an old and half-populated city, with an air of dilapidation; and it is much used as a quiet retiring place for old scholars, teachers, etc. It dates its decay from the great floods, famine, and rebellion of twenty years or so ago. At present makeshift cottages are used for the work; and there is a small dispensary where Miss Kerr saw about 7000 patients last year. I stayed about ten days, and attended to many cases of sickness. Then I went on, viâ an out-station, to the Methodist New Connexion Mission at Chu-Chia, where there is a fine hospital and medical work in charge of Dr. F. W. Marshall. Having passed a happy week, I paid a visit to P'ang Chuang, where Dr. Peck, of the American Board, has been labouring for about fifteen years. Having of his own, Dr. Peck was able to render me great help as a new-comer. The work under his charge is simply enormous, the total number of visits paid by patients last year being over twenty thousand. Yet the doctor finds time to sink artesian wells, make underground rain-water cisterns (for the water of the district is injuriously saline). He has a great reputation among the Chinese, as will be inferred from the fact that a man once came to him from Hunan province, passing a dozen mission hospitals on the way. Other missionaries at P'ang Chuang are Dr. Arthur Smith and Dr. Porter.

"I returned home after an absence of six or seven weeks. I found a crowd of patients waiting for me, and was very heartily welcomed. I have been very happy during my first months in China, and have had good health nearly all along."

In the Heart of Brazil.

The heart of the South American Continent is occupied by the Brazilian States of Amazonas, Mato Grosso, and Goyaz. The last-named is probably the least known of the three on account of its isolated position. It is entered by the Tocantins River, which empties into the Amazon not far from its mouth. The State is nearly two-and-a-half times as large as the combined area of Great Britain and Ireland, but its white population is very small, being chiefly centred in the southernmost portion of the state, around the capital, also named Goyaz.

What the number of the Indian population is no one can tell with any degree of certainty; it may, however, be approximately estimated, because Amazonas, Mato Grosso, and Goyaz together are credited with from half a million to a million of pure Indians. As Mato Grosso is for the most part uninhabited, its dry table-lands not being able to sustain either herds or game, it follows that the Indians must, for the most part, live in either Amazonas or Goyaz, and we shall therefore be within reasonable limits, after cutting down the census figures one-half, if we say that Amazonas has at least a quarter of a million, Mato Grosso a hundred thousand, and Goyaz not less than 150,000 Indians of unmixed blood. By way of comparison, it may be stated that the total Indian population of the United States and British North America is 278,746.

The Indian tribes of Goyaz belong mostly to the Ges or Crens nation, which have the distinction of furnishing the ugliest as well as the handsomest specimens of the indigenous race. How to account for the physical differences of various tribes, belonging to the same stock, is a difficult problem. It is, however, not at all unlikely that the hideousness of some, like the Botocudos, is the result of wilful mutilation and coupled perhaps with greater moral depravity than exists among other tribes. In their habits, too, the various tribes differ very materially; while the Chavantés, for instance, are known as a very fierce and warlike people, their right cousins, the Cherentés, speaking the same idiom, are far more tractable and inclined to a settled mode of life.

The last-named tribe, living in the eastern district of the central part of this State, comprises about 4500 male members, and is blessed in having for its leader a wise and patriotic chief, who loves his people and wishes to improve their condition and to raise them out of barbarism to a state of civilisation. With that aim in view, the chief, whose name is Sepé, undertook a journey to Rio Janeiro in order to solicit Government aid for the education of his people. When we recollect that Sepé, not knowing that he could reach Rio Janeiro by way of the river to Pará and thence by steamer to the capital, undertook to travel the 1600 miles overland, partly by canoe and partly on horseback, through dense wildernesses and trackless forests, we must certainly admire the spirit and enterprise of the man.

Arriving at his destination, after a journey occupying the entire summer, he found that his trip had been made in vain, as the Government was unable or unwilling to grant his request. The work of educating the Indians has heretofore been generally entrusted to Italian Capuchin friars, who are mostly ignorant, generally lazy, and often immoral. The results of their labours have been so unsatisfactory to the Government that they are unwilling to spend any more money in that direction. Baulked in his way, but not at all the chief set about to find other means to accomplish his purpose. In some way or another he heard of a Protestant school, located in San Paulo, in the adjoining State, and thither he went to plead the cause of his people. Can we doubt that he was led by the invisible hand of Providence?

Dr. Horace M. Lane, the president of the Protestant College, had for a long time been interested in the Indians, and he cordially received his dusky visitor and listened to his story. He bade him stay at his house. Now comes the strangest part of the story. That same night the American mail brought to Dr. Lane a letter from a medical student at Baltimore, in which the writer, who had been for fourteen years a secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, and who was then preparing for foreign missionary work, asked for information about the Indian people of Brazil and the possibility of reaching them with the Gospel. Dr. Lane could not fail to see the hand of God in this strange combination of circumstances, and he wrote at once to his interrogator, asking him to undertake the mission to the Cherentés.

However, Mr. George R. Witte, who had sent the letter to Dr. Lane, had only just begun his medical studies, and had no intention of entering at once on the work. He went, however, to see a friend, Dr. James A. Graham, who, like himself, belonged to the and asked him if he would undertake the mission. Receiving an affirmative reply, Mr. Witte set about to interest first the Presbyterian Board, and afterwards several other missionary agencies, in the Cherenté people. Owing to financial embarrassments none of the American societies seemed able to open up this new field, and finally Dr. Graham left regretfully for his home in Scotland, where he is now in charge of a mission church among the miners at Cowdenbeath, in Fifeshire.

The cause of the chief Sepé and his people looked hopeless indeed; but the burden having once been laid on his heart, Mr. Witte could not rid his mind of their need, and he finally resolved to venture, believing that since the call was of God every obstacle would, at length, be cleared out of the way. Friends in England advised Mr. Witte to spend the winter in Lisbon, in order to study Portuguese, and he is now there for that purpose. In February he expects to resume his journey to Pará and up the Tocantins as far as vessels can navigate. Dr. Lane has arranged that an Indian party shall meet him in Caméta and carry him up the river to his destination. Mr. Witte is still in hopes that the means will be provided, so that Dr. Graham may accompany him.

Before leaving America Mr. Witte connected himself with the South American Evangelical Mission, having its headquarters in Toronto. As this society is young, and has but limited means, Mr. Witte still finds himself without a suitable outfit for the inland journey and residence in the tropical forests. Donations in aid of this may be sent to Mr. William R. Ronald, 24, Mulgrave-street, Liverpool, or to Rev. R. Stewart, agent of the Bible Society at Lisbon, Portugal, whose address is 32, Rua das Janellas Verdes. Any such donations should be marked for Mr. Witte.

The Nestorian Syrians.

Mr. E. MAYFIELD, of Walton-on-the-Hill, Epsom, writes:—

Various statements have been published concerning the "conversion" of the whole Syrian nation to the Russian Church. Mr. Coan, of the American Mission at Urumiah, who possesses an intimate knowledge of the people and the country, writes from Urumiah, Persia, on October 9, 1897:—

"You will be interested to hear that after the Russian priests had met with great success in a portion of the plain visited by them, they stirred up so much feeling on the part of the Moslems, and were so unable to fulfil all the wonderful promises made about them, that they had to stop their work, and have not been doing anything now for three months. In fact, the mission seems so far to have been a grand failure. On August 16 appeared in a daily paper a most ridiculous statement to the effect that the whole nation, numbering 400,000, had gone over to the Greek Church, and that the Russian and English Missions had been in conflict with each other. Mr. Athelstan Riley, in his answer on the 20th, was equally wide of the mark in stating that no conflict had arisen or was likely to arise between the two missions, and that the number who had gone over include nearly all the Presbyterian converts and many Roman Catholic adherents.

"Now, the whole number who have given their names as candidates for the Greek Church is only about ten thousand, which included every one of the Catholic adherents—except the priests—in the districts visited, all of the old Nestorian Church, and about 200 of the Presbyterian adherents. This still leaves over three thousand Presbyterian adherents."

Notes from Canada.

By Mr. R. COPE MORGAN.

MR. MOODY has been holding meetings in the North-West States with great success.

His train was boarded, when some miles out of Winnipeg, by Rev. Mr. Pitblado, Presbyterian minister, and Mr. Martin, president of the Y.M.C.A. On reaching the city he was met by a deputation of gentlemen, in the midst of whom was a man who said he had heard him preach on a tombstone at Sheffield twenty years ago. He is often accosted thus by former hearers and converts.

Winnipeg has about 40,000 inhabitants; fifteen years ago it had only 7000. It has some splendid buildings, prominent among which is the court-house, with a library of several thousand volumes, a Presbyterian and a Wesleyan college; and the principal denominations are represented by many fine churches. All the ministers, with perhaps one High Church exception, occupied their seats on Mr. Moody's platform, together with the very efficient choir, whose rendering of the tunes was surprisingly good after only one day's previous practice led by Mr. Burke.

These short evangelistic visits afford little time for personal dealing. But it seems to me that more is accomplished by the full, clear, earnest, sympathetic preaching to the multitude than could be done by speaking to a comparatively few individuals. If the ministers and members of churches are encouraged to renewed devotedness and desire for the conversion of others, as in very many cases they undoubtedly are, they will find out anxious and stricken souls, and influence others who may have still remained hardened or careless. The brief visits to Winnipeg and Brandon, in Canada, and to Grand Forks, Fargo, Minneapolis, and St. Paul, in the States, will, I feel satisfied, prove a lasting benefit to those places and to neighbouring localities, whence many came from distances of two to three hundred miles to hear the evangelist. He has lost none of his power to make men weep, or to make men tremble who never weep. His closing recollection, on Sabbath afternoon, of an event which happened in his early days, brought almost every man in the audience to tears. I would advise people to attend the earliest meeting of such a series; many intend to go before they are over, but then the crowds become greater, and hundreds are disappointed.

DR. BARNARDO'S CANADIAN HOME.

We took the opportunity of being in Winnipeg to go 230 miles to Russell, where Dr. Barnardo has his distributing home. Here I found a relative, who went out three years ago, and whose experiences have been such that I should not have been surprised had he expressed a burning desire to return. But far from this. His wife had never enjoyed such good health, and he would not think of returning to the old life under any circumstances. And this was by no means an isolated case. Here we met with the first snow. The air was keen and cold, but so delightfully rare and elastic that it is a pleasure to breathe.

We were kindly entertained by Mrs. Struther, in the absence of her husband, the general superintendent of Dr. Barnardo's Canadian Home. We were driven by Mr. Blythe, the farm manager, for several hours round the neighbourhood, so that we were able to compare the general appearance of the 8000 acres, partly a grant from the Government, partly acquired by purchase, with the surrounding country. This tract of twelve and a-half square miles seemed a very choice property, and doubtless in years to come it will become very valuable.

On our return we went over the farm-buildings, where were 250 horned cattle, 150 sheep, 37 horses, 115 pigs. These latter justified the remark of a visitor who had heard of clean pigs but never saw them before. They had dry straw for bedding, like horses, and seemed not less happy than the unmentionable creature which returns to her wallowing in the mire.

On the following morning we went over the Home, which was not built under the Doctor's eye, and is not a conspicuous success. Two boys were lying ill, one of whom was sinking in consumption, the other just past the crisis of typhoid fever. The books containing records of the boys' history, were as thorough as all else that the doctor does.

Some few of them have already bought sections and homesteads on the land, and it may be expected that the locality will by-and-by be tenanted by a population of young Englishmen, emigrated through Dr. Barnardo's splendid agency.

A CHANCE CONVERSATION.

Passing through a fine tract of country in Manitoba, I fell into conversation with a business man from Toronto. Miles of splendid land lay on both sides of the railway, not one acre in ten of which had been broken by the plough. My companion was full of the possibilities of this fine province, and wondered why it should be so slowly taken up. Young men of ability, energy, and industry would in ten years make a competency.

But uppermost in his mind was the conviction that the great need of the time is the more equal distribution of wealth. He would have a law that no man should possess more than 200,000 dollars. The tendency of wealth to accumulate in few hands appeared to him full of fateful consequences. I replied with something like the old platitude that men cannot be made right by Act of Parliament. "No," he said, "but Government ought to be capable of preventing the strong and clever from aggrandising themselves without limit, and consigning the many to their hard struggle for a living."

"But the tyranny of the people," I said, "is as hard as any other."

"Yes," he replied; "perhaps the only hope is in the Second Coming. It may be we are near the end, as the Bible seems to show."

"It is surprising," I said, "how many are thinking of the coming King compared with forty years ago. Then it was ridiculed or denounced, now it is a common belief."

Then, returning to the present state of things, my friend said: "We want some way of breaking up and of preventing these 'combines,' by which a few men get everything into their own hands, and force prices up and down as they please. If not, there will be trouble inside of twenty years. Will it be a revolution? People will not always be content to shiver in the cold while the few roll in luxury, which is a curse to them and to their children.

"There never can be equality. If all were equal to-day there would be startling inequalities to-morrow. But while the daily discoveries and inventions are putting undreamed-of powers in the hands of science and capital, men must learn that these advantages are given not merely for their own aggrandisement but for the good of all. Alexander wept because there were no more worlds to conquer. Now men commit suicide because they have made so many millions that they know not what to do with themselves; they have no more an object to live for."

THE Y.M.C.A. AT WINNIPEG.

There are few cities where the Y.M.C.A is a greater boon to English emigrants than Winnipeg; and this will be the case more and more as the Canadian North-West develops, and as Winnipeg grows, as it is doing, into a large and important city. The Association is carrying on a good and steady work in insufficient premises. A lot worth 10,000 dollars has been purchased, on which 3,500 dollars are still due. And 22,000 dollars have been subscribed for a building to cost 50,000. At the annual meeting in January, among other votes of thanks was one to the ladies who had generously furnished the present rooms, and provided 1000 dollars for furnishing the new building. Two members have taken up the work of the Y.M.C.A. as their life career—one in Boston and the other in Worcester.

IN REPLY TO "THE MIND OF THE MASTER."

I have before me a lecture by the Rev. Dr. King, Principal of Manitoba College (Presbyterian) at Winnipeg, which utters no uncertain sound. Its title is "The Purely Ethical Gospel Examined." I quote a brief passage which indicates the views of Principal King, and makes us thankful for the maintenance of Gospel truth by one in so influential a position:—

It is difficult, if not indeed impossible, to reconcile its doctrine of the universal Fatherhood of God, and the correlative doctrine, the common-sonship of the race, with the Saviour's use of the terms, Father and Son. For myself, I do not find a single passage in which one can claim with any degree of certainty that Christ makes use of the term Father except when speaking either to disciples or of them; or, to put the point more definitely, I do not find one in which, addressing men not disciples, He says "your Father," or speaking of them He says "their Father," and yet on the supposition of the universal Fatherhood of God, how pertinent, how appropriate, it would have been to do so. In point of fact, the preachers who take this view of the Fatherhood constantly use this language in addressing men avowedly unconverted, and most naturally. On the other hand we do find Christ, in addressing the unbelieving Jews, saying in explicit terms, "If God were your Father you would love Me."

The correlative doctrine of the common sonship of the race is in still more obvious conflict with the teaching of the Gospels on the subject, especially with the words, "As many as received Him to them gave He the right (R.V.) to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." It is true, these are not the words of Christ, but they are the words of John, not to say of the Holy Spirit speaking by him. They embody the view of sonship taken by the disciple who lay on Jesus' breast, and who, even apart from special inspiration, may well be supposed to have understood his Master's mind; and, according to that view, it is a sonship of believers, of those "who are born"..."of God." After all, how little does any other, any common sonship signify, except, indeed, as carrying with it the possibility of this highest one? A sonship that should be common to the unregenerate and the regenerate, to the sinner and the saint, to the wicked seducer and his innocent victim, how little would it mean to those possessing it! This could not possibly be the sonship, the contemplation of which led the apostle in a kind of ecstasy to exclaim, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed on us, that we should be called the sons of God!"

Our Soldiers in Cairo.

DURING the last two years the Cameron Highlanders have been stationed in Buena Vista Barracks, Gibraltar, and a good many of the men of this regiment have been led to the Lord, while large numbers, though not decided, have led us to hope they were anxious by their regular attendance at our Gospel meeting held every night.

Early in July the Lord seemed to lay on my mind the need of a worker going to Cairo with them, and at Keswick I learned that Miss Logan had closed the Soldiers' Home and returned to this country, also that a number of Christians in Cairo were praying that workers might be sent out to labour among the troops. After much prayer and waiting on God for definite leading, I had the joy of seeing Mr. J. Stewart, of our Gibraltar and South Spanish Mission, embark for Cairo.

He writes from Alexandria: "The Simla was well filled up, for besides the Camerons there were Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders, Staffords, and Artillery, all going to India. Nearly every day a few of us gather for Bible reading, prayer, and inquiry, while the unsaved were crowding round us. Many were evidently interested, others decidedly anxious, and a few were led to immediate decision for Christ.

"The last night we were on board, a few of us were sitting talking of the things concerning the Kingdom; others were sauntering up and down, quite a crowd leaning over the deck rail. Two or more Christians come up leading a comrade who is anxious, and they want someone to speak to him. After a short conversation, he decides for Christ. Just then a shout goes up from those who are gambling; but it makes our hearts glad to know that at the same moment there is joy in the presence of God over a repentant soul."

After a few days' stay in the Soldiers' Institute, Alexandria, where Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence showed him no little kindness, Mr. Stewart went with the Camerons to Cairo. He writes: "There is much fashion and gaiety all round, and fearful wickedness; you would know something of it during your visit here. The first night S. and F. and the others were out of barracks some of the Christian men took them into a café where drink is sold, to have supper. It is impossible to get any refreshment without going into these houses where drink is sold. I was made sad last night by seeing two kilted laddies reeling along the streets drunk. These things make me think it may be the Lord's will we should have a home. There is no soldiers' home in Cairo. To get even a small house in a good locality would cost about £6 a month, but it is clear a home is needed. This means trouble and expenses and more workers."

I am waiting upon God to know what He would have us do. There are many thousands of soldiers in Cairo, and nowhere they can call their own, where they can spend a quiet hour, bring an unsaved comrade, or get refreshment. There are also many drinking houses and Greek cafés kept by unprincipled men and women, but no shelter from the storm and temptation which ever lie in the path of a soldier.

Will anyone help us to open a home in Cairo as a haven of refuge from the fearful wickedness?

Missionary Heroes.

FORTY years ago Du Chaillu, of gorilla and African travel fame, opened those far-seeing eyes of his in wonder, as he noted two new marvels in West Africa. He had pressed into the interior from Corisco Bay, and found himself in the very heart of the Fan people, the tribe of Bantu Africans, to whom belongs the future of Equatorial West Africa. He wrote:—

The Fans have left the impression on me of being the most promising people in all Western Africa...They seem to have more of that kind of stamina which enables a rude people to receive a strange civilisation than any other tribe I know of in Africa." The other sight at which, in this locality, Du Chaillu marvelled was a young, single-handed missionary (Adams, of the American Board), who had essayed the task of winning these Fans to Christ. For a year this solitary, devoted, young missionary worked; then God sowed his body in that African soil, as seed for future harvestings of grace.

A sweet-faced full-eyed child is alone with God in a town in New York State. Her twelve-year-old heart burns to help the great missionary cause, and she asks what she can do, she so young, so poor? Suddenly her great eyes gleam with an intelligent light; a purpose has been put into her heart which she sets about fulfilling at once. She collects shavings at the workshops, sells them to her friends for fire-lighting and other purposes, until she is in time the glad possessor of three dollars (twelve shillings), and with a heart brimming with love she hands the silver over to the beloved missionary work.

On the West Coast of Africa two young missionaries—one male and one female—stand with clasped hands, exchanging vows of love pure as earth has ever known. His is a wondrous face, filled with a rare light of grace and intelligence—a student, a scholar. The dark eyes which she lifts to his are full of a holy zeal—the zeal of a deeper intelligence, a wider interest than that which filled her sweet, tender, childish face when, with her shaving-gathered dollars, she sought to extend the missionary cause. She is a missionary herself now, and the scholarly student before her pleads with her to unite her life with his, that together they may work among the heathen Africans for the Lord whom they love. A moment's silence, and she tells him she will link her life to his, if only he will push away from the coast town where they then are, and where there are several workers, and go to the people in the interior, to whom no ambassador for Christ has gone. God gave this Christ-honouring couple the happiest of holy unions, and among the Fans, where the godly Adams laid down his young life twenty-five years before, they began their labours for God.

On a day early in the history of the station the student-missionary (Rev. A. W. Marling) was absent from home. The people of a neighbouring town, having a feud with those of the town in which the mission-house stood, tried to seize a boy belonging to the mission, to kill and eat him. But there were two to be reckoned with in this matter, whom the would-be murderers had failed fully to estimate in their plans—these were the God of the mission and the brave missionary's wife. From morning till evening this heroic woman clung to God with her soul, and to the frightened boy with her heaven-strengthened hands. The savages sought to steal a march upon her from every quarter, that they might wrest their proposed victim from her clasp, but God held the dusky fiends back from lifting a finger against her—and the boy was saved.

And this is the life-end of the student-missionary hero! For sixteen years he has battled and laboured, and now the fiery fingers of the fever-fiend grip him, and, exhausted and dying, he lies back upon his bed watching the door of his room. His heroic wife, bearing in her arms their youngest child, two years old, enters, and with a tender word lays the babe by his side. The little one has been sick for days, and has not seen "pa-pa," and now, without a word, but in a very ecstasy of speechless delight, she nestles in his arms, and presses her little hot lips to his cheek. Only a few hours, and then alone, with a bursting, bleeding heart, Mrs. Marling lays her martyr husband's clay to rest "until He come."

[1078]

Now there is not another soul upon earth, in connection with that Missionary Board, except that heroic missionary-widow, who has a perfect knowledge of the language of that Fan people. Her five sweet children (all girls) are in England (the baby, two and a-half years, is with her, the others are at school), and she yearns to go back to her beloved work and people in Africa. But she wants to see the translated work of her beloved husband, who first reduced the tongue to a language (through the press first, for the Fan have nothing but a small catechism, Genesis, Matthew, and ten hymns, in the way of printed literature). Five centres of missionary effort among the Bantu could use the proposed new books. There is a hymn-book and almost the whole of Foster's Bible Story translated, but all stands still (while heathen souls die in darkness daily) for lack of means. These missionaries belong to that noble band of American Presbyterians who have watered so many soils with their blood. But the Missionary Board is simply crushed with a debt of $86,300. We have many kindred cases, doubtless, in connection with our English Missionary Boards; but such things are lifted out of sect, out of nation even, and become opportunities for the whole Church of God.

Work in Italian Prisons.

VERY interesting accounts, with good news, have reached me from various sources of the work of circulating the Word of God in the prisons of Italy. "How can we know," we asked an official in Milan Prison, "that these books may not be taken from the men by the chaplain?" "Well, the priest may induce the man to give him the book by telling him that it is a bad book, but if you put a number of these large Testaments into the library, then they are our property, they are entered in the catalogues, and any prisoner may apply for them and receive one."

We accordingly put 200 Testaments into the library, and they were catalogued. This was also done in other cities. Rev. Giuseppe Silva, who was of much help to me when in Italy this year, of the Evangelical Church of Italy, has just called upon me and told me the following:—A few months ago in a certain city a literary gentleman was imprisoned for writing articles of an ultra-Radical type. He was sentenced to a few months' imprisonment, and whilst in prison he saw catalogued a number of New Testaments. Anxious to read the book he applied to the chaplain for a copy, but was put off with some excuse. The prisoner then demanded the Book, but the priest at last absolutely refused to let him have one. On his release he went direct to a member of Parliament in Rome, and told his story.

"Can you prove this?" asked the gentleman.

"Certainly." And he did.

In a very short time a governmental order was issued to all the prisons of Italy to the effect that "Any prisoner has a right to ask for any of the books in the catalogue, and if the chaplain refuses to give them, then the pay or salary of such chaplain shall be stopped."

This is good news, and we should return thanks to God; but better news than this may be expected. The Director-General of the Prisons of Italy is a very liberal-minded man. He married an English lady. I have known him for over sixteen years; he has always been most kind to me in my work among the prisoners of Italy. He has formed the idea of printing a prison periodical, which will be distributed among the criminals throughout Italy—65,000 in all (Protestant Norway has only about 400 prisoners). He is desirous of getting before the prisoners good reading-matter from his friends—papers and books having a high moral tone. He says, "I know England and her ways, and I want to do some good among our poor prisoners." He also sends his compliments, and recommends his work to me.

Miss Carruthers, of Pisa, is in correspondence with him, and will possibly translate some small English books for him if he needs it, or possibly his wife will do it. My own "Prison Stories" (Stirling Tract Depôt) will very likely be thus utilised; and I am also sending him the pathetic poem "The Convict's Song." Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN remember Italy and her prisons? At one large prison near Rome, which in one corridor, or large room, contained 350 men in chains for life, besides 750 men for long sentences, a priest-ridden official said to me, "If you leave any of your books here we will burn them."

God willing, we hope to see that prison of Civita Vecchia open to the Gospel. I have succeeded since my visit to Italy to send a number of Testaments into the old prison of Nisida, near Naples. There is much needing to be done in the prison world before the command is obeyed: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Any help to do this will be gratefully received.

Soldiers' Institute, Gibraltar.

THE report shows that owing to the increasing number of bluejackets using this place, the title has been modified to Soldiers' and Sailors' Institute. The salvation of souls is, it is stated, the first object, and towards this end various efforts—as Bible-classes, Gospel meetings, barrack and hospital visiting are directed. A good work is also carried on among the children in the way of Band of Hope, Ministering League, and so on.

It also appears Gibraltar is a very bad place for lodgings, and when the fleet are in hundreds of men require beds for the night. We have done what we could to meet this need by purchasing a large quantity of bedding and a number of bed-chairs. During the year about 1500 beds have been let.

These efforts have met with a measure of success. The workers are often receiving letters from men who have left the Rock for other stations, testifying to the profitable times spent at the Institute. One man on the Reserve writes:—"I do miss the dear old place, and all the dear faces. I fancy I can see you all at times as you are sitting at the tea-table after the Bible-class. Many a day since I left the Rock have I longed to get back again. Those were happy days. There isn't anything like that here, but I mean, and I will with God's help be true to Him." A Corporal writes:—"I have been pleased to hear from time to time that you are getting on well. I should dearly like to be with you again. I miss the meetings as much as ever." A Gunner writes:—"One great cause I have to remember the good old Institute for is that it was there I learned to know the saving and keeping power of our Lord Jesus Christ. I found it a blessing in many other ways; the reading-room, where I have spent many a comfortable hour; its refreshments, too, were good and cheap."

Communications as to this work may be sent to the treasurer, Col. H. S. Clarke, Essendene, Wimbledon.

Evangelisation of Asia Minor.

FRIENDS and supporters of the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society have issued a call for renewed interest in the work of evangelisation in Turkey. They say:—"God has not suffered the Armenian race to be destroyed. Accounted as sheep for the slaughter, multitudes have been faithful unto death rather than deny the name of Christ. The gifts of British Christians, joined with those of America and of Europe, have saved the Armenians from extermination. Since the cessation of the massacres the poor sufferers have turned towards God with chastened heart. In all quarters of Asia Minor the signs of spiritual revival are appearing.

"There are yet in the land hundreds of pastors and teachers loyal to Christ, and craving to labour for Him. They have suffered impoverishment, and many the loss of all; their congregations and scholars are unutterably poorer than they were two years ago. These faithful men and women are eager to spread the Gospel amongst their own people, but they need such help as British Christians can give. For the evangelisation of Turkey two methods are available:—(1) Gather in the orphans and fatherless waifs of the Armenians, feed and clothe, teach and train them for Christ. (2) The native pastors, teachers, and Bible-women are the other agency. Some 600 remain, and the colleges in full work are training more. It is to these agencies, under God, we must look for evangelisation.

"The British people have sent relief in tens of thousands of pounds to the persecuted Armenians: can British Christians pass by their spiritual needs? It is our conviction that the Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, founded 1854 by members of the Evangelical Alliance, is the best channel for contributions to the evangelisation of Turkey, and we heartily commend it to all our fellow-Christians."

The appeal is signed by representatives of various Churches and denominations. The secretary of the society is Rev. W. A. Essery, Alliance House, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, December 12.

"By his strength he had power with God."—Hos. xii. 3.

HIS strength lay in his weakness. As long as he seemed strong, and was able to oppose force to force, he failed of the highest blessing; but when the sinew of his thigh shrivelled beneath the angel's touch, and was out of joint, when he was in imminent danger of falling helplessly to the ground, he prevailed, and received the name of Israel the Prince.

The eloquence of tears.—"He wept." There is no record of these tears in Genesis, but we can well understand that they flowed freely. The entire results of Jacob's life, wife, children, and fortune were at stake. With one fell sweep, Esau on the morrow might reduce him to the loneliness with which he had passed over Jordan years before. God is touched by tears. He puts them in his bottle. He hears the voice of our weeping and interprets it. If not a hair falls from our head to the ground, surely not a tear can, without our Father. Your tears will yet arrest the steps of the compassionate Lord, as those of the women on his way to the cross.

The power of prayer.—"He made supplication." "I will not let thee go unless Thou bless me." Remember how the Syro-Phenician mother cast herself at the Saviour's feet, and pleaded for help. The Lord kept her waiting till her prayer had reached a pitch which only delay could have induced, and then turned to her with the assurance that all she had claimed was hers. You may be kept in the attitude of prayer through the long night, but at day-break you may receive what you sought.

The strength of weakness.—As long as we can stand and hold our own, we fail of our quest. When we are lamed and broken, and unable to do more than cling, we realise God's hidden stores of blessed help. The sick child elicits most of the mother's love. The last-born babe drags down to the level of its tiny mouth its strong and brawny father.

"O death, where are thy plagues? O grave, where is thy destruction?"—Hos. xiii. 14.

These words are made familiar to us in the magnificent apostrophe with which Paul's great resurrection chapter closes. They have been recited for centuries over Christian graves. What wonders we should find in the Old Testament, if only we could read it with the eyes of the Apostles, illumined by the Holy Spirit.

In their first utterance they record Jehovah's resolve to deliver his people, in spite of all their sins. The conflict in the Divine heart between hatred of the abominable idolatries by which they were cursed, and his ancient, unalterable love, gives this chapter, and indeed the whole book, its remarkably disjointed character. There is hardly a paragraph which is not marked by abrupt transitions, agitation of speech, appeals, enquiries, expressions of infinite regret. But notwithstanding all, God had given commandment to bless, and He neither could nor would reverse it. Let death and Hades do their worst against his chosen, He could be stronger than they; and effect his redemptive purpose.

In these intermediate ages these words may be quoted over every Christian's death, whether it be a martyrdom or the quiet yielding up of life. In comparison with the great gain that death brings to those who pass to the "far better" of being with Christ, wherein are we losers by it? Nay, do we not greatly gain?

But the full realisation of these words awaits the hour when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality, at the sudden appearance of the Saviour in his advent glory. Then shall be brought to pass the saying which is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. There shall not a hoof be left behind. Not one of the redeemed shall remain in the prison-house; and even in their bodies, raised in the likeness of Christ, there will be no evidence of the triumph of death or the grave.

TUESDAY, December 14.

"I am like a green fir tree; from Me is thy fruit found."—Hos. xiv. 8.

This chapter abounds with picturesque natural imagery. The dew distilling on the parched herbage, as the sign of the Holy Spirit. The blossoming lily, fragile but beautiful, an emblem of the retiring grace and purity of Christian character. The roots of Lebanon, descending far down into the valley, anchoring it in rugged strength, significant of the stability which in each Christian should mingle with grace. The silver beauty of the olive, the cool aromatic breath of the wind that has passed over the snows and slopes of Lebanon, commemorating the beauty and fragrance of the influence of the child of God. The covering shadow, the yellowing corn, the delicious scent of the vine, when it gives a good smell, to denote the gifts and graces of holy living. And finally, all of these summed up in the cry of Ephraim, "I am like a green fir tree." Oh, child of God, canst thou appropriate this wealth of imagery for thyself? Are the facts which these symbols denote true of thy life? Be not content to be as the lily, seek also to be as the rooted strength of Lebanon; be not satisfied with the similitudes of beauty, seek also those of usefulness. And above all, be an evergreen, never showing signs of autumnal decay.

But, amid it all, remember the caution—"From Me is thy fruit found." Do not boast; do not count that any of these things is thine own; thou hast nothing thou didst not receive; thou couldst do nothing apart from Jesus. It is only as thou abidest in Him, and He in thee, that thou canst bring forth any fruit, or be fragrant, or serve any good purpose in the world.

WEDNESDAY, December 15.

"Sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the elders (R.V. marg.) and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the Lord your God, and cry unto the Lord."—Joel i. 14.

It was a terrible invasion. The locusts had lighted down upon the land of Israel, so that the seeds rotted under the clods, garners were desolate, the barns were broken down. Despair took hold of the husbandmen, and the herds and flocks panted out their anguish. At this juncture the prophet called for a national fast.

Whenever our life is visited by special trials and perplexities, we should withdraw ourselves from common pursuits, and lay bare our heart-secrets, so that we may learn the cause of God's controversy with us. There is a reason and a needs-be, because He does not afflict willingly or grieve the children of men.

But we would reiterate the burden of a previous Homily, and ask again, why there should not be a convocation of all God's children for fasting and prayer at this crisis. The labour disputes are bringing famine into many homes, and must lead to our national undoing, unless checked. The nation is becoming corrupted with betting, drinking, pleasure-seeking, and luxury; the Lord's Day desecrated, and the old religious spirit notably out of date. What can cure this but prayer! We need to humble ourselves before God on the behalf of our people and land. Christians should be strong patriots. Though they be pilgrims and strangers, yet must they seek the peace of the cities in which they reside, and never rest till God's will is done on earth as in heaven.

THURSDAY, December 16.

"I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten."—Joel ii. 25.

How many years of our life have been consumed by the locust! Self in one form or another has sorely robbed us of our golden sheaves, reducing them to dust. Self-indulgence, frivolity, wanton spendthriftness of time, and talent, and opportunity, sloth and lethargy, mixed and evil motives, secret sins—what a crew are there! They have played the part of the caterpillar, the canker-worm, and the palmerworm with the green promise and the yellow produce of our lives.

But God waits to forgive, to put away from his mind the memory of the wasted past, to place the crown of a new hope upon our brow—yea, more, to restore to us the years that the locust hath eaten. There shall be a revenue of glory to Him even from those wasted years. Either in the experience they shall have communicated to us for dealing with other men, or in the penitential and broken-hearted temper they shall have begotten in ourselves, those years shall yet yield crops of praise to God, and of fruitfulness to us. And, also, God is prepared so to add his blessing to us, in the present and future, as to give us in each year not only the year's produce, but much more, so that each year will be laden and weighted with the blessing of three or four beside. Where sin abounded, grace shall much more abound. Where we have sown, we shall reap, not thirty-fold only, but a hundred-fold. God is so anxious to give us as large a result as possible to show for our life's work, though we may have sadly wrecked its earlier portions. Did He not restore to Peter at Pentecost what he wasted in the hall of judgment?

FRIDAY, December 17.

"I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy."—Joel iii. 17.

This will be the lot of the chosen people in the millennial age. The Holy God will make the city in which He resides a holy place. But it is true universally. Wherever the Holy God dwells, there you have holiness—for it is the attribute of his nature, as heat is of fire. Holiness is not It, but He. Do you want it? Then you must invite Him to come and abide.

When God comes into a day, it becomes holy unto Him. When his presence is revealed in a bush, it is holy ground. When He descends on a mountain, the fences are erected, that unhallowed feet may not draw nigh. When He fills a building like Solomon's Temple, the whole is consecrated, and may not be employed for sacrilegious purposes. Best of all, if He dwell in our hearts, they too are rendered holy to Himself.

When the Apostle prays that the God of Peace should sanctify us wholly, he goes on to ask that spirit, soul, and body should be as a temple filled with God. The holy man is he who is God-filled and God-possessed. It is not enough to possess God. We must be possessed by Him. He surely is holier than other men who has more of God; and he is the holiest who has most. Behold, Christ stands at the door and knocks; He longs to come in and abide, never again to depart; He brings with Him the holiness for which He has taught us to yearn. He hath the Holy Spirit, to have whom is to be holy. "I will dwell in them, and walk in them"—such is his promise.

SATURDAY, December 18.

"The words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa."—Amos. i. 1.

God does not hesitate to employ a herdman, if only his heart is pure and devoted to his service. He calls such an one out of the midst of his fellows, designating him for his sacred ministry. And when the fire of God burns within, very common clay becomes luminous and transparent. God loves to choose the things that are not, to bring to nought those that are. An ox-goad, a ram's-horn, a sling of stone, will serve his purpose. It is not what a man has, but what he is, that matters; and how much he can hold of the Divine Spirit.

As we look through this strong book of ancient prophecy, and notice how it abounds with references and imagery peculiar to a herdman's life, we feel that a noble spirit of devotion to God may elevate the meanest employments and dignify the most ordinary subjects. The common incidents of the farm may convey the Divine meaning not less than the sacred scenery of the Temple, which was familiar to Ezekiel. There is nothing which is intrinsically common or unclean. We profane things by a profane spirit. But if we view all things from the Divine standpoint, we shall find that a sacred light will beat through them, like that which transfigured the coarse garments of Christ so as no fuller on earth could whiten them. The glory streamed through from his heart!

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

BY PASTOR THEO. MONOD.

III.

WE have already considered the Father as the object and the end of our worship and our life. We have considered the Son as the revelation of the Father; the Everlasting Word made flesh; as Him without whom no man can go to the Father. We now have to do with the Holy Spirit. "Through Him (the Son) we both have access by one Spirit unto the Father."

"One Spirit." And what is the Spirit? No, no! That is not the way to speak. Who is the Spirit? And what place does the Spirit occupy in the work of salvation? Will you listen to John the Baptist, than whom, says the Lord, no greater man was born of woman. He was the great prophet who could point with his finger to the Messiah and say: "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world." And what does he say further? "The same is He which baptizeth with the Holy Ghost."

How did Christ Himself live? How did He accomplish his ministry? We read of Him: "For God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto Him." How did his ministry begin? After this wise. Being baptized and praying—mind this—the heaven was opened and the Holy Ghost descended in bodily shape like a dove upon Him. What next? Think of his baptism, of those multitudes, of the voice from heaven. What shall He do now? Doubtless He will go into a trance; He shall have an ecstasy; He will be carried into the heaven opened above his head. What do we read? "Jesus, being full of the Holy Ghost, was led of the Spirit into the wilderness, being forty days tempted of the devil." This often takes place

THE DAY THAT FOLLOWS A CONVENTION.

We are led of the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil. Expect it. If you expect it, it will be no surprise to you, and you will be ready for it.

And what came to pass afterwards? We find it in a few words of the Gospel of Mark; it is so beautiful. "Immediately the Spirit driveth Him into the wilderness; and He was there forty days tempted of Satan; and was with the wild beasts; and the angels ministered unto Him." You need not be afraid of the wild beasts so long as the angels are there.

And when the temptation was over? We read in the Gospel of Luke: "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee...and He taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all." Then He arrived at Nazareth, his own place. No prophet has honour in his own country. And there, on the Sabbath day, He opened the book of the prophet Esaias, and found the place where it was written: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Then having closed the book and sat down, we are told that the eyes of the people were fastened on Him. And He began to say unto them: "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." So the Spirit of God was upon Him purposely that He should do this; and He did indeed heal the broken-hearted, preach the Gospel to the poor, and bring deliverance to the captives.

Did Christ always thus act and speak? Doubtless He did, and in no other way. We might think that after He was raised from the dead, the time would have come for Him to act independently of the Spirit. But what do we read in Acts i. 2? "After that He had given commandments unto the Apostles whom He had chosen." Ah, but I have left out three words. "After that He had, by the Holy Ghost, given commandments."

The Holy Ghost is God Himself taking possession of man. He took possession of the Man Christ Jesus altogether, in all his teachings, in all his doings, in all his sufferings, in his death (for it was through the Eternal Spirit that He offered Himself to God), in his resurrection; and after his resurrection, as we see, He was still the minister of the Holy Ghost.

Now then, what of us? The disciples came to Him after his resurrection, and they remembered that great revival at the time of John the Baptist. It was not so far back, only two and a-half or three years. They remembered that John said that Christ had come to take away the sins of the world, and also that He would baptize with the Holy Ghost. So they gathered round Him and asked when the Kingdom was to come back to Israel. Christ replied:—"John baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence." "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." "Power": The disciple who does not possess the Holy Ghost—nay, that is not the right way to put it—the Christian who is not possessed by the Holy Ghost, is powerless. You might as well have as a Christian without the Holy Ghost. There is nothing in him. He is like a gas-pipe without the gas, or the electric wire without the electricity.

There is not only power, but much besides. You remember that beautiful passage in Galatians (when we read it, it always seems as if we were in an orchard at springtime, with all the fruit trees in bloom around us): "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith, temperance." Power, it is the first thing that Christ mentions. Friends who observe us closely and are not lacking in sympathy for us, sometimes observe: "You fellows would not do much harm to anybody; but you do not seem to have much power." We should look to this. I know that the world's idea of power is not the right one; and there are Christians known to us who may not seem to the outward eye to be men of power, who are so, nevertheless, judging by the things they have done and are doing. But we must also admit that, speaking generally, and on the average, we are sadly lacking in power and in vigour. "Virtue," you know, means strength, and there is not enough virtue among us.

With this power there will be love, gentleness, goodness, meekness, faith, and so on. And notice that these are not the fruits of the Spirit; they are the fruit of the Spirit. That is to say, the Spirit bears this great variety of fruit. Who would not bear such fruit? If we would bear it, we must have the root in us.

What is the Spirit's place in the economy of redemption? Listen to this one word of Christ: "When He"—this is the more remarkable because the word "spirit" in the Greek is a neuter word—"when the Spirit of Truth is come, He will guide you into all truth, for He shall not speak of Himself, but whatsoever He shall hear that He shall speak." What Christ said about Himself, He said about the Spirit: "He shall glorify Me, for He shall receive of Mine and shall show it unto you." It seems it was needful for Christ to have returned into the glory, and to take his place there, waiting till the last enemy be overcome; that He should be there again, both in his Divinity and in his manhood, in order that the Holy Ghost, who is the Spirit of Christ, should be given. Else how can we understand this: "Out of him shall flow rivers of living water. This spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive. For the Holy Ghost was not yet come, because that Jesus was not yet glorified."

Jesus, then, being glorified, sends the Spirit; as the Father sent the Son, and revealed and gave Himself in the Son. "Let him that hath an ear hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." The Spirit is speaking; He is acting; He is ordering. You remember how it was in the Church at Antioch. "As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said: Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." How the Holy Ghost said it we are not told, but the Church knew it was the voice of the Holy Ghost, and they knew they were obeying the Holy Ghost. So they separated Barnabas and Saul—unto the Church? Nay, unto the Spirit. "And they, being sent forth by the Holy Ghost, departed, after the brethren had fasted and prayed and laid hands upon them."

THAT IS CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

What is your attitude toward the Holy Ghost? Have you understood that even as God has revealed Himself to you as the Father, and has given Himself for you in the Son, even so God, both Father and Son, gives Himself to you again, and in a more personal and more intimate fashion, in the Holy Ghost; that you belong to the Holy Ghost; that Christ has purchased and redeemed you through his blood in order that He may fill you with his Spirit and use you in his service? This simple question settles all questions: What is your attitude to the Holy Ghost? Are you listening to Him? Are you rejoicing in Him? Are you grieving Him? Are you resisting Him? Are you quenching Him? It is for each one to answer for himself. If a man will not listen to the Holy Ghost; if he will drive the Spirit away from his soul—let that man beware. For there is one sin, that we shall not try to define any more than the New Testament defines it, which is called "the sin against the Holy Ghost," that cannot be forgiven neither in this world nor in the world to come. Beware lest you sin against the Holy Ghost. If the Holy Ghost comes to you and speaks to you of the love of God, of the blood of Christ, believe in that love, believe in that blood, and be at peace. If the Holy Ghost leads you into the wilderness to be tempted, follow Him. You are safer in the wilderness among the wild beasts, with the Holy Ghost, than without the Holy Ghost in the world or in the church, enjoying peace and ease, and, as you think, safety.

Remember that the Holy Ghost is One who loves you; He seeks you; He is constantly expostulating with you. As I said, the Holy Ghost is not a thing or an influence. Such passages as those we have read, "Separate unto Me Barnabas and Saul," or "He shall speak of the things He shall hear," have no meaning whatever unless the Holy Ghost is a Person, just as the Son is a Person, and as the Father is a Person. He is not a guidance, but a Guide; not a comfort, but a Comforter. God is one; you cannot separate God into three pieces, but you can distinguish the three Persons, each having his distinct work in our salvation. One Person has descended so low that He was obedient unto the death of the cross. And one Person has gone lower still, and has taken up his abode in your heart and in my heart. What shall you do with Him? Treat Him as an enemy? No one here would do that. Treat Him as a Stranger, as a Friend, as a Visitor, as a Guest, giving Him the "best room," you being still the master of the house? Nay, none of these. He will not have it. Give Him the keys, all the keys, of the house. Tell Him "This is thy house. This heart belongs to Thee. This purse, this cheque-book, this banking account, this business, belongs to Thee. This household belongs to Thee."

Do this in sober earnest, and the Father shall reveal Himself to you, through the Son, in the Spirit, as the God of grace and the God of glory.

The late Rev. John Evans,
EGLWYSBACH.

ENGLISHMEN unacquainted with the inner life of the Welsh people can scarcely appreciate the place which the pulpit has occupied in their affections, and the control it has exercised over their lives, during the last two centuries. Throughout this long period of time, there has never failed a succession of noble, eloquent, devout, and evangelical preachers. They have been found in all denominations, not excepting the Established Church, which has not till quite recently laid sufficient importance—in the Principality as well as out of it—on the preaching of the Word. They have been listened to with eagerness of mind and hunger of soul, and they been the chief channels of the Divine grace, which has so largely moulded the Welsh character, and made it probably the most sensitive to religious influence in the world.

Among recent leading ministers of the Wesleyan Church in Wales, John Evans, Eglwysbach, whose sudden death in October last sent such a shock through the whole country, held a unique position. He was a natural orator, furnished with all the gifts that go to the making of a great speaker. His heart was firmly anchored to the central truths of the Christian faith from his early youth. And he had disciplined and exercised his remarkable powers, from the time he was still a boy, in the service of the Redeemer, with unfailing enthusiasm and boundless activity. He died in the plenitude of his power and influence, at the comparatively early age of 57, leaving a nation in sorrow at his sudden call from service to reward.

John Evans was born in September, 1840, near Llanrwst, in N. Wales. Like most Welsh boys of any gifts, he aspired from childhood to be a preacher, but it was not till after his conversion, at the age of sixteen, that this vague ambition took definite form, and a year or two later he began to preach. The vicar of the parish, Rev. Daniel Owen, gave him some assistance in his studies, and wished him to enter the Established Church, but did not press him to leave the fold in which he was brought up. John Evans became a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry in 1860, but his health broke down, and instead of pursuing his studies he received appointment as a hired local preacher in the Amlwch circuit. He was thus debarred from pursuing a college course, but this only stirred him to harder efforts after self-culture and knowledge, and he became an accomplished speaker, writer, and preacher in a few years, attending classes at King's College, London, and greatly distinguishing himself in his studies, especially in literary matters. He was always a great reader, and amassed a library of many thousands of books which he eagerly studied and assimilated. He had many of the excellencies and few of the faults of self-made men.

He laboured in nine or ten different circuits during his life, beginning with Amlwch, in Anglesea, and ending with the South Wales Mission, of which he was the leading spirit since 1893. Eleven years of his ministry were spent at different times in London, chiefly among the Welsh Churches, and nine in Liverpool. During the whole period he was incessant in his preaching labours, carrying on at the same time continual work as a lecturer, and writing many books, the most interesting being a Welsh "Life of Wesley," and some four volumes of sermons. All his books had a wide circulation, and exercised a deep influence. On two occasions he visited America—in 1873 and 1888—preaching during the latter visit as many as seventy sermons, with the result that two hundred converts were brought in. In spite of tempting offers from the Welsh Churches of America, he declined to settle in that country. On another occasion, when stationed at Bangor, he preached every night for a month, with the result that very many were convicted of sin, righteousness, and judgment. As an indication of his extraordinary energy and resourcefulness, we are told that in the same circuit, "instead of preaching at Horeb to a handful of people, he delivered a course of lectures on Monday evening during the winter evenings. The large lecture hall was frequently packed, and the penny collections at the close of between forty or fifty lectures amounted to about £40 during the three winters."

From photograph by Mr. J. Maclardy, Oswestry.

But his most enduring work was in connection with the Pontypridd Mission, where for the last five years he consecrated his ripest gifts to the service of his Master. It was a work of peculiar difficulty and responsibility, and its anxieties had doubtless much to do with the early break-up of his vigorous constitution. He never spared himself in the pulpit or out of it, but gave his hearers and readers the very best that was in him to give. This could not be continued beyond a certain point without serious drains on the vital energies of an overwrought man. He was obliged to take a prolonged rest a year ago, signs of serious heart-trouble having appeared. His friends sent him on a cruise to the Mediterranean, Egypt, and Palestine, in the hope that he would be permanently restored. He came back much refreshed, and recommenced his work with his usual ardour; but, suddenly and fatally, the old symptoms reappeared, and on Saturday, the 24th October, he suddenly passed away from failure of the heart's action.

A man so many-sided is hard to sum up. John Evans was an exceptional personality. His disposition was warm and affectionate, and in his domestic life he was serenely happy, his devoted and gifted wife being a true helpmeet to him in public as well as private. As a speaker, he was ready, fluent, and magnetic, his fancy was exuberant, and he had the artist's instinct for effect. He could hold the simple and the educated under the same spell, for while his was a cultured and well-stored mind, he was ever in close contact with the practical side of human life; and his sermons were full of help for the tempted, the fallen, the sorrowing, the perplexed. One of the gifts which he shared with many Welsh preachers was a singularly rich speaking voice, which he had trained to a wonderfully wide compass of modulation, and with which he could thrill vast audiences with the story of the Cross, and the appeal of Divine love. Humour, imagination, closely-reasoned argument, and warm-hearted appeal, chased each other throughout his impassioned discourses; and gathering up all the various elements of persuasion which he possessed, was that fascination of a unique personal gift which can be felt but cannot be described. Beneath and above all there was a passionate and unquestioning faith, which he had the secret of imparting to others to an extent granted only to the very few. Wales mourns one of her most typical and gifted sons; and it will be long ere his place can be adequately filled.

A Churchman's Notes.

LONDON'S loss will be Clifton's gain in the departure of the Rev. G. F. Head from Hampstead. Mr. Head succeeded the present Bishop of Exeter twelve years ago, and ministers to a large and attached congregation, who will sorely miss him. It is, however, a matter of real thankfulness that Mr. Nevile Sherbrooke will be followed at Clifton by a man so like-minded. Prayer should be offered concerning Mr. Head's successor at Hampstead.

It is to be feared that the Bishop of Chester's contribution to the Sabbath question will not solve the problem for those who believe in the eternal principle involved in the Fourth Commandment. Sunday games can hardly be seriously urged by any one at this time of day as a necessity, and the Bishop's words on this will unfortunately be used to justify further licence in the matter. In the desire for rest, let us not forget the other elements of a true Sabbath—worship and service.

A very welcome accession to the ranks of the London Evangelical clergy will shortly be made by the coming of the Rev. H. J. R. Marston to succeed Rev. Marcus Rainsford at Belgrave Chapel. After a distinguished career at Durham University, including a Fellowship, Mr. Marston was ordained to the ministry, and for several years has been rector of Icomb, Glos., while he has also been indefatigable as a lecturer for the Protestant cause. And all this has been accomplised in spite of the sad affliction of blindness. Himself the son of a prominent London clergyman of the last generation, he will worthily uphold the sacred traditions of Belgrave Chapel and Mr. Rainsford.

The correspondence of the Bishop of Southwell and the Church Association on the Ritualism at Sneinton in connection with the recent Church Congress is sad reading for all who love Reformation truth. When error is thus overlooked and ignored it is difficult to "take it patiently," especially when the Bishops often put forth their undoubted powers in the opposite direction, for preventing Evangelicals from fraternising with Nonconformist brethren in the common faith.

There is no Church Society worthy of more generous support than the Colonial and Continental Church Society. Apart from its valuable service in connection with continental chaplaincies, it is truly a missionary society in its colonial work. What our missionaries in Canada and the workers in Australia would do without the aid of this Society no one can say, while to the settlers in these lands it often provides the only means of grace within their reach.

Great Social Evils.

THE Church of Christ is bound to maintain an attitude untainted by compromise in regard to the evils which make shipwreck of so many lives. Certain great sins have beset and bound as with fetters of steel thousands of our fellow men and women, they must be faithfully rebuked, their fearful consequences must be plainly exposed. In view of the numberless lives that have been ruined and homes rendered unhappy, by gambling, intemperance, and social impurity, philanthropists may well see much promise in giving proper direction to the minds of the rising generation; and in view of the horrible ravages of these evils in the ranks of professing Christians, it becomes imperative for the Church of Christ to make her voice to be heard, and her influence to be felt in the promotion of honesty, sobriety, and purity of life.

The authorities of the Y.M.C.A. are to be commended for having organised demonstrations of men, at Exeter Hall, to consider these subjects. In our last issue we gave some account of the first meeting on Gambling. We now present notes on the two remaining gatherings. The subject on Tuesday evening was INTEMPERANCE.

There was a good assemblage of "men only," and Mr. George Spicer presided. In some opening words on the great evils which the meetings had been convened to combat, he spoke of intemperance as the most visible of the three, and deplored the fact that increased commercial prosperity had been attended by steady advance of the national drink bill. He appealed in forcible terms to his hearers to become abstainers for their own good and for the encouragement of weaker men and women. As men, as citizens, and as Christians, he called upon the audience to occupy the strong ground of total abstinence; and to young men in particular he spoke of the comparative ease of abstaining while as yet not confirmed in a bad habit or in bondage to a fearful and ruinous crave.

A telling address was delivered by Rev. Silas K. Hocking, whose direct and persuasive style was highly appreciated. Explaining the power of the drink custom, he spoke of the strange prejudices that prevailed a generation ago, when it was thought that strong drink was necessary to healthy development, and indispensable to working power. Now alcohol has been proved to be without food value, and therefore it must be regarded as merely a luxury. Mr. Hocking proceeded to deal with the luxury as showing, in fact, that strong drink robs a man of power of will, takes away moral strength, divests its victims of mental balance and judgment—these effects being attended by a deterioration of physical constitution and moral manhood. In conclusion, he spoke of the enslaving force of habit, and appealed to young men to keep clear of the drink, so as to be able to free others from the yoke of bondage.

Dr. Clifford insisted upon the need of a moral revival in England; and in view of prevailing drinking habits had a fear that the country was being tied to the tail of the brewer's dray. Tracing past efforts in fighting the drink, he said that our fathers and grandfathers used the economic argument, and urged total abstinence as a measure of thrift. Later on, the churches attacked the problem, and appealed to men individually to be clear of the evil and to have compassion upon their fellows. Now we have come to realise the claims of society and our duties as members one of another. With this as a point of departure, Dr. Clifford proceeded to impeach the drink traffic as a fraud upon society; it takes the best and gives nothing in return. Strong drink ruins men of all classes, and thus it wrongs society—interferes with a man's discharge of every duty, as a citizen, in regard to Greater Britain, and in relation to the world at large. Dr. Clifford explained how our colonies have one after another faced the difficulties of the situation so as to and he called upon young men to rise to their grave duty and great opportunity in the coming war against intemperance. The dissemination of sound ideas on the subject is the supreme need to-day, and as he looked forward to the conflict he regretted that he was not twenty but sixty years of age. In conclusion, the speaker asked his hearers to place themselves under the temperance banner, and to take up the work which has been laid down by Lees, Raper, Shirley, and other noble men who have recently passed to their rest.

In a few words Sir George Williams pressed home the appeal, and asked young men to sign the pledge forthwith.

IMPURITY OF LIFE.

The last meeting of the series was devoted to the question of impurity. Mr. F. W. Lawrence, who presided, opened the proceedings with a few earnest words on the theme, which, he said, might be approached from the medical, the social, and the spiritual aspects. From his own point of view and that of the Y.M.C.A., the spiritual aspect chiefly commended itself. The effect of this particular sin on immortal interests was the foremost consideration, and the Gospel of Christ is the one and only remedy against impurity of life.

Col. Seton Churchill, in a plain and practical address, set himself, in opening, to refute the cynical saying that purity is impossible for many young men. One of the most able and largely experienced army medical men—Surg.-Gen. Parke—was adduced as maintaining that purity of life is not only possible, but distinctly conducive to physical health. Similar testimony was cited from Sir Andrew Clark and other eminent physicians. While such evidence was of importance in addressing a large body of young men, the grand consideration after all was moral, and the true secret of personal purity was to be found in the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

After a touching appeal to the conscience, the speaker went on to warn his hearers in the most solemn terms against indulging secret imaginings of an impure tendency. The importance of pure thinking in this conflict with evil can scarcely be over-estimated. Our true wisdom is to follow the example of Joseph, and flee from temptation, such as impure thoughts, books, pictures, and similar evil suggestions. On these points the speaker solemnly and seriously warned young men by means of apt illustration, stirring exhortation, and earnest entreaty.

Mr. J. H. Putterill gave an earnest invitation to any perplexed as to how to escape from fetters already enthralling them, to avail themselves of the kindly counsel and aid of Christian men who have known themselves the power of temptation. Many fall from sheer lack of safe company and healthful interest in their leisure hours. He reminded such that there are, in the central parts of London, at least three Christian clubs—Exeter Hall, Aldersgate-street, and Gracechurch-street, where young men may enjoy pleasant company and recreation free from moral danger.

Dean Lefroy, in a stirring and finely sympathetic address, defined purity as having to do with thoughts and speech, as well as action. He denounced with terrible rhetoric the evil and depraved language with which many delight to poison the mind. Proceeding with his subject, he showed that, awful as the physical results of such sin may be, they are by no means to be compared with the bitter moral results infallibly wrought out in the inner nature. By the laws of habit, the chains of consequence, and the bonds of his own indulgence, he who yields to his passion becomes bound to a putrid and horribly corrupt nature. He maintained that if we want men to save the empire and bless the world, it must be those who have learned to shun the sin which takes away the understanding and will. The speaker next dealt with the popular fallacy that a man may lightly do what no woman could do without losing her good name. We cannot tolerate that there should be one law for a man and another for a woman. The body is God's masterpiece of creation, and he who realises this will not dare to tamper thoughtlessly with it.

After showing the dangerous results of morbid curiosity and evil companionship, Dr. Lefroy set forth in a thrilling passage the power of God to redeem and deliver a man from sin; for, as he confessed, he had no satisfactory hope of anyone unless by the indwelling power of the Holy Ghost. Brethren, he exclaimed, whatever you do, stand fast in the grace of God, and avoid as a cancer the code of morals which find so easy and flippant expression in too many quarters. Let every woman—as belonging to the so-called weaker sex—be honoured, guarded, and protected by those who claim the title of the stronger sex. And let all whom the enemy of man has involved in one of his most deadly snares, look to the crucified Christ, and he will find that He is able to deliver and to save all who come unto God by Him.

"Friendliness on Board Ship."

"A Constant Reader," adverting to a letter in a recent issue, writes:—

A couple of years ago I went out to India with two friends. We had a very interesting time on shipboard, an Orient liner to Colombo, and we made ourselves as agreeable as we could to all classes of passengers. Though we were not missionaries as is generally understood by the term, yet we were approached by some of the third-class passengers and asked if we would hold a meeting for singing and preaching on Sunday. We consented, and nearly 100 came, and the numbers increased as the service proceeded. We found there were some "Songs and Solos" on board, and several hymns were sung, led off by some young Irish lasses who were emigrating to Australia.

The next Sunday we were asked again, and this time there was a crowded audience, and one of my friends, an excellent speaker, gave the history of his life and conversion on shipboard while going to America as a lad. Those who know him, I might say, will also know that the world has greatly benefitted by it. In conversation, after the meeting, with some who attended it, I have not the least doubt several conversions were the result. On leaving the vessel at Colombo we received quite an ovation, some hundreds on the bulwarks of the vessel giving hearty cheers, which have not yet died away, as letters from Australia and New Zealand from some whose acquaintance we made on board tell us, and the last I had was to the effect that a young man of a rather wild sort, in whom we were greatly interested, had recently been converted.

Making the Harbour.

There are nights when the stars are hid,
  There are nights when we cannot sleep,
But lie in the trough of doubt,
  Like a ship on the restless deep.

There is naught but a bird's wild cry,
  That floats 'tween the mist and the wave,
There is naught but a plank and a breath
  That lies 'tween the soul and the grave.

But the spirit of morn is near,
  And the eye of faith can see
The wind-cloud rise in the west,
  And the harbour loom on the lee.

The Coalies—A most successful gathering in connection with the L.C.M. work among coalies and carmen was held in the Lecture Hall of the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Tuesday, 30th ult. Nearly 400 of the men, including a sprinkling of wives and children, sat down to tea. After which, a social meeting was held under the presidency of Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, supported by several of the coal merchants, including Messrs. A. H. Gamble (Rickett, Smith, and Co.), Adams, Hazell, and others; also by Messrs. H. Baston (South London Coalies' Mission), W. Prentice (North London ditto); and Messrs. Beaney, Brett, and Cannon, of the London City Mission. The hearty addresses of the chairman and other speakers were much appreciated and lustily cheered, while the quartettes and solos rendered by the missionaries were also cheered.

The Words of Jesus.

IT would seem as if it is quite needless to tell the busy young Bible Searchers who do the weekly questions so nicely and so successfully, to think much of the words of Jesus. And yet, unhappily, it is quite possible to be occupied in writing and reading, and having, and even speaking, the words of Christ without having them occupy their due place in our hearts and lives.

If you look at the solemn warning in Mark vii. 22, you will see what I mean. The Lord says there that "many"—not only a few, but MANY—will discover in one great Day that they have made a mistake. Now, would it not be sad and terrible if any of you dear young Searchers were included in the long list of that miserable "many." It is far less pleasant to speak words of warning to you than words of cheer and gladness, yet it is kinder to warn you—is it not?—than to run the risk of your forgetting to make sure that the words of Christ are in your hearts, as well as on your pens and your tongues.

The mother of Jesus, who heard so many of his words, was the very one of whom it is said that she kept them "in her heart"; and of another Mary we read that she "sat at Jesus' feet and heard his words." Our head is a very good place to keep the words of Jesus; but it is much better to have them in our heart. "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against Thee," was the Psalmist's confession, and there is nothing so sure to help us in the hour of temptation as the word of Christ in our hearts.

When Satan levelled his mighty weapons at our Saviour, it was from the Scriptures that the Sinless One drew, three times in succession, the sword of the Spirit. "It is written" was his chosen weapon of defence, as you know. Many of you are, I hope and believe, really lovers of the Bible, as well as Bible Searchers; and I pray that every one of you may be added to the number. This is the highest object of all, and I want you to aim at it yourselves.

Do you ever make a mistake in thinking too little of the separate sayings of Christ? Of course, every word is precious, and the best of all methods of reading the Bible is to read it straight through. Good Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, one of the holiest and happiest of men, has read it in this way "more than 100 times." But there are times when even a few words may be more helpful than a whole chapter or book. Think and pray over some simple command of Christ's until it has filled your mind. Above all, seek to obey it. To do something simply because the Lord Jesus tells us to do it will bring wonderful joy to the heart. It may be a very little thing indeed—a harsh word unspoken because Jesus says, "Be ye kind" (Eph. iv. 32); an unkind and unjust action on the part of others passed over, because Jesus says, "Forgive" (Mark xi. 25), or a worldly, selfish pleasure given up because Jesus says, "Follow thou Me" (John xxi. 22). Never mind how small it is! The least act of willing obedience will fill the heart with peace and joy, and will do much to help you love and understand your Bibles—far more than weeks of mere study would do, if it ended in study, instead of being translated into practice.

There is one little sentence in the first Epistle of John (chap. v. 3) which seems often overlooked, but it is true. I believe it with all my heart, and so will you if you act upon it. "His commandments are not grievous." The people who pull long faces about doing the will of God must be, I fear, those who have not actually tested the thing. Those who make it their daily habit and ambition to please the Lord will unite in one voice to say, "His commandments are NOT grievous." Remember that God is the infinitely great and holy God, and that his commandments must be given with a view to our well-being, although his glory is also concerned.

"In keeping of them there is great reward" (Ps. xix. 11). Take any word of Christ's and KEEP it; and I will undertake that you shall find "great reward" in keeping it. There may be a struggle at first, the flesh may rebel; but just as truly, for all that, "His commandments are NOT grievous," and every obedient child will find it so the end.

All thy words are mine,
Although they make me weep—
Infinitely tender,
Infinitely deep.

A dear Christian friend, raised up from what seemed almost certain to be a death-bed, told me that when apparently near the end she had no fear of death, no doubt as to her acceptance with God, "but my one grief was that I had not read the Bible more than I had." Probably there are thousands of dying Christians who have the same regret. Let us be amongst those of whom the Lord Jesus spoke those wondrous words, "Whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother" (Mark iii. 35). LUCY A. BENNETT.

Black Martha.

A FEW years ago, when I was in mission work in Jamaica, a request came one evening that I should visit a poor black woman who was very ill. I set off at once, accompanied by a friend. We soon found our way through bush and cactus to the little cottage where Martha, the sick woman, lay. Her face bore traces of want and suffering. But never shall I forget how it beamed and how her eyes glistened at the precious name of Jesus.

When asked about her suffering she said, "Yes, I do feel de pain great; I hab to roll about and toss, but He hab shown me de print ob de nails," and looking up, she again repeated, with emphasis, "He hab shown me de print ob de nails."

Laying her thin, emaciated hand upon her heart, she added, "I hab Jesus here, He hab made the house clean. When Satan come, and he do track me (referring to the custom of bloodhounds tracking the fugitive slave) I say, 'Him hab nuttin' to do wid me, me belong to Jesus—Jesus fight for me and keep me safe.'"

Seeing some children playing on the doorstep, I asked, "Are these your children?" Martha smiled and said, "No, me hab no children, me married to de Lord Jesus Christ, and it be for richer, for poorer." I reminded her of the crown of glory waiting for her, the mansions of glory prepared by our Lord. She pointed upwards and said, "Him just try my fait', Him will come for me," and her face, though worn and wasted, was bright and beautiful.

Only once again did I see dear Martha, when four of my boys and girls sang softly and sweetly some of her favourite hymns. Soon after the pearly gates were opened, and she entered in.

I love to think of this dear black sister whose faith was so severely tested, and whose rich experience of the Saviour's love made that little cottage glorious. Martha, when very young, had heard from the missionaries the "old, old story of Jesus and his love." Like Lydia, her heart was opened to receive her Lord. And now she is safe and happy in the "palace of the King," where there is no more pain or sorrow, but "fulness of joy and pleasures for evermore." Shall you and I meet her there?

"'Tis a goodly, pleasant land
That we pilgrims journey through,
And our Father's constant blessings
Fall around us like the dew;
But its sunshine and its beauty
To our hearts no joy can bring,
Like the splendours that await us,
In the palace of the King." A. M. B.

Personal.

One of my earliest nieces writes:—Dear Uncle Tom, I think the hundredth Bible Searcher is more interesting than any of the previous ones, so though I am only eleven years old I have done it all. I did the first one and have done every one since. I do not say they have all been correct. But I know it has done me good to do them, and am glad you ever thought of it."

DAISY PETRIDES.—Do you not think you could send me in better writing? If you ruled a margin and a line between each answer, your paper would look neater. WILLIE PETTER and VIOLET HOLFORD.—Send your paper by an earlier post another time. W. M. PENNY.—Many thanks for your kind enquiries for Uncle Ted, who is very well. KATHLEEN MCCLURE.—I was very pleased to have your interesting letter. The next competition will be at the beginning of 1898. So glad you are interested in foreign missions. BYRES HILL.—You many continue during the same number of questions until the end of this quarter, but if eligible for the prize competition you must enter for your actual age. Many thanks to my kind niece who has sent a bright quilt for a Hospital. As an idea to others this is made in scarlet and white squares, with a text marked in each white one, and the whole lined with scarlet. VICTOR AND WILLIE BELLERBY.—Unfortunately you did not write quite enough this week. We are such old friends now, that I should be sorry for you to get discouraged by not seeing your name in the list, and want to give the Searcher up. Perhaps if you give a little more care and time you will be successful in the future. HENRY BAILLIE.—Your writing was not up to your usual standard this week. ARTHUR C. B. NEATE.—Glad to find you are so interested in the Searcher and hope you will send regularly.

John's Message of Sin and Salvation.—1 John i. 5-10; ii. 1-6.

Golden Text.—"If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins."—1 John i. 9.

At the destruction of Jerusalem (A.D. 70) the Church in Jerusalem was scattered. John settled in Ephesus, and from that city he exercised a fatherly care over the churches of Asia Minor. Some time after the fall of Jerusalem—probably soon after—John wrote his account of the life and teaching of Jesus, and it is believed that the First Epistle was sent out with it by way of commentary. The churches seem to be growing careless both about morals and belief, and John in this epistle recalls them to Jesus Christ as the Ideal and Saviour. John begins, in our lesson, by stating his message; then draws inferences from it.

I. The Message: "God is Light" (5). Teacher should refer to the light of the sun, giving health to body, cheerfulness to the disposition, cleansing all foulness from the atmosphere, revealing all dirt and uncleanness. This God does in the spiritual world: knowledge and holiness reside in Him, and He diffuses this light upon the world.

II. It is our privilege to walk in that light. What the eyes are to the natural light, that the spirit is to the light of God. As we must hide ourselves in dungeons to get out of the sunlight, so we must hide behind our sin and selfishness to get out of God's light. If we have none of God's holiness in us, it is obvious that we are not enjoying the light—not having fellowship with Him. The man who delights to sit in meditation upon God's character will show it in his own conduct (6). More than that, in "Thy light we shall see light." We shall recognise it in others, and so shall have fellowship one with another (7). We should come out into God's presence, and let it cheer us, guide us, and give us spiritual health.

III. If we live in God's light we shall see our own sin. Peter said on one occasion, "Depart from me for I am a sinful man, O Lord." How did he realise it at that moment? Only because he was so near to Christ. A piece of note-paper with stains and dirt on it may look quite passable when standing by itself, but if you put it beside a piece that has just been taken out of the packet its uncleanness is revealed by comparison. A room which under ordinary circumstances looks perfectly clean, if a ray of sunlight darts into it we can see particles of dust in the air, and the furniture looks dingy compared with what it did before. So in God's light our sins come out in all their horror. If we foolishly say that we have no sin, either we are not in God's light or we are trying to deceive ourselves (8). Many people comfort themselves with the thought that they are as good as others around them, but they would not do that if they compared themselves with Christ. More than that, if we say there is no sin we are contradicting the light that reveals our sin (10). Men hide themselves from the light because they are afraid. "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil."

IV. Seeing our sins, we should confess them (9).—This is the only honest course to pursue. The teacher can illustrate this from the experience of every child. God is good, and delights to forgive when we repent and confess. He will cleanse us from all wrong deeds; he will lift the load from our hearts (7, 9) (ii. 1).

V. God's remedy for sin.—The light not only cleanses a foul, damp atmosphere, but keeps it clean. We do not want merely to be forgiven for the wrong we have done, but we want to be saved from doing that wrong in the future. God revealed his loving forgiveness through Jesus Christ, but if we have fellowship with Jesus we shall be strong to resist evil, as He was. Christ poured Himself out in the struggle with sin (2) in order that we might be saved from its fearful guilt and force.

VI. Our future obedience will be a sign to us and the world that we know God and have fellowship with Him (3).—Obedience is the only true language of love (4). The love of God is in us if we strive to do his will (5). The branch that is connected with the tree bears the same kind of fruit as the tree itself. So we, if we abide in Christ, shall walk as Christ walked (6).

London's Great Fire.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

I HAD been giving the address at the Noon Prayer Meeting, Aldersgate-street, and on coming out found myself face to face with the beginning of London's greatest fire since 1666. We watched it leap from warehouse to warehouse, until whole streets were ablaze, and acres of flame licked up everything that came in their way.

It was an awful sight to see the roads spanned with triumphal arches of fire, and for hours after we seemed to hear nothing but the crashing of glass, the exploding of gas, and the thuds of falling girders and masonry; and above all came the Divine voice, "Wickedness burneth as the fire" (Isa. ix. 18).

A small beginning—such is wickedness; but once started in the world, even a flood did not stop it. On it burned, and is still burning.

Who would have believed that such a fire as this in the City could have occurred at noon, in the heart of London, and with fire hydrants at every corner? And who would think of wickedness burning as it does in the face of noonday Gospel light?

Oh, the precious things destroyed by the flames! the value reaching to millions: but what of the millions of souls ruined through sin? If one soul be worth worlds, who will estimate the destruction wrought by wickedness? How helpless everyone appeared! The heat alone driving people back where they could only stand and feel their weakness.

"Can I lock up my premises?" asked one gentleman of a fireman.

"If you do, the fire will soon open them, I'm afraid," was the reply; for, like the rats of old, the flames came

> In at the window, and in at the door:
> Down from the ceiling, and up through the floor.

Nothing seemed to stop them. "Wickedness burneth as the fire" in this respect. No resolution, no effort, no bars and bolts, no eloquence, not even tears can quench the flames.

But there was a power that could and would cope with "London's biggest blaze." When we saw the captain of the Fire Brigade came up, we felt something was going to be done. And when Jesus undertook to fight the flames of sin, victory was sure.

But the firemen had a tough job. We saw some get to work in a warehouse backing into the heart of the fire. They had their hose in the first floor. The roof took fire: then the top-floor; but they kept their face to the foe. The flames descended to the next floor, right over their heads. Timid ones cried, "Come out." But they held on and conquered. When Christ was fighting the flames of sin, He sweat as it were great drops of blood, and we could almost fancy the angels cried, "Come back, good Lord! Come back, and leave the world to perish!" But He was true.

When both sides of Jewin-street were a white, glowing mass, and the fire-king seemed setting up his throne in triumph, the large and central warehouses fell with a fearful crash. That downfall seemed to take the heart out of the fire. Believer, when Christ died, He took the heart out of sin. Close in with Him, and victory is sure; but we must only fight the fire in his way.

The fire-engines had to be connected with the great water main, taking in, and then giving out: then, thus connected, the firemen, branch in hand, were able to win the awful battle, not by anything in themselves, but by what they received.

And the supply never failed. Talking to one who had charge of a steamer that day, I found his engine alone threw 236,390 gallons. Thank God, the river of the water of life will not fail us: nor will the water of the Divine Word. By these, and these only, shall we subdue the wickedness which burneth as the fire.

When the fierceness of the fight was passed, we began to think of refreshments for the tired firemen. So the ladies at "The Welcome" made coffee and tea, and we had the pleasure of taking it to those who could not leave their post, many of whom had not tasted food since breakfast.

And there are those fighting the fire of sin who want cheer. Shall we not give it? Since Christ Himself cries, "Give me to drink." Who will pour Him from a thankful heart a cup of gratitude?

But the fire was not out, and there were flames that baffled all attempts to extinguish them, and that if extinguished were ready to burst up again. The secret was the unseen gas coming up from beneath. Alas, we have a parallel to this in the gas of the old nature, still escaping, and ready to do mischief. What need of prayer and watchfulness, and the stand-pipes of continually inpouring grace! The evil will be cut off at the main some day.

And what of the insurance? All will be put right. Sin has made fearful havoc; but to the believer every loss shall be made good, and more than good, because we are:—

> Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat.
> Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.
> —2 Peter iii. 12, 13.

Working Boys' Homes.

The report of the Homes for Working Boys in London states that about half of the number of boys now living in the Homes came from institutions, and these boys are less able to take care of themselves in a large city than those who have been living in their own homes. Then there is the boy from the country village who knows nothing of town life and its manifold temptations. "There have only been two important events in the history of the Homes during 1896-7. The first of these was the removal of Hanbury House in consequence of the building in Dorchester-place having been acquired by the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company. Rev. G. L. Harding was anxious to give up his Home for Boys in Warwick-road, Maida-hill, and was willing to assign the lease of the building for a very small consideration. The second event was the triennial festival of the Home, in January, 1897, when a dinner was given to the 350 boys of the Homes at St. Martin's Town-hall. The Duke of Fife was in the chair, and excellent addresses were given by the American Ambassador (Mr. T. F. Bayard), Mr. Quintin Hogg, and others."

Particulars follow of the seven Homes—Pelham House, 30, Spital-square, Bishopsgate, E.; Hanbury House, 63, Warwick-road, Maida Hill, W.; Haddo House, 88, Blackfriars-road, S.E.; Rossie House, 35, Lamb's Conduit-street, W.C.; Howard House, 14, Fournier-street, Spitalfields, E.; Tyndale House, 29, Whitehead's-grove, Chelsea. S.W.; and Macgregor House, 9, Wine Office.court, Fleet-street, E.C. The methods used for the spiritual welfare of the boys differ according to the varied circumstances of each Home. The superintendents have to watch the tendencies of the boys as they are admitted, and lead them to join with others in becoming members of the Scripture Union, Bible-class, or other religious effort. Six thousand and eighty seven boys have now passed through these Homes. During the year there has been a larger number of lads than usual who have left the Homes decided Christians. The contrast with their former state is very marked.

Attention is also given to educational and recreational efforts. The Homes may be visited any day or evening. The financial statement shows that funds are at present very greatly needed. The treasurer and hon. secretary is Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, 12, Buckingham-street, Strand, W.C.

The Christmas Letter Mission.—The organising secretary of this mission would be grateful to all kind helpers who may be thinking of distributing letters this Christmas, if they would first communicate with their own county secretary, whose names can be obtained from Miss E. Thornton, Eastfield House, Broxbourne, Herts.

A Boys' Lifeguard Brigade.—The minister of the Congregational Church, Colne, Lancashire, has done a good thing by starting a Boys' Lifeguard Brigade. The title is happy and the work good; the motto is "I serve." There is ambulance drill, fire drill, and life-saving (from drowning) drill. The boys have a uniform, consisting of cap and belt, each bearing the symbol of a red cross. The Brigade meets every night, its work being "to honour life, to help life, and to save life." In addition to drill, there are games, gymnastics, talks on health, a Bible class, and "many other things that boys like." Members must be above the age of twelve. We commend this new attempt to interest and retain Sunday-school boys in connection with the churches that have cared for them, especially as it is free from the militarism which affects so many branches of the Boys' Brigade. Information may be obtained from Mr. P. S. Davies, Norfolk-street, Colne.

The Stepney Crèche.

FOR the twenty-sixth time the neat and well-prepared "Crèche Annual" makes its appearance. It now comes in a somewhat attenuated form, compared with its contents in the palmy days of the late founder, Mrs. Hilton. She had the gift of treasuring up many pretty incidents of child-life and clothing them in terms of romance. The statement this year, prepared by the treasurer and acting responsible superintendent, Mr. J. Hilton, has nevertheless a real and beautiful interest, enhanced by the steady devotion to the furtherance of the good work shown by some of Mrs. Hilton's near relatives. With many other interests to engross their attention, they have caught the compassionate spirit of their departed mother, and the necessities of these East London infants are well ministered to at their hands, with the loving co-operation of the resident nurses.

Mr. Hilton had hoped ere now to have concluded arrangements for the satisfactory transference of the Crèche work in this poor neighbourhood to other hands, but as yet his efforts have not come to fruition. He is doing his best to circumscribe the responsibility of the institution, while fully maintaining its efficiency. He says:—

The need of the Crèche in the neighbourhood is still very great; this is evidenced by the marked increase in the number of children received during the past year. Although a large proportion of the mothers are widows, who can only pay a penny a day, the "mothers' pence" have amounted to no less than £64. The loving care of the nurses quite wins the hearts of the dear infants. Were it not for the Crèche, many poor families would be forced to find refuge in the workhouse.

These simple statements speak volumes not only as to conditions of the social struggle that goes on in districts like Stepney, but as to the priceless boon which such a centre of sisterly sympathy and help is to those forlorn mothers on whom life's burden rests so heavily. Surely no kind of work appeals more powerfully to the universal heart than successful efforts of this sort to preserve to both mothers and children the uplifting influences of family life, however humble the home may be.

The children in the Home are being placed in suitable hands as opportunities offer, so that the Crèche work pure and simple will remain to be upheld. Our readers, we are thankful to say, have always shown a lively and practical interest in this little oasis of real Christianity planted in the heart of London's poverty, and we hope their solicitude will, if possible, increase now that its great-hearted founder has been promoted to heavenly service. Friends may secure copies of the report from the hon. secretary, Mrs. J. A. Hilton, Shore House, Shore-road, South Hackney, London, N. The Crèche is in Stepney-causeway, E.

Home for Working Girls.

ALTHOUGH the Homes have been crowded with inmates during the past year, and although the practical outcome of the efforts of my co-workers has been more than ever gratifying, the year has been one of anxiety. The Homes have suffered because of the special "Jubilee" appeals, and not a few friends have frankly written that the many local claims, as well as those of a more general character, have compelled them regretfully to withhold their accustomed help. As the Homes have no reserve or funded property, it is incumbent upon me now to do my utmost towards the gathering in of the £1750 required.

I am sometimes led to fear that this "helpful ministry" in assisting virtuous but poor working girls and young women is not sufficiently esteemed, and yet its importance in these drifting days is illimitable. A lengthened experience of London life has more than ever convinced me of its paramount value in effecting the moral, social, and spiritual welfare of the two thousand young people who live in the Homes in the course of every twelve months, most of whom do not fail to express their gratitude for all that is done for them.—Yours, etc.,

JOHN SHRIMPTON.

The National Refuges.—A grant of one hundred guineas has been received by the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, from the Corporation of the City of London. This makes £1445 contributed by the Corporation to these Refuges during the past twenty-one years. The grant benefits also the popular training-ships Arethusa and Chichester, which are important branches of the society.

"Have You Received Him?"

(See Matt. xviii. 5.)

BY T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S., ED.

"MY Lord knoweth that the children are tender," urged Jacob of old to the brother whom he had wronged and whom he sought to propitiate. Applied to the bespattered fringes of our great city populations, the unwanted Waifs and Wastrels whom the surging tide of life all around us floats upon its bosom, how pathetically true is the description! The children of the slums are tender, too tender to withstand the storms that toss them hither and thither, too tender to escape unpolluted the perils of their environment. They appeal by their very helplessness to every brave, strong heart around them for succour, and by the sadness of their lot they cry aloud to every happy parent of beloved and cared-for children to extend to those poor outcasts the love and sympathy which alone can save and bless them. Let the following three examples from my case-book enforce and illustrate HIS words, who once said, "Whoso receiveth one such little one in My Name receiveth Me":—

TWO WARWICKSHIRE WAIFS, AGED SEVEN AND FIVE.

Mary (aged seven) and Jane (aged five) are two little girls from Warwickshire. They have no father, and the mother has recently died. The story, if I dared to tell it, would be found to be as pathetic as any I have ever recorded, but for many wise reasons I can only show the readers of THE CHRISTIAN the faces of these little Warwickshire waifs, and ask that many a heart may be lifted up in sympathy and prayer on their behalf. They have a dark, dark past behind them I pray that God will brighten their future!

LITTLE SIMEON, TWELVE MONTHS OLD.

Little Simeon is only twelve months old. His mother was dying of consumption when I received him, and his father has already died of the same disease in Highgate Infirmary. A dear servant of our Lord who visits workhouses was constrained to minister to this poor soul, and he obtained for the dying woman better food, and a prospect of a shelter for three of the older children. But she besought me to admit little Simeon, whom no one was willing to have. Of course I complied. Two or three days afterwards the poor mother died. Now little Simeon has no one in the world to look to for help except that Home which sheltered him in the hour of his deepest need.

Phœbe Louth is only four years old. Some people, now-a-days, talk as if we were living in the millennial age, and as if recent changes of the law in regard to the protection of children were enough of themselves to work out the redemption of a whole class! Ah, well, the case of poor Phœbe would convince any one who inquired into it of the fallacy of such a notion! I should not like in these pages even to try to describe the conditions from which poor wee Phœbe was rescued. "It is a shame," said the apostle, "even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret," and I dare not draw aside the curtain that conceals the horrible past of this poor waif from the public view. Thank God that it is past, and that the future for little Phœbe may be as bright as for any of the happy children whose parents read these pages!

As for me, I thank God every day for the high honour put upon me of being, as it were, his hands to lift out and lift up the "feeble children" from the "horrible pit" of their condition. By his grace many young feet have been set upon THE ROCK, and a new song put in their mouths. But—oh, the pity of it!—hundreds, and even thousands of little feet are being thrust down the steep incline with none to save them or lead them aright. Dear reader of THE CHRISTIAN, have you received Christ? You answer, Yes. But stop a moment; look once more at Matt. xviii. 5, and ask yourself, perhaps for the first time in your life, Have you received Him in the person of some little child who may perish without your aid? That is a question to which I await your reply!

Dudfield Memorial Hall.—The opening ceremony of the new Dudfield Memorial Hall (presented by Mrs. Charlotte Dudfield, at a cost of £1000), and new class-rooms, in connection with the Lansdowne-place Ragged School, Borough, S.E., was held on Monday night. Mr. Alldis read a statement as to the recent work of the Mission, in which he said that the new hall would seat 150 adults, and the three new class-rooms would cost the school management £1000, towards which they had already received £500. After a few words from Major James Sh[illegible]field (on behalf of Mrs. Dudfield), Rev. Thomas Spurgeon cheerily addressed the meeting. Mr. John Wilson (who has been connected with the work for nearly fifty years) then declared the hall open "for the preaching of the Gospel to the old and the young, and to the very poor, but not to the rich." Later a public meeting was held, the speakers including Revs. F. B. Meyer and F. James, Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, and others.

The Evangelistic Field.

REV. W. HAY AITKEN AT KING'S LANGLEY.

A deeply interesting and most encouraging mission, held in this village by Rev. W. Hay Aitken, assisted by Rev. Mr. Atkinson, who took the work amongst the children, and Mrs. Crouch, who helped with the women, was brought to a close on Monday, November 29. King's Langley is only a country place, with a population of not much above a thousand souls, but from the first the congregations have been, for the size of the place, very large, and the interest has seemed to deepen from day to day. On the afternoon of the third Sunday of the mission, in spite of the very unfavourable state of the weather, it seemed as if almost all the men of the place were gathered together at the service for men only, when a deep impression seemed to be made. Of Mr. Aitken's after-meetings, it must be confessed, the people of Langley were rather shy, but he found other ways of getting into personal contact with them, notably the distribution of memorial cards, to which he devoted a large amount of pains all through the second week of the mission, and, so far as could be judged from outward professions, the spiritual results were very satisfactory. The thanksgiving service on the last night is one that will not soon be forgotten. Numbers came forward one by one for their memorial cards, and many of them testified that this had been a turning-point in their lives. Earnest prayer is asked that such may be "kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation."

MRS. BAEYERTZ IN LIVERPOOL.

A remarkable work of God has been going on at Edge Hill Congregational Church during the last fortnight, through a mission conducted by Mrs. E. L. Baeyertz, who night after night has been preaching the Gospel with power and blessing to very large and deeply interested congregations.

At times the power attending the Word has been simply overwhelming, and greater than anything that I have ever experienced in my life. During the mission about 400 have given in their names as having accepted Christ, many of my own congregation being amongst the number. The Bible-readings, conducted every afternoon by Mrs. Baeyertz, have been a most successful and blessed feature of the mission; after listening to the intensely spiritual and lucid exposition of the Word in these afternoon gatherings the Bible has practically become a new book to many of the people, and they have entered into a deeper, richer, fuller life of trust in God, and of personal holiness as the result. It is not too much to say that Mrs. Baeyertz is creating a marvellous impression in Liverpool, many people coming for miles to hear her at every service. We give God all the glory, and pray that our sister may be still more abundantly owned and blessed of God in her work in the future. E. G. King.

MR. JOSIAH NIX IN BRISTOL.

The Old Market-street Bible-class, Bristol, has had a fruitful visit from Mr. Josiah Nix, who came on Saturday, Nov. 20, and met a band of men and women prepared to co-operate with him in every possible way. Ten days previously the United Mission, arranged by the Free Church Council, had been concluded, so that the workers were in fine working form. Mr. Nix was thus enabled at once to put in the sickle, and commenced reaping right away. About 150 entered the inquiry rooms. These results may be considered very good from a field which is constantly being reaped; but the time was all too short, for many were still lingering round the verge. It was grand to see brothers bring brothers; companions, saved one night, bringing companions the next night; to see a boy bringing his mother, and kneeling beside her till she had found the same Saviour he had; to see a man who before got his living by gambling, having given it up, and found the Saviour, bringing, in one service, into the inquiry room his wife, his sister, and his brother's wife. One striking feature was the number of temperance pledges signed—more than 400. On Wednesday afternoon the shop assistants of the city were invited to an "At Home," and after a short address from Mr. Nix, over one hundred signed the pledge. Another remarkable service was the midnight meeting held on the Thursday night; these meetings are popular in Bristol, and are amongst the most successful evangelistic services. The one held during this mission was no exception. The Bible-reading on the Wednesday was most helpful, and the second Sunday morning service was one never to be forgotten; a large number of Christians entered the inquiry-rooms to give themselves fully to God.

GIPSY SMITH IN LAMBETH.

From 1000 to 1500 people have been attending night after night during last week the ministry of Gipsy Smith, in the large hall of the new Lambeth Baths. The mission was held under the auspices of the South London Evangelical Free Church Council. It had been arranged on short notice—Mr. Smith having these few days vacant, and the Lambeth workers resolved to fill them up. To this was due the fact that many of the ministers had engagements made long before, the fulfilling of which prevented their attending as often as it was in their hearts to do. The services proved full of interest. The presence of the Lord was felt, and on some occasions particularly so, as, with earnest simplicity, the evangelist declared the love of God, for whom he came as an ambassador. On the Sundays the hall was crowded from floor to gallery. Besides the cases noted during the mission, it is fully expected that permanent fruit will be found during the process of "following up" which the local churches have undertaken.

MR. MOODY IN WINNIPEG.

Some newspaper notices of Mr. Moody's opening meetings in Winnipeg, Manitoba, have reached us, and they awaken recollections of many a memorable scene in our own land. The news sheets across the Atlantic are thoroughly up-to-date in the matter of illustration; the Winnipeg artist has succeeded admirably in fixing the evangelist in some of his characteristic attitudes, thus helping distant readers the better to realise the man and the delivery of his message.

Mr. Moody had scarcely got to his hotel in Winnipeg when he became the prey of the inevitable interviewer. The evangelist seems now rather to welcome the attentions of these inquisitive gentlemen; they afford him an excellent opportunity of pressing home on the public mind certain important facts and aspects of truth by which he sets high store. The Winnipeg man rather overstepped the limits of discretion, we think, when he asked Mr. Moody how long it would take to evangelise the United States, and the world. The answer, however, was cautious enough. He said:—

> Not long if we only do our duty. If Bryan could rouse the whole nation in a few months by going from State to State talking silver and gold, what ought not sixty thousand preachers to do? Then a large portion of the wealth of the United States is in the hands of Christian men. See how soon the world could be evangelised if we only set about it in the right way.

Mr. Moody defended his present plan of seeking first to rouse the Churches and set them to do their own work in carrying the Gospel to the unsaved around them; he reiterated the clamant necessity of the pulpit going back from speculative and frivolous talk to the preaching of the Evangelical Gospel, and generally advanced the positions set forth by him in a recent interview in Eastern Canada, which was pretty fully reproduced in our columns. In his opening meetings in the Winnipeg rink, to audiences of over 4000 people, he addressed Christians on the necessary qualifications for effective service and on the work of the Holy Spirit; while the New Birth was expounded to the general multitude as a primal necessity. Mr. J. A. Burke (Mr. McNeill's fellow-worker in the round-the-world tour) accompanies Mr. Moody as solo singer and leader of the praise.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

The Brothers Weaver have concluded a very encouraging mission in Grangemouth, under the auspices of all the ministers of the town. The fact that all the churches have been united in the special effort has been an interesting feature in the work. The ministers opened the meetings in turn each night. No evangelistic meetings have ever been so largely attended in Grangemouth, and the results connected with the visit of our brethren have been such as to fill our hearts with thanksgiving to God. Considerably over 100 have given in their names as having decided for Christ during the mission. Their visit has also been the means of much refreshing to God's people. G. W. C.

Mr. James Wharton has been conducting special services for five weeks at Bouler-street Gospel Hall, Liverpool. Much good has been the result; souls have been saved, and saints stirred up.

A most successful eight days' mission has been held by Mr. Walter Moreland, at Weston-street Mission Hall, Bermondsey. Neglectors of the house of God have been reached and sinners saved.

A ten days' mission has been conducted at Aberdare by Mr. Raymond Preston. The attendances rapidly increased; so great was the crowd night after night that the last two meetings had to be held in a large Welsh Independent chapel.

Rev. Thomas Cook has held an eight days' mission at Bath-road, Swindon. The services were well attended and fruitful. The special afternoon services for "men only," "women only," and for the deepening of the spiritual life were attended by several hundreds. Numbers of all ages came forward as inquirers.

A fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society, has been held in the Baptist Church (Rev. A. J. Payne, pastor), Earlsfield, S.W. Some have professed decision, and it is hoped that many have been stirred up to earnest inquiry. The interest in the meetings was well sustained.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has closed a successful ten days' mission at Church-road, Willesden. The meetings have been well attended, and on Sunday afternoons the evangelist has conducted special services for men only. Many who seldom, if ever, attend any place of worship have been present. Much blessing has followed the effort, and the evangelist has been permitted to see fruit for his labours. Mr. Bradlaugh commences next Sunday a mission at Sutton-in-Ashfield.

For the past month a series of special evangelistic meetings for young men only have been held every night in the new buildings of the Belfast Y.M.C.A. Mr. D. A. Black gave an address each evening. From the first the meetings were largely attended, until at the close the fine rooms were crowded each night. A very considerable number professed to decide for Christ.

Rev. R. Balgarnie has been conducting an eight days' mission at Union Church, Putney.

A special mission has been held at the People's Mission, Cockington, Torquay, by Mr. Frank Penfold. The attendance has been good, and a great impression has been made.

Mr. Charles Inglis has concluded a month's mission at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, where his labours have been attended with much blessing. This evangelist is always welcomed at the "Castle," not only as a preacher, but as a teacher; and his addresses to Christians have been very helpful and stimulating—notably his expositions of John xvii. He also conducted services among the boys of Dr. Barnardo's Homes at Stepney Causeway, and at the Girls' Village Homes, Ilford.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr recently conducted an eight days' mission for Mr. Richard Cadbury and the workers at the Friends' Mission Hall, Highgate-street, Birmingham. The meetings were crowded. Numbers entered the inquiry room, and 100 signed the temperance pledge. A great blessing attended the Bible readings. Mr. Parr conducted services at dinner hour and tea time in the workshops and factories, with blessed results.

Rev. E. Payson Hammond has been holding meetings in various parts of Waterbury, Conn. The meetings for the young were crowded, and deep interest was manifested. Large numbers professed conversion. Christians and ministers present entered into the work and rejoiced in it. Those who told the workers of their hope in Christ were allowed to gather around the organ in a young converts' meeting. Much prayer had been offered for this service, and all present felt that it had been answered. The Y.M.C.A. meeting was also well filled with young men, some of whom professed conversion.

Rev. John McNeill's forthcoming engagements are:—Hawick, Dec. 12 to 24; London, from Jan 14, 1898. Fortnightly missions: 1, Metropolitan Tabernacle; 2, Westminster Chapel. (Further details will appear shortly).

The Weaver Brothers, Cardiff, until Dec. 10; Nelson (Lancs.), Dec. 12-23.

Mr. Charles Inglis, at West Norwood, Dec. 5-14.

Mr. E. P. Telford, Vernon Chapel, King Cross-road, Dec. 5-19.

Mr. Monro Collings, at Hildenboro', Dec. 9; Leigh Chapel, Tonbridge, Dec. 12-20.

Mr. W. R. Lane, at Worcester, Dec. 5-12.

Gipsy Smith, Stafford, Dec. 12-20; Newcastle, Jan. 8-17; Banbury, 22-31.

Mr. George Clarke, Wigan, Dec. 5-20.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for this month:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Dec. 4-20, St. Mary's, Gateshead; Rev. W. Bryan-Brown, Dec. 4-14, Little Munden, Ware; Rev. J. P. Cushing, Dec. 3-13, St. Mark's, Ballysillan, Belfast; Rev. James Stephens, Dec. 3-20, St. Mary's, Gateshead; Rev. R. Wood-Samuel, Dec. 4-14, St. Silas', Liverpool.

Scotland

RUTHERGLEN CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.

One of the largest and most interesting spheres of Christian labour in Scotland is to be found at the Christian Institute, Rutherglen. For nearly a quarter of a century the Messrs. Rodger (three brothers) have been actively engaged in various forms of the Lord's service in this ancient burgh. The work has developed in a very remarkable way, until now the Institute is one of the busiest hives of beneficent effort in our country.

The chemical works of Messrs. James and John White are situated in Rutherglen, and they employ a large number of men. Many of the heads of departments have, through the instrumentality of this work, been brought to the Saviour; and Lord Overtoun, who is the head of the firm, was not slow to recognise the good that was being done so near his works. About ten years ago he placed the means at the disposal of the workers for erecting a hall and reading-room. Although the hall was capable of seating about one thousand people, it was soon found to be too small for the crowds that were attending the services. Two years ago considerable extensions were made to the first structure, and now there is a hall capable of seating sixteen hundred people. The acoustics are perfect, and there are so many exits that a large audience can find its way into the street in about three minutes.

One of the features of the hall is the lantern arrangements. A small box is placed in the front of the gallery, and the wall behind the platform is painted white. The lantern is brought into operation at many of the meetings, and has proved most attractive. The evangelistic meeting on Sabbath evening is attended by about 1,400 persons, and during the long history of this meeting it has been fruitful in conversions. Growing out of this service there are Bible classes, Sabbath schools, boys' brigade, Christian endeavour, mothers' meeting, and a service for children on Sabbath forenoons, attended by nearly a thousand young people. Every Sabbath morning large and vigorous young men's and young women's Christian associations meet in the lesser halls. On Saturday evenings during the winter months limelight lectures are given, attracting crowded audiences, while during the summer months an interesting work is carried on in the open-air.

The Penny Savings Bank is the largest in and around Glasgow, having between four and five hundred transactions each night. The friends in Rutherglen are much interested in foreign missionary work, and make it a prominent feature at many of their meetings. They raise considerable sums of money for work in different parts of the mission field.

This great and interesting work is entirely carried on by volunteers, and with very little expense. The collections at the various meetings are almost sufficient to meet the expenditure necessarily incurred. The whole is an object lesson which Christian workers in many towns with a large industrial population might well imitate. W. M. O.

Irish Notes.

Arrangements have been made for Mr. James B. Wookey (deputation secretary of Dr. Barnardo's Homes) to conduct a ten days' mission in Belfast, commencing in January next, under the auspices of the Central Y.M.C.A. of that city. Mr. Wookey will afterwards visit the principal cities and towns of Ireland with a group of musical boys, to plead the cause of the children under the care of Dr. Barnardo.

The third Irish Students' Christian Conference, in connection with British College Christian Union, will be held December 17 to 20, in Dublin. A public meeting will be held on Friday, 17th, in the Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey-street, at 8 p.m., when accounts will be given of the work of the World's Student Christian Federation, the British College Christian Union, and the Student Volunteer Missionary Union.

Cape Town.—Mrs. Cleghorn has now returned to her post as president of the Y.W.C.A. here. Mrs. Andrew Murray presided at a meeting of welcome, at which a large number of members were present. It is hoped that shortly the Y.W.C.A. may be able to move into more commodious premises, of which they stand greatly in need.

Woman's Mission to Women.

Twenty agents are working in connection with the Female Mission to the Fallen and Female Aid Society. These missionaries visit the streets at night, "seeking the lost" and distributing tracts containing an affectionate invitation to call upon the missionary. Thousands of these tracts have been printed and distributed, and they have been the means of bringing many an erring young woman under the influence of the Mission.

The hospitals and workhouses and the prisons and police-cells are visited, and also the houses where these young women live. Forty-three cases of attempted suicide were dealt with last year, besides other cases sent by the magistrates of the various metropolitan police-courts, to whom the Mission is well known.

Homes are provided for young women from all parts of the kingdom. 30,789 women have received help from the Mission since it was established in 1858. No woman is placed in an institution till the mistress has been made acquainted with the particulars of the case.

The annual expenditure of the Mission is about £3000. The annual subscriptions amount to £1121; a sum of £1879 has therefore to be raised for the most part by this appeal. The work has been extended during the past year, and mission houses, with a staff of workers, are now established in each of the following districts:—East London, West London, South London, Richmond, and Greenwich. Missionaries are also located in Islington, North-west London, Clapham, and the Borough; and the whole of the metropolis is regularly visited. Cases from the country are met at the railway termini, arrangements in the first instance being usually made by post. The annual report, containing interesting details of the work, and giving many cheering incidents, will be sent on application to the secretary, 32, Charing-cross, S.W.

The Week of Universal Prayer.

The Evangelical Alliance has again issued its invitation for the Week of Universal Prayer at the commencement of the year (January 2-9, 1898). This annual observance is growingly appreciated in all parts of the world, and it is worthy of note that in the week commencing with the first Sunday in each new year the Christian churches of the world unite in prayer for the many common objects agreed upon beforehand. Thus there are prayers offered for the same objects in divers lands and in a great variety of languages. The native Christians in many of the mission fields and in the scattered islands of the Pacific, as well as in the Dark Continent, unite with their more favoured brethren in other parts of the world in this annual week of prayer.

The outline of subjects for prayer for the various days of the week include—Confession and Thanksgiving; the Church Universal; Nations and their Rulers; Families and Schools; Foreign Missions; Home Missions and the Jews. The full programme, with other particulars, issued by the Council of the Evangelical Alliance, may be had of the general secretary, 7, Adam-street, Strand, London.

Requests for Prayer.

For a three weeks' mission at the Bible Christian Chapel, Lanner, Redruth, Cornwall, to be conducted by Mr. Clegg.

That blessing may rest upon the monthly gathering for the deepening of spiritual life at Ipswich, Dec. 15th.

For crusade meetings of men, against "Gambling, Drink, and Impurity," Dec. 14, 15, and 16, in the Queen's Hall, W.

That great blessing may result from the special meetings being held this week, Dec. 5 to 12 inclusive, in Friends' Meeting House, Woburn Sands.

Praise.

For blessing to many souls during a recent mission that was held in Norwich.

Bristol.—The annual reunion of the athletic clubs of the Bristol Y.M.C.A. was held under the presidency of Mr. S. W. Godwin. It was stated that the past season of the cricket team had been the most successful on record.

Obituary.

MISS JEAN MCLEAN.

We have already noted in our "Fallen Asleep" column the death at Plymouth of this earnest Christian lady worker. Her good work in the Three Towns was much dwelt upon at the funeral services held and in the pages of Cornish journals. Her remains were interred at Liskeard, and much sorrowing sympathy was shown by many friends to whom she was spiritually made a blessing.

MR. JAMES BATEMAN, F.R.S.

This devoted leader in Evangelical and Protestant effort passed away on 27th ult., at his residence in Worthing, aged eighty-seven. Educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, he formerly resided on his own estate, Biddulph Grange, Staffs. His Oxford career synchronised with the rise of the Romeward Movement, and in his early years he published a valuable pamphlet exposing its true character. He possessed many natural gifts, was a man of highly cultivated tastes and ripe scholarship. It is now more than thirty years since a very important phase of the "Oxford Movement," the education of the middle classes in high Anglican teaching, was introduced into Staffordshire by the late Canon Woodard. Mr. Bateman took a leading part with others in opposition to this scheme, both by his voice and able pen. Since then he has been foremost in every Protestant movement. For some years he edited very successfully The Rock. He was also an ardent student of prophecy, and a man of deep spiritual insight and sterling piety.

PROFESSOR J. LEGGE, LL.D., D.D.

This veteran missionary teacher died on Monday week at his home in Oxford at the age of eighty-two. He was busy almost to the last, and so recently as October 23 was lecturing in Aberdeen. Having given in March last his portrait with a sketch of his career in China as an L.M.S. missionary, and subsequently at home as Professor of Chinese language and literature, it is unnecessary further to enlarge. An Oxford correspondent says:—"By the death of Prof. Legge we lose the most eminent Chinese scholar of the English-speaking world, the University of Oxford loses one of the most famous and erudite of her professors, and the Christian Church at large mourns the loss of a most distinguished and successful missionary-pioneer. For several years the late Professor's health has not been so robust as formerly, but it is only in quite recent days that real weakness and serious decline have made themselves ominously visible. The final illness has only been of about a week's duration. Only a few weeks ago he was to be seen vigorously walking in the streets of Oxford, and on October 28 he delivered his last public lecture."

Brighton.—Rev. J. B. Figgis, the new minister of Emmanuel Church, Brighton, preaching for the first time at that church, spoke on Sunday morning from the words of Caleb, "If so be the Lord be with me, I shall be able," and in the evening from Paul's words to the Corinthians: "I am determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Concluding an eloquent exposition of the latter text, he asked his hearers to pray that he might have a similar determination during the time he was among them.

Blind in Jerusalem.—Writing from Jerusalem as to her efforts on behalf of the blind in that city, Miss Lovell says:—"The Lord Himself constrained me to commence this work, and He must lead in everything connected with it. I have seven girls in the house, and I cannot continue doing all in the house that I have been doing, and want to be freer for writing books (embossed), assisting teacher, etc. Many are uniting with me in prayer for a suitable helper." Will friends interested in the blind in Jerusalem, (and who is not) aid Miss Lovell as God may guide them? Her address is, c.o., British Consul, Jerusalem.

Many Hands make Light Work.—The secretary of the Liberator Fund, Rev. Stockwell Watts, 16, Farringdon-street, E.C., is intent on obtaining for the sufferers by the Liberator crash at least 700,000 shillings. Of that number he has received as yet only 130,000. The sufferings of many good people are very great, and death from sorrow, care, and want still claims its victims. Williton, in Somersetshire, has been worked; by a house-to-house visitation this village of 250 houses having contributed £2 15s. 6d. One hundred and ninety-nine houses gave sums ranging from a penny to half-a-crown. This shows what can be done in a good cause by enthusiastic workers.

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE SUPERNATURAL IN NATURE.

We welcome a new and cheaper edition of The Supernatural in Nature: A Verification by Free Use of Science, by Joseph William Reynolds, M.A., prebendary of St. Paul's Cathedral. (3s. 6d. Longmans & Co.) In many respects this is a remarkable book. It is from the pen of a theologian well versed in science and philosophy, and its pages are devoted to the unfolding of themes of sublimest interest and deepest import—including life and its origin, creation and its stages, from things that are rudimentary to the grandest conceptions of God and his purposes.

Prebendary Reynolds is a preacher for the people, and his book is as attractive reading as his discourses and lectures are always easy to grasp. The fact that this is the fourth edition, is evidence that the work has intrinsic value; and the cost of the cheap reissue has been borne by one who, having himself benefited by the book, hopes to promote its circulation and usefulness in throwing light on the darker portions of the Bible, in strengthening faith and in allaying doubts. The author's aim coincides with this desire, and he writes:—

> The endeavour throughout is to deepen our knowledge of nature, its antiquity, vastness, complexity; and to exhibit science as casting light upon that which is dark, as unravelling mysteries so that our most advanced and accurate professors are in their piety and knowledge the prophets of their own day, who enable us more perfectly to understand the Way of Life. The Bible is not vaunted as a compendium of all science, but as true in all its parts, rightly understood; and in its smallest statements, like the apparent trivialities of nature, establishing truths, good and rare, which screed all our thought.

CANON BELL'S NEW BOOK.

Both as a poet and a preacher, Canon Bell has many admirers. Poets of name and fame are among those who extol his verses: his sermons are deservedly held in high esteem by Protestant Evangelical Christians of all communions.

We welcome his latest book, The Gospel the Power of God (Edward Arnold), containing a score of sermons delivered in the ordinary course of his ministry at Cheltenham. The title is supplied by the opening discourse; and among the general contents are "Union with Christ," "Prayer," "No more Sea," "The Second Advent," and "Satan Transformed into an Angel of Light."

One of the sermons was preached on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, when Nonconforming ministers joined in acts of worship in St. Matthew's Church, Cheltenham, to the great joy of the large-hearted preacher. The last two sermons were delivered on November 25, 1895, when the Canon concluded his happy and useful ministry at Cheltenham. The morning sermon on that day was based on the Apostolic Benediction in 2 Cor. xiii. 14, and in words of loving appeal the preacher concluded by once more making clear the need of the sinner and the greatness of the Saviour. He said:—

> I entreat you, as a parting request, that amidst the conflict of opinion, and the strife of controversy, you will ever treasure up that truth which I call God to witness it has been the aim of my ministry to enforce—the truth that in Christ alone is acceptance for the sinner; that He is "the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation." To all, whether prelate or priest, to all who would place Church or sacraments between your soul and God, say, as you thrust them indignantly from your path, "Sirs, stand aside, 'we would see Jesus.'"

The sermons are well constructed and eminently readable.

HYMNS OF THE REIGN.

Hymns have a peculiar charm for the devout mind; spiritual experiences which halt in the language of prose often become impressive and eloquent in the lines of a hymn. Our psalms and hymns show how marvellously certain fundamental doctrines vitalise and sustain the various churches and communions which pass under the name of Christendom. In this Jubilee year we might well expect such a volume as Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, & Co. have issued with the title Victorian Hymns: English Sacred Songs of Fifty Years. Dedicated to the Queen, the goodly book is in two parts, the first of which gives original compositions, and the second translations. Then there is an annotated index, furnishing particulars of the circumstances under which some of the hymns were written, the sources from which they are taken, and other interesting details. The selection is not confined to any one class of hymns; hence several Roman Catholic pieces are included. The paper and printing befit the monumental character of the work.

"EARLY PROMOTED."

Few books are more healthful and inspiriting for young believers than the biography of some consecrated life laid down freely and gladly for the Gospel's sake. The sense of sorrow that a life which promised so fair should end so soon, is hushed in view of the evident purpose in the career which seems all too brief. So in reading this deeply interesting Memoir of the Rev. William Spiller Cox, M.A., compiled by his father (Sampson Low, Marston, & Co.), the conviction deepens on the mind that, as Mrs. C. F. Alexander wrote—

> God hath his mysteries of grace,
> Ways that we cannot tell;
> He hides them deep, like hidden sleep,
> Of him He loved so well.

Here, in this touching memorial, the reader sees the eager young student, laid hold of by God, taught to bear bright and brave testimony at Oxford, led out into happy service among boys at Eastbourne, in connection with the seaside services, profoundly moved by his first visit to Keswick, and sent back to Oxford to witness for the power of Christ as never before, permitted to work two short years at Peckham, led to offer himself to the C.M.S., sent back for further study to Wycliffe Hall and Livingstone College. After all this thought and preparation he is sent out to Sierra Leone, which he reached at the end of last January, to give himself for a few months with great gladness of heart to God's service, and then to be called higher. The memoir reveals much intensity of purpose, singleness of aim, and attractiveness of character. Its telling testimony to the faithfulness of God is well fitted to stir many to a holy ambition to fill the vacant post in the mission ranks.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Hand and Heart is a good paper for the home. The annual volume (2s.) is replete with wholesome and instructive papers, fully illustrated. Two readable Christmas numbers are Wanted, the Home Words extra, and Rich in Giving, a tale by Edward Garrett, the special issue of the Day of Days (1d. each). The Fireside Christmas Number (6d.) has stories and other features, with excellent engravings.

Our Own Magazine. Vol. XVIII. Edited by Mr. T. B. Bishop. (2s. Children's Special Service Mission.) The full recognition which this admirable illustrated monthly has now gained as a Gospel messenger for the children, will secure a warm welcome for the tastefully-bound volume. The true stories which fill its pages are used as vehicles to set forth with great clearness and winsomeness the joy of personal acceptance of Christ.

The fourth annual volume of The Morning Star is, like its predecessors, a treasury of teaching on the Coming of the Lord Jesus as set forth in Holy Scripture. Edited by Dr. R. McKilliam, it contains expository papers by many well-known writers, and while the Advent is the main theme, there are valuable communications on other outstanding subjects of prophecy, not excluding God's ancient people and the Holy Land, around which so much interest grows in the minds of all who are instructed in "the sure Word." There is, in our day, a deepening concern as to "the things which must shortly come to pass," and such as have come under the influence of the Blessed Hope will find these papers instructive and stimulating in a high degree. As a frontispiece there is a large plate of Jerusalem and its surroundings. (2s. 6d. Partridge & Co.)

CHRISTMAS CARDS.

Messrs. Pain Brothers, Hastings, make up shilling packets of Christmas and birthday cards. Many of the cards bear poetical and other inscriptions; others are self-acting, and calculated to amuse the children.

Messrs. Marcus Ward and Co. have issued a large variety of Christmas and New Year cards, also booklets and calendars. The cards include chaste floral designs, also greetings in forget-me-nots and other flowers, and monotint figures and landscapes with illuminated borders. Some of these bear poetical and other legends, some are patriotic and comic in character. The smallest calendars are for the pocket and finger-shaped. Others, to be suspended by silk, are in twelve sheets with watchwords and mottoes, accompanied by charming scenes and objects. Larger calendars in four handsome cards are beautifully produced. They include the Waverley, English Cathedrals, the Scott, the Picturesque, and Playmates. Less-imposing calendars of the block description, giving a poetical selection and a Scripture passage for each day, are "Our Daily Portion" and "The Children's Calendar" (6d. each); "Day unto Day," The Shakespere, and the Tennyson (1s. each). An artistic booklet, "Holy Christmas," gives Advent hymns (2s.).

Lady Maud's Help, by Emma Marshall, and Poor Mrs. Dick, by A. C. Chambers. (1s. each. Nelson & Sons.) Gift books for girls, pleasing and wholesome stories, prettily bound.

On the Other Tack. By W. C. Metcalfe. (3s. 6d. Jerrold.) A sea story, full of adventure and animation, but wholesome withal. The more of such breezy, well-written tales the better for our boys.

The Child's Reciter and The Little One's Reciter. By Muriel Dean. (6d. each. Dean & Son.) These provide a capital selection of pieces well adapted for the children, who will find them within the reach of their capability and comprehension.

Jennifred and other Verses. By Septimus G. Green. (Elliot Stock.) A collection of pieces of varied merit, probably written at distant intervals—the longer in blank verse. Lovers of tuneful measure will find pleasure in many of these poems.

Twelfth Night King. By Mary Gorges. (W. & R. Chambers.) A simply-written and very pathetic story of a tiny boy, stolen by gipsies, and strangely discovered, after long and sorrowful experiences. The little ones will read the tale with real intetest.

God's Plan in the Bible. By H. W. Fry. (G. Stoneman.) This work has proved so useful as an introduction to prophetic study that a second edition has been called for. This has been revised in some points, and doubtless will commend itself widely, specially to inquirers on the subject.

In Two Secrets Hesba Stretton tells two stories, both of them rural. The second shows the terrible cost at which a pious young woman attended Methodist meetings, and tells of the ultimately changed attitude of her harsh father in relation to Divine things (1s. Religious Tract Society.)

A handy little volume of studies in the life and character of Joseph, designed especially for young men and women, is Joseph: Dreamer and Deliverer, by John Howell Jones. (2s. Charles H. Kelly.) The story is ably outlined, and important teachings for life and godliness are derived therefrom.

The Awakening of Benjamin Hay. By Ray Cunningham. (1s. 6d. Stirling: Drummond's Tract Depot. London: Partridge.) The story of a daughter, whose devotion and faithfulness saves her father from a ruined life, and melts at length the hard heart of a stern grandfather, who had long cherished bitter unkindness.

Some Western Folk. By Mabel Quiller-Couch. (H. Marshall & Son.) Already we have read some of these short stories in the magazines in which they appeared. The simple episodes in the lowly lives of folk in remote villages, far from the busy hum of men, are full in their own way of the pathos and pity of the human heart.

It is a far cry to the Australian bush, but in company with The Medhursts of Mindala by J. M. Waterhouse (6s. Elliot Stock), some very pleasant hours may be spent there. The book possesses considerable force of description as well as of character delineation, which well sustains the reader's sympathetic interest.

The Making of Matthias. By J. S. Fletcher. The groundwork of the tale is slight, but the story of the little boy on his grandmother's farm, and the moulding of him into a worthy man, is ably told. The book is finely bound, while the admirable illustrations by Lucy Kemp-Welch form a noteworthy feature. (5s. John Lane.).

Besides several stories, there are some very readable articles in the Christmas double number of Pearson's Magazine (1s.), including "Niagara in Winter," admirably illustrated; and "Shakespeare Dethroned," in which R. M. Bucke restates the argument that the author of the so-called "Shakespeare" drama was Francis Bacon.

To be Had in Remembrance. Compiled by A. E. Chance. (Elliot Stock.) A collection of choice thoughts in prose and poetry, intended to carry comfort or courage to the sorrowing and bereaved. They are culled from many sources, and will doubtless be messengers of help to desolate and bleeding hearts. The little book is artistic in its get-up.

The Quiver for the month contains many good things. Miss Sparrow's paper on "Love in the Slums" shows human nature among the poor. Mrs. Banks's story of "A Remarkable Sunday-school" is full of interest; while the article on "Churches at the Cape" brims with information. In short, the number is a budget of interest. (Cassell & Co. Price 6d.)

Boys and girls who may be privileged to receive Lullaby-Land as a Christmas present may well think themselves happy. Beautiful in exterior, this dainty volume contains a selection (made by Kenneth Grahame) of the songs for childhood by Eugene Field. To the merry verses, equally amusing illustrations have been designed by Charles Robinson. (6s. John Lane.)

Historical stories should combine instruction with interest. This end is achieved by Herbert Hayens in An Emperor's Doom; or the Patriots of Mexico. (5s. Nelson & Sons.) The story is that of Maximilian, with the events that followed on the withdrawal of the French troops from Mexico, in 1867. In every way well produced, the book will make a delightful present for boys.

Sahib and Sepoy; or Saving an Empire. By Lucy Taylor. (5s. J. F. Shaw & Co.) This tale of the Indian Mutiny outlines in a very readable manner the career of Sir Henry Havelock. Of necessity the pages are somewhat exciting; but the book is altogether good, presenting a capital sketch of Havelock's noble life, and a worthy record of the brave work of his "saints."

The Blues and the Brigands. By M. M. Blake. (Jarrold & Sons.) A thrilling story of the time of the French revolution. Etienne-Marie Carroud joins the Republican party, and passes through the horrors of the siege of Nantes, taking part also in the gallant defence of Nort. Those who are interested in historical novels and stirring scenes will find what is according to their taste in this book

The striking tracts and booklets of Bishop Ryle, are now issued from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. Two very useful little works are "How Readest Thou?" which calls for a more general and patient study of God's Word; and "Assurance," wherein 2 Tim. iv. 6-8 is expounded to helpful purpose, with notes and extracts from richly spiritual writers of the seventeenth century (3s. per dozen).

'Twixt Dawn and Day. By Mrs. A. D. Philps. (2s. Religious Tract Society.) A well-written tale of Reformation days of the kind which will captivate the boys, while affording them useful historical information. From the same house comes School Life at the Bartams. (1s. 6d.) By L. C. Silke. The story of a fatherless boy, who makes his mark by sterling integrity and honest application in the face of some difficulties.

Work-a-Day Sermons. By Rev. F. B. Meyer. (2s. 6d. James Bowden.) These dozen short discourses are well described in the title; they are full of wise counsel on such commonplace matters as temper, falling in love, faithful service, holidays, amusements, and so forth. A most excellent New Year's gift book for any young person. The portrait given of Mr. Meyer is finely reproduced, but scarcely so full of animation as might be.

Sharpened Tools for Busy Workers. By John Sweet Doidge. (5s. nett. Nisbet & Co.) A book of helps, illustrations, anecdotes, and outline addresses for pulpit, platform, and class. Here may be found abundant material for preachers, teachers, and speakers, who know how to make good use of helps of this kind. The danger to be avoided is that of allowing the easily-obtained "points" to overshadow the vital message.

There is much to be said for small volumes of sermons by notable preachers. They are easy to carry, and serve as "samples" from the bulk. Messrs. Nisbet's "Preachers of To-day" series illustrates these points; and the latest volumes, Sin and its Conquerors, by Dean Farrar, and The Endless Choice, by W. J. Dawson, have more of thought and teaching in them than many larger collections of discourses. Each volume contains six sermons (paper 1s., cloth 1s. 6d.).

Hugh Wynne: Free Quaker. By S. Weir Mitchell, M.D. (6s. T. Fisher Unwin.) The scene of this charmingly-told tale of the American War of Independence is the Quaker State of Pennsylvania. Apart from its more tender human interest, it is to be much commended for the extremely graphic and yet thoroughly natural style of narration. The book is, in truth, a green spot in the arid wastes of modern fiction, and we are not surprised to learn that it has already attained wide popularity.

Mr. Joseph Hocking's "And Shall Trelawney Die?" (3s. 6d. James Bowden) introduces the hero as an inmate of the workhouse, fired with a determination to win back his old home, which for fifty years has passed out of his family. How he first planned a mariage de convénance to accomplish his object, but finally followed the dictates of his own heart, forms a captivating little romance, which is followed by another, of Cornish birth, entitled "The Mist on the Moors."

Of birthday books there are many, but the Maclaren Birthday Book (4s. The Christian Commonwealth Publishing Company) is one that will be warmly welcomed by the numerous admirers of the gifts and graces of the great preacher from whose discourses Rev. G. Coates has selected gems of thought for every day in the year. Mr. Coates tells us in his introduction that the preparation of the volume has been a means of inspiration and stimulus to himself, and such it will assuredly be to many who will read the spiritual and suggestive pages.

Many will like to know whence they may get ammunition wherewith to fight the tobacco habit. In our own country there is the Anti-Narcotic League, 25, Market-street, Manchester, which issues some telling leaflets, also an instructive Lecture on Tobacco, by the late Russell Lant Carpenter, B.A. (one penny). In America there is the Anti-Tobacco Tract Repository, conducted Mr. H. L. Hastings, 47, Cornhill, Boston, who issues a quarterly budget, The Anti-Tobacco Crusader, which should prove of great service (fifty cents per annum).

Spenser's "Faerie Queene" is not everybody's reading; but it is a pity that the drift and substance of the poem should be unknown. Those who have made a slight acquaintance with Spenser's masterpiece will be glad to possess Mary MacLeod's Stories from the Faerie Queene, with introduction by John W. Hales, and drawings by A. G. Walker. (6s. Gardner, Darton & Co.) Those who have not read the knightly poem will be tempted to do so after perusing the stories, which have been charmingly digested, and are admirably and richly illustrated.

Old and young will appreciate the charming story of the vicissitudes through which little "Niccolina Niccolini" passes. The orphan child is left by the sudden death of her mother on the hands of a very hard landlady, but is rescued from her vagabond life by the good Lora Emilia (an Italian lady of rank but extremely limited means) and her faithful servant, Martilla. The sweet unselfishness of these woman, who have to deny themselves many of the necessities of life to maintain the little girl, is very touching. It is written by the author of "Mdlle. Mori" (Gardner, Darton, and Co. 6s.).

In The Surprising Adventures of Sir Toady Lion (6s. Gardner, Darton & Co.), Mr. S. R. Crockett's versatile mind has given us a fund of humour which has hardly been equalled since the début of the world-renowned Helen's Babies twenty years ago; only the little heroes of this volume are more robust and have far larger ideas of life which they consolidate in most diverting ways. Serious readers must not take it all too seriously; as a book of fun it would be hard to beat. Its illustrations, by Mr. Gordon Browne, keep pace merrily with the theme of the volume which in every way is excellently got up.

Private Papers of William Wilberforce, compiled and edited by A. M. Wilberforce. (12s. T. Fisher Unwin.) We have in this well-favoured volume a delightful excursus into the history of England a hundred years ago. There are first a series of letters to Wilberforce from his intimate friend William Pitt, highly creditable to both; then an able sketch of Pitt from the pen of Wilberforce; and, finally, more letters from friends or by Wilberforce himself to members of his family. These last reveal the deep Christian experience of the great liberator, and are models of what a parent's letters ought to be. We very heartily commend the book for wide perusal.

The Influence of Jesus Christ on the People. By Rev. W. Unsworth. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) Already the author has written on the influence of Jesus Christ on Christian workers and on young men. Now he adds a third volume on the influence of Christ on the people in temptation, Bible-reading, friendships, prayers, aims, and other matters of daily life. His style is clear and forceful; abounding in pungent aphorisms. Here is one: "Jesus Christ does not want ships without ballast. He wants force, personality, character." In the most practical fashion he shows how the Lord Jesus has to do—by example and precept—with every department of life and service.

The "Masters of Medicine" series contains no more entertaining book than John Hunter, Man of Science and Surgeon (1728-1793), by Stephen Paget. The pages are a proof, at times quite amusing, of the truth of the remark of Sir James Paget in his brief introduction, that Hunter's great influence may be ascribed to the degree in which he introduced the exercise of the observant scientific mind into the study and practice of surgery. Hunter's enthusiasm as a "collector" shows itself in some interesting letters, and as he combined rare mental qualities with great industry, it is not surprising that he achieved a world-wide fame and distinction. (3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin.)

Fairy Tales. When the little tyrants of the nursery ask for a pretty story they do not expect to be put off with some prosaic recital of sober fact; they are best pleased with the wildest flights of a vagrant imagination. They will be hard to satisfy if Short Stories for Short People, by Alicia Aspinwall (J. F. Shaw & Co.) do not come up to their standard. The stories are not too extravagant, but just impossible enough, and the clever pictures are in keeping. The Diamond Fairy Book (6s. Hutchinson & Co.) is more marvellous still, and may be described as of the good old-fashioned Oriental type, in which miraculous kings and queens, princes, and princesses are the dramatis personæ, with dwarfs and dragons thrown in. The illustrations are delicately beautiful, and the bairns will look and listen with open-mouthed wonder.

Rapara; or, The Right of the Individual in the State. By Archibald Forsyth. (6s. Fisher Unwin). A contribution to a question which, with our growing population, becomes increasingly serious. The author tells the story of a model settlement on Opara, an isle of the Southern Pacific, and uses this as a vehicle for the exposition of "Equalistic Individualism," which claims that all natural wealth and gifts of nature "belong to the community, and should therefore be treated so as to bestow the greatest benefits on its individual members." The views advanced merit the attention of sociologists and economists. Present evils, in connection with the tenure of land, the distribution of wealth, and so on, are obvious enough, but the cure is yet to find amid the conflicting theories of the day. The study of this book will help towards the solution of these difficulties.

Grace Abounding. John Bunyan's immortal allegory has overshadowed the rest of his "sixty works"; but many of these are of lasting value, and not least this autobiography—"A brief relation of the exceeding mercy of God in Christ to his poor servant, John Bunyan." It is, as the present editor, Rev. A. Smellie, says, "a possession and a prize for ever." While no two souls are dealt with by God in exactly the same way, yet the core of spiritual experience is ever the same. None can fail to find much profit in this story of a sinful man, deeply convicted of sin, saved by grace, and seeking by that grace to resist temptation, endure persecution, and bear faithful testimony to others around. We welcome the reissue. It is a book to be read and pondered. (2s. 6d. A. Melrose.)

Whereas our fathers and grandfathers read big tomes on Baptism, the practice to-day seems to be to treat the subject in small books and pamphlets. A thoughtful contribution to the subject by an Evangelical Churchman is entitled, Baptism: what Saith the Scripture? By Rev. David H. D. Wilkinson, M.A., assistant clerical secretary of the Church Missionary Society, with a preface by Principal Handley Moule. The subject is one on which there seems to be nothing new to say. As to Mr. Wilkinson, it may be said that his controversial method is eminently courteous and Christian. Many of our readers, however, will hesitate to regard an unbaptized infant as outside the covenant of mercy. God's mercy upon the little ones cannot be conditional upon parental, pastoral, clerical, or sacerdotal solicitude or ministrations. Inferential teaching involving such a conclusion is open to many serious objections. (Seeley & Co.)

The Brand of Hell; or, Life in Babylon. By H. W. Fry. (G. Stoneman.) Lord Lytton's "Coming Race" and Bellamy's "Looking Backward," aimed in narrative form at forecasting the possible future. Mr. Fry in this his latest work uses a similar plan in order to make real and vivid in the minds of the careless the intense solemnity of coming events. As to whether or not the device, in such connection, be profitable, there may be difference of opinion, but certainly we have found it strangely thrilling. While disclaiming any intention of fixing detail, the author endeavours to bring home to the reader what those who are left behind, when the saints are taken up, may have to pass through in rebuilt Babylon and Jerusalem, and under the iron rule of the anti-Christ. It is an awful picture of the height to which human presumption and blasphemy may rise. Scripture is given for the various events and judgments. The precise view of prophecy will not be accepted by all, but the book, we doubt not, will be widely read.

THE BIBLE ACROSTIC SEARCHING ALMANAC for 1898 is the eighth annual issue. The booklet is calculated to encourage Bible study, and therefore is worthy of a large circulation. (1d. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

The address on "Our Lord's Prayer for Unity," delivered at the last Dublin Convention by Canon Bell, is published by Messrs. Jarrold & Sons. (1d.) It is a thoughtful Scriptural and Christian utterance.

IN EVERYTHING, by George Müller, is a booklet giving the substance of an address, delivered at Bristol in June last, based on Phil. iv. 6, 7. It is in a measure autobiographical, giving some details of the founding of the Ashley Down Orphanage. (6d. per dozen. Marshall, Russell, & Co., Paternoster-row.)

THE SUBJECTIVE LIFE is the title of Rev. J. T. Wrenford's letter-booklet for 1898. The circulation of some of Mr. Wrenford's little books has been enormous, and this latest product of his thoughtful pen is likely to exercise a useful ministry in directing Christians to the source of power for testimony and service. (6d. per doz. Partridge.)

Be still, and know that I am God.

Ps. xlvi. 10.

Dear Lord, I have no song to sing to Thee!
Not one soft trill, or low ecstatic note,
As thy birds chant within the homing tree,
Or fling across the airs through which they float.

But I am dumb, yea, dumb, and deaf, and dark;
My soul is like a bird with maimèd wing;
My very thoughts are dead, ice cold and stark,
Strengthless and blind unto the dust they cling.

Yet Thou remainest holy, and Thy strength
Is matched by thy unbounded faithfulness;
What span can mete the height, the depth, the length
Of thy untiring love's almightiness?

Thy hand holds all the many natured souls,
They lie within it, as the islands lie
Within the ocean's grasp; thy will controls
The wildest storms that vex and test and try.

I am before Thee, though I see Thee not!
Thou canst not faint or fail; Omnipotence
Knows all, feels all; I cannot be forgot
By thy unchanging, living permanence.

Life of my life! Thou dost not need my song,
Only myself; the song is not the will;
Thou dost not ask me to be gay or strong,
Thou bidst me wait on Thee—wait and be still.

Geraldine M. Seymour.

Typhoid Convalescents at Sandgate.

Dear Sir,—Permit me to thank you for inserting my letter in your paper, and your readers for their speedy and welcome responses to our appeal for papers, books, and games for Maidstone typhoid patients.

During the winter months we have in the London Samaritan Society's Home and Hospital at Sandgate hundreds of patients who sometimes arrive without an overcoat or warm underclothing. Nothing rejoices the assistant matrons and nurses more than helping such sick and needy ones to warm garments. I have no doubt that many of your readers will only be too glad to clear their wardrobes of discarded clothing if they knew where it would be put to good use.—I am, very gratefully yours, The Matron.

Peace Sunday.—Invitations to join in the observance of Peace Sunday on the Sunday before Christmas Day, Dec. 19, have been sent by the Peace Society to 23,000 ministers, and a large quantity of literature has been already distributed. Information may be had of Dr. Darby, 47, New Broad-street, E.C.

The House of Rest.—Rev. F. B. Meyer attracted a large audience to the Pillar Room on Friday afternoon. He spoke on Isaiah vi., and pressed home the need for full consecration for every Christian worker. Many were apt to get their teaching from books and addresses, but none could work for God with power unless they were personally taught by Him. He showed that the Seraphim had deeper knowledge than men: (1) of the character of God; (2) in their insight into the world; (3) of the need of a broken heart. They know that God is thrice holy; that the earth is full of his glory; that the deepest need for contrite sinners is cleansing. Immediately Isaiah confessed his uncleanness one of the seraphs laid a live coal from the altar upon his lips. The evening meeting was conducted by Colonel Oldham.

Christmas Appeals.

The Home of Industry, for aged and sick poor.—Miss Macpherson, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

Camberwell Mission, for the destitute and uncared-for children and adults.—Mr. John Kirk, 28, Burton-road, Brixton, S.W.

R.S.U. Ashley Mission Hall for poor and aged people, and children in Bethnal Green to provide Christmas dinners.—T. Miller, 104, Well-street, Hackney.

Artillery Lane Mission, for fresh work in the new premises at 4, Steward-street, just opened, and for free breakfasts for the poor.—Mrs. S. Finn, 29, St. Ann's-road, South Tottenham.

The Chelsea Children's Mission appeals for funds to give the hungry children a good dinner at Christmas, as on former occasions, and in other ways to bring Christmas cheer to the needy.—C. H. Connor, 25, Church-street, S.W.

The Shaftesbury Mission Hall, Borough, S.E., for children's dinners and free meals to poor and destitute little ones. Last winter over 25,000 were fed at this hall.—Mr. G. H. Breton, 84, Great Dover-street, Borough, S.E.

Abersychan, near Pontypool.—There are many sick children in this district, and should be glad to receive Christmas and New Year's cards, also Gospel texts, for distribution among them, and for aged infirm ones.—Address to Pastor O. Fidman, Church-road, Abersychan, Mon.

Borough Polytechnic Institute, for providing 800 poor children with a New Year's tea and entertainment, and to send toys and other comforts to 3000 invalid children living at home. Toys or children's clothing, or funds.—The Hon. Secs. of the Fund, 103, Borough-road, S.E.

Basim, India.—A worker among the heathen, Mr. W. A. Moore, Basim, Berar, India, is anxious to receive new slides, illustrating the life of Christ and the Pilgrim's Progress, for use in preaching at fairs. He likewise needs a supply of tracts and Scripture portions for distribution in distant villages.

Ceylon.—Rev. G. Liesching, of the C.M.S. Mission, Uigalle, Ceylon, would be very grateful to any readers for lantern slides, suitable for using in Gospel work, social gatherings of native Christians, etc. The slides may be sent to Mr. Liesching, care of Messrs. Dickson and Stewart, 4, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

Papers for India.—Mrs. Lawson, Aligarh, India, will be most thankful to all friends, old and new, who will forward to her, post-paid, all kinds of good, bright, Christian papers, magazines, tracts, and booklets. There is an unlimited field for their distribution; many are sent to the soldiers engaged in the frontier troubles.

The Spitalfields Lodging House Band appeal for funds to sustain the work amongst the inhabitants of East End lodging houses, to provide Christmas dinners for Boxing Day, and free breakfasts during the winter months for the destitute and suffering, wherever found!—G. W. Hancock, 87, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, E.

Slum Work in Birmingham.—A Church Evangelist labouring in the parish of St. Lawrence's, Birmingham (the poorest in the Midlands), appeals on behalf of the poor, especially the little children: "We are anxious to bring some joy to their hearts this Christmastide. Clothes, boots, toys, etc., for a Christmas tree, or help towards treat would be most welcome."—F. Carter, 5, Lord-street, Birmingham.

Mrs. Power Lalor appeals for her Christmas Fuel and Food Fund, which last year provided over two hundred ladies in their homes with good meals and comfortable fires, and a well-earned rest for one day in the long year; also for the Old Ladies' Home, which receives those utterly destitute in the evening of their lives.—Address, Mary Power Lalor, Long Orchard, Templemore, co. Tipperary, Ireland.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., hon. superintendent (Milton House, Shacklewell Green, N.E.), appeals for funds in aid of the work carried on at Costers' Hall on behalf of the poorest class of Hoxton and the surrounding districts. Money is needed for the extra winter benevolent operations, which include dinners on Christmas Day for 500 poor children—some of them being helpless cripples; also 1000 free meals every week for the most needy of the elementary day schools. Costers' Hall represents a comprehensive Christian Mission; about 2000 hard-working people, including street-traders, are members of the thrift societies. Large congregations of adults and juveniles assemble on Sundays; and Mr. Orsman has the voluntary aid of 142 working-class helpers in the fifty-one useful operations carried on throughout the week.

Flowers from the Holy Land pressed and beautifully mounted on cards are very suitable for Christmas. For a P.O. of 5s. on Beyrout, ten cards will be posted to any address. Mrs. G. Howie, Shweir, via Beyrout, Syria.

THE EVANGELISTIC MISSION which has for 32 YEARS been working in LONDON and the PROVINCES, appeals for LIBERAL SUPPORT at this SEASON of the YEAR, when EXTRA HEAVY CLAIMS are made on its Funds.

In consequence of the numerous calls on the benevolent for the Indian Famine and various Jubilee Funds, this Mission—in common with many others—is now suffering from a diminished income for the current expenses, amounting to about ONE QUARTER OF THE YEAR'S USUAL RECEIPTS, which it is earnestly hoped will be made up in response to this appeal.

At the SEVERAL MISSION HALLS located in the poorer districts of London and the Country, EVANGELISTIC WORK is being carried on, combined with MEDICAL and SOCIAL relief to the destitute and deserving.

THOUSANDS OF FREE GIFTS of Coals, Bread, Soup, Tea, Groceries and Clothing, also FREE MEALS are given during the winter to the poor and needy after careful enquiry by our Lady Visitors,

THE PRIMARY OBJECT

throughout being to make known to the souls of men the "Gift of God" which "is Eternal Life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Contributions will be gratefully received towards the following:—

I. GENERAL EXPENSES OF THE LONDON MISSION.

II. EVANGELISTIC EFFORTS IN COUNTRY TOWNS & VILLAGES.

III. BUILDING FUND for New Mission Halls in Populous Districts, especially just now, to meet the urgent need for a larger Hall at WOOD GREEN.

IV. HOUSE OF REST FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS in the Home and Foreign Mission Fields (St. Leonards), many thousands of whom have already derived its benefits. For PURCHASE OF FREEHOLD FUND, when the Home would probably be self-supporting.

V. FREE MEALS, DORCAS, COAL, and GENERAL RELIEF FUND, Including SPECIAL CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

VI. COLPORTAGE MISSION, for Circulating the Scriptures and Christian Literature.

VII. TRACT FUND: Free Distribution of Tracts, Books, and Gospel Papers, amongst Soldiers, Sailors, and Civilians.

HOSPITAL LETTERS, CLOTHING (New or Old) and ARTICLES OF EVERY DESCRIPTION will be thankfully received, either for Sale or Gifts.

Donors will please state to which of the above Funds they wish their Donations applied. They will also oblige by adding name and address, not for publication, but in order that a receipt may be sent in due form and the Report when issued. Cheques and Post Office Orders should be crossed "London and South Western Bank."

Should no acknowledgment of Contributions sent be received within three days, friends are particularly requested to write again on the matter.

C. RUSSELL HURDITCH.

All communications should be addressed to 164, ALEXANDRA ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, LONDON, N.W. or contributions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, at the Offices of The Christian.

Aphorisms on Man.

By LAVATER.

Have you ever seen a vulgar mind warm or humble, or a proud one, that could love? Where pride begins love ceases; as love, so humility; as both, so the still real power of man.

Everything may be mimicked by hypocrisy, but humility and love united. The humblest star twinkles most in the darkest night. The more rare humility and love united, the more radiant when they meet.

Whenever a man undergoes a considerable change in consequence of being observed by others; whenever he assumes another gait, another language than what he had before he thought himself observed: be advised to guard yourself against him.

Who makes quiet use of the moments is a genius of prudence.

As your enemies and your friends, so are you.

You may depend upon it that he is a good man whose intimate friends are all good, and whose enemies are characters decidedly bad.

Who makes too much or too little of himself has a false measure for everything.

The more honesty a man has the less he affects the air of a saint. The affectation of sanctity is a blotch on the face of piety.

Personalia.

Mr. Newton Jones has during the past four weeks been suffering from a breakdown of the nervous system. He is now at Margate, but may shortly leave for a sea voyage. Prayer is desired for his speedy recovery.

Mr. N. H. Patrick, of the North Africa Mission, is ill at Tangier, with a slight attack of typhoid fever. Miss Miller, who was on a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Patrick, is also suffering with the same disease. They will be thankful for the prayer and sympathy of fellow-believers.

Spitalfields.—Mr. James Sharpless, of 14, Sidney-square, Commercial-road, E., sends a report of his visiting work in the East-end. Much good has resulted from efforts put forth to reach those who are out of sight, and therefore often out of mind. Some are bound with affliction's chain for months; others are buried in their rooms for years, suffering from various ailments; the aged and lonely widows often get overlooked in the busy rush of life; these naturally call for special attention, and are most grateful for a visit and a word of sympathy. He cites in illustration the case of an educated lady, who, having become a Roman Catholic, sends for him when ill and uneasy, and is led to Christ. He believes that God has blessed his quiet house to house labour amongst many such.

A People's Drawing-Room.—The sisters of the West London Mission working in Soho are starting a people's drawing-room at Craven Hall, and are anxious to establish in connection with this a small lending library, and they will be thankful to receive any suitable books, new or old, which can be sent them. The people living in Soho have not many opportunities for reading, and it is not possible for them to spend money on books, but a great deal of pleasure and benefit can be conferred on them by the loan of a few good books. Will our readers kindly look at their bookshelves? Are there none there valueless to the owners, but which would be an untold blessing in the dreary slums of Soho? Parcels will be most gratefully received and acknowledged by Sister Joyce, Craven Hall, Marshall-street, Golden-square.—Methodist Times.

The Ham Yard Soup Kitchen and Hospice is worked on charitable and practical lines—to relieve poverty and not to manufacture it; to give temporary shelter and kindly advice and assistance in obtaining work to those who by trouble and misfortune have lost home and employment, and who would otherwise sink into vice or absolute pauperism. If it be true that in some cases such condition has been brought upon the sufferers by their own illdoing or want of ability, it is equally true that in other cases no such cause can be found, and often the punishment seems altogether out of proportion to the crime. The number of admissions to the Hospice during the twelve months was 290, and the average duration of stay seventeen nights. Of the men admitted, 129 found employment. The system of relief by recommendation and registration adopted in 1883, continues to work well. 2946 families were registered from October 1, 1896, to September 30, 1897. Total number of meals to families on the register, 137,971, a decrease of 4,160 on previous years. Col. G. E. Perryn, Sec., Great Windmill-street, W., will supply information as to this work.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

The Archbishop of Canterbury entered last week upon his seventy-seventh year.

No less than four C.M.S. missionaries on furlough from India are reading for their degrees at Durham University.

The Bishop of Natal preached on Sunday week at St. James's, Nottingham, of which parish he was for several years vicar.

The ancient living of Raskelfe, near York, has been accepted by Rev W. Preston, D.D., vicar of Holy Trinity, Runcorn.

The consecration of Canon A. F. Winnington Ingram, D.D., as Suffragan-Bishop of Stepney, took place at St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday week.

Rev. T. J. Bass, late vicar of Penn Fields, has been instituted to St. Lawrence, Birmingham. A notable feature of this parish is that nearly all the population are resident in courts, and the new vicar proposes to carry on a vigorous mission work.

Dean Farrar, preaching in the City, declared that many of the clergy, men of culture and education, were compelled to live on an income no larger than that of a butler or a clerk, and with prospects no better than those of an apprentice or a shop-boy.

The council of the Church Association have decided to set apart Monday, January 24, as a day for humiliation, confession of sin, and earnest prayer to Almighty God for pardoning and restoring grace. The meetings will be held at Exeter Hall, morning, afternoon, and evening. We trust our readers will make a note of this, and endeavour to attend one or more of the meetings.

The congregation of Holy Trinity, Sheerness, are building a mission hall to meet the increasing needs of a growing artisan parish. The hall, it is hoped, will be opened in January. There will be accommodation for nearly three hundred. This will be a centre of aggressive Gospel and temperance work amongst a population of nearly 9000 people. The total cost will be over £1000; of this sum nearly £500 has been raised. The vicar is Rev. J. C. Elliott.

Rev. G. F. Head, vicar of Christ Church, Hampstead, has been induced to consider his previous decision, and accept the charge of Clifton Parish Church. The appointment was refused by Canon Streatfield, owing to the threat of the trustees of a private pew trust fund to withhold a portion of the stipend unless the new vicar adhered to the custom in vogue there of wearing the black gown in the pulpit. Mr. Head has, however, announced his intention of wearing the surplice in the pulpit, making, however, no other alteration in the existing service.

Congregational.

Mr. C. W. Sykes has been ordained at Hornsea.

Mr. John T. Draper has been ordained at Birdbush.

Rev. D. S. Dakin has been ordained to the pastorate at Battle.

Rev. G. Felix Williams, late of Berkhampstead, has been recognised at Stourbridge.

Mr. James E. Liddiard has resigned his position as hon. secretary of the Watchers' Band.

The twelfth anniversary of Rev. J. Thompson's pastorate at Northam has been celebrated.

The portrait of Rev. W. G. Percival appears in the December number of The Evangelical Magazine.

Rev. Stanley Rogers has celebrated his twentieth anniversary at Westminster-road Chapel, Liverpool.

Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, the Merchant Lecturer for December, has for his subject "The Book of the Revelation."

Dr. A. Roby Fletcher, son of the late Rev. W. Roby Fletcher, has been appointed by the L.M.S. to Bandawe, on Lake Nyassa.

Mr. William Forbes preached on Sunday last in the new Lecture Hall, Hale End. The cause here is in connection with Woodford Green Union Church.

Mr. John Clapham, who for fifty-four years has been connected with the Sunday-school belonging to City-road Chapel, has resigned the superintendency.

The annual meeting of Nottingham Institute was held on Monday week, Mr. J. B. Alliott presiding. Professor Bumby, in presenting the annual report, said that when the Institute was planned there was a fear on the part of some that the efficiency of the ministry would be lowered, but, in fact, it had been increased, for, had there been no Institute, there would have been during the last generation a number of men working in the Churches without special training.

Calls.—Rev. J. H. Harley, of St. Neots, to Bedford Chapel, Camden Town, N.; T. W. Hardisty, of Pateley Bridge, to Long Ashton, near Bristol; Rev. Jonathan Evans, of Buckley, to Milton, Rochdale; Rev. T. Gasquoine to Lymm.

Resignations.—Rev. T. Simm, of Petersfield; Rev. F. B. Wyatt, of North-street, Taunton.

Baptist.

A nine days' mission has been held at Keynsham.

At Kingston-on-Thames the work is reported as full of encouragement.

Mr. N. Bosworth, of Rawdon College, has been ordained at King-street, Wigan.

Rev. F. D. Robins has been welcomed to the pastorate at George-lane, Woodford.

Mr. J. Swainson Langley has been welcomed to the pastorate at Burnley-road, Padiham.

A new chapel has been opened in Commercial-road, Guildford, by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

Devonshire-square Chapel has been closed for a time for repairs. At the closing service nine believers were baptized.

Rev. W. J. Styles read a paper before the members of the Baptist Board on Tuesday on "The Critical Study of the Bible a Help to its Public Reading."

At Burley-road, Leeds, during the nine months that Rev. Fred. W. Walter has been pastor, more than eighty have been baptized and received into fellowship.

The 104th anniversary of the formation of the church at West-end, Hammersmith, has been celebrated. The report mentions the establishment of a Christian Endeavour Society and a Sunday evening "At Home."

Calls.—Rev. R. E. Chettleborough, of South Croydon, to Leighton Buzzard; Mr. O. M. Owen, of the Pastors' College, to Holywell, North Wales; Mr. G. W. G. Fearn, to Orpington; Mr. A. E. Jones, of Bristol, to Winford; Rev. R. Walker, to Marlow-road, Maidenhead; Mr. Matthew Miller, to George-square, Greenock.

Resignation.—Rev. H. R. Passmore, of Whitstable-on-Sea.

Methodist.

The St. Peter's Mission anniversary at Leeds realised about £300.

Rev. T. Waugh has conducted a mission at his home, Barnsley, and large numbers profess conversion.

Successful mission services have been held at North Sunderland, Middlesbrough, Doe Lea Valley, Liskeard, and Harwood.

Rev. James Jackson, President of the Primitive Conference, has visited circuits in Liverpool, Newcastle, and Stockton-on-Tees.

New chapels has been opened or are about to be opened at Yarm, Old Normanton, Heushaw (Haltwhistle), Wolstanton, Winsford.

The Devon and Dorset Mission is prospering greatly, and conversions are frequent, especially at Chard, where the anniversary was held last week.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr has conducted an eight days' mission in Birmingham. A hundred and sixty persons entered the inquiry-room, and a hundred temperance pledges were taken.

A scheme has been submitted to the Primitive Methodist churches by Rev. C. H. Beeley, of Huddersfield, by which the various Methodist churches may be combined for general work without losing any denominational characteristics or interfering with the sectional organisation now in existence.

Rev. J. Flanaghan, superintendent of the South-East London Mission, has for some time had in view the building of a new chapel in Old Kent-road, and now land has been secured on what is part of the Bridge House Estate, the committee controlling which are ever ready to assist religious and philanthropic efforts.

The Newcastle mission has celebrated its fourth anniversary. The annual public meeting was presided over by Mr. T. H. Bainbridge. A vigorous address was given by Rev. F. Luke Wiseman, who had preached in the afternoon to a large congregation on the text, "Ye are my witnesses," while Rev. J. Wilson, of Sunderland, delighted his hearers with a racy speech.

The trustees of Wesley's Chapel, City-road, London, have received an offer of a gift of £5000 as an endowment of Wesley's House and the work at Wesley's Chapel providing they raise the additional £2500 required to set the house apart as a Connexional centre. This the trustees have unanimously resolved to endeavour to do, and a statement of the case, with an appeal, has been issued to Wesleyan Methodists.

Temperance meetings for the three London districts were held in Wesley's Chapel on Monday week. The chapel was full. Mr. Perks, who was in the chair, hoped the churches would unite and force the Government to grant them Sunday closing and the Local Veto. Major Barnsley, J.P., of Birmingham, made a humorous speech, in which he said that a teacher asked a class what teetotalism meant, and one child answered, "It means bread and butter." Canon Barker and Mr. Chadwick also spoke.

Presbyterian.

Encouraging anniversary service have been held at Middlesbrough.

Rev. John Bague has been appointed organising secretary of the Church Building Fund.

It is interesting to note that Jesmond congregation supports its own lady mission in China.

Last week was widely observed in Presbyterian circles as a week of self-denial on behalf of foreign missions.

The selection committee at Marylebone have agreed to recommend the call of Rev. George Hanson, of Rathgar, Dublin.

Calls.—Rev. H. King, of Haltwhistle, to West Stanley; Rev. Robert Wylie, late of Canonbury, to Onehunga, New Zealand; Rev. John Arnott, of Dalby, to South Free Church, Stirling; Rev. D. Fairweather, to Morningside F.C., Edinburgh; Rev. T. Watkins, of Cardiff, to Beaufort, Mon.; Rev. J. M. Owen, of Paisley, to Maryport.

Salvation Army.

General Booth is conducting meetings in France.

A prominent officer has been despatched to take the oversight of Army work among the Scandinavian and German population of the United States.

A timbered tract, eight miles square, has been added to the Social institutions in Winnipeg, and employment will thus be found for a large number of workless men during the winter.

The recent floods swept over the lowlands of General Booth's Labour Colony at the mouth of the Thames, and these lands, usually dotted here and there by the out-of-works of London engaged in various agricultural pursuits, now present a spectacle of devastation. A quarter of a mile of railway embankment, which runs from a wharf on the river-side to the brickfields of the Colony, has been swept away, horses and other live stock drowned, hundreds of pounds worth of movable plant destroyed, and hundreds of acres of crops washed out. The sea-wall is broken, besides serious damage to buildings, etc. The damage is roughly estimated to be £5000, and may possibly very much exceed this amount. This is by far the most serious calamity which has overtaken General Booth's work in this country, not the least grievous aspect being that numbers of men who might otherwise be employed during the winter will probably be thrown out of work.

Fallen Asleep.

At Newport, Rev. D. S. Davies, a retired Congregational minister, a faithful servant of Jesus Christ.—At Leighton Buzzard, on 30th ult., Rev. C. W. Barber, who has been associated for some time with the East-end Wesleyan Mission.—At Princes Risborough, Rev. R. R. Bardolph, rector of the parish.—At Ravensthorpe, aged fifty-six, Mr. Frank Stapleton, a true helper of the poor.—At Newport, Aiderman J. C. Sanders, aged fifty-eight, a warm helper of Christian work and Methodist movements.—At Topsham, Exeter, Rev. John Weatherill, aged seventy-three, for many years a trusted Wesleyan minister.—At Kingsfield, King's Heath, Mr. A. G. Buller, aged twenty-nine, a valued helper at Moseley-road Chapel.—At Chorley, Mr. R. W. Wray, aged thirty-two an able head-master and a zealous preacher of the Gospel.—At Cratfield, Rev. D. L. Evans, an earnest young Congregational minister.—At Neston-under-Lyziard, Rev. J. R. Orlando Bridgeman, for thirty-eight years rector of the parish.—At West Melton, Yorks, on 28th ult., Councillor Norsley, aged sixty-three, a prominent Congregationalist.—At Netherbury, Dorset, Rev. and Hon. A. R. Spring-Rice, for twenty-five years vicar of the parish.—At Barnsley, Mr. Charles Methley, bank manager and Christian worker.—At Milton, Wilts, on Nov. 16, Mrs. Ferris, beloved and much respected by all who knew her.—At Stamford, suddenly, Mr. John Henry Kellam, aged fifty-seven years, for many years a devoted preacher of the Gospel, speaking at eight services during the last week of his life.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

A SPECIAL feature of this week's issue is the concise survey of work being done by some of our well-accredited mission agencies (pp. 16-25). It is impossible to estimate the blessing such service is to the country. It is the most effective answer to infidelity. Without it life in many places would be unlivable. All are laid under obligation to it. These recitals are not "mere appeals"; they are replete with incident and interest. They will also guide our friends in directing some of their Christmas gifts.

The Christmas of the year 1897 will, we fear, be a sad one to many thousands of people in England, unless those who have the means and whose hearts God has touched will generously help to relieve the distress of their unfortunate brothers and sisters. Surely if the Christmas Bells have any message at all, it is one of peace on earth and good-will to men; a message which teaches that even as Christ gave Himself for us, so we should be willing to give ourselves and our substance to relieve the misery around us.

In view of the first week in the New Year, which is usually set apart by the churches of the country for special prayer, there is raised before us the necessity for more definiteness in petition. The Evangelical Alliance has set out a list of subjects—one for each night of the week—but these, of course, are mere headlines, and it rests after all with those who lead the congregations to put their wants in precise and purposeful language. Prayer-meetings would be far more real if, instead of using circumlocutions to describe the person, place, or institution, we come straight to the point and used the name commonly accepted amongst us. Mr C. H. Spurgeon used to shock some people by praying, "Lord, bless our dear friend Gough." Such definiteness would, at any rate, preserve the minds of the audience from much wandering and wondering, and engage sympathetic response.

A correspondent in Ireland, writing on the prevalence of intemperance in that land, says :

At this season of the year it is specially desirable that all temperance workers should rally their forces, and make every possible effort to prevent Christmas becoming a time of excess and self-indulgence. If we followed Paul's example and only "pleased our neighbour for his good to edification" (Rom. xv. 2) there would be a wonderful outflow of peace and goodwill amongst all mankind this blessed Christmastide.

Lord Rosebery has made an amusing speech at the Gimcrack Club in defence of the Turf, but his blessing was almost a curse. It seems that he seldom goes to a race, and when he does go it is as late as possible, and he returns as soon as the race in which he is interested is run. He also dissuaded persons who were inclined to spend their time and money on the Turf from doing so; it is expensive, too engrossing, and its rewards are poor as compared with its disappointments. The grand inducement and attraction to go on seems an indefinite hope of becoming the owner of the horse of the century. His lordship appeared carefully to avoid any references to the immoral condition of the turf, and its pernicious influence over thousands of men, women, and boys; and no fair judgment can be formed if these are omitted. Lord Rosebery has not yet come to understand the grounds of objection to his favourite sport taken by some of his political allies and by all the earnest Christians of the land. Perhaps if he visited the neighbourhood of Epsom Downs at midnight after Derby Day he might receive some illumination.

For work to be horrible in a workshop is bad enough, but when it is horrible at home, under the roof that should be a refuge, and by the fireside—if there is any fire—that ought to be a place of peace and joy, it is more horrible still. Yet home is a dungeon, a pest-hole, a place of anguished toil and bitter tears, to more than we can count. At home shirt-finishing is starvation, being done for five farthings an hour. One woman who finished trousers was so poorly paid that she gave up, because she said that it was "easier to starve without the work." Another woman, who had buried seven little children, said, through tears of sorrow and thankfulness, "God took most of my bairns. He's the best friend we poor folks have." Miss Irwin, who has searched the miseries of home-work out, thinks that the State, by making it troublesome and dangerous to give out work, might perhaps gradually bring about the abandonment of home-work. But this, again would be a great hardship to many. What is wanted is to bring the "sweater" to book in some tangible and decisive manner.

The Bishop of London spoke very sensibly on the promotion of purity when he declared that we had gone seriously astray in our conceptions of what it was proper to teach the young in order that they should be best equipped to avoid temptations to impurity. Knowledge of physiology, which it was essential for the young to have, was withheld from them through "super-refined delicacy." The common conceptions of what ought to be known and what unknown were "unnaturally, hopelessly, and hideously wrong." He condemned parents for allowing their children to go out into the world without that knowledge on vital subjects which in itself would be a safeguard to them. He urged clergymen to employ certain opportunities that come to them to speak to boys and young men on purity of life, and thought that Christian physicians might do a good work. No doubt of it. Let good men take the place of bad men in communicating knowledge that must be gained sooner or later, and thousands will have reason to bless them for it.

If a startling report in the papers be based on truth, the old alchemist will-o'-the-wisp "how to transmute the metals" has become a scientific fact, and gold can now be manufactured from silver by a chemical process. This has been done by Dr. Emmens, of New York, who has convinced Sir William Crookes, the great chemist, of the genuineness of the result. The process will have a profound effect for a time on the world's currency, for, of course, the value of gold is due to its scarcity. But it will leave the world in the end just where it is. The gold fever, like the metal, will also be "transmuted," not destroyed, and so long as the human heart is unchanged there will be no difference in the passion for possession, and the fierce struggle for wealth. When gold becomes as cheap as iron, the instinct for greed will find some other idol. Poverty will not be done away with by any philosopher's stone. The world must be transformed "in the spirit of its mind," and set its "affections on things above and not on things on the earth."

Far larger issues are involved in the engineering struggle than most persons appear to see. We referred some time ago to the unfortunate military spirit that had crept into it and now Professor Brentano, of Munich, who has made a special study of trade unions in our country, has pointed out the danger there is to our social peace if these voluntary combinations of working men, formed for the purpose of affording help in time of sickness and counsel and aid in dealing with masters, are destroyed. We have no sympathy with unions that coerce working-men themselves, and terrorise masters; neither have we with masters who want to break the power of the men. Let each respect the other. If this may not be, and if the masters are bent on destroying the unions, then let us think what will ensue. Professor Brentano says :—

But this failure would by no means mean the triumph of the employers. It would mean the strengthening of the revolutionary tendencies all over the world. England which hitherto boasted of the absence of a revolutionary party of any serious importance would henceforth in this rival with the Continent. The end would but be the most serious disorder, with all the evil actions and reactions attending it.

Can the skill of our statesmen and the benevolence of our philanthropists and the earnestness of our Christians do nothing to prevent such a catastrophe?

One of the speakers at the Derby Federation last week touched on a very sad side of London life, when he said that hundreds of men went from the suburbs to their work in the City or West-End so early in the morning and returned home so late at night that they never see their children to speak to from Sunday night until the following Saturday. We know that this applies, not merely to manual labourers, but also to many who are higher up in the commercial scale. We pride ourselves upon our British home-life as being the bulwark of national morality and strength, but the home-life of these men must be a very negative thing indeed. How blessedly welcome must the Sabbath rest be to such workers! These are the people who would suffer most by the encroachments which are repeatedly made upon the Lord's Day.

The religious test is applied to the applicants for a large number of situations, but the German Emperor is apparently wishful to apply it also to his soldiers. He is reported to have said the other night: "He who is not a worthy Christian is not a worthy Prussian soldier." We have read and known of soldiers who have been eminent Christians, but how strangely ignorant the Kaiser must be of the essential spirit of Christ to make such a statement as this. If the wish were gratified there would be no standing armies in Europe to-day. Bloodshed and war are among those things which the Prince of Peace came to put an end to.

To the Society of Friends has been committed in a very special manner the responsibility and privilege of teaching and upholding the great Christian duty of nations living in peace. They have a right to be heard on the ground of their consistency, and also because they have studied the subject in all its bearings. We are, therefore, glad that they have issued "An Appeal to the Nation" at this time of clamour for another increase in our military power. They take their stand upon the doctrine that war is unlawful for the Christian, and that it is his duty to follow our Lord's teachings regardless of consequences. They say:—

> We hold the teaching of Christ in these matters to be as binding on the State as on the individual, and we believe that a nation which from the highest reasons of duty refused to fight would occupy the noblest of all positions.

They point out that since 1884 our current expenditure on the Army and Navy has risen from twenty-eight millions to forty-two millions, an increase of fifty per cent. in thirteen years. This is criminal waste when we think of the poverty at home and the famine in India.

The idea of avenging France for the losses it sustained in 1870 is said by a Paris paper to be by no means popular among young men. This is a good sign, for the young men would have the burden and cost of the work. Their opinion is said to be summed up in this wise: "We were born after the war of 1870, know nothing about it, and think it is best to let bygones be bygones." The rest of the world will endorse that view.

There are two sorts of preachers—one is occupied with his address, his argument, his point, his interpretation, his view, his doctrine; the other is occupied with the message he brings from God to men. He is "the messenger in the Lord," and his chief concern is that men shall hear and understand the message he brings to them from God.

Some men are spoiled as evangelists by becoming teachers. They learn further truths, and are more concerned to get these stated than to give the people instruction as they are able to bear it—unlike the Lord Jesus Himself, who said, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." And another feature in the teaching of our great Example is overlooked: "Without a parable spake He not unto them." The illustration which makes the truth intelligible is as needful as the statement of the truth itself. Mr. Moody said one day, "It is worth going a thousand miles to get a new illustration of the Gospel.'

In a posthumous volume of addresses "Yet Speaketh," just published, delivered by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, U.S.A., there is a chapter on Personal Preaching worthy of earnest consideration. It is matter that does not receive the attention it deserves. It is vital to a minister's success that he should know how to deal with individual souls; and he often requires more courage to preach to one than to preach to a thousand. Dr. Gordon advocates three ways of reaching this end, each illustrated by striking instances; first, the direct method, secondly the indirect method, by which he means that present circumstances should be turned into account; and thirdly, the impersonal method, which means talking with men, but not at them. A prayerful study of this searching address and of the whole book, which is full of excellent matter, would greatly help to revive a habit that is, we fear, falling into abeyance among our younger ministers.

In this connection there is a text often misquoted, that in its true form is most appropriate. "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season," says the Scripture (2 Tim. iv. 2); not, as often used, "Be instant in season and out of season." The thought, as Dr. Gordon points it, is "unseasonably in season"—"make an opportunity out of an inopportune occasion." "The highest art in religious conversation is just this: to give such a turn to the conversation, to make such use of the circumstances in which you are placed, that they shall help you to present the claims of Christ to souls." This needs rare wisdom and tact, and it is largely because a method needing such delicacy of handling has been blunderingly and foolishly spoiled that it has been so largely discredited. That is no reason, however, why it should not be revived in the spirit of a "sound mind," and in dependence of the Divine guide.

Just as we go to press we receive from Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster an advance copy of their forthcoming AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF C. H. SPURGEON (Vol. I.). We shall have more to say of it in a succeeding issue. Meantime, it is sufficient to state that, being "compiled from his diary, letters, and records, by his wife and his private secretary," it is sure to prove a volume of exceptional interest. (Price 10s. 6d.)

A certain section of writers sometimes speak as though the function of Nonconformity had been accomplished in the reform of certain abuses in the Church of England. This was specially urged by Rev. R. C. Nightingale in a recent article in the Contemporary Review, and in this month's issue, Dr. W. T. Davison publishes a trenchant reply under the heading, "The Spirit of Modern Methodism." His point is that Methodism not only embraces throughout the world adherents to the number of 25,000,000, but that it is exercising a deep and constantly-increasing influence outside its own borders; that it has won this success, not by a negative protest against certain evils and abuses in the State Church, but by its positive evangelical teaching, by its message to the poor and the lower middle classes, by its earnest cultivation by preaching, by its elasticity of method in adapting its machinery to the varying needs of the population, and by its "maintenance of a joyful, hopeful, earnest, large-hearted, brotherly, and helpful Christianity." So long as Methodism can show such results it has the future as well as the past with it.

In a very able and helpful leader on "Religion and the Press" in the Church Times, attention is called to the curious attitude of our great dailies and secular journals towards the question of religion just now. The writer calls attention to the impatience with which the Press deals with the question. While it cannot be called irreligious, "it lacks the note of definite religious belief." It seems to be rather falling into the attitude of the sceptical Latin poet who extended his patronage to the gods of popular belief on the ground not of their reality but of their social utility. One of the causes of this indifferentism is the lack of thought and reading on the great mysteries of life, and the great doctrines of religion. Another is the sensuous or "hedonistic" sentiment of many journalists, who in this matter reflect the mood of the reading public. At the same time, the Church Times seems to ignore the recent improvement in the attitude of the Press. Better times seem to be in store. We need men of faith on our great journals more than in any sphere of life. There are always grand opportunities for doing good in this direction.

The deepening and extension of the sentiment of humanitarianism during the past century is seen in nothing more vividly than in the reform of the prison system. How extraordinary is the change since John Howard first turned the public mind in that direction may be judged from the account just published by Mr. Tighe Hopkins of "The Dungeons of Paris." To us it seems almost incredible that such atrocities should ever have been perpetrated in countries even nominally Christian as are there recorded; and yet it is certain that our own prisons of long ago were little better. The reformation that has taken place is the simple result of the acceptance of the Gospel estimate of the human soul, even in its lost and criminal condition. At his lowest and worst, man is an object of pity and regard to Jesus Christ. Slowly we have learnt that this should make us merciful to the criminal, that we should make his punishment as remedial as possible, and give him a real chance of reclamation. This new method has justified itself beyond all expectation, and has opened a fresh hope and a new social ideal.

While we are rejoicing that the Evangelical faith is growing in Italy, we must not overlook the fact that the Romish Church is, according to a correspondent of The Westminster Gazette, rapidly gaining a certain hold upon the people It would seem as if an emissary had been sent to England to study the plans of the Salvation Army, and had returned to Italy, and was carrying them out. The suppleness and versatility of that church are reasserting themselves, as they did after the Reformation. Any quickening of the Divine life among the people always sets up a reforming process inside the church. All over Italy there are now parochial committees with the avowed object of working out the principles of piety and charity which are dictated by the church; these committees are under diocesan committees, these under provincial committees; and these under the holy see. There is a people's secretariat to give legal advice and assistance in business matters to the poor and illiterate; there are economical kitchens, refuges, public dormitories, mutual aid societies, etc. The rural loan fund banks find the husbandman money. The State only taxes the people, but the church aids them.

A Famine Commission has been appointed to make tours in various provinces of India, and prepare a report on the lessons taught by the recent famine and the experience gained during its progress. Will it do any good? We are not very sanguine. At the beginning of this famine, we had many assurances that the Government was ready for any emergency, and yet this has been one of the most destructive famines, if not the most destructive, that India has ever known. It might have been worse, no doubt, but it is intolerable to see the means of the country swallowed up in warlike preparations and expeditions, and the people allowed to perish by the million. The new commission may do some good, if its recommendations are remembered and acted upon, but these reports are strangely ignored.

The Sin of Achan.

I.—IN ITS RELATION TO GOD.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

"I will not be with you any more, except ye destroy the devoted thing from among you."—Joshua vii. 10-12, R.V.

TO the superficial observer the dealings of God with Achan and with Israel look very much like petty resentment and revenge. The wonderful day of conquest at Jericho has been quickly followed by the fearful defeat at Ai, all because one man had hidden in his tent a Babylonish garment, a wedge of gold, and shekels of silver. To rightly understand the Divine action in this case, we must discuss the question of sin in the light of first principles, and there is no subject upon which quiet study and deep heart meditation is more needed.

We of the Church of God live in this age, and its very atmosphere touches and influences us almost unconsciously. This is the day when sin is excused, we being told that it is our infirmity, and very much the result of a man's ancestry; something dependent upon temperament, beyond personal control, and rather to be pitied than punished. We find in the records of God's dealings with his peculiar earthly people an important corrective for this spirit of the age.

There is, however, no perfect analogy which may reveal what sin is in God's sight; hence the necessity of getting back to first principles, as revealed in the Word of God. The relation of child to parent, or subject to king is so far removed from the relation of man to the Divine, that illustrations drawn from such relationships cannot afford a perfect revelation of what sin really means. For that reason I refer you, of set purpose, to the early verses of Genesis (iii. 1-6).

MAN IS A WORK OF GOD.

In all the complex mechanism of his nature, then, man is a work of God. Every side of his being is a thought of God, and no one but God perfectly understands him. This is equally true in the physical, mental, and spiritual spheres. Moreover, man is the creation of God, as part of a whole. No man liveth unto himself alone, but, from the beginning he has been put into families and nations. Taking these truths in the simplicity of teachable children, we advance another step, and say that the essential element in the creation of man is love. The thought of creation was the movement of love; and the laws under which this child of the Eternal Love, man, is placed, are the laws of love. It is of the utmost importance that my whole being, physical, mental, spiritual, be homed in God. If I break the law of God, in any one of these relations, I must suffer the penalty which comes within the compass of that broken law.

I am, on every side of my nature, a child of God. My whole life is, therefore, a part of divine wisdom and force; and the revelation which comes from this truth upon the whole question of sin is very clear and very remarkable. Man stands out distinct from every other branch of creation, in that he has an attribute of the Divine in the realm of his own will. He has to come into the sphere of tenderness and strength by willing response to the laws under which he is placed. Sin is the act which takes a life belonging to God outside that realm of law which is rooted in the love of God.

THE GENESIS OF SIN IS DOUBT, and this in turn is quickly succeeded by unbelief and actual rebellion. Not only is God's law thus broken but his love is thwarted. Man moved out of the realm of love, by the action of his own will, the moment he moved out of the realm of law; and the whole mechanism of human life went wrong the instant he moved away from true and beneficent government. Wreckage immediately follows outlaw—the physical is doomed, the mental is limited, the spiritual dies, the divine is prostituted.

We have a remarkable parallelism between the garden scene of Eden and what John names in his first Epistle (ii. 16) as the sum and substance of lawless life, "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." Watching the process of Eve's temptation, we see the gradual progression by which the soul of man is led on to open rebellion, lifting the fist to smite God in the face, saying, "Henceforth my life is to be lived within the dictates of my own pleasure." That is the true picture of sin—a removal of human life out of the sphere of divine law into that of self-pleasing; consequently, out of the realm of infinite love into places of wreckage and ruin. Close upon that first act of disobedience, a threefold agony, intensified by subsequent perpetual transgression, swept down upon humanity; an agony of sorrow, sin, and mystery, all of which found marvellous expression in the words of Jesus upon the cross, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" Here our Lord fathomed the inner heart of all sorrow, the deepest darkness of all sin, and the source of all human mystery. Thus, we learn that

SIN IS NO LIGHT MATTER.

Whenever God has been severe upon sin, the severity has been that of love to man. Repeatedly, in the history of mankind, God has, in infinite pity for, and tenderness towards, unborn generations, swept away peoples sunk to the lowest level of degradation. God chooses the right time for such action, and we may rest assured that the latest examples of national corruption in Turkish misgovernment must and will perish, because He reigns.

Jericho, which was the heart and centre of ancient ungodliness, had fallen before Israel, the representation of God's righteousness. What, then, means this reverse at Ai? Achan, ostensibly with Israel, in lusting after things devoted to cursing and destruction, discovers the very root principle of rebellion against God which eventuates in the downfall of Philistia. In the severity of infinite love, God pulls his people up on the threshold of calamity, else the whole of Israel would be corrupted by the bad influence of that one life. Sharing Jericho's original sin of rebellion, Israel must have eventually shared its downfall and overthrow.

From this subject arise some main considerations which we may well solemnly face. First, Sin cannot be concealed from God. The eternal sensitiveness of love discovers sin far more surely than the eternal vigilance of justice ever could do. How much we need to live within the kingdom of God! If we take the great broad outlook in our land, we find that, for all the purposes of a powerful, aggressive Christianity, the Church of Christ is being defeated all along the line. What do the vested interests of evil care about us? Who persecutes us to-day? It is individual members rather than the corporate Church who go up against impurity, intemperance, and gambling. Why? Because the sins against which we profess to wage war are tolerated in our borders and hidden in our tents. Thank God, then, for that sensitiveness of Divine love which permits our defeat, if thereby we be saved from worldly corruption.

No rush to battle will atone for sin in the tent. Possibly no man was more eager for the fray than was Achan, but God counts power to fight as nothing if the tent be defiled. You may be prominent in the pulpit, on the platform, in the forefront of aggressive movements; while God measures service not by activity in battle, but by what He sees in the home.

Then, God never swerves from his purpose. The defeat at Ai was a token of love to Israel no less certainly than was their victory at Jericho. No history in holy writ is more prophetic of love's triumph than the words of sternest wrath and the deeds most terrible in punishment of evil. If God were such an one as man, then would He excuse that devilish habit which you hide from others and yet cherish. Because God is love, in the infinite and eternal sense of that word, He never can condone or excuse sin in any one. The infinite pity of his heart, the eternal love of his nature, the everlasting riches of his compassion—these are the things which the principle of sin which has brought wounds, woe, and sorrow upon the whole human race. His love to man is a fire in which nothing but purity can live. There is, therefore, no contradiction in the statements that "God is love" and "Our God is a consuming fire." That question of Isaiah, "Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" has no reference to hell, but is rather the prophet's description of heaven; for he gives an answer which indicates that the favoured ones are men of pure heart and clean hands, who have not lifted up their souls to vanity. If thou hast been to the cross of Christ for cleansing, so that thy sin is put away by his sacrifice; and if, by grace, thy nature is pure—then thou art the man that dwellest in the everlasting burning of an infinite unquenchable, divine love. But if in thee is an impure thing; if down in thy life is some wedge of gold which tells the story of lust for that which is forbidden of God—then the fire must be to thee a devouring flame which already burns upon thy life, depriving thee of physical powers, blunting thy mental faculties, and shrivelling thy spiritual forces. God becomes, by the very effect of his infinite love, the destroyer of all evil. Were it otherwise, eventually nothing but impurity would live. It is because, along every avenue of evil, I discover God contradicting, negativing, driving back, that I have any hope whatever about the future of humanity.

WHAT ABOUT OUR INDIVIDUAL LIVES?

Let us yield ourselves to the fires of God, that his desire for our purification may be realised and accomplished.

I shall know by the gleam and glitter
Of the golden chain you wear,
By your heart's calm strength in loving,
Of the fires they have had to bear.
Beat on, true heart, for ever,
Shine bright, strong golden chain;
And bless the cleansing fires,
And the furnace of living pain.

Entire Surrender.

(From the German.)

THE heart of man must something love,
Nor can it rest in aught below;
Lord, here's my heart! the gift approve,
It Thee would love, it Thee would know.

Though all the world my choice deride,
Yet Jesus shall my portion be;
For I am pleased with none beside;
The fairest of the fair is He.

Sweet is the vision of thy face,
And kindness o'er thy lips is shed;
Lovely art Thou, and full of grace,
And glory beams around thy head.

E'en while I hated Tho didst love
And o'er thy rebel creature yearn,
For me Thou pleadest still above,
And shall I not such love return?

. . . . .

Thy sufferings I embrace with Thee,
Thy poverty and shameful cross;
The pleasures of the world I flee,
And deem its treasures only dross.

To nought beside my soul would tend,
For Thee I all things would resign,
Nor would I those affections lend,
Which ought to be entirely thine.

Be daily dearer to my heart,
And ever let me feel Thee near;
Then willingly with all I'd part,
Nor count it worthy of a tear.

O keep my bosom true to Thee
Ere yet my mortal work is done,
And till thy face in heaven I see
To be with Thee for ever one.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Notes from Peru.

By Dr. HARRY GUINNESS.

Callao, Sept. 27.

IT has been deeply interesting to skirt this South American coast, in much the same way as I previously skirted the African coast, calling at the various ports where cargo is discharged or taken on board, and gleaning impressions of people and places otherwise to us unknown. Since leaving Guayaquil the coast has been sandy and deserted. Sandy shores rise into sandy hills, which are again backed by apparently sandy mountains, and on landing we found the streets, too, sand! At Payta we saw one single tree, but as a rule no vegetation greets the eye in this rainless region.

A busy market was in progress in the empty river bed at Payta, where every seven years a flowing torrent, caused by abundant tropical downpour, rushes out into the astonished ocean, which for six years previously had lacked any evidence of rainfall. Spiritually, as well as physically, the arid lands around us here need no mere showers, but a saturating flood.

Steaming steadily south in view of the rising ridges of the lower Andes, we sometimes saw at sunset mountain ranges five deep, and anticipated with delight the opportunity of visiting this magnificent region, when in a few days we shall plunge back from the coast into the lofty altitudes of the interior.

It was a great joy when, passing inside the long protective island which forms a natural harbour for Callao, we at length heard the rumbling of the anchor chain, and waited in the misty light of morning for the arrival of the doctor who has to pass the ship before we land. Soon in an approaching boat we descried Messrs. Stark, Jarrett and Backhouse, and after a joyful meeting praising God, we came to land.

Mr. Peters and his wife put up with brother Jarrett in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Peterson, who have been here for forty years, and have welcomed almost every missionary who has come to this country. I was the guest of Mr. Stark, whose wife looks bright and well, and reminded me much of Doric Lodge and of all the dear old home scenes. One little girl called Jessie clings around her neck, and calls her mother, whilst who, until lately, could not speak a word of Spanish, but only her native Quichua tongue, completes the family. She has been given to Mrs. Stark much as a Congo child comes to live with the missionaries, and is full of laughter and singing. Just now, poor child, she is suffering with a bruised leg, and has to lie down all day; but, in spite of her pain, she is as lively as a cricket, and devoted to her doll and to a tiny fish which swims about in a little bottle of water. These precious objects she likes to have close by her, and never tires of playing with them.

BLESSING AT CALLAO.

We arranged a series of special services during my few days' tarriance in Callao, and the Lord gave the work a rich blessing. Through the Congo lecture and men's meeting we reached a section of the community usually outside all church or chapel influence. We had a number of inquirers yesterday, and no such gathering of men has ever before been seen in Callao at a religious service. The meetings are held in a fire brigade hall, the place most suitable as being neutral ground.

A big, burly fellow of Danish origin, leaving today for the mines of Bolivia, was much affected, and after prayer with us came with another to Mr. Stark's house, and there gave his heart to God. We have given him a Bible and a supply of tracts, as he is plunging into the midst of a godless lot of miners in the interior. May the God of all grace keep him safe, and make him a witness in that dark land.

October 17.

The work among young people brought very glad results, and fathers and mothers, sailors, engineers, business men and others were found in the inquiry room night by night. Those that work on the ships are not allowed to return from the shore after six p.m., and you can imagine the baneful influence of this depraved atmosphere on some of the fine fellows, who speedily drop into a life of infamy and shame, sinking as low in drink, impurity, and disease as men can fall.

WANTED, A SAILORS' REST.

Some of the fellows from the ships, who came in night by night, signed the pledge and gave their hearts to Christ. Several of their stories were most affecting, one from London, another from Manchester, not a few from Scotland, and one or two from Ireland. One poor boy left home at sixteen, and has for the last nine years been living here on board a vessel and making his home on shore amongst the lowest dens, and you can imagine the result. A dear man who was saved the night before, went and pulled him out of the wretched den, drunk as he was, and brought him to the meetings, and as far as I can tell a work of grace began in his heart, and a new vista of hope dawned on his almost despairing gaze. The sailors need a Rest, where they could be safely housed and looked after, and where cheery Gospel influences might surround them. They one and all would welcome such a home, and would prefer it without the "beer and billiards" that some here are anxious should be introduced if the home is started.

What a lighthouse such a home might be! Who will help to build it, and to make it spiritually what the Callao lighthouse of St. Lorenzi (1000 feet high) is—one of the highest in the world?

On the open sandy beach lies the quarantine hospital, where many a poor victim of yellow-fever has died; and the little burying ground in this desert spot, under the blue sky and the clear sunshine, has afforded the last resting-place to many a traveller from distant lands. Should we not help to give such, before they pass away, a better resting-place—above all to soul as well as body?

SEEING THE GREAT "LIGHT."

My second lantern lecture on the Congo was a splendid opportunity to reach the Spaniards. The large Shellacca Hall was crowded, Dr. Wood translating. For two hours there was the most perfect quiet, and I put in a good deal of Gospel, which must have been a revelation to some of them. As one young man expressed it, "It seemed to me that a great light shone in my heart after years of darkness." May the True Light indeed illumine these lands of papal gloom!

I addressed an appreciative gathering of Spanish women on the true meaning of the Cross of Christ—so little known in a land of crucifixes. In all, I took thirty-four meetings, besides spending about thirty hours or more in committee and consultation work, during my thirteen days in Callao.

Aintab Orphanage, Hospital and College.—A letter from this place to the secretary of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society says:—"Your letter announcing £100 from your society for our orphanage work has come to gladden our hearts. We have seventy orphans in our Home. Your gift will enable us to take in another score. I wish the donors could see the shining, happy faces of the little ones at work or play; I am sure they would rejoice in their benevolence. Our hospital grows each year, but we need funds badly for more free beds. We have 153 students in the College, and work goes off well so far. Your society has rendered grand service in these days of trial, and won increased honour and affection from missionaries, native pastors and people. Your prayers and sympathy enhance the gifts you send us manifold."

Johannesburg Compounds.

The East Rand Proprietary Company gave us the entrance to the compounds of five of its companies, so we located Brother Rivett and the Zulu evangelist Willie there, and have since sent Barnabas to reside at the Chimes group, seven miles further on, under the superintendence of Brother Rivett. His parish includes twelve compounds and about 10,000 natives. The Lord has already owned his work and given him great encouragement.

The following is an extract from one of his weekly reports: "I am sending you two interesting cases of conversion. Jim, a Zulu, gave himself up to God on the second Sunday we were here, and I quite believe he has got hold of the real thing. He works in the Comet (mine), and often when he has finished his work, day after day, he follows us in our afternoon visitations, and is ever ready to testify of what the Lord has done for him. On Monday last he was uncertain of our whereabouts, so he gathered a number of his workmates round him and preached to them with such earnestness and fervour that one native fell down upon the ground, being powerfully wrought up by the Holy Spirit. Jim prayed with him for a long time, and he promised never to smoke, swear, snuff, drink, fight, or play cards again."

Another episode he describes as follows:—"As we stood in a room talking to a group I heard a gruff voice behind me, saying, 'Hi, mister, who are you?' I turned and saw a big, blustering fellow puffing away at a cigar. I said, 'I'm a missionary.' 'What do you want here, and who allowed you to come in?' I told him of my work, and of my permit, and asked, 'Who are you?' 'The mine manager,' said he; 'and I am going to turn you out,' etc., etc. Then he began to run down missionaries and their work; said we only did it for money, etc. Of course I denied, and he declared it was true. I told him of my ten pounds a month; he swore, called me a fool, and said it could not be done. 'Anyhow,' I answered, 'I am doing it.' He then began to believe in me, and said, 'What do you do it for?' I said, 'For the glory of God!' 'Oh,' said he, 'my life is for the glory of God!' I said that could not be, for he had used an oath; and then I dealt personally with him.

"He said before he turned us out he would like to see me hold a service. We gathered a crowd of 112 together, and held a grand service. He used one of our hymn-books, and looked over Willie's Bible while I read Matt. v. At the close we all knelt in prayer, and on getting up again, glory to God, there was that man on his knees. How happy I felt! I talked further with him, and he said, 'You go right on with your work; if that is a sample, you shall not be interfered with.'"

At the New Primrose school a deep work of conviction has been going on. The natives, under the preaching of the Gospel of restitution, have been confessing to thefts and other crimes. One has made restitution for a trunk stolen from a Jew's stores before his conversion, and two others have undertaken to do likewise as soon as they get their wages. Pipes, snuff-boxes, etc., are voluntarily given up, and the blue-ribbon is becoming a familiar sight.

We paid a visit to the West Rand district lately, and spent two whole days going from compound to compound, visiting sixteen compounds and speaking to over two thousand natives. Although we met with many very emphatic denunciations of missionary work, and had to confront the objections of an agnostic, pessimist and a blasphemer, the Lord so graciously disposed of their objections that we did not have to pass by a single compound. The manager of the Porges Randfontein Company gave us a site, and we are now busy erecting a hall and two rooms in a central position equidistant from three large compounds.

On September 15 we met for our quarterly conference, and had a very blessed day's meditation on God's Word and discussion of points of interest in the work. The day following was devoted to evangelising the compounds, the workers being divided up into four bands of four each. On August 15 we baptized fifteen Basutos, fruits of Mr. Uabille's labours at the City and Suburban school and services. There are thirty miles of reef dotted with compounds still almost entirely untouched, and our desire is to place workers at intervals along this line as soon as the Lord opens the way.

American Notes.

MR. MOODY's meetings, which have just concluded at Minneapolis and St. Paul, were arranged by the Bible Conference Committee of the North-West for the promotion of Bible conferences in the State of Minnesota.

The subjects to which the Committee deem it desirable to give prominence are the following: The full Inspiration of the Word of God, the Person and Work of the Holy Spirit, the Restoration of the Jews, the pre-millennial Return of our Lord, the Deeper Spiritual Life, the Giving of the Gospel to every Creature during this Generation.

Mr. Moody never had a firmer hold on America than he has to-day. If I said that the Gospel, of which he is the representative, never had a firmer hold of them, I should be justified by the crowds who throng to hear him. It is very seldom that reporters are shut out, but the first night here at Minneapolis they could not even get near the door; the Swedish Tabernacle, where the meetings were principally held, was filled, and the service commenced before the time.

The history of this building is of interest. Ten or twelve years ago Mr. Skogsberg, a Swede, came to Chicago, and delivered addresses in Mr. Moody's Sixth-avenue Church, which were highly appreciated. He left there for Minneapolis, and preached in private rooms until they became too strait for him. Some time after, Mr. Moody was invited to open the Swedish Tabernacle, seating 3000 people. Mr. Skogsberg has not, however, confined his usefulness to this Tabernacle, but has been the means of building a number of places of worship in other localities in the North-West. I regret to say that he was ill during Mr. Moody's visit, and not able to take part in the meetings as he would have liked to do. He is a worker of so much the same spirit and type that he is called the Scandinavian Moody.

MR. MOODY MAINTAINS HIS GRIP

of the people, because God maintains his grip of him. He is still preaching the same Gospel as he did thirty-seven years ago, and even if sometimes the same sermons with the same illustrations, there is a new generation every few years to whom they are as fresh as they were to us when first we heard them.

His natural qualifications are of a very high order. If he had had the educational advantages of the present generation he would have been greater in some directions, but perhaps not in all. His lowliness of spirit secures to him the first beatitude, and the rest follows. His shrewdness and tact and sound sense are as manifest as his depth of feeling, his sympathy, and his love of his kind, in the three departments of their being—spirit, soul, and body. I have never known a man who has made so few mistakes, either in the magnificent schemes, or the little details of his multifarious work.

The purposes which are specially occupying his mind are to its true place in the estimation of this generation; the necessity of the power of the Spirit for Christian service; the spread of Gospel literature by means of prison visitation and colportage among those who do not or cannot go to booksellers' shops, and who, if they did, or could, would generally buy the wrong literature.

One sees the hand of God in the full reports which the newspapers have given of the recent addresses in Canada and the States. I quote a few passages from these reports on the subjects I have mentioned. And first as to the Bible:—

I don't have any sympathy with the people who are trying to pick the Bible to pieces. When a man thinks he is wiser than the Son of God, he had better get out of the pulpit."

Referring rapidly to many of the miracles, Mr. Moody reaffirmed his entire belief in every one of them, literally, as they are written in the Bible.

If you overthrow the story of Jonah, he said, you overthrow the resurrection, for Christ said it was a prophetic sign of his resurrection. I am glad there are heights in the Bible I am unable to climb, and depths I am unable to sound. It is a scheme of the devil to destroy our faith in the rest of the Bible, when he attacks parts of it. There is no Book in the world so misjudged as the Bible. If anyone is going to cut my Bible, I propose to do the cutting; I don't propose to have a professor in Germany who may never have been born of the Spirit to cut it up for me. I have never seen a man living in close communion with God who had any trouble with the Bible. I believe any minister who will go into the pulpit and cut that Bible up is doing the devil's work better than he can do it himself. If you are in such a church, get out; it will ruin your family.

Another thing. Some people say they believe the New Testament, but not the Old. In the gospels there are eighty-nine chapters, and 140 quotations from the Old Testament. Isn't it absurd to talk of separating them? Other people say they don't believe the supernatural things in the Bible. I tell you it takes a supernatural book for a supernatural religion. I believe the Bible all from back to back! The time has come for every man to stand by it. If we give it up this fair Republic will go to pieces.

Secondly, as to power for witnessing to Christ:—

There were other promises. "I pour water upon him that is thirsty." "I will pour floods upon the dry ground."

How could this power be got? If a man is really thirsting for this living water God will give it to him. When a man wants water, stocks, bonds, society, progressive euchre, will not satisfy him. If he wants power more than any other thing in the world he will get it. But he will not get it if he wants other things as much. If there is some sin keeping it out then put away the sin. If it is the right eye pluck it out. Some people wondered why their families were not coming to Christ and didn't see that their families were stumbling over them. He prayed for God to have mercy on those who proclaimed themselves worldly church members. He gave instances of church members who once they got right themselves had great power in their homes. How could people be fruitful when their own children were not in the kingdom, when the husband had not enough confidence in his wife's piety to see religion was a good thing. The question is, are you filled?

Thirdly, as to good literature:—

Mr. Moody, before the sermon, spoke of a work that lies near his heart—that of providing good literature for the prisoners in the gaols. In the United States there are 750,000 people that are reckoned in the criminal classes. He spoke of the eager way in which the books were received in the gaols and the good effects in the way of conversions that have resulted. It was announced that all the excess of the collections on Sunday over those of Saturday would be devoted to purchasing books for the gaols.

Other subjects, such as atonement by the blood of Christ, immediate conversion, assurance of salvation, the necessity of making restitution, the power of prayer, the duty and privilege of praise, and every leading doctrine of the Gospel were not only alluded to but enforced, and especially the personal Saviour and the personal Holy Spirit.

The papers have declared that from three to six thousand heard the preacher, besides the hundreds who were unable to get in. One of them spoke thus of the last service in Minneapolis, when the subject was, "Sowing and Reaping":—

It was Mr. Moody's last and greatest meeting. Thousands turned out in the chilly afternoon air to hear the noted evangelist, and it may be many days before the New Westminster church will contain another such audience. Every corner, aisle, and vestibule was packed with humanity, and, as at the meetings of last week, hundreds were turned away. The meeting was announced for men only, but some women came and were ushered to the gallery and choir seats. The service was unusually impressive. After a song service, in which the congregation and choir joined John H. Burke sang several solos. For over an hour Mr. Moody held the vast throng with his eloquence as if under a spell. They laughed, they cried, and they applauded. They shouted approval of his words, and "Amens" were many and vigorous. At the conclusion of his strong appeal for righteousness and Christianity, a large number of people stood up in request for prayer. Seldom has there been such a meeting in this city at which the power of the Gospel has had such influence over men. The evangelist wept for joy, and said he was glad he came to Minneapolis. For two hours the meeting was in progress, and long after the benediction people lingered to shake the hand of the man who had spoken with such effect.

I have dwelt on these meetings to prove what I said in a previous letter—that Mr. Moody was never doing better work than now.

I was in a bank on business, and the cashier said he had been told that the people they most wanted to get would not come: they did not believe the old doctrine any more. He, therefore, sat where he could see their faces, and he found that the very people referred to were there and eagerly listening. The hybrid between worldliness and Christianity which is being substituted for the Gospel does not satisfy the needs of men; and the lineal descendants of the false prophets who are preaching the culture and the amusement of human nature, instead of the new birth and devotedness to God, can see, if they are not too blind to see, with what intense and personal interest old and young, rich and poor, throng to hear the old and vital truths which are health to their being and marrow to their bones.

Marseilles.—A branch of the McAll Mission has been established for many years in Marseilles. There are several mission-halls, where evangelistic services, temperance work, and women's meetings are carried on under the direction of Pasteur Lenoir, aided by Mr. and Mrs. Quéhen and other Christian friends. The work has been much blessed, and the people seem to be athirst for the Word of God. Pasteur Lenoir wants a Christian lady, able to speak French well and to maintain herself, to go out and take up Bible-class work in this mission, and to aid in winning souls for Christ. Further information could be given by Mrs. T. Matheson, Bromborough, Cheshire; or by Pasteur Lenoir, Marseilles.

The Belleville Mission, Paris.

THE case of a man who recently called upon Miss de Broen should afford much encouragement to those who cast their bread upon the waters in confidence that it shall be found, if even after many days. One day, going along the street, the man saw a little book lying with some rubbish, and picked it up. It was a Gospel of St. Matthew. He read it, and was so struck with its contents that he spoke of it to some friends, who told him to go to the Rue Bolivar, "where some English people speak of the Gospel."

So he went, and began to attend the meetings, many a time while the worse for drink. He soon evinced a desire to break with his sinful habit, and at length signed the pledge, but fell back repeatedly. He was often prayed with by Miss de Broen and others till he got the victory. He then took the resolution never to go near a public-house again, which he has kept ever since, always praying to the Saviour to keep him from temptation and every kind of evil. Now he called to thank Miss de Broen for the blessing he had received.

Many a time has the Lord sent her an encouragement like this, in the midst of great trials and perplexities, to lift up her hands, and assure her that her labour is not in vain in the Lord.

We may lose sight of the people, but the Good Shepherd follows and keeps them, and makes them shining lights for his honour and glory. Will readers of THE CHRISTIAN uphold Miss de Broen's hands by prayer and sympathy, and help her to carry on this work, by which so many precious souls have been plucked, like a brand, out of the fire? Consecrated women who will offer themselves to help Miss de Broen to enter the many open doors are invited to write direct to her at 3, Rue Clavel, Belleville, Paris.

Qua Iboe Mission.

RECENT reports from West Africa are full of interest, and, as regards the work at Ibuno, full of encouragement. Forty-two converts were baptized recently, making a total of over 180 in the native church. The spirit of inquiry continues, and close upon 200 of both sexes and all ages attend the inquirers' classes. Some who have confessed Christ had been determined opponents of the work.

A very hopeful feature is the influence exerted by the native Christians in the towns up the river and along the coast where they trade. Their testimony has caused inquiry in the minds of many who live at considerable distances, resulting often in a public profession of Christ. A notable instance was the baptism, not long since, of seven persons from a place called Mimbo Town, several miles along the coast.

The news from Okat, twenty miles up river, is not so encouraging. The Ibibio tribe there have always shown bitter hostility to the Gospel, and the recent imprisonment of their king by the British authorities for his savage attack on the Consul seems to have deepened the opposition. Since Mr. Bailie's return he has been endeavouring to obtain the release of the king, thinking it would be for the furtherance of the Gospel. However, a letter to hand informs us that the king has died in prison at Old Calabar. The issue of this none can forecast. The news has not yet been communicated to the people officially.

Prayer is earnestly asked that the workers may be kept in the hollow of God's hand, and that all these events may be overruled for the furtherance of the kingdom of Christ in the district.

Thessalian Peasants.—In a circular appeal to the British nation on behalf of these peasants suffering from the late war in Greece, the Duke of Westminster, writing from Grosvenor House, W., says:—"I feel sure that there are many who will be glad to assist in feeding and clothing these innocent victims of the deplorable devastation of Thessaly. 70,000 men, women, and children are entirely dependent upon such help as reaches them from Europe and the United States of America, and it is estimated that £20,000 at least is required to aid them through the winter, which is proving an exceptionally severe one. I am most anxious to considerably extend the relief depôts, and to establish soup kitchens in those districts where the misery and want is greatest."

Poor Jews in Jerusalem.

At the invitation of Louisa Lady Ashburton the Society for Relief of Persecuted Jews—Syrian Colonisation Fund—held a drawing-room meeting at Kent House, Knightsbridge, on Wednesday afternoon last week. In the unavoidable absence of the treasurer (Mr. F. A. Bevan), Lady Ashburton presided, and Mrs. Finn gave an account of the work which is being carried on by the Society. It was started some forty years ago, with the Earl of Shaftesbury as chairman, in aid of poor Jewish refugees from Russia, Roumania, Austria, etc., thousands of whom arrive utterly destitute and unable to obtain work of any kind whereby they may live.

The Society has bought a plot of land within a mile of the city walls, Jerusalem, known as "Abraham's Vineyard," the cultivation of which, together with the working of the stone quarries—the same from which Solomon procured the stone for the building of the Temple—gives employment to some of these. As the lack of water is very great, the Society has constructed stone cisterns which their workmen hew out of the solid rock, the water therein stored being distributed during the summer among the poor. Friends at Tunbridge Wells recently contributed £175 for the construction of a large cistern, which was dedicated in March last by Rev. D. J. S. Hunt, of Tunbridge Wells, the British and American Consuls attending, as well as members of all the Christian missions in Jerusalem.

One of the most promising of the industries instituted by the Society is the manufacture of absolutely pure olive oil soap, which is strongly recommended by doctors and skin specialists, and is especially invaluable for eczema. The oil is purchased from the natives, and the alkali they grow. During the year £175 worth of this soap has been sold, and a much more extensive and profitable manufacture might be carried on were there sufficient funds for the initial outlay in material and wages.

An Encouragement for Distributors.

A French soldier returning from Tonkin landed for a stroll in Calcutta. A little black boy offered him a tract: he declined, saying he did not understand the language as he was French. The boy exclaimed, "Oh, I have something in French," and ran away to fetch it. He returned with a French copy of the Gospel by Luke. The soldier was glad to receive something in his own language, and put the book into his pocket, with thanks.

In the Red Sea, being ill and feeling wearied, he thought he would read the little book. It deeply interested him, and God blessed it unto his soul's salvation. He has become a believer, and as "soldier" in the Salvation Army he lately related the above incident at a meeting in Paris.

Out of more than four thousand Gospels the writer has distributed in Paris this summer, he knows of only three copies that have been torn up. More Gospels are wanted. Send to Rev. S. H. Anderson, Secretary Paris City Mission, 37, Avenue de la Grande Armée.

Chinese Students and the Scriptures.

At the monthly meeting of the Western Committee of the National Bible Society of Scotland, held in Glasgow on Monday, further reports were received from agents in China regarding the distribution of Gospels among students competing at the recent triennial examinations for the M.A. degree. At Wuchang 10,000, and at Chentu 14,027 students had been supplied. At both cities the books were well received, and at Chentu, the capital of the Western Province of Sze-Chuen, where two years ago every mission building was levelled to the ground, the authorities took special pains to show their friendliness.

The striking fact was reported that at Nan Ch'ang one of the subjects given out to the 23,000 students was "Noah, and the re-peopling of the world after the flood," the principal text-book recommended by the chief examiner being the Scriptures of the Old Testament. Through four of the Society's principal agents in China 172,000 Scriptures had been circulated in the year ending September 30. There were laid on the table specimen copies of the first chapter of Genesis in Rev. W. H. Murray's numeral type, the types having been set up by blind Chinese boys. Another colporteur, under Rev. W. H. Gulick, of Santander, was added to the Spanish staff.

Prayer for Missionaries.

A young missionary, lately called to his rest, penned, ere his departure, the following urgent plea, in which he expresses the longing of many lonely labourers for the fellowship of brethren and sisters at home:—

"When the missionary complies with the request of the church at home, to send a report of his work, he does so, not because he wants to speak about himself, but because he wants the church which sent him out to take an interest in the mission, and to pray for it.

"The constantly reiterated cry, 'Pray for us,' is not a vain repetition of words, but an actual need of the soul. Prayer and interest are indispensable to blessing on our work. For ourselves and for our work we need the intercession of fellow saints. There is so much in our heathen surroundings, even in places where years of labour have been expended, that degrades and disheartens. There is such a hardness in the heathen's heart as almost takes away all one's courage. Such utter ignorance of God is wearying. True, we have Christians about us, and the evangelists are one with us in love to Christ; but these are still young and their faith is weak, and they look to their missionary for everything. He has to instruct, exhort, sometimes to rebuke. The ministers at home also feel the want of Christian intercourse, of meeting with more enlightened Christians, and this want is often met, but with us it is not so. Therefore we ask you —'Pray for us.'

"In the mission home there is much rejoicing; the work is a great joy. This morning my first thought on waking was, 'Praise the Lord, for He is good!' And so in the house; it is all praise. Our singing and speaking are all a magnifying of the name of the Lord, who makes us so glad; and we are continually saying to one another that this joy comes to us through the prayers of our mission friends. Praying ones at home are bringing down strength and comfort to us; and in proportion as there is joy in the hearts of the workers at the outposts will there be the same in the work of the Church. We are here only as the representatives of those who remain at home. We do the work in your name. The great desire of the church is that there should be fruit on the labours of the missionary, therefore pray for a blessing on his work, on your work.

"And then this praying is indispensably necessary for blessing to descend on the church at home. 'He that watereth others shall be watered himself.' That church which does most for missions always gets the most blessing. It seems almost superfluous to speak of missions as being the great duty of the church. So much God has taught us in this nineteenth century. But just let me say this. The church of God exists for the mission. I, as a child of God, receive his love in my heart for the purpose of becoming everything for others. And so with the Church. The Lord Jesus Christ, as the perfect object of the love of the Father, received this fulness into his heart, and He was just for the express purpose of imparting it to all his people. Such a perfect imparting is his aim for his Church. Nothing less will suffice if she wishes to share in the love of the Father.

"The want of workers and all the other evils we deplore are simply attributable to this. We do not take nearly enough interest in missions. We do not speak enough about them. We do not pray enough for this our work. Prayer for missioners will bring down blessings on the missions. Therefore, Pray for us, pray. With Christian greetings from your worker in the field, "W. J. Neethling.

Scandinavian Prayer Union.—Madame de Ramsay, Wilhelmsro, Sweden, writes that the Scandinavian Bible and Prayer Union cards for 1898 can, as usual, be obtained from her; also the eight different Christmas letters, with coloured cards and envelopes (a halfpenny each). Danes and Norwegians understand the Swedish language, also the Finns. Christmas distributions among sailors can therefore be provided from Wilhelmsro. The children's colony at Wilhelmsro has four homes filled with poor epileptics of both sexes. Of this work Madame de Ramsay is owner and superintendent. The twenty-fifth anniversary of the institution has just been celebrated, with praise to God for much blessing on the work, which is growing year by year.

Oxford Letter.

[By Our Own Correspondent.]

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes preached at Mansfield on Sunday morning to a large congregation. His sermon was a powerful defence of the doctrines of grace. There were some striking passages: "A man was a fool who thought he would succeed where all others had failed. The Hebrew failed to save himself by works, and the Greek through knowledge. The wise man was he who submitted himself to God." Holding that every dogma of the pulpit should be tested by experience, the preacher illustrated each part of his address by reference to the power of the Gospel on the human heart drawn from his own ministerial experience.

Rev. E. Millar was the speaker at the Missionary Union on Tuesday week, and gave a delightful account of the work at Mengo, in Uganda. Some forty men were present. Rev. H. E. Fox, hon. sec. of the C.M.S., spoke on Tuesday evening, and his address was the most stirring given for many years at the Union meetings. Three things Mr. Fox, in the course of his speech, pointed out: The possibilities that exist in our human life, the possibilities of the Gospel, and the possibilities of prayer. In illustrating the possibilities of the Gospel, Mr. Fox pointed out that while England sent to the mission-field one communicant out of 5000, and the Moravians one out of sixty, the Baganda send one in ten, and twenty years ago they were all heathen.

Owing to the great damage which the recent storm has caused to property belonging to the University in the Isle of Sheppey, the University will suffer considerable financial straits for a year or two.

Dr. Winnington-Ingram's lectures on "Why we believe in God and in Christ," and "Why we are Churchmen," have been so popular that a similar course will be given next term. The University men have crowded the room on the occasion of this term's lectures.

The S.P.G. annual meeting was held on Monday, in the Assembly Room at the Randolph. The meeting was presided over by the Bishop of Reading, and addresses were given by the Bishop of Rochester, Rev. A. H. Brittain, Chaplain of the Madras Establishment, and Rev. M. B. Furse, Fellow of Trinity. The meeting was the largest for some years.

London Soldiers' Home.—It is proposed to name one of the new cubicles after the late Sir Arthur Blackwood, who gave many addresses in the institution. Practically he had been a soldier himself, and he loved them well. Gifts to establish this memorial may be sent to Miss Hamilton, Soldiers' Home, James-street, Buckingham Gate, S.W., with an address to which acknowledgment can be sent. Suggestions will also be welcome as to the inscriptions on the brass tablet to be affixed to the door.

Convent Inquiry Society.—The Diamond Jubilee Memorial, initiated nine months ago, signed by women of Great Britain and Ireland, and demanding a thorough and impartial inspection of convents, is to be presented to the Queen in a few weeks. The memorial has already received 300,000 signatures. In order to spread information through the length and breadth of the land much labour and considerable expense have been incurred. To meet present liabilities, together with the expenses necessary for the final preparation of the petition, funds to the extent of £150 are needed. The secretary of the movement is Mr. S. J. Abbott, 8, Gray's Inn-place, Holborn, W.C., who will be pleased to forward leaflets giving some particulars of the work to any applicant.

The Averted Strikes.—The welcome news that the threatened cotton and railway strikes have been happily averted for the present has been received with widespread relief and thankfulness. The first trouble was forestalled by a concession on the part of the employers, and the second by a wise patience on the part of the men, who hope that their grievances will be sympathetically considered in conference with the companies' officials. It is to be hoped that this conciliatory spirit will issue in a fair settlement of the questions in dispute. The amount of suffering and loss entailed upon the whole community by any addition to the present struggle in the engineering trade, which still drags along with but faint present prospects of settlement, would have been incalculable. With the winter upon us and the busy Christmas season just beginning we cannot afford as a nation to plunge into another of these disastrous contests. They always bring most privation upon those who can least bear it—the poor.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, December 19.

"Behold, I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves."—Amos ii. 13.

BEHOLD! This is like the hand which occurs in the margins of old books, to attract the reader's attention. It is God's special call to our heed.

Sin is very burdensome to God: especially the sins enumerated in this context. Look at the story of oppression in the 6th verse of licentiousness in the 7th, of ingratitude in the 9th, of drunkenness in the 12th. These sins are aggravated when committed by his own people. Just as the groaning wain creaks and cries out under its load, so does the heart of God under our sins. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" Should not we feel more as God does in this respect? Ought not we to bear the burden of sin, as Daniel did for his land and people?

What a fulfilment these words had in the life and death of our blessed Lord. The sheaves of our sins were laid on Him: for the Lord laid on Him the iniquity of us all. As He bore his cross through the streets of Jerusalem, as He lay crushed to the ground in Gethsemane, as He cried "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken Me?" surely He was like a laden waggon, groaning under an almost insupportable load.

The R.V. gives another sense which is not so true to the Hebrew, but it should be considered: "I will press you, as a cart presseth and cuts deep ruts in the road." They have discovered a process of turning silver into gold by a pressure of eighty tons on a square inch, and in very low temperature. Yes, pressure and the chilling effects of persecution, difficulty, and disappointment are God's methods of redeeming us from destruction, and turning our silver into gold. Oh, let us forsake our sins rather than compel Him to employ such an ordeal.

MONDAY, December 20.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"—Amos iii. 3.

This is the first of seven searching questions, to each of which there is but one answer—Certainly not.

We are conducted, first, to the forest, to the lion's lair, where the roaring indicates that he has certainly secured his prey. There is a cause for those low roars of satisfaction. Then to the moorland, where the bird is suddenly entrapped. But there must have been an intention to entrap it on the part of the fowler, else it had not fallen to his hand. Lastly, to the city, where the panic-stricken crowds cower before some giant evil, such as pestilence, and tremble at the bugle note of alarm. Here also, whether in the sounding of the trumpet, or the presence of the plague, there is an evident reason. Thus sorrow, causeless, does not come, and whenever it presses on the individual or the State, inquiry should be made whether God has any controversy with those who suffer beneath the stroke.

Often, in answer to such an inquiry, it will be discovered that the soul is not in agreement with God, but at some almost imperceptible angle, its metals have diverged from the main track of God's wise and holy procedure. And the trouble will remain until the nation or the individual have come back into agreement with God.

What honour, privilege, and power are implied in walking with God! Is it not worth while putting away all that might possibly burden or cloud that blessed intercourse for a moment? And then surely the converse will be true: God shall walk with thee, as with Enoch, and find pleasure in thy companionship.

TUESDAY, December 21.

"Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel."—Amos iv. 12.

These words might have rung out in Paradise. When the heat of the day was over, the voice of the Lord might have been heard sounding down the leafy avenues. Prepare, O man, to meet thy God. And the summons must have filled him with ecstasy. As a child to its parent, so must those two innocent and happy beings have sped to their Creator.

We, too, hear the summons. Each morning, when we stand ready for the duties of the day, we hear the voice, Prepare to meet Me. Each Lord's Day we wake with this same summons in our heart, and prepare ourselves to meet our God. Each illness, each fluttering of the canvas of our mortality, each premonition of our end, takes up the same appeal, Prepare to meet God. And as we hear the words we have no dread, no fear. Clothed in Christ's perfect righteousness, arrayed in his beauty, we know that we are accepted, that the love wherewith the Father loves the Son is waiting to greet us.

But there should be a preparedness of heart. We should not rush heedlessly into his presence. We should stimulate our hearts by thoughts like those suggested in the following verse. Stop and remember how great God is: He formed the mountains. How subtle his power: He made the viewless wind, and the Spirit of which it is the emblem. How omniscient his knowledge: He can declare unto man his inmost thought. How absolute his authority: the brightest morning will darken, or the darkest night brighten, as He bids. How vast the circuit of his providence, who steps from Alpine peak to peak. Let me not rush into his presence: He is my Father. But He is the Lord, the God of hosts: I must order my thoughts, and prepare to meet Him.

WEDNESDAY, December 22.

"Seek Him that maketh the Pleiades and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and maketh the day dark with night...."—Amos v. 8 (R.V.).

This chapter resounds with invitations to seek God. He makes the Pleiades, which usher in the spring: seek Him when life is full of radiant hope and promise, in days of love and joy. But He also makes Orion, the precursor of tempests: be sure, therefore, to seek him when the sky is overcast and lowring, and when He presses you to enter the boat and face the storm.

He turns the death-shadow into morning, when despair gives place to hope, when the dear one begins to revive from sore sickness, when circumstances begin to brighten, and when the perplexity and darkness of this mortal life, with its separations and misunderstandings, shall brighten with the eternal day. Weave thoughts of God into all these glad experiences; but not less so, when He makes the day dark with night. It may be that you will come closest to Him then, as the little child will sit on the far side of the railway carriage from her mother till they enter a tunnel, and then there will be a little startled cry and a rush to the mother's knee.

Sometimes the waters of the sea pour in on the land, engulfing the works of men, and devastating their toils. But amid all such scenes of desolation, "The name of the Lord is a strong tower, the righteous runneth unto it, and is safe." Oh, how safe we are; though all nature be dissolved, we hide in the God of nature, to whom she is but as a vesture, which wears out and is put aside.

THURSDAY, December 23.

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion, and to them that are secure in the mountain of Samaria."—Amos vi. 1. (R.V.)

A picture is given in the following chapters of the luxury and self-indulgence of the people. Stretched on couches inlaid with ivory, choosing the rarest dainties, accompanying their voices on the lute, and drinking wine from flowing bowls, they were indifferent to the wounds from which the national life-blood was pouring. "They were not grieved for the affliction of Joseph" (ver. 6.)

The same behaviour is only too common amongst ourselves. Indeed, this temptation besets us all. If only we are well supplied with the comforts and luxuries of life, we are apt to become thoughtless of the miseries of poverty and misfortune. If our own heaven is secure, we are apt to enwrap ourselves with an atmosphere of satisfaction and composure, without taking sufficiently to heart the needs of the great world of sin and sorrow around.

"The affliction of Joseph" reminds us of the scene at the pit's mouth: how Joseph's brethren sat down to eat bread, whilst their brother was in the pit without water, and then sold him to the travelling merchantmen, to rid their sight of him. But human nature is prone to act thus in every age.

Are we at ease in Zion? Are we using for our own luxurious enjoyment gifts which God entrusted to our care for the world? Are we too indifferent to the fate of those who live in our homes, or pour in great streams of activity along our streets? Are we sleeping in the garden, whilst our Master sweats the bloody sweat? We have but one life to spend, let it be a life in earnest.

FRIDAY, December 24.

"The latter growth after the king's mowings."—Amos vii. 1.

Our King has often to mow the grass of the inner life—the daisies and buttercups of experience of which we are so proud, the tall stalks, the flowering grasses. Were He to leave them, the entire growth would become altogether too coarse and rank for use. The lawn on which He loves to walk, with its velvet pile of grass, would become like a field laid down for hay. Constantly, therefore, He causes the scythe to pass over us.

Mowing implies death. All the pretty flowers and myriads of blades lie in long swathes of death, presently to be carried away to the rubbish-heap. From myriads of dying flowers the last expiring sigh is being breathed out on the soft spring breeze. We must be prepared to die to our complacent self-content, to our blissful frames and feelings, to our complaints and consolations, if any of them come between us and our King.

But after the King's mowings there is the aftermath. They say that the tenderest, juiciest shoots appear on lawns which are repeatedly mown. This is what the young lambs love, if they may taste it. And surely there is no such piety as that which follows on the repeated application of God's scythe. When repeated strokes have robbed us of health, friends, money, and favourable circumstances, then we put forth our tenderest shoots of love and prayer and consecration. Oh, do not be afraid of the scythe! The King loves thee too well to hurt thee. Be of good heart, thou shalt yet bear an aftermath!

SATURDAY, December 25.

"I will send a famine in the land,...of hearing the words of the Lord."—Amos. viii. 11.

Israel would not listen to God's prophets, and their voices would be silenced. This was a just retribution. As they were not willing to have the word of God, so there should be a famine of that word. The word of God was precious in the days of Samuel, because there was no open vision; so should it be again. And perhaps this privation will one day be meted out to our beloved country. There is a much larger proportion of our population outside than inside our churches: and men proudly eschew God's Word. It may be that the message of the Gospel will almost cease from among them, and be replaced—as in so many instances is now the case—by the dry husks of morality and ceremonialism. Then they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it.

We may question ourselves, whether we feed enough on the Word of God. The prophet's words come back to us: Thy words were found, and I did eat them, and thy word was the joy and rejoicing of my heart. We must eat if we would grow strong. The brawny strength of the Scot is obtained from his oatmeal. We must feed not on condiments and sweetmeats, not on tit-bits and scraps, not on versicles and pious sentences, but on the strong meat of the Word, on the doctrines, histories, types of Scripture. Oh, for more hunger and thirst for these. Would you have it? No child will enjoy its meals who is constantly being surfeited with sweets between times! Beware lest you cloy your appetite with the painted sweetmeats of the world.

"Let us not be Weary in Well-doing."

Glimpses of Practical Work.

"That Great City."

Jonah iii. 2, iv. 11.

HOW much the words imply! What associations they involve! "That great city!" I. Think of its

FEATURES OF INTEREST.

The great city is a little world full of wonders and attractions. The mere mention of London, Paris, Rome, Chicago, like a magician's wand, conjures up sights and scenes unnumbered, models of architecture, monuments of history, seats of learning, galleries of art. There are set the thrones of fashion, of commerce, of education, of justice, and of religion. Immediately we call to mind cathedrals and colleges, museums and mansions, clubs and offices, parks and promenades. We see columns and statues, turrets and domes, gilded spires and minarets. Like a magnet, the great city attracts all classes. Here is variety to engage every eye. The wondering rustic and giddy pleasure-seeker, the ambitious workman and eager student, the leaders of labour and of thought—in mighty millions are absorbed in the vortex of this maelstrom.

But the great city presents other sights. II. Think of its

HAUNTS OF SIN.

There are cities lining the Mediterranean which, when viewed from the sea, appear, in the balmy air and under the canopy of cloudless blue, beautiful as fairyland. But when one steps ashore they are found to be squalid and unsightly. It is with our cities as with the earth. The sun shines on but one side at a time; the other portion is enveloped in darkness. We may prefer to think of the sunny side only, but the darkness is not to be ignored. So we may look at the great city. It has its shadows as well as its bright spots; its night as well as its day.

Viewed thus, how thick is its night! The city is a place of crowds, and many, it is to be feared, are lost in the crowd. It is so easy to go with the multitude; naturally we fall into line; we are following the man in front before we are aware. We are walking the boulevard; a few paces farther, and we are in the slums. The promenade conducts to the purlieu. There we discover poverty with vice at its heels—vice with poverty in its train. Where the carcase is, there will the vultures be gathered together. Oh, the vultures ready to prey upon our social life—drunkenness, profanity, gambling, violence, and licentiousness! Truly, "the great city has become the habitation of devils, the hold of every foul spirit, a cage of every unclean and hateful bird." Alas for the city that should have been a nurse of the nation's virtue and the fount of its purity! It is the foster-parent of vice; it has become the haunt of uncleanness.

From what sights must the angels veil their faces. What things the eyes of Christ must grieve to see! Perhaps Oliver Wendell Holmes had this idea in his mind as he wrote:

When the patient stars look down
On all their light discovers,
The traitor's smile, the murderer's frown,
The lips of lying lovers,
They try to shut their saddening eyes,
And in the vain endeavour
We see them twinkling in the skies,
And so they wink for ever.

[1102]

III. But further, the "great city" abounds in OPPORTUNITIES OF SERVICE.

Nineveh, the metropolis of the Assyrian Empire, great in population and in power, is great in its wickedness and in its need of the prophet and his message. This is the sphere to which God appoints Jonah—a sphere of, perhaps, sixty miles' circumference. And the Lord said to Jonah, "Arise, go to Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee."

When we look at the great city through the pure and tender eyes of Jesus, we see more than features of interest to the tourist, or even iniquities against which we may rightly declaim. "When He beheld the city He wept over it," and still He is looking down upon our cities with yearning compassion. Alas, He is still crucified, not without the city wall alone, but within the city itself. What opportunities for service present themselves!

The cry of the children breaks upon our ear. That is the cry which first touches heaven. "Should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than six-score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand?" Think of the little ones, too young to know the difference between right and left, or between right and wrong. Think of the wee bare feet and the wan cheeks, of the untutored mind and the neglected soul. Those little feet may be warmed and led into the paths of peace, those cheeks be made to glow with health and youthful hope, those minds be informed with ideas pure and strong and high, those hearts be brightened and lightened, those precious souls be the jewels you are to win for Jesus. A large and important sphere is to be found among the young, "for," said the Master, "of such is the kingdom of heaven."

The cry of the oppressed next claims our attention. How the burdens of sickness, of sorrow, of temptations, of surroundings, and of sin oppress the multitude! What a struggle is daily going on in rooms which are parlour, bedroom, kitchen, scullery, and everything in one! Time, and care, and poverty, and disease are slowly but surely doing their fatal work there. Release will come only with death—but what of the beyond? A mission lies before you. Do not shirk it. You are to bring something of eternity, of heaven, of Jesus into that daily warfare. Go, preach, with the tear of sympathy, with the hand of charity, with the word of hope, and your path will be radiant as the circuit of the beneficent sun shining in his strength.

Go to them with the Gospel—the Gospel for the great City! Paul said, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel"; "I am ready to preach the Gospel at Rome also." Thither he carried the Gospel of the grace of God, and the Gospel won in that very shrine of world-power. It will do the same to-day, and if we are to have any share in the regeneration of society, it must be by disseminating the pure truth of the Gospel, and illustrating it in our lives. Let us not require to be called a "second time," but at once obey. What if the world should say we are burying ourselves in the slums and courts and alleys? Such burial is the path to glory.

I said, "Let me walk in the fields";
He said, "Nay, walk in the town."
I said, "There are no flowers there";
He said, "No flowers, but a crown."
I said, "But the skies are black,
There is nothing but noise and din."
But He wept as He sent me back,
"There is more," said He, "there is sin."
I said, "I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say."
He answered, "Choose to-night
If I am to miss you, or they."
I pleaded for time to be given;
He said, "Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide."

Glasgow. ALBERT W. BEAN.

A Fruitful Mission.

LAMBETH WALK is rich with historic memories and teeming with present opportunities. It is the main thoroughfare of a district densely populated by the poorer labouring classes, the narrow streets and courts being largely occupied by one-room tenants. Here, under the very shadow of stately old Lambeth Palace, the sacred Day of Rest seems unknown. The "Walk" on Lord's Day mornings is filled with costers' stalls, traders of every kind shouting their wares, bird fanciers and pigeon-flyers, gamblers and betting men, tipsters and card-sharpers, merchants of wonderful bargains in second-hand clothing, street-singers, vendors of objectionable papers, and a host of other characters, whilst drunkenness and blasphemy are unabashed.

In the midst of this modern pandemonium, where the Lambeth throngs are thickest, there may be found a band of workers, singing, praying, and preaching the Gospel, belonging to the Lambeth Walk Mission, under the leadership of Mr. G. Goodman. Every Sunday morning (during the summer months) this band of workers go out into the "thick of the fight." Temperance pledges are taken, conversations held with the anxious, casual hearers are persuaded to attend the rousing Gospel meetings held in the hall close by, and frequently the workers are cheered by seeing sinners convicted and brought to Christ.

From 700 to 1000 Gospel and temperance tracts are given away every Sunday all the year round. Relief is judiciously distributed as funds allow (to the poorest only), and the people are constantly visited in their homes; 16,054 families were called upon during last year. The Pleasant Saturday Evening has proved a signal success, men and women preferring this class of meeting to the public-house. Here they can get a cup of hot coffee and a bun for one penny. The hall is so full that it becomes a necessity, for health-sake, to remove the back wall, and thus have light and ventilation from a raised roof.

Funds are much needed in support of the work. These may be sent to the treasurer, Mr. J. W. Massey, 114, Lambeth-walk, S.E.

Pontymoile Christian Mission. — Our energetic friend Mr. Wintle is now in the midst of his winter's work, and seeking at five mission stations to bring the Gospel of God's grace to the teeming masses in South Wales. With a moving population such as we have, our Lord's words are ever true, "The poor ye have always with you"; but the distress amongst these poor people is terribly intensfied in winter, especially amongst those who have worked all their lifetime in the heat of the iron and tinplate works, but have, since the stoppage of the works three years ago, been compelled to engage in casual or outdoor employment, and with the first approach of winter this is stopped, and at once these poorly clad, underfed unfortunates are brought into severe contact with gaunt hunger. For many years past it has been a joy and privilege to give the sick and aged poor a good substantial dinner in their own homes, and thus cast a gleam of sunshine on their otherwise dreary pathway. The number of dinners distributed depends upon the amount of money sent for the purpose.

Flotsam and Jetsam.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S.Ed.

IT was the earliest Christmas of all that spoke the first real words of comfort to the wretched that the world had ever heard. But its great message is not yet half told!

Within a stone's throw of our churches, within hearing of the Christmas bells, within easy reach of homes of comfort and happiness, lie festering plague-spots in our crowded cities, swarming with thousands of little children. It is the task of years, of generations, to empty these rookeries, and to place the children where God meant them to grow up. Yet it is the duty of Christians everywhere to do this task, and to help to build the Golden Bridge from the House of Bondage to the Land of Promise!

For over thirty-one years, God's servants aiding me, I have been engaged in opening a little wicket gate to this road of rescue. Through that wicket gate thirty-three thousand children have already passed. Many of these have gone over seas to the far West; many are happy and honest workers in England; many are hardy sailors on board ship. Life has to them at last become worth living; the sun has shone into it, and it has the hope and promise of even brighter things to be.

But alas, the slums still exist, and the children still fester in them! That there is need to-day, as much as ever, and perhaps more than ever, for the strong arm and the loving heart, and the Christian ardour, let the following cases prove even to those who are least familiar with the need.

JUST IN TIME!

1. Five-year old Polly is a pleasant and plump little maiden to look upon. Ah! the worst consequences of vice and neglect are not always, perhaps not usually, the outward and physical! Polly's dawning intelligence was ripening amid an atmosphere of unspeakable moral corruption. Let but a few more years pass over her bright little head, and she would, to all human seeming, have been lost to all that is good and gracious. I will not, because I dare not, tell all her history. Suffice it to say that her unhappy mother was the depraved inmate of a Clare Market lodging-house.

But well did that unhappy woman know the dangers of her lot to the young life growing up by her side, and her own heart was happily accessible through her love for Polly. So I was one day surprised, and yet delighted, to receive a personal application from the poor match-seller that I would take her little daughter and save her from the evils to come. "She ain't safe, sir," she told me, with tears running down her cheeks, "and I can't abide her coming to any 'arm. Streets ain't the place for the likes o' her!" No, indeed, poor creature! And that was how Polly was added to my great flock of nearly five thousand. She is now a little country maiden in a Christian home, where the precocious knowledge she had attained, young as she was, is fast fading from her little heart, and where she will learn the lessons of purity and peace that, I hope and pray, may fence her future as by impregnable bulwarks. God bless her, and watch over the many poor waifs who are as she was, and who still need the hand of the rescuer!

FROM THE LOWER DEEPS.

EDITH RANGER (AGED 13): FROM LONDON.

2. For a small girl to be utterly homeless is sad enough; but when to homelessness is added the dread fact that all the influences surrounding have been only evil and that continually, a lower deep is surely attained. And yet concerning poor little Edith Ranger all this can be said. I am not able to say very much more about her than that she and her homeless mother had tramped the country for months, and for the last few nights had slept in our Ever-Open Shelter in Spitalfields, and that finally our matron there was able to induce the woman to surrender Edith to my care. No more pitiable instance of helpless misery has ever been relieved at my doors than that of which Edith Ranger was an example. I should be very glad to find a friend who will undertake the cost of her maintenance, who will think of her with affection, who will write to her, perhaps sometimes visit her, and by-and-by follow her, as she goes out into life, with prayerful sympathy. Is there not some reader of the CHRISTIAN whose own dear child, watched over and shielded from earliest infancy from every noxious influence, will plead for little Edith that her future may be much better than her past has been? I cast Edith upon the love and tenderness of such a parental heart.

APPRENTICED EARLY.

3. The next are two homeless little wanderers, rescued from a street life in Newcastle-on-Tyne. Application had been made for their admission late at night. Their mother was a homeless vagrant well known as an occasional frequenter of the lodging-houses and of casual wards. The boys were genuine street arabs. Young as they were, there was no artifice of the street-child's life with which they were not familiar, and it was clear that if left but a little longer they must blossom out into the fully-grown vagabond or thief, for if you want such you must apprentice him early to the trade.

The mother's past career was altogether bad; no redeeming feature could be discovered. In my view the State should always interfere in such cases, removing such children from the custody of a degraded mother, and thus safeguarding the future of its citizens. True, a law already exists which gives power for such action, but, like many other laws, this is not frequently put in force, and as a rule magistrates are unwilling to interfere in such cases unless a crime is involved, or some obvious offence which can be tabulated and proved clearly in court. And, meanwhile, in many of our large towns numbers of young children are thus growing up, a positive danger to the State, to say nothing of the peril to their own future.

TWO GENUINE STREET ARABS: FROM NEWCASTLE.

These two children are now happily placed out in a farmer's family in Canada. I have satisfied myself that they are under good, kind, Christian influences, and that they have a future before them which is not only healthy, wholesome, and clean, but wherein honest work will always be associated in their minds with the best rewards which industry affords.

HERBERT BURN (AGED 2): FROM TORBAY.

IN BABIES' CASTLE.

4. Herbert Burn is a dear little man. He was only two years of age when he came to me, and he was, therefore, a candidate for that paradise of infants called "Babies' Castle." Herbert was accompanied by his brother Jack; but Jack was ten, and he found admission at Leopold House. The children were orphans, the father having died just before Herbert's birth. The mother, a poor, but respectable sempstress, died in April, 1894, in Torbay Hospital from a complication of maladies following the birth of her youngest child. The two boys were thus left entirely destitute, but a lady living in Torquay became deeply interested in these children, and never rested until their case was brought under my notice and a place found for both within our ark of refuge.

A CRIPPLE FROM BIRMINGHAM.

5. The following is a picture in less sombre colours, but although the element of degradation was happily absent, the struggle for existence was fierce enough, and the suffering averted very real. Bernard Hart is from Birmingham, an orphan, father and mother being both dead. In addition to Bernard, who is a cripple from paraplegia, resulting in complete paralysis of the lower extremities, there is another little brother, aged six, and a young sister of eleven who is an inmate of the Blue Coat School. But the cripple and the little boy of six had been supported by two sisters, one of whom is twenty-one, and the other only fifteen. Their joint earnings in a factory would not do more than keep themselves in clothes, boots, and food, and pay the rent. Yet these poor girls had bravely sought to maintain their two brothers, Bernard, the cripple, and the little chap of six, and had struggled on to do this, until at length it was manifestly no longer possible.

What was to become of them all? Only the workhouse lay before them; yet, if Bernard, the cripple, who needed special attention, treatment, and care, could only be looked after, the heroic youngsters were willing still to struggle on to maintain themselves and their younger brother. Application was made to me. I said sternly, "No; not yet. I cannot even entertain the case until you have proved to me that you have knocked at every other door at which such a boy could be helped." Accordingly, they applied to three local institutions, dealing with this class of case, and the replies, which have been placed before me, were all in the negative. On one ground or another local help was refused to this grievously afflicted orphan boy of nine and a half, supported by two working girls from their scanty wage.

There was but one other refuge possible. He might have gone to the workhouse; but this the sisters resolved nothing would induce them to consent to. They would struggle on with him, hard as it was and half fed as they all were rather than that he should become chargeable to the rates and be branded as a pauper. It is in cases such as this, that young women, who have passed years in toil, unrelieved by any brightness or hope of escape, find themselves overdone by their burdens and at length yield to temptations, only too ready, at all times, to find victims. Application was again made to me for help. I had by this time satisfied mysel that the whole family were brought to the very extremity of want, and that the desperation of their circumstances was accentuated by the physical distress and helplessness of the boy. Our charter was and is, thank God, still in force, and so my doors were opened wide to receive little Bernard Hart. Will any one say I was wrong?

A FORMER EMIGRANT.

6. During my rare visits to Canada it is a delightful experience to meet former emigrants from the Homes, who are now doing well across the seas. On one such occasion, a great fellow towering over me, measuring, I should say, quite six feet two inches in his stockings, and broad in proportion, with resolution and purpose marked in every feature of his face, came to my hotel just as I was going out. I could hardly bring myself to believe that the fine fellow who stood there before me had once been little Jack Seddons, the child of a drunken crippled father who had been tried and prosecuted for ill-treating and then deserting his children. His wife, the mother of little Jack, had died a short time before from the effects of drink. Poor Jack! He was in and out of the workhouse nearly all his juvenile life, until, at ten years of age, on the occasion of his father's conviction, he came into my hands. Then began, indeed, a new hope and a new purpose for Jack. He had come to the bottom of one of the pages of life, written all over, alas, with painful records; but now a fresh leaf was turned. Matters went on until, late in 1886, he was sent to Canada. There he became a steadfast, earnest, persevering, quiet, and determined lad. He grew up to manhood, and up to 1893 he occupied the same situation that he entered upon on reaching Canada in 1886.

Of course I returned to the hotel, took off my hat, sat down with my old lad, and had a long talk with him. Before we had talked long together I found out the secret of Jack's success. He was undoubtedly a praying lad—a lad with true, real Christian life and purpose. He had given himself to Christ: he was a Sunday-school teacher, actively engaged in all that was good and worthy. Moreover, he had never tasted drink, and he was a non-smoker. Is not this a success worth striving for?

7. Little Nellie also comes from Newcastle-on-Tyne. Her mother is living; but with the statement of this single fact about her personal history must be content, for the rest of it I cannot for reasons already given in other cases reproduce. Everybody is drawn to this lovable little child, yet her family and personal record is so shocking, that it is difficult to associate such a sweet, gentle-looking girl with so terrible a story of a mother's baseness. The facts, well-known to the Newcastle Police, were brought under my notice, and dear little Nellie was forthwith "saved so as by fire." I never felt more devoutly thankful to God for the blessed ministry of child-rescue committed to me than I did the day our doors closed safely on Nellie.

NELLIE (AGED 9), FROM NEWCASTLE.

These cases may well be called the Flotsam and Jetsam of the Streets, the human wreckage that has been gathered in by wise and loving hands from the stormy seas of our city life. Surely one must thank God and take courage when perusing their records. Above all, one may be grateful and glad of heart at such cases as that of Jack Seddons; cases not only of rescue of mind and body from the degradation and suffering and contamination of the streets, but cases where the whole spiritual nature has responded to the call and providence of God. Al this Christmas tide of 1897 nearly Five Thousand Waifs and Strays are under my care, needing food and shelter and all else (moral as well as material) that makes life worth living; and there are thousands yet outside whom I would gladly rescue if I could. But for this extended effort I need the loving and generous help of God's people everywhere. To God's people I appeal!

A CHRISTMAS LOAN.

Let me offer a Christmas Contribution of my own to the readers of the CHRISTIAN who live near London. Perhaps every, body won't prize it, but some will. I will gladly lend one of my boys to any reader who will board and lodge him from Thursday afternoon, 23rd, to Tuesday forenoon, 28th December. I cannot but think that there are hundreds, if not thousands, of friends living within a short distance of London, who would gladly entertain some 450 of my little men who have no friends to ask them out, or to provide them with the comforts and the fare of Christmas. Let me clearly set forth my offer.

I want those who can do so without inconvenience, to send me an invitation for a boy guest for Christmas, and to pay his return fare from and to the Homes. This last may seem a strange and even an ungracious item to include in the request; but reflection will show how needful it is. Last year I accepted many such invitations, and in some cases I had to pay as much for necessary railway fare as would have kept the boy in comfort during all the days he was away; so that, after all, the expense was nearly as heavy as if the lad had remained with me. But I want this year to spare my very slender purse such a draft upon it, so that I only ask for invitations from those friends who can also afford to pay the return railway fares for their young guests.

As to the boys I can send, they may be spoken of as in four classes. First, little boys, say from 6 to 13 years of age; second, big boys from 13 to 16; third, youths (only a few of these being available) from 16 to 18; fourth, cripples (both young and old). Invitations ought to reach me at once, so that I may be able clearly, without confusion, to map out where each boy will spend his Christmas. I would be quite willing that they should not leave me until Friday, the 24th; but I am afraid that the congestion of metropolitan and suburban traffic will be so great at that season that it would hardly be wise to send a small boy to his destination on Christmas Eve.

Each boy will have the name and address of his intended host written plainly upon a card fastened to his clothing, and he will be given into the charge of the guard, for I cannot supply an escort. Each boy will carry with him the requirements for cleanliness for the few days while he is a guest, and I would ask those who play the part of host to see that all these little belongings are brought back safely. Great care will be taken that no boy is sent out who is likely to be troublesome, or who is not cleanly in his personal habits. On the other hand, I ask my friends everywhere, who are good enough to invite my boys, to see to it that no incitement to drinking or smoking is suggested to them. I simply desire for the children plain fare, a little change, and a peep into a home-life perhaps far above anything that they have ever seen before, with kindly words and sympathy at this season of the year.

All invitations should be dispatched to me at the address as below, and they should reach me at the earliest possible moment, to enable me to complete all the necessary arrangements.

The Ladies' Work Association.—By the kind permission of the Duchess of Sutherland, this Association has held a sale at Stafford House, St. James's. The object of the Association is to promote the regular sale of the work of gentlewomen, whose circumstances render it necessary that they should supplement their income by personal industry. A quantity of work, both plain and fancy, is left over, and can be seen at the depôt, 26, Craven-terrace, Lancaster Gate, W., from 2 to 5 p.m. daily, Saturday excepted. The stock includes useful and beautiful Christmas gifts

A Real Bit of Sunshine.

NO one living near the Clapham Road has a right to be melancholy, for there is sunshine enough and to spare at the Stockwell Orphanage, and to mingle with the children there must assuredly conquer the "blues." It was a cold, bitter morning when our journeyings landed us at the entrance, where we were confronted first by a fire escape, then by a number of merry, chattering boys, just out of morning school; they wore no uniform, and seemed as free as air—as much unlike the Oliver Twist sort of a poor boy as heart need wish. Besides the grounds, they have a large covered playroom, where tongues and feet were hard at work. Everywhere beautiful texts were shining, such as "Love one another," "When I awake, I am still with thee;" and everywhere, too, fires leaped and danced with a generous warmth that many a child was evidently enjoying.

This institution being as little like an institution as possible,

THE CHILDREN LIVE IN FAMILIES,

each house being superintended by a matron, who has the help of a trustworthy woman. The boys and girls take part in the household work, though they are in school morning and afternoon; and some of the exercise books we saw would do credit to our little folks trained in expensive schools.

Some well-meaning friends have afflicted the lending library with literature of severely antiquarian appearance; we were not surprised to hear that the children are far more eager to obtain bright, healthy story books, and perhaps the bookshelves of some of our readers possess two or three volumes of this class which would go round and round the Orphanage, bearing ceaseless delight.

The girls' houses are opposite those of the boys, the grounds lying between. They play parted by no formidable fence or wall (instantly suggesting thoughts of climbing), but by a neutral garden-path, and a pretty raised bank, and as it is perfectly easy to invade forbidden territory, of course

NOBODY WANTS TO.

In one house that we visited, a little girl in mourning (one of a family of ten) had just come in, much afflicted at the sight of so many fresh faces; the kind, sensible matron knew better than to reason with the child just then concerning the philanthropy which was extending its benefits to her need, but a large doll (the "baby" of No. 1 house) was brought into prominent notice, and established on the lap of sorrow; and ere we left, little Lilly was in a condition to understand a promise of remembrance at Christmas time.

What child existing does not revel in the possession of a cupboard, to be arranged and re-arranged, tidied and untidied with regularity? We rejoiced to see that at Stockwell each girl owns a locker, where such entrancing pursuits can go on indefinitely, and where juvenile treasures may withdraw to retirement. This is one of the many surrounding tokens of a real children's home, that we find is represented already in the golden streets, for children who have shared its love and passed to heaven are tenderly remembered here. On one of the houses there is this inscription:—

BRAY'S BRICKS.

"In memory of Ernest Edgar Bray, once of this Orphanage, but now of the Father's house. He gave his little savings to this house just before he fell asleep; March 9, 1880."

It seemed natural to hear that the orphans give little trouble; child-nature must be more depraved than we can imagine if evil can be victorious at Stockwell, where friends meet on Sundays to conduct children's services and a Sunday School, and where some of the young ones gather together in bands for prayer. They are taught the truths of our common Christianity, the "cottage homes" receiving children of parents belonging to every Christian denomination. Orphanhood and need are the required conditions; nor is there any voting system, for a committee selects the cases in order of helplessness.

The Treasurer, Dr. James Spurgeon, will gratefully receive any money aid towards supporting the boys and girls. A. B.

The "Bridge of Hope."

AMONGST our oldest friends and most staunch adherents we number very many who first became subscribers through The Christian. As we begin the twentieth year of our work we confidently turn to them again for the extra help we need at this season of the year. We would ever sound a note of earnest thankfulness in recognition of God's unfailing goodness through all the years, and, not least, for the year just closed.

We are learning, not only as individuals but as a nation, to attach the first importance to young life. Here, in this painfully poor neighbourhood, surrounded by thousands of children who are constantly exposed to evil influences, the chances as to their future fill us with anxious solicitude on their behalf. But with the privilege of having 164 of them under training, we are learning more as to the possibilities of their development, and we think not only of the wrong we desire to prevent, but look hopefully forward to the good which we trust will be accomplished.

It would be easy to write a long paper on the Night Shelter and Refuge alone. Every bed is always full, and every occupant has her own sad story, with its and subsequent sorrow and misery. Even these inmates are painfully young to have such a record. At our usual gathering for evening prayer, I recently asked all present under nineteen years of age to hold up their hand. In an instant nearly all hands went up. Used as I am to their youthfulness it came to me almost as a shock, that all these mere children were there because of their need of a refuge, when surely they should have been in their own homes, or, at least, only in Training Homes.

But the children! It is here that the very inspiration of hope possesses us. One hundred and sixty-four children and young girls, some perchance with memories of the wretched surroundings from which they have come still lingering in their minds, but we trust only lingering. Everything around them now is calculated to banish that dreary unchildlike retrospect and awaken fresh and pure thoughts. Regular work, regular lessons, and plenty of health-giving play, are the best antidotes for those sinful sights and sounds which is all they have hitherto known.

There is a poor little L. S., nine years of age. She came to us quite recently, and the small white face looks pinched and old. She has not yet had time to learn that there is no need for the furtive look round when any one is near, as if seeking

A SHELTER FROM POSSIBLE VIOLENCE.

Her thin little arms and knuckles bear yet the scars of bruises inflicted by a mother who has become brutalized by drink. Then there is an older girl with the same sad signs of a spoiled childhood. She has been the hated stepdaughter of a woman who once promised to love and care for her. Instead of such tenderness she has had every hardship, and for childish shortcomings, real and imaginary, she has been tied to the bed-post and left to hunger, while her young heart burned with a sense of bitter injustice. She has many traits of character that lead us to hope there is yet much brightness in store for her.

We have no need to ask if the results are worth the expenditure of strength and money. Every day brings home sweet assurance that we do not labour in vain, for although even these young ones sometimes disappoint us, we are much more frequently cheered by delightful letters from parents or mistresses sending us good news of our children.

Almost every post brings fresh applications. Some are so heart-rending we simply feel they must be taken in, but this is only made possible by boarding out others of our number.

There are calls for help on every hand I know, but the "cry of the children" is often bitter with suffering. Christmas is nearly here. Our wants are manifold. Will not our friends respond, so that in our large Refuge, and away at the Cottage Homes, there may be happy reminders that it is indeed the season of "Peace and Good Will"?

MARY H. STEER.

"Bridge of Hope," 28, Betts Street, St. George's E.

Of Huguenot Descent.

THE name of the Christian Community suggests its origin and indicates its antiquity. It is the French word "Communauté" anglicised, and it marks the period about 1665, when the banished Huguenots brought over from France their industry, their faith, and their Missionary spirit. The current report of the work is numbered 125, leading us back not to the origin of the work in 1665, but to the resuscitation of the work by John Wesley, in 1772. Few societies among us can claim

AN EXISTENCE OF 230 YEARS.

It has always characterised the Community that its labours have been by choice and continuously among the lowest and most needy classes of society.

The Workhouse, the Common Lodging House and the pavement have been the spheres of its energy. At the present moment it visits 23 workhouses, infirmaries, and casual wards. It cares for over 2,000 occupants of many lodging houses, and it sustains 21 open-air stations. In seven Mission Halls, which it supports and manages, it addresses and helps thousands of the very poorest of our population. In the last complete year of its operation it has supplied 49,000 meals to the hungry, of which 26,000 were for children. It has given a day's outing and treat to 3,570 persons; has sent 500 into the country for a week, and has, with the concurrence and co-operation of workhouse authorities, supplied 10,000 persons with a pleasant and profitable evening's entertainment during the winter months. The Community has also received 1,836 homeless men into its "All Night Shelter," has helped 2,000 poor widow women in sewing and other classes, at which 2,360 attendances have been made, and at which, besides other work executed, 800 garments have been made and sold at low prices. 158,796 booklets, periodicals and tracts have been distributed.

This mass of most useful work has been done by 450 voluntary workers of both sexes, who give their spare time to the Mission

WITHOUT FEE OR REWARD.

It will indicate the classes benefitted by the operations of this Mission Community if some localities are given where the work is done. Among the workhouses, casual wards, and infirmaries, there are found Shoreditch, Poplar, Hackney, Homerton, Holborn Circus, St. Luke's, Bethnal Green, St. George's (East), Islington, Whitechapel, St. George's (Borough). The Mission Halls of the Community are in London St., Bethnal Green; Old St. Luke's; Tabard St., Southwark; High St., Poplar; Canning Town, Flower and Dean St., Spitalfields; and Benyon Road, Southgate Road. The lodging houses visited are in Spitalfields, Stoke Newington, and Hackney.

These statements indicate the philanthropy of the movement, carried on for 230 years; but it must not be forgotten that the whole of the work is distinctly Christian and markedly evangelistic. It is spiritual work done by spiritual agents; it seeks the salvation of the lost; and reckons its chief results and gains to be the conversion of sinners to a living, Saviour and to practical godliness. The God of grace has granted to the Community very many evidences that sinners have been saved, and saints consoled and strengthened.

JOHN GRITTON, D.D.

English Episcopalian Church at Marash.—The Archbishop of Canterbury, having been informed by Rev. Krikor Behesnilian of the opposition experienced by this church at the hands of the Turkish authorities, recently communicated the fact to Lord Salisbury. It is gratifying to know that, through the intervention of the British Foreign Office, the church, which was closed by the Turkish Government about a year ago, has recently been re-opened. It may be remembered that the pastor of the church had been killed during the recent disturbances at Marash. The church premises have been greatly damaged, and it will need at least £100 to put them in a state of repair. A friend is promising £50 if the other half can be secured. Further particulars may be had from Rev. K. Behesnilian, care of Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

The Church of Rome and the Young.

NO one having the best welfare of the young at heart can do other than view seriously the efforts which the Church of Rome is constantly making to obtain young recruits. That Romish priests are earnestly engaged in this direction is well known, but possibly the existing state of affairs is seldom so distinctly described as in the following extract from the Daily News of November 25th:—

SOME REMARKS BY THE LORD MAYOR.

Edwin Macdonald, an errand boy of 14, was charged at the Mansion House with receiving a stolen watch. He had been remanded in order to be sent to a reformatory or industrial school. On former occasions he had said he was a Roman Catholic, but at the last hearing it was stated his parents were both Protestants. The father, in reply to the Lord Mayor, said the boy could be brought up in whatever religion he chose, but he produced some papers, remarking that they would explain the boy's reasons for saying he was a Roman Catholic. The Lord Mayor, after perusing them, said that a priest should have visited the child under remand in this way, and persuaded him to say that he was a Roman Catholic, or to become one. It was not the duty of a Protestant chaplain to persuade Roman Catholics to change their faith, and the same rule against proselytism ought to be applied to Roman Catholics. He should decline, under the circumstances, to send the boy to a Roman Catholic training ship, as was proposed, but would place him in the hands of the St. Giles' Christian Mission to be dealt with by Mr. Wheatley.

IT WAS SIMPLY MONSTROUS

We are glad to know that the boy (who had been previously remanded to a workhouse, where the priest visited him) was handed over to Mr. Wheatley (at Brooke Street, Holborn), whose Protestant Mission has rescued so many juveniles (and adults also) from a life of crime.

There the child will be under a spiritual influence directly opposite to that exercised by his late priestly adviser, for all the inmates of Mr. Wheatley's Boys' Homes have both in the homes daily and at the Mission Hall on Sundays and Wednesdays.

Very plain and simple are the earnest addresses delivered to those who come under the influence of this Mission, and at Little Wild Street, Sunday after Sunday, one Evangelist or another is to be found telling the old, old story to a large number of juvenile offenders, who have their place in the congregation.

We extract the following from the 37th Annual Report of the Mission. It explains what one of the evangelists thinks of the spiritual work carried on:—

"Whenever a man goes to preach at St. Giles' Christian Mission he feels that he is going just where the Master himself would go if He were now here in the flesh. During the past year I have had this blessed privilege many times. The congregations have been good and of the right kind; the attention good, and the workers ready to help in every possible way, either in prayer or advising those who sought counsel. Souls have been saved and lives reformed, and God glorified. The last Sunday I spoke there I left the workers dealing with seven who had desired further instruction in God's way of Salvation."

Young lads who have stood on the very verge of a criminal career, and who have been sent to Mr. Wheatley, have, many of them, had to be thankful for far more than temporal blessings merely.

One of the most promising phases of the Mission's work is the fact that the spiritual need of everyone receiving assistance is thought of, and upon the whole of the work the blessing of God is sought, so that whether it be amongst adult ex-prisoners partaking of the free breakfast near the prison gates; amongst the sick and dying, in poor homes; amongst the Sunday School scholars; amongst the inmates of the Women's Home; amongst the inmates of the Orphanage, or, in fact, wherever the Mission carries on its work at all; that work does not concern itself only with the bodies of the fallen and suffering, but strives to be, by God's blessing, of some benefit to the souls of men, women, and children.

It is of first importance, in the eyes of those conducting the work, to lead sinners to that Saviour who was once offered, and who needs no intercessory prayers, but only the cry of penitence from those who feel their need of Him.

The annual meeting of the Mission was held in the Wild Street Chapel, on Tuesday week. The Hon. H. J. A. Cuffe (Solicitor to the Treasury) presided, and heartily supported the claims of the Mission. Statements of the work were made by Messrs. F. A. Bevan and W. Wheatley; while words of commendation were spoken by Col. Sir Howard Vincent, M.P., Messrs. R. D. M. Littler, A. de Rutzen, W. R. M'Connell, and Judge Baylis.

The Earliest Ragged School.

NOT far from a great city terminus, with all its hurry and rush, stands a plain grey block of buildings devoted to the service of God among the poor, called Field Lane Ragged School and Church.

The foundation of the whole work may be found in the Bible Ragged Schools, with an aggregate attendance for the year of 70,000. The poor children who crowd the class-rooms and halls receive definite Christian teaching, and every effort is made to lead each scholar to the Saviour—and often with the happiest result. The elder scholars are drafted into the large Bible classes which form a very hopeful feature of the work. For the help of these young men and women in work-a-day temptations there are the youths' institute, the girls' clubs, the industrial and sewing classes, libraries, and reading-rooms. In these ways the senior scholars are helped and strengthened to meet the DIFFICULTIES OF DAILY LIFE.

The girls' Friday Bible class has developed wonderfully and become a noteworthy feature at Field Lane. Then there are the temperance operations, which, in view of the inroads of intemperance in so many homes in the district, are recognised as of peculiar importance.

Nor are the parents overlooked. There are the large mothers' meetings, the Sunday Gospel services, the house-to-house visitation, the care for the sick and the dying, and the special and carefully devised measures for helping the distressed poor, clothing the naked, and feeding the hungry.

Besides all this, which might be regarded as ordinary mission service, there are special agencies at Field Lane which merit sympathy and aid. Amongst these, the Ragged Church claims notice. On Sunday mornings the large hall may be found crowded by five to six hundred including tramps, outcasts, vagrants of all kinds, discharged prisoners, and street sellers.

Few who have visited this remarkable service will quickly forget the long rows of miserable, hopeless, semi-defiant faces which confront the speakers. Some, it is evident, have known no other life, but many have, by drink or misfortune, sunk from a higher level. The Gospel is set forth before this sad gathering in the plainest and simplest fashion, and many hearts have been broken with a sense of the possibility of pardon.

Closely associated in thought with the Tramps' Church are the night refuges, for the homeless, destitute, friendless, found in the streets. These shelters do not exist merely as a temporary refuge, but in order to bring these unhappy drifts under the influence of Christian helpers. Thus every case is inquired into, and every effort used to find work or home for the friendless man or woman. What all this means is well illustrated in

received the other day:—

"Thank you very much for the interest and trouble you have taken on behalf of my son. I assure you my husband and all my family are very grateful to you, and we all hope that the opportunity my son now has will be availed of to the utmost by him, and that he will never again fall a victim to intemperance."

All these varied agencies are in full operation at the Mission Centre, but in addition to these, there are two beautiful Industrial Homes at West Hampstead, in which 130 boys and 80 girls are received, fed, clothed, and carefully trained for useful service. These are maintained by the Field Lane Committee, and form a very important and valuable part of the work. It will be obvious to all who consider the extent and usefulness of these agencies that large funds must be necessary for their support, and that a good return is obtained for the money spent. Field Lane Institutions are indeed a potent agency for good in poor Clerkenwell and Saffron Hill. The secretary is Mr. Peregrine Platt, Vine Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

"What are the Wild Waves Saying?"

"THERE'S sorrow on the sea." These words were written by that brave Christian naval officer, Captain Marcus Hare, R.N., in an album a very short time before H.M.S. "Eurydice" foundered, launching the captain and nearly all the gallant crew into eternity. Among the widows and broken-hearted mothers of the lost blue jackets I learned my first experience as to sorrow on the sea. Since that time, other national catastrophes have happened, notably the loss of H.M.S. "Victoria," and I have found that a very important part of the work that God has given me to do is to comfort and help those that mourn.

It is when the sorrow first comes, keen and sudden, and the wife knows that her husband and the father of her children has been taken from her by a stroke, then is the time of the greatest need. "Thank you for all your kindness," said a newly-made widow to me, the other day, "and for the kind words most of all." Her husband had when the "Thrasher" torpedo destroyer ran on the Dodman rocks, near Falmouth, recently. We keep a mourning depôt, and help them in this way to pay a last token of respect to the deceased. We help in money for a while until the first crushing sorrow is over, and the widow is able to find some kind of work; we help in sympathy, and we try to point their thoughts homeward and heavenward.

The work that I represent is going forward by leaps and bounds. We have now over 1,000 beds for the men of the sea, and they are often full to overflowing, and the cry is still, "Enlarge!" Looking to God for help and for the means, I am determined to do this. I am building a Jubilee Block at Portsmouth, to contain a large number of cabins and sleeping-rooms, and at Devonport we are in the greatest need of a hall for our evangelistic and other meetings and other accommodation. Our present hall is crowded out. Only a few Sundays ago the Captain of H.M.S. "Edgar" tried to get in, but could not find a corner.

It is a reward, after 25 years of work, to see the people crowding to hear the simple gospel of the grace of God, and to rejoice over very many brave fellows who have lately given their hearts to Christ. God seems to say, "Arise and build," and that He will send the money I am very sure.

Personally, I cannot be thankful enough that after a year of

SUFFERING FROM MY BAD ACCIDENT,

I am now restored to perfect health and strength, and I seem to have greater facilities than ever from the naval authorities for work.

Our sailor boys crowd to us more than ever. We have a "Sailor Boys' Bible and Prayer Union," and many of the lads belong to it, and are not ashamed to hoist their colours, the colours of King Jesus. One boy, in company with many others, was kneeling, praying in my dining-room, at the Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport. He prayed,

"DEAR LORD, GIVE US PLUCK, help us to stick up for Thee." Many of our boys have gone home to be with Christ, and hundreds are serving their Queen and country.

To God be all the glory, the work has been his, and He has prospered it, and although a future lies before us, we go forward to meet it in his strength.

Mr. William Mead.

MISSIONARY TO THE BLIND.

THIS week we give a portrait of one who has for a long time been known as a prominent worker among the blind of London. A native of Westminster, Mr. Wm. Mead was born in 1840. His parents were poor, his mother being a devoted Christian. Moreover, the wider religious surroundings of the lad were impressive for good, the clergyman of St. Margaret's, Dr. Cureton, being a faithful preacher of the Gospel. Yet these influences were largely lost upon the child. He left school at the age of fourteen, with a reputation for fun and mischief and some educational progress.

The next six years were spent in a large London brewery, where the young man steadily rose to the position of departmental manager. His surroundings were morally bad, and at length he imbibed sceptical opinions and used bold words against God and all good men. He was all this time a great reader, but the books chosen were not such as were calculated to elevate or ennoble the mind.

In his twentieth year Mr. Mead was led by curiosity to attend a Sunday service held by the late Mr. Spurgeon in Exeter Hall. The earnestness and power of the preacher led the hearer seriously to consider his ways; and feeling ashamed and alarmed at his state of spiritual darkness and hopelessness, he sought the Lord with tears for many days and nights. In due course relief came through the influence of the gracious words of Jesus; "Thy sins, which are many, are forgiven." Joy and peace filled the convert's heart, and without delay he told those around him of the great things God had done for his soul.

To the joy of his praying mother, Mr. Mead began preaching in mission halls and visiting the sick—all this, however, to the great surprise of his worldly friends and acquaintances. Three months after his conversion, he had an experience which at first seemed to be disastrous beyond repair. One night he retired to rest in his usual health and comfort, but in the morning he awoke totally blind. This visitation was staggering in its severity; but, confident in the goodness and wisdom of God, and thankful for the years wherein he had been blessed with sight, Mr. Mead was soon enabled to believe that there was some special purpose in this special and mysterious providence.

Being at the time actively engaged in mission work, he was led out into larger effort—first in London courts and parks, with much attendant blessing. Then, after a course of study at the Milton House Academy for the Blind at Walworth, under the late Mr. Daniel Conolly, and learning to read the raised type, he sought to benefit his blind brethren and sisters, and for a time laboured among them in West London, in connection with the work superintended by the late Miss Matilda Hardy, by whose counsels, prayers, and generosity, he was greatly encouraged. In that capacity Mr. Mead visited the blind in nearly half the parishes on the north side of the Thames, and many tokens were afforded of God's will that the worker's energies should be principally if not entirely devoted to the enlightenment and comfort of his fellow-sufferers.

Having in 1863 married a young lady of his acquaintance, Mr. Mead was led to associate himself with Mr. W. C. Lester, who was conducting Bible and other classes for the blind, and for six years he laboured in connection with the Home Teaching Society in West London, enjoying the acquaintance and co-operation of Miss Verner and the late Dr. Armitage, rightly called "the Friend of the Blind," whose name is still held in high esteem by the sightless of the Metropolis, on account of his great undertaking for their temporal and spiritual benefit. Mr. Mead at length joined the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, one of the excellent organisations founded by the good Earl Shaftesbury. For thirty years that connection has been maintained; and during recent years Mr. Mead has superintended the work of the Society in East London, and taken a share in the general operations.

STRIKING CONVERSIONS.

On settling in East London in 1867 Mr. Mead adopted measures to befriend the poor blind in several important directions, and Bible classes were opened for their instruction in eternal things. The work of house-to-house visitation in Whitechapel was greatly blessed, and among the early converts was a man ninety-six years of age. Though so old, he was as ignorant as a heathen. However, light entered his soul, and he lived eight years as a Christian, never doubting his acceptance with God. When the end came, through weakness attending great age (104), this Spitalfields saint, though unable to recognise friends or discern their words, rejoiced at every mention of the name of Jesus. When no other name was sweet to him this drove away even the fear of death.

From photograph by Messrs. G. Wade and Co., 12, Grove-road, Mile End, E.

Another remarkable convert was known as Teddy Gill, who lost his sight while fighting, having in childhood learned to regard drinking and fighting as right manly accomplishments. Attending the Bible class, he was found of the Lord, and has ever since been witnessing for Christ to the blessing of those about him. God met him in his affliction, and he is wont to say "Now that I am blind, I can see."

In connection with the classes, Christian Bands have been formed for blind men and women, and temperance teaching attends Gospel instruction, Mr. Mead having long ago become a total abstainer in order to encourage reformation in those to whom drink has been a serious snare. Though the Society is Metropolitan, an important part of the work lies in East London, where Mr. Mead is Good Samaritan as well as Evangelist to his poor blind friends, and where he has several assistants carrying on quite a round of work, spiritual and social. A considerable part of the work is in the form of visitation, in which devoted men—in full sympathy with the blind because sightless themselves—lay themselves out in loving service. The Sacred Word is read, instruction is given, and dark and inquiring souls are directed to the Great Physician. Periodically, in populous centres, the people are gathered in large numbers, their guides sharing the hospitality of the Society, and are interested and instructed in Divine things. In the summer the poor people are taken out on excursions, to hear the glad sounds of the country, whose beauties they cannot see.

Mr. Mead is a man of great resource and organising ability, and the work in his hands is steadily developing with encouraging success. By his blind "parishioners" he is held in warm affection as a friend, and esteemed as preacher, and some hymns he has written strike tender chords in their hearts; and ministers and other workers in East London delight to place their chapels and schools at his disposal for special gatherings. Only recently he has been organising large assemblages all over London; and last Friday some eight hundred blind, and their guides, heard the Gospel and received welcome creature comforts at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Mr. Mead's address is 95, Gurney-road, Stratford, E.; the office of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society is 27, Red Lion-square, E.C.

Mrs. Meredith's Prison Work.

For over thirty years this Mission has been raising and reforming discharged female prisoners; yet there is still a constantly-flowing stream from the various prisons, cases being accepted from any town. Much has been done to reduce the number of criminals, but much is still needed. The criminal class is not an easy one to deal with. Drink is either directly or indirectly, responsible for their fall into crime, and everyone knows how difficult inebriates are to help; but many of the women who have come to Mrs. Meredith have gone out into the world, and are now doing well. In the course of twelve months some hundreds of women receive work, either in washing, manufacturing of good felt slippers, or in some other way.

Then there are the children of this sad class. A visit to the Princess Mary Village Homes will show that they can be taught and brought up, and made useful and a comfort to those who will employ them as domestic servants. The advance in the matter of sanitary and other arrangements, which is at present thought so important, will make it necessary to lay out at least £500, as the cottages of which the village is composed have now been built for more than twenty-five years, and so are not considered to have the necessary improvements of the present day.

It would be a great help if a friend could be found to act as patron to each child in the Homes, providing one shilling or more per week towards the maintenance of the adopted case, and letting the child know by letter or little present that she has a friend outside the Homes. Such loving interest would wonderfully help the girl through life. Those willing to help should write to Mrs. Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

The "Welcome Home!"

IS there not a sweet little song which says: "Never forget the old friends"? May we suggest that the old works should not be forgotten? God speed the new; but let us not forget such workers as Miss Child, of the "Welcome Home."

Her work among sailors has the advantage of being new as well as old, for, though commenced in Ratcliff Highway in 1877, she has this year opened new premises nearer the sailors' centre, in Canning Town, where God has already set his seal by saving souls. As in previous years, there will be the "Christmas Boat," filled with woollens, etc., for the sailors. The unloading will take place on Saturday evening, December 18th. Will "all hands" please to prepare the cargo?

"The Christian Life-boat Crew" have been busy putting off from their station every week to Missions in the midst of the sinking. This work is a blessing to the men themselves and the places visited.

Nightly meetings are held at the "Home," and a monthly muster of the "Crew" on the first Tuesday in each month. Any workers who can pay a visit will find these gatherings real times of refreshing. Workers are wanted. In addition to the Home work, the vessels are visited, books and tracts put on board, and all that is possible done for the men in general.

A pleasing record of this work will be found in a little book, with a preface by Mr. F. B. Meyer, entitled "Life Buoys," which can be had, price 6d., of Miss Child, The Welcome Home, Iron Bridge, Canning Town, London, E., or of the publishers of this paper.

When we consider what we owe to our sailors, the risks they run at sea, the temptations that await them ashore, and the possibilities of service open to them when converted, we can but feel that they claim our best sympathy and help.

WILLIAM LUFF.

Afloat with the Deep Sea Fishermen.

THE Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen was established in the year 1881, in humble dependence on Almighty God for the purpose of carrying the glad tidings of God's love, mercy, and salvation in our Lord Jesus Christ to the thousands of fishermen employed in trawling in the North Sea and round the coast of Great Britain, and in every way to minister to their spiritual welfare. Also to mitigate their hard lot by supplying them with medicines and surgical appliances and trying to improve them physically and mentally.

Begun in a small way, the work has grown beyond the most sanguine hopes of its founders, and its present dimensions may be gauged from the fact that received medical aid through the fully-qualified surgeons attached to the Society's three hospital vessels and seven Mission smacks during 1896.

The Society also looks after the many thousands of fishermen on the 800 miles of Labrador Coast, for whose spiritual and physical needs no real provision exists. In connection with this important branch of the work, two hospitals under the charge of Christian doctors and nurses have been established on the coast, and have become to the isolated dwellers on its barren shores. 1,917 persons were helped medically last year at these centres.

The Mission also maintains shore agents at Grimsby, Gorleston, Aberdeen, Ymuiden, and Ostend; the last two named ports being much frequented by English fishermen. An important work is also carried on during the spring and summer months amongst the Manx, Irish and Cornish fishermen.

The Society is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions, and needs an income of £21,000 for the support of its work.

The Council earnestly ask for liberal support from all those who have the welfare of these hardy toilers of the sea at heart.

Old and Grey-headed.

FOR upwards of ninety years the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society has been the instrument in sustaining thousands of God's poor and aged people in all parts of the United Kingdom at a time of life when but for the helping hand of the institution the heart-chilling dread of the workhouse would be realised. Through the life-pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas per annum, the recipients are enabled to dwell in their own little homes, in the midst of those near and dear to them, and close to the sanctuaries they have long loved. The four Homes of the Society—at Camberwell, Hornsey Rise, Stamford Hill, and Brighton—provide peaceful dwellings for 180 of the pensioners. The visits of friends are cordially welcomed. Sir W. Muir, after visiting the Hornsey Rise Home, wrote: "An admirable place; a LAND OF BEULAH FOR THE AGED PILGRIMS.

No less than 1,456 pensioners are now upon the books, and upwards of £10,500 annually expended in pensions. With the maintenance of the Homes and the funds connected with them the annual outlay is now £13,000, or £36 daily. To meet this sum the ordinary income is inadequate, and the Lord's stewards are earnestly invited to assist in a work of a thoroughly Scriptural, undenominational, and practical character. In a recent address Sir H. W. Peck, Bart., said: "I have carefully read the report and balance-sheet, and from a business standpoint can recommend the Society as one in which good value is given for the money entrusted to it, as there appears to be the maximum of good at the minimum of cost." The Lord Mayor (Sir D. Evans) also said: "The Society is one of the institutions in the metropolis." Mr. J. T. Morton, a constant friend of the pensioners, has passed away. A bequest under his will enables his trustees to supply certain gifts to the Society's pensioners for a limited period; the institution itself does not benefit, so help is more than ever needed in the maintenance of the pension fund.

The pensioners in London and Brighton are paid monthly, in their own homes, by the honorary almoners of the Society. This system of personal visitation is a striking feature of the institution, and does much to cheer the aged ones and provide a means of blessing to both giver and receiver. The pensioners in country districts are, as far as possible, visited by Christian friends, and by this means the committee are kept in living, sympathising touch with them all.

The ages of the pensioners present in themselves a pathetic plea to all who look with solemn and sacred feeling upon those who are in the sunset of life. 1,050 are over seventy, and of this number and 17 above ninety, all poor and needy and looking to the Society as their chief temporal support. The details of the struggles to obtain a livelihood made by many now on the pension list are very painful. Failing health has compelled some to relinquish plain needlework; others have tried mangling, but were not strong enough; one has for years kept a small day-school, but it has fallen away to almost nothing; some have become blind and deaf, and paralysis has incapacitated others.

A visitor writes, after paying the December pensions and Christmas gifts: "The dear old man, over ninety, only said to his daughter the day before I called, 'I must have new flannels,' but she replied, 'Where is the money to come from?' When I laid the cash on the table he said, 'My dear, there is the money!' Another dear woman burst into tears, saying, 'I had not anything left, and am sorry I have got a little behind with my rent, but now, praise the Lord, this will set me free.'" Instances such as these could be multiplied tenfold, but enough has perhaps been said to show the genuine work carried on by this Society and the strong claim it has upon all who love the Lord Jesus Christ, and who delight to bear in remembrance His own words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these My brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Mr. J. E. Hazelton, the secretary, at the office, 83, Finsbury Pavement, E.C., will gladly supply further information.

Martyrs and Missionaries.

THE romance of missions contains no more wonderful chapter than the story of the "Unitas Fratrum," formed sixty years before the Reformation, bitterly persecuted, almost exterminated, yet becoming the pioneer of missions, and bearing the Gospel to the bleakest and most fordidding corners of the earth.

One of the earliest missions was to ice-bound Greenland, and literature contains few stories of unflinching endurance to match the hardihood and simple faith of these first pioneers among the Esquimaux. Even yet life in the Arctic regions has few comforts and little to attract save

THE JOY OF MAKING CHRIST KNOWN.

Through lonely, bleak, desolate Labrador, among the wandering Indians, and among our own scattered settlements of fishing folk, the Moravians are at work, at Hopedale, Zoar, Nain, Okak, Hebron, Ramah, and Makkovik. The last-named station has only been recently opened, but the need for further extension is still felt. A most touching appeal has lately come from the people of Rigolet. For many years the Labrador Mission has been self-supporting, but the people are poor and are quite unable to meet these fresh demands. Another need of the Mission at Labrador is a larger ship to replace the old "Harmony," which has for so years done useful service.

In the same way

WONDERFUL STORIES COULD BE TOLD

of many Moravian heroes of the Cross in Dutch East Indies, in the West Indies, among North American Indians, Australian aborigines, Jerusalem lepers, on the Tibetan frontier, or amongst the slave-raided peoples of the malarial districts north of Lake Nyassa. This list of Moravian settlements is far from exhaustive, though fairly illustrative.

But while boundless in their personal devotion, the Moravians are a poor people. Hence the London Association in aid of the Moravian Missions is intended to help in supplying the lack in funds. Believing that Moravian Missions have strong claims on English Christians the London Association very earnestly asks for largely increased funds. Full information may be had of the secretary, Rev. W. Wetton Cox 2, Furnival's Inn, E.C.

A Young Christians' Missionary Union meeting was held at Trinity Presbyterian Church, Notting-hill, on Saturday. Rev. F. B. Meyer presided. Addresses were delivered by Hon. Miss Gertrude Kinnaird and Rev. D. Ferguson, of Formosa. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor follows Mr. Meyer as president for the ensuing year, and will continue these missionary meetings on the last Saturday in each month in various parts of London.

Whittington, Lichfield.—Mr. H. A. Mudd, writing as to the great spiritual and social needs of this village, says:—"We are turning our hayloft into a reading-room, and free lending library for lads of fourteen and upwards, we are also starting a Band of Hope and Sunday-school for the children. Will kind friends help us in this much-needed work? We shall be glad to receive books, tracts, papers, pictures, or anything that will be useful in this effort for the good of the people."

Down in the Tower Hamlets.

AT the close of this year, a record jubilee in the history of our land, a record jubilee in the munificence of giving, which ever distinguished our nation, the Tower Hamlets Mission comes once more to the kind readers of The Christian, to plead its claims for a jubilee Christmas. As one of the largest Missions in London its experience is not unique in stating that so far as money goes it has not been a record year of prosperity, and this from the fact that the vast benevolent expenditure upon various new channels, in order to do honour to our beloved Queen, did of necessity curtail the usual bounties given to old-established branches of work; and the diminution of funds has been seriously felt by some of the best known Missions in the metropolis.

THE GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL

in the Mile End Road represents the large heart of the Tower Hamlets Mission, of which Mr. F. N. Charrington is the honorary superintendent, and Mr. Edwin H. Kerwin the esteemed secretary. They have both nearly completed their third decade of service for the Lord and his poor ones, and that under the full light of public inspection at all times. Of Mr. Charrington's life it may be recorded that his youth, his tastes, his ambition, from twenty years of age, have all been reduced to the limits of his work, and a residence in Stepney Green, spent in untiring vigilance for the purification of the soiled masses around him, and for the amelioration of the poverty-stricken

DENIZENS OF SLUMLAND!

In all these beneficent efforts he has been ably seconded by Mr. Kerwin. The Hall is open night after night all the year round, and on Sunday evening its usual congregation numbers 5,000 souls. There a sound, pure Gospel is preached; there troop in from the crowded streets the lost and degraded, the weary and heavy laden; and there, through God's grace and the power of his Word, hundreds, nay thousands, have found salvation and a new start in life, for there is a large staff of Christian workers, whose delight it is to search out and follow up the various cases which come before them week after week. This makes money absolutely indispensable—the naked must be clothed, the hungry must be fed, the poor little suffering children must be warmed, and the seekers for work made presentable in appearance before they can hope to obtain it. I am sure they would be better supported if the public realised how much they owe, directly and indirectly, to such an institution. That good, noble president of theirs, the late Earl of Shaftesbury, once said at one of their annual meetings: "but for such institutions as this, he could not walk the streets of London in safety." Want of space forbids entering into detail of the various branches connected with the Tower Hamlets Mission for the last twenty-nine years, a visit of inspection there any day or evening will repay kind inquirers; but as—

"Christmas is coming,
The joy of the world!
The sunlight of winter,
Love's banner unfurled!"

—they want to do honour to our dear Lord and Master by following out his precepts; by bringing his joy, his sunshine, his love, into hearts and homes where the light of hope has well nigh died out, and with it the desire to live.

Kind reader, if you are one of those favoured with wealth, put to yourself the question: "How much owest thou to my Lord?" and then see how you can begin to pay your debt. Remember the poor! Remember the splendid possibilities of this wealth, if only you give it the opportunities. Remember the safe investment for your treasure, if only you commit it to Heaven's keeping, "Where thieves do not break through and steal," and rejoice in the assurance that "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will He pay him again!" All communications should be addressed to Mr. F. N. Charrington, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End, London, E. A full report of the work will be gladly sent to anyone who applies for it. Rose Benn.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE first Home of this Society, known so well by the above title, but the full name of which is "The London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution," was established in 1857. Originally it was fitted up for sixteen inmates only, and in those days of small things no one could have foreseen the vast sphere of usefulness upon which the early workers then prayerfully embarked. So far as is known, only one of the first labourers in the work is now alive, and he still meets every week with the present secretary and two or three other friends to seek for the Divine blessing upon the efforts made to save the bodies and souls of the friendless or betrayed and outcast young women and girls who are admitted to the Homes. This mission of mercy, begun in so humble a manner, has, by God's grace, grown into a large and useful institution. Its operations comprise a Training Home for fifty friendless young girls brought out from dangerous surroundings; four Rescue Homes for the reclamation of those who have been led astray; and an Open-all-Night Refuge, affording immediate succour to both classes.

THE OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE

Has now been in operation for thirty years, and its origin is another illustration of the working of that Divine Providence which has been seen so often in the history of the Institution. At one of the early annual meetings of the Society, a speaker said it would be an admirable thing if the committee could keep a place open all night, to which any poor creature could go for shelter and help. The late Mr. E. W. Thomas, the founder of the institution, added in reply that if £100 was received for the experiment to be tried for a year, he had no doubt the Committee would undertake it. His speech appeared in print and a benevolent merchant sent a cheque for the sum named, with a brief request to try the experiment. From that day this "ever-open door" has proffered welcome and help to young women and girls who seek its shelter. Morning and evening prayer is conducted by the matron and a Gospel service is held nearly every night throughout the year, so that no poor creature is sheltered without the glad tidings of salvation being made known to her.

A NATIONAL WORK.

About eight hundred applications for admission to the Homes are received every year. They come from the clergy, ministers, magistrates, chaplains of prisons or workhouses, missionaries, and Christian workers of all kinds. Last year those admitted belonged by birth to 243 different parts of the United Kingdom, illustrating the national character of the work and justifying an appeal to Christian sympathisers in every part of the country for help to support the Homes.

A FEW FACTS.

During the past forty-one years upwards of thirty-five thousand young women and girls have been admitted to these various asylums. A large number have become savingly absorbed again into respectable society. It is known that very many have become honourably married, while several are members of Christian churches, and not a few are engaged in Christian work, and are anxiously seeking to save others. Every year in addition to morning and evening prayer conducted by the matrons, over two thousand Gospel services, Bible, temperance, and other classes are held in the Homes, conducted by a band of more than two hundred voluntary workers, of whom about a third are ladies.

The domestic and industrial training in the Homes includes cooking, needlework, washing, etc., and last year the young women earned about £900 towards their own maintenance by laundry work that was taken in. The institution is closing its forty-first year's work, and is in need of money to discharge the liabilities arising out of the annual expenditure. It is to be regretted that in this auspicious year, which has witnessed a marvellous display of public liberality, this mission of mercy should have experienced a diminution, rather than an increase of income. Further particulars, together with reports and other papers, may be obtained from the secretary, Mr. William J. Taylor, 200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

In Rural England.

MANY earnest Christians have, within the past few years, become greatly concerned about the spiritual condition of our rural districts. In numbers of villages, owing mainly to the spread of sacerdotal teaching, there is truly a famine of "hearing the word of the Lord!" And when it is remembered that frequently there is no resident Nonconformist minister in a village to visit amongst the people, the need for some supplementary agency becomes increasingly apparent.

The Country Towns Mission is endeavouring in its measure to provide for this lack. About one-half of the staff of fifty missionaries are labouring in groups of villages, and the title of the Society would now more accurately be the "Country Town and Village Mission." In addition to the work carried on exclusively in rural districts, some of the missionaries stationed in towns make visits during the summer months to villages within a radius of several miles. They go out in the morning, spend a long day and finish up with an open-air meeting when practicable.

The principles of the Society are the same as those of the London City Mission, and it was established by the same honoured servant of God, David Nasmith, who was its first secretary.

Its method is to make grants in aid of districts when sufficient cannot be raised for the support of a missionary, and in this way its funds are utilised to the raising of a much larger sum than its own income. In those places where a permanent work cannot be carried on, the Committee are glad to arrange to send temporarily an experienced missionary, whose work is to thoroughly visit throughout the district.

The Society is now making a special appeal (the first for fifteen years) for £1,000 which is needed to pay off a debt and to sustain the work. Towards this about £200 has been received.

The offices of the Society are at 18, New Bridge Street, E.C. The secretary is Mr. G. H. Mawer.

A Practical Mission.

"WE have sometimes wished," writes Mr. Chorley, who has had the oversight of the North-East London Gospel Mission for 27 years past, "as we have looked upon our poor people, and thought of their trials and sorrows and the temporal vicissitudes constantly crossing their paths, and watch the hundreds of poor, ill-fed, and half-naked children, many of whom are bare-footed, file out into the sludge and mire of the gutters, to say nothing of the deeper moral Stygian surroundings—how we have wished a few of the Lord's purse-bearers might 'Come and See.'"

At each of the three larger Gospel Halls there are Lord's Day and week-evening meetings, Sunday Schools of 1,500 children, Bible classes, Mothers' meetings, Workroom and Factory girls' classes, Gutterlads' Evening School, Sick visiting, Widows' sewing Meetings, etc. Temporal assistance is rendered in various forms, including weekly help to aged and infirm Christians, dinners to ill-fed children, meals to unemployed poor, soup kitchens, coals, meat, and bread, etc.; also by loans of blankets, and the distribution of new and worn clothing, boots, etc.; clothing clubs, maternity loans, and sales at nominal prices of made garments.

The Cottage and other "Homes" at Lancing-on-Sea, are conducted as Christian households. Here, in the three "Homes" more than a hundred poor ones are cared for at the same time, not a few finding to their joy their stay at Lancing resulting in their souls' salvation.

Few can realise with what discouragement the path is compassed when looking upon the silent suffering of many a poor debilitated mother, rising before daybreak and toiling far into the night for the barest pittance; the weary tramp, day after day, of cast-down men and fathers vainly searching for work; the crying of the hungry children, with nothing to comfort them; the fireless hearth, with sickness often prevailing—but we must withhold.

Mrs. F. A. Bevan, 59, Princes Gate, South Kensington, S.W., kindly receives contributions for the work, or they may be sent to Mr. William Chorley, Director, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.

The "Liberator" Relief Fund.

THERE are still 2800 cases on the books of this fund, of whom 1460 are widows or lone women. 1387 are 60 years of age and over, 664 are 70 years of age and over, while 189 are 80 years of age and over. There have been already over 180 deaths through the disaster.

Our special Jubilee appeal has resulted so far in our receiving 140,000 shillings out of the 700,000 required to complete our object,—which we set our hearts upon gathering in this memorable year, in order that more than 1,000 aged, destitute, and afflicted sufferers may have the comforting assurance given them that they will continue to receive their half-yearly grants,—a partial substitute for their lost dividends, upon which these poor, thrifty folk depended for their subsistence in their declining years.

Time presses! Only a few weeks remain, if we are to complete the good work in grateful commemoration of the Queen's record reign. Five hundred and seventy thousand shillings are still required. We seem a long way from the goal, but I am persuaded it could be easily reached if only we could appeal to the million lovers of thrift among the people in this wealthy country, and remind them that these poor sufferers were really "the victims of their very virtue." And further, if we could appeal to the million members of our Christian churches of all denominations, and remind them that these sorely afflicted brothers and sisters were led into this most crushing sorrow of their lives by the influence of their Christian leaders, who were in most cases as much duped as themselves. Surely, it would have been a scandal to our common Christianity to have failed to rescue these aged sufferers from the grim fate of pauperism, to avoid which they had so bravely striven all their life long.

PATHETIC LETTERS.

Now, it falls to my lot to examine carefully into the circumstances of forty or fifty cases on an average every week throughout the year,—prior to them receiving a grant from our committee. In pursuing this sometimes painful task, I have often felt if only the benevolent public could for one brief half-hour peruse with me a few of the pathetic letters that come to me from time to time—the facts of which are all duly vouched for by reliable references—the money required to afford substantial relief for these sufferers would soon be forthcoming.

The following are a few samples of scores recently received:—

who lost all her savings in the "Liberator crash, and of whom the Reference says, "She is so poor that, though suffering from tumour, she is sometimes found trying to live on bread and water," writes:—

"Dear Sir,—Will you be so kind as to send me a little relief from the Fund? I am not able to earn one penny, and if it were not for the kind help of friends I must have been in the "house" before this. But I hope I shall be taken Home rather than go there. I am sorry to say that I am suffering from an internal disease which causes great pain and weakness, and bad sight. I often feel to want more nourishment than I can get. I shall feel very grateful for anything you can do for me. The Lord knows what I have to bear."

AN AGED FARM LABOURER (AGE 72):

"Dear Sir,—I am sorry to be forced to ask if you can allow me a little from the Relief Fund. I had £337 in the Deposit Department of the 'Liberator.' I have been able to struggle on without applying to you before, but with my increasing age, and suffering from rheumatism, I can do but very little now. I am a farm labourer 72 years of age, and at the present time in great need. If you possibly can, do please allow me something."

AN AFFLICTED CLERK (AGED 55), who lost £500, and who has tried hard, but cannot get employment, writes:—

"Dear Sir,—I am very disappointed in not getting any dividend from the 'Liberator,' having been led to believe that this year being the Jubilee year efforts would be made for payment, and that there would be something substantial forthcoming. To add to my troubles, I am only just getting over a severe attack of bronchitis, which has left me very weak, and have to struggle for the bare necessaries of life, with no one to render me any assistance. I should not have worried so much had I been twenty years younger; as it is, I see nothing before me but the Workhouse."

AN AGED SPINSTER (AGE 76).

"Sir,—I should esteem it a great favour if you or the Managers of the 'Liberator Relief Fund' could allow me something, however small, to help me during the remaining time I might have to live. I invested all my savings in the Liberator and House and Land Trust as a depositor—£200, without the sign of any return.

"I am living with my brother-in-law, who has kept me ever since the failure, and he being a great sufferer in it as well, and not being a young man, he feels it very taxing to do for me as he has done. I had lived in service all my life, and having saved the sum I have stated, and then to lose it—it is very hard indeed. I am in my 77th year, and in very feeble health, requiring much care. If anything can be done for me, I shall count it a great favour and a blessing."

GRATEFUL THANKS.

I pass on these touching expressions of gratitude to all my kind-hearted and generous helpers in the work. Truly in this case, "Gratitude is a lively sense of favours yet to come."

A HELPLESS SUFFERER (AGE 66)

lost £1230. Her reference writes:—

"Dear Sir,—On Mrs. B——'s behalf, I write to say how grateful we are for the cheque received this morning. Her case is a sad one—for quite five months she has been helpless from paralysis. This compelled me, as sick visitor of the Wesleyan Church, which Mrs. B—— attended, to provide for her a nurse, trusting for the 'necessary' to meet the expense. Now it has come, and we are thankful, aye, more than thankful, for the needs of sick ones often press heavily upon us."

A POOR LONDON CABMAN (AGED 67), who, suffering much from chronic rheumatism, was just thinking of taking rest from exposed toil, which aggravated his complaint,—and who lost the whole of his hard-earned savings, £350, writes:—

"Dear Sir,—Having had the misfortune to have half of my tongue taken off, the right side of throat removed, and a hole made in my neck, with a pipe inserted, through a cancer from which it appears there is no cure; and me being still an out-patient, your grant has come as a great relief to me and my poor wife. Wishing you and your wife long life and good health, likewise the gentlemen of the Committee."

AN AGED COOK,

a spinster, who has to help support an invalid brother, and who lost £600, writes:—

"Revd. Sir,—I have wanted to answer this (the receipt of a grant) when I could find time, as I could not let it pass without expressing to you my great gratitude for your kindness in sending to me.

"I am broken down in health and spirits, and it came as a gleam of sunshine. I trust that God will reward you in this world and more in the world to come, as you have been the means of saving so many from a dreadful fate. Thank God I did not lose my reason, but I have lost both health and spirits through my troubles. Again thanking you," etc.

A STRUGGLING SCHOOLMISTRESS,

a clergyman's daughter, who lost £1200, writes:

"Dear Mr. Stockwell Watts,—In your great kindness to us poor 'Liberator' people, I feel sure you will be glad to know that the grant received this morning is the greatest possible help and comfort. I think last term was the hardest I ever had, my inevitable expenses were so heavy. I am perfectly sure that personally I could not spend less, but school expenses are inevitable. I am 59 this very month, and have worked as hard as ever I could since I was 17."

OUR PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Doubtless there are many among your numerous readers in sympathy with our object who would like to know something of the special efforts that we have made—and are still making—in this memorable year of Jubilee.

(1) We have appealed to all our old subscribers, and they have responded nobly. Many who have subscribed in each of the five years that have elapsed since the crash have this year sent a special Jubilee gift. Many who have not given to the fund since their first donation in 1893 have sent something this year, not a few evidently giving to the point of self-denial.

(2) We have issued a four-paged leaflet, appealing for a shilling subscription, which we are seeking to scatter as widely as possible, where a sufficient return may be reasonably hoped for.

(3) We have issued an authorised collecting sheet, which several lady friends have used with considerable success,—one lady, Mrs. Gertrude Lewes, with her daughters, collecting as much as £29—and which we are hoping will yet be more extensively used. We will gladly send these collecting sheets to any willing helper, who will send us the name and address of his or her clergyman or minister as reference.

(4) We are, once again, appealing to clergymen and ministers of all denominations to give us a church collection, or part collection, in furtherance of our special object.

(5) As quickly as possible we are going from one county to another, pointing out how many destitute or semi-destitute victims in the district appealed to are being assisted by this fund, in the hope that such information may quicken local practical sympathy.

(6) And lastly, wherever we can find friends sufficiently interested to undertake the effort, we are seeking to carry out

A HOUSE-TO-HOUSE PENNY COLLECTION.

The friends at Williton, in Somerset, kindly resolved to try this plan. Rev. Samuel Wilkes, with whom was associated Mr. James Wood, wrote: "We have about 250 houses in this village and two or three adjoining hamlets. If it answers here, we want to try also in the other places of my circuit, in which about 550 houses may be found. . . . I am sure ignorance is the cause of much indifference to your Christ-like work."

As soon as possible a sufficient supply of circular-letters, leaflets, and authorised collecting sheets were secured. A letter and leaflet were left at every house, and the contributions called for a day or two afterwards. The very gratifying result was a total of £2 15s. 6d., in 199 gifts.

Writing September 14th, 1897, Mr. J. Wood remarks: "I do not know how you will regard these results, but to me they are very satisfactory, especially when it is remembered that they are the contributions of the many, as you will see by the collecting sheets I send herewith. I have looked at the matter thus—say there are 30,000 villages in our country, and they can be canvassed as this has been, they should yield from fifteen to twenty thousand pounds. Is this too much to expect?"

Not at all! If we could only find one or two friends in every village sufficiently interested in the cause.

A NATIONAL CALAMITY.

To show the truly national character of this calamity, we should like, but for the expense, to publish a map of the United Kingdom, with a cross on every locality where victims reside who are being helped by the relief fund. Then, at a glance, it would be seen that they are scattered all over the United Kingdom. But even that would not cover all the ground, as some of the most piteous cases are found in foreign parts, from which it will be seen that the 2800 sufferers on our books reside in nearly one thousand different places.

The earnest hope of the Committee is that the foregoing pitiable and pathetic cases may plead for the hundreds of others of which they are fairly typical, and all of which have been duly accredited by reliable referees; that in this Diamond Jubilee year of our beloved Sovereign Queen Victoria there may be such an accession to the funds as shall enable them to assure most of these aged and destitute sufferers that their industry, self-denial, and thrift were not all in vain, and that some permanent provision has at length been made for them—and thus deliver them from the racking anxiety that is still hurrying so many of them into premature graves.

The Colporteur and his Pack.

THE sturdy colporteur quietly trudging along with his "pack" of Bibles and Gospel literature is not an object which attracts much attention, except, perhaps, in some of the lonely villages, hamlets, and out-of-the-way places, where he has come to be regarded as a most welcome visitor, and his monthly visit is eagerly looked forward to by many who value his homely, yet earnest, talks and the store of good things he brings round.

He is no mere book hawker as some might think; he has himself "tasted that the Lord is gracious," and he longs to lead others to drink of that living water from the wells of salvation. He knows the books he carries contain the truth of God, and he sells them with the prayer and hope that they may be blessed to the souls of the readers.

The Christian Colportage Association for England has now a staff of stationed throughout England in many places, both in town and country, from Cornwall to Northumberland, and from the borders of Wales to the East Coast. The work of these colporteurs has been followed with a very large measure of blessing.

From the depot in Farringdon Street, London, there flows every month a continuous stream of about 4,000 Bibles and Testaments, 50,000 carefully selected books full of Gospel teaching, 30,000 evangelical magazines, and 20,000 Scripture text cards. These are distributed by the colporteurs who travel every month more than 20,000 miles, and knock at more than 150,000 doors, selling their wares, and seizing opportunities for speaking to people personally about salvation. The blessing is untold; we only know that many thousands have been brought to the Lord Jesus Christ through their instrumentality.

A most valuable work is done amongst domestic servants. The following is related by one of the colporteurs:

"One day lately I called at a large country house near——. I had often been there before, but never succeeded in selling any books until the last visit, when the cook bought "The Pilgrim's Progress" and "Heavenly Love and Earthly Echoes."

This day the cook again appeared at the door, but said she wanted no books this time.

"How did you like the books you bought last month?" I inquired, as she was going away. She turned back, and to my surprise I saw she was deeply affected, and asked me to come in, as she wanted to speak to me.

She then took me into the servants' hall, and calling the housemaid, said, "This is the man that was always telling me about Jesus when he brought his books; and that's who it is we want to hear about now, isn't it?"

Both women had tears in their eyes, so I sat down, and taking out my Bible, began to read a few texts. I told them also the story of my own conversion, and while doing so, the footman, a young man of about two-and-twenty, entered.

The cook turned to him and said, "This is the man I bought the books from."

"I know him," he replied; "I've seen him before, and wanted him to get me 'Dick Turpin'; but I want a Bible now."

He also seemed much moved, and I learned that all three had been reading 'Heavenly Love' and were deeply convicted of sin.

"Did you read the other book, 'The Pilgrim's Progress'?" I asked. "No."

"You should have read that, too, and you would have seen where Christian lost his burden." "Where was that?"

"At the Cross, where I lost mine; and where hundreds and thousands have lost theirs, quite as heavy as yours too."

I then read a few passages of Scripture, calling particular attention to Isaiah liii. 6, John iii. 16 and v. 24; but unbelief still held them back. "You know yourself to be a sinner?" I then said. "Yes, and a vile one too," was the reply.

We then all knelt down in prayer; and while I prayed, suddenly the cook jumped up, exclaiming, "I see it now!" The footman followed, and his face was still wet with tears, which was now beaming with joy. The poor housemaid could not for some time lay hold of God's word, but has since obtained peace in believing, and rejoices with the others."

No wonder the colporteur said he felt his pack "as light as a feather" when he left that house that day.

THE NEED FOR THIS WORK is very great. Day by day the press is pouring forth—not streams, but rivers of trashy and actually evil thoughts. The only way to stem them is by pouring in streams of pure Christian literature, and for this the army of colporteurs needs to be greatly increased.

Another great need lies in the spiritual

where the quiet systematic visitation from house to house by the colporteur, the simple, earnest talks, and the Bibles and books left behind are a means of very definite blessing.

But to make colportage a real power for good the greatest care needs to be taken both in finding suitable men and in selecting suitable books. The Committee of the Christian Colportage Association is alive to this, and great care is exercised in the whole administration.

Christmas Appeals.

PERCY MISSION HALL, DOCKHEAD.—To give 50 dinners to as many destitute families at Christmas.—W. BUSTIN, 13, Priter-road, Bermondsey, S.E.

FOX-COURT RAGGED SCHOOL AND MISSION, Gray's-inn-road, Holborn, appeals for funds to provide Christmas dinners for the most needy families connected with the Mission. Secretary, Thomas Fagg, 136, Pentonville-road, N.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION, LIMEHOUSE.—For funds to provide substantial meals for poor children on Christmas Day; also for coals and materials for Christmas dinners for the needy families in this poor district.—Hon. Sec., JAMES BLAIR, 24, Salmon-lane, Limehouse, E.

PASTOR PHILIP GAST, 12, Noel-street, Islington, of Spencer Place Chapel, appeals for the poor of St. Luke's and Clerkenwell—he pleads for the fatherless and widow, the sick and suffering. In addition to relief given to sad cases of privation, over 250 families were aided to their Christmas dinners last season. Clothing for the poor also gladly received.

THE DOCK LABOURERS' MISSION asks funds to enable the Mission to give the poor who live around a good substantial Christmas dinner, especially on behalf of those unemployed living all around our Mission. We are anxious to give, as we have been able to do in the past thirty years, with your assistance, a dinner to close on 500 of the poorest and most needy.—Thanking you in anticipation, C. COLEMAN, 150, Boleyn-road, West Ham Park.

EAST LONDON POOR.—To give some thousands of Christmas dinners to unemployed but respectable suffering poor of East London in their own homes. To many, without some outside sympathy, Christmas Day will be—alas!—a day of sadness instead of joy. Our large East End voluntary committee of ladies and gentlemen are willing again to carry out the happy, though arduous work.—J. W. ATKINSON, Claremont, Cawley-road, E.

AFTER-CARE ASSOCIATION FOR POOR PERSONS DISCHARGED FROM ASYLUMS FOR THE INSANE.—The council asks for help to carry on their work. Applications for assistance have greatly increased during the present year. Subscriptions or donations thankfully received by the secretary, H. Thornhill Roxby, Esq., Church House, Dean's Yard, Westminster, or may be paid into the account of the Association, Union Bank of London, Argyll Place, London, W.

THE CANCER HOSPITAL (FREE) had during last year 829 new in-patients and 1516 new out-patients, whilst some 13,786 visits of new and old out-patients were made during the same period. The important feature in connection with this Institution is that it is absolutely free to poor persons suffering from cancerous disease, no letters of recommendation being required, the disease itself being a sufficient qualification for admission or treatment. There are also a number of beds provided for the use of patients who may remain for life. Unfortunately, the continually increasing number of patients treated each year involve a large expenditure, to meet which the Hospital has to rely upon the generosity of the public. The secretary is Mr. W. H. Hughes, The Cancer Hospital, Fulham-road, S.W.

"THE ANGEL'S MESSAGE."—Luke ii. 8-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."

THIS was the first Gospel service that was ever held; the audience was select as regards numbers; the preacher was of the highest order of God's messengers; the sermon was short and much to the point. The choir was the finest that earth has ever heard; and the result of this first service was most gratifying, for the shepherds went directly to seek the new-born Christ.

This story has lost none of its freshness, though it has been repeated through 1900 years. It will not become stale. We are never tired of eating, drinking, sleeping; of loving and hoping. Because these things answer a need in our nature. So this story can never be out of date, because it supplies just what we want to know, viz., that God loves us and cares for us; there is something in it for childhood and age, sorrow and joy, life and death.

I. The Audience (8, 9).—The shepherds stayed out all night with their flocks to keep them from wandering, and to guard them from wolves and robbers. (This must have been some time during the warmer months of the year—certainly not in December, when we keep Christmas.) Suddenly a light shone round about them, similar, perhaps, to that which Saul of Tarsus saw when on his way to Damascus. No marvel that they were afraid. Note that we should be prepared to see the glory of God anywhere and at any time. We associate God's presence with certain buildings, but He is everywhere. On the bleak, barren mountain-side Jacob saw the glory of God, and that became to him "none other than the House of God and the gate of Heaven." So we must also look out for God in street, and home, and school: He is there.

II. The Sermon (10, 11, 12), "Good tidings of great joy."—This description of the Gospel we are apt to forget. Religion does not consist in long morose, melancholy faces, or in doleful tones, but in gladness and joy. To people who are bound in sin it ought to be good news of great joy that a Saviour has come to deliver them. To people who are borne down with burdens it should be joyful news to hear how those burdens can be made light. Joy is the note of Christmas, and should be the note of Christians all the year. "Which shall be to all people." No limitations. Note that God's greatest blessings are free. Light, water, air; these essentials of life cost nothing. So with spiritual gifts. Spiritual death must be bought, but the gift of God is eternal life.

> Earth hath her price for what earth gives us,
> The beggar is taxed for a corner to die in;
> We pay for the very graves we lie in.
> At the devil's booth all things are sold,
> Each ounce of dross costs its ounce of gold.
> For a cap and bells our lives we pay,
> 'Tis only God that is given away,
> 'Tis only heaven may be had for the asking.

III. The Choir. The anthem (13, 14) tells of God's goodwill. The strife between heaven and earth must be ended. People always thought before that God was like heathen deities who needed to be appeased, but the angel tells us that all God's dealings with men are prompted by goodwill. He wounds only that He may heal. His punishments are administered with a Father's hand and prompted by a Father's heart. The word "goodwill" means "love," and Christ's advent was to show that God loves us.

IV. The Result of the Sermon. The shepherds went away at once to Bethlehem to seek Jesus. This is the only reasonable thing to do. But there were other courses open to them. They may, as many do to-day, have refused to believe anything that the angel had said and remained by their flocks. They may have tried to reason the matter out among themselves to see whether the story was at all likely. But the wisest course was to go and see for themselves. The teacher should point out the obvious lesson that his scholars should follow the example of the shepherds at this happy Christmas-time.

Our Place in the Future.

By the Rev. Joseph Woodhouse.

"Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children."—Psalm xlv. 16.

Certainly! The fathers are not immortal, they do not live here always. Many bairns know the bitterness and loss of being fatherless. The best and wisest of fathers—the faithful and the worthy, who have made life useful and noble—enter the home-land beyond to receive the conqueror's welcome and reward, and the children take their places.

You, girls and boys, will soon be men and women yourselves—the thrill and rush of life as intense and engrossing with you as with your elders to-day. It will come in the natural order of things. It is not the whole of life to be engaged in committing to memory historical dates, or learning French verbs, or struggling with problems in algebra and Euclid. You must step to the front and fill up the gaps in the ranks and help to win the world for righteousness and truth—help to win the world for God.

A public school teacher was once seeking to inspire the boys of his class with high and honourable ambitions. Presently he paused, and looking his pupils full in the face for a moment or two, said: "Boys, who are to be the future magistrates of this great city?" The quick (though ungrammatical) reply sprang to their lips, "Us boys!" "Who are to be the merchants, ministers, tradesmen, artisans of the future?" "Us boys!" "Who are to be the respected citizens and vigorous members of the churches—working for Christ and for men?" Again it arose, "Us boys!" "And who are to be the drunkards and the evildoers, and the plagues of society?" Before they saw what it meant: "Us boys" was heard once more. But as soon as they saw their mistake they were startled at their own hasty confession. No, never! None of you dare find a place amongst the drunkards, the criminals, the failures of the future. Instead of the fathers—good and pure men and brave—must be the children.

A short time ago there was a student in the University of Edinburgh who had a friend of his own age. They met at the beginning of the week, both of them apparently in the best health and spirits, and arranged to take a ramble over the Pentland Hills on the following Saturday. But it was not to be. Some other journey more distant and important was to be made immediately by one of the two.

On the identical day fixed upon the student followed the remains of his friend in the slow, sad funeral procession to the grave. One of the last acts of the young man was to buy for his friend a torch to be carried by him in the torchlight procession of the students at the coming election of the "Lord Rector" of the University. The young student regarded the touching gift as a sacred symbol that he was to take up his friend's torch and carry on his work in the world. The dead friend had been wont to hold a religious service among the sick in the infirmary every Sunday afternoon. This service the living friend resolved to continue as a memorial of him whom he had lost so suddenly.

Yours it must be to catch the torch from your fathers—the torch of a noble, true, unselfish life—as they go forth in a little while into the light city of God, "where their works do follow them." Yours it must be to see that your torch flames high and bright amid the darkness of the world. Yours it must be to feed your torch with the oil of grace and trim it daily with an unbroken succession of good deeds. Lift it high, that its flame may be seen from afar! God expects that you will make the world fairer and happier by your presence and work in it.

No failures must be found amongst you. No half-hearted men and women must you grow up to be. No shame must your conduct ever cast upon the memory of your fathers. "All, all must be earnest in a world like ours." Christ wants to help you to realise your highest ideals if you will only seek his aid. Your torch must be kept ablaze to the very end, that when you follow your fathers into the King's country it may be grasped in turn by your children, and so handed on and on through the generations that are to be, till the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

Bible Towers.

Sin exposes us to danger. Self deludes us into death, and it is only the Lord Jesus Christ Himself who can bring us salvation and safety; and happy is the boy or girl who can say, "God is my refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble" (Psalm xlvi.) Jesus is a Refuge to save us, a Stronghold to preserve us, a Tower to defend us, and a Hiding-place to secure us; for "the name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe" (Prov. xviii.). Now, let us take our Bibles, and see what some of these towers teach us; we have—to avoid (Gen. xi.). We will call this Tower, Self-will.

(b).—A Wonderful Tower, to enter (Prov. xviii.). We will call this Tower, Salvation.

(c).—A Welcome Tower, to enjoy (2 Sam. xxii.). We will call this Tower, Protection.

(d).—A Witness Tower, to glory in (Psa. cxliv.). "The Lord is my Rock." We will call this Tower, Testimony.

(e).—A Watch Tower, to use (Hab. ii.). "I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the Tower." We will call this Tower, Hope.

STRONGER THAN SATAN.

"Father," said a little boy, "am I stronger than Satan?" "No, my son, you are not." "Are you stronger than Satan, father?" "No, I am not." "Is Jesus stronger than Satan?" "Yes, my son, He is. Jesus has conquered Satan." "Then I will trust Him."

BE READY.

"When is Jesus coming?" asked a little girl of a Christian servant, who was just then busy with her work polishing the grate. "I can't say," said the Christian maid; "perhaps to-day." "Well," said the little one, "if I were you, I'd make haste and tidy myself and be ready." What a wise thought of this little girl. C. Edwards.

A Child's Hymn.

Father, whom I cannot see
In the morning's calm,
Hear me while I sing to Thee
Happy hymn and psalm.

All my days are bright and glad—
Thou hast made them so:
Guide and lead thy little one
All the way I go.

Teach me something every day
Of thy love to me,
Till my heart shall overflow
With the love of Thee.

Thank Thee, Father, for thy gifts—
Home and friends and food;
And because I love Thee so
Help me to be good.

Pardon me for Jesus' sake
When I do Thee wrong,
And to please Thee all my life
Make me brave and strong.

In me, by me, through thy love
May thy will be done.
Father, whom I cannot see,
Bless thy little one.

Personal.

Several papers have been sent in too late this last week, and therefore could not be corrected. They must reach here at the latest by the first post Thursday morning.

Eva Fielder.—I am pleased to welcome you, and wish you every success in your new undertaking. Jessie Carter.—So sorry you were too ill to do the Searcher. Dudley, Dora, and Grace Joyce.—I do not like complaining, but your papers were really too untidy to correct this week. You must all write on separate sheets of paper. Madeline Smith.—I fear your arm is very painful, but hope it will soon be better. Trevor Matthews.—I think you could send me a little better writing. H. J. Lynham.—It was not for the reason you mentioned your answers to No. 99 were counted incorrect; you made a mistake in another answer. Frank and Vera Sjostrom (Brooklyn).—If you send more than one paper at a time, they must each be signed by a parent or teacher. I do not mind for those abroad two Searchers being sent together, but you must not send more.

A Good Example.—I have received a most generous and useful parcel of woollen articles, cuffs, shawls, mits, pincushions, etc., all made by the pupils of a young ladies' school, for distribution among the poor, etc. Last year many of my young friends sent me similar parcels; and I hope that these holidays will find employment for many busy little hands in the same way.

Bible Searcher (No. 102).

1. Fill in verses to chapters named in "Bible Towers."
2. (a) Describe the fate of the first. (b) Why was it a tower of "self-will"?
3. Describe some of David's deliverances referred to in 2 Sam. xxii.
4. (a) How many towers did our Lord refer to in St. Luke xiii., xiv.? (b) What lessons did He teach from them?

[Children under ten do 1 and 4*a*; under thirteen do 1 and 3.]

ANSWERS TO LAST WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (101).

1. How is it that ye sought Me? Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?.—Luke ii. 49.
2. To his mother and Joseph.
3. What seek ye?—John i. 38.
4. To the two disciples of John the Baptist.
5. Follow thou Me.—John xxi. 22.
6. To Peter.
7. Of Mary, the Mother of Jesus.
8. Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee.—Ps. cxix. 11.

Uncle Tom.

A Military Convention.

THE committee of the Central Y.M.C.A. have, in recent years, put forth specially organised efforts to reach large classes of men at present not influenced by the Association. Last year the committee asked for the co-operation of the Council of the Soldiers' Christian Association in the arrangement of a convention to which delegates, representing the S.C.A. in the various regiments throughout the country, should be invited. The result far exceeded the expectations of those interested, upwards of a hundred delegates being present.

The second Military Convention took place at Exeter Hall last week, and the proceedings throughout Wednesday were most enthusiastic and inspiriting. The first item on the programme was a meeting for praise and prayer, and, at 1 p.m., Capt. James Cundy, late of the Madras Army, took the chair, supported by a large number of officers and many ladies interested in the work carried on in Soldiers' Homes in many parts of the country. Upwards of 150 delegates were present at this meeting, a large number of whom took part in the devotional exercises. Brief addresses were given by the chairman and by Colonel Phayre.

Shortly after two o'clock the whole of the delegates and upwards of fifty officers sat down to luncheon in the lower hall, under the genial presidency of Sir George Williams. Prebendary Webb-Peploe proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Sir George for his hospitality and delivered a brief but pointed address, taking for his subject 2 Timothy ii. Mr. J. H. Putterill, general secretary, Exeter Hall, followed with letters expressing regret at inability to attend from the Commander-in-Chief, Lord Wolseley, General Lord Chelmsford, the Chaplain-General of the Forces, Dr. Edghill, General Bengough, Major-General Trotter, Captain Wiseley, and many others. After a few words from Colonel G. Philips, hon. secretary of the S.C.A., Mr. W. R. Lane delivered an earnest and powerful address, enforced with many an apt illustration, drawn from his own experience while serving in the Army.

The meeting then adjourned to the reading room, the chair being taken by Major-General A. H. Hutchinson. After a brief reference to the Army and Navy Missionary Union, the meeting was thrown open for reports by delegates, and for an hour and a-half those present had the joy of listening to a stream of interesting testimonies.

At six o'clock, by the kind invitation of Mr. Henry Conder, late of Bombay, tea was served, not only to the delegates, but to a large number of the men belonging to the London garrison, who had been specially invited to be present at the evening meeting. After tea, the men gathered in the lower hall, and a resolution was passed, requesting Sir Geo. Williams to forward the following recommendation to the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces:—

"The officers, non-commisioned officers, and men representing the various branches of the Soldiers' Christian Association, at its second annual conference, held at Exeter Hall, December 8, 1897, beg to express their feeling of the need of a place being set apart in barracks to which men can retire for praise and prayer, and beg that the Commander-in-Chief will use his best offices to secure such accommodation for the men."

At the subsequent meeting it was unanimously resolved to forward the following congratulatory telegram to Her Majesty the Queen:—"The members of the Soldiers' Christian Association, now met in convention at Exeter Hall, in this the year of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, desire respectfully to tender to Her Majesty the expression of their loyalty to her throne and person; and their earnest prayers that it may please Almighty God to add yet many years to her glorious reign."

Colonel Seton Churchill, referring to the wonderful changes which had taken place since he entered the army thirty years since, mentioned the rapid rise of the Army Temperance Association and kindred societies; and said that, although this was only the second conference of the S.C.A., they now had an enrolled membership of over 2600 members.

The Chairman then subjected Mr. A. H. Wheeler (secretary) to a cross-examination on the work of the Association, and his duties connected with it. A final appeal to the unconverted men present closed a most interesting and useful meeting.

God's To-morrow, and Man's To-day.

AN all-day Convention for the deepening of the spiritual life was held recently at St. James's Bible Christian Church, Stanstead-road, Forest Hill. Rev. J. H. Batt obtained the co-operation of several ministers of the neighbourhood, as well as of Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, of Brighton, who took part in the evening meeting. Mr. Mantle based his remarks on Joshua iii. 5, "Sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." The Israelites, he said, had faith to be brought out, but not to be brought in. So to-day many people had faith to leave Egypt, but had not faith enough to take possession of the good land. The eve of the crossing of the Jordan was the beginning of a new life to the nation, and then there was laid down an eternal law—namely, that God's to-morrow of wonders only waits for our to-day of separation.

FIND OUT THE LEAKAGE.

We should never pray, said Mr. Mantle, as though God needed to be coaxed to do wonders. "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not also with Him freely give us all things?" God is a God of method, and his conditions must be observed. Recently the electric light in the street near his house at Brighton refused to burn, and it was found that there was a leakage. The current was finding its way back through the earth. As soon as the wire was isolated, the light was given as before. So what we want is isolation. We have been touching the forbidden thing, we have been touching the world-spirit in some part. We must find out the leakage.

GIVE GOD FULL WEIGHT.

The same law was expressed in a phrase which occurred several times in the book of Exodus, "According to the shekel of the sanctuary." There was always a tendency to give God short weight, but He insisted on receiving full weight. "How easy it is," continued the speaker, "to give God the mere scraps of our time in the morning and evening; to give an hour to the newspaper and five minutes to the Book of God; to give more to a summer holiday in one year than to the evangelisation of the heathen in ten." God's testing was then compared to that of coins at the Mint, which by an ingenious and delicate mechanism were sorted as light, heavy, or true.

PUT THE "METTES" RIGHT.

Mr. Mantle then related a striking story of a lace manufacturer who recently told him some of his spiritual history. He was convicted of sin by the Holy Spirit, and felt the burden intolerable. But when he took his trouble to God, God refused to lift the burden from him until he had put his "mettes" right. These mettes were part of the machinery which regulated the size of the lace, and by a slight filing had been the means of putting pounds in the manufacturer's pocket. One morning he took his hammer, and broke all his mettes in pieces. He then gave an order for new ones, which were to be the full inch, without any filing. The new mettes were brought and put in. Then he went back to his room, and fell down before God, and his heart was at once filled with joy. That man was now being wonderfully used by God.

CUT THE SHORE-ROPE.

Another graphic illustration was taken from an incident that is sometimes seen when an Atlantic liner is about to sail. Everything is ready for the start, and the order is given to cast off the cables that bind the vessel to the shore. But one of them is entangled, and vain attempts are made to unfasten it. Then the captain cries out, "Cut that shore-rope." So must we cut the ropes that bind us to the lower life, that we may float out into the ocean of God's will.

THE "SILT" OF THE SOUL.

A plant on the speaker's table at home was also made an emblem of the spiritual life. Some of its leaves were becoming yellow and sickly, and fell away at the least touch. The microscope revealed the secret. A little wall of wax, a "silt," had been built up between the leaf and the stem. The plant had decided to dispense with its lower leaves and put forth its strength into new ones. At last every canal was entirely closed, and no sap passed into the old leaves any longer. So the cross of Christ is the "silt" which is to stand between us and our besetting sin. Then the evil things will drop off our life and all the strength of the heart will go in the direction of their opposites.

The Evangelistic Field.

REV. G. C. MORGAN AT BRIGHTON.

An exceedingly profitable mission has been conducted at the Norfolk-road Wesleyan Chapel, Brighton, by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of New Court Chapel, London.

His methods in conducting a mission are such as to reduce to a minimum the fears which many have of special efforts of this kind. His appeals are to the intellect rather than the emotions. He taxes the thinking powers of his audience not unfrequently for a full hour, and yet there has been such a winsome and logical presentation of the Truth that there is no sense of weariness. There are no enticing words of man's wisdom, and when one asks why the message has produced so deep an impression the answer is that Christ has been exalted. Every address given during the mission was an illustration of the words, "And I, if I be lifted up, I will draw." The afternoon Bible studies which Mr. Morgan gave began with "Life and Health," and advanced stage by stage from "Growth," "Fellowship," and "Exercise" to "Maturity." The attendance grew each day and on the last afternoon the body of the chapel was filled.

The evening addresses began with "Ennui: its reason and its remedy," the text being "Who will show us any good?" This series closed with a message of wonderful power on "To me to live is Christ." Those who, night after night, stood up to confess that they had claimed as their own that which had been urged upon their acceptance, received a discipleship card, which, after having been signed, was returned to the pastor of the church. From beginning to end it was felt that God was allowed opportunity to work in his own way, and that the messenger was lost in the message of the Master.

A Minister.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. Thomas Richardson, of Rotherhithe Free Church, has finished a most successful month's work in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road. The congregation has been extremely good despite the badness of the weather. Some most interesting cases of conversion have taken place, and many a home to-day is feeling the good effects of Mr. Richardson's visit. His addresses to God's children have been most helpful, and he left at the close of his mission to return to his own work followed by the many prayers of those he had been ministering to in the Great Assembly Hall.

The Wesleyan evangelist, Rev. Thomas Waugh, has been holding an interesting mission in the town of Barnsley, where he resides, Much prayer has been offered, and an expectant spirit cultivated. Everything possible was done to arouse public attention, and a rich reward has followed. Again and again the spacious chapel has been crowded. The services have been marked by orderliness and brevity and Divine power. Some found peace during the preaching, others at home, and the inquiry-room was the scene of much gladness. Meetings were also held for workers, and for "men only" and "women only." A feature has been the good received by the young people.

A stirring mission has been closed by Rev. Thomas Cook at Lewes. Twenty years ago, some thirty persons professed conversion during a mission; since then missions held in the place have yielded little result. But during the week of prayer, held in preparation for the mission, anxieties vanished. Mr. Cook began his mission by preaching a most heart-searching sermon to Christians. The afternoon service was for young people. There was a splendid gathering, and several Sunday-school scholars went into the inquiry-room. As the mission proceeded the attendance grew and the power seemed also to increase. The meetings "for men only" and "for women only" were largely attended. Every service was signalised by conversions, some were especially impressive. On the evening of December 1, the new converts were invited to meet for the purpose of inter[illegible]rse and instruction, and a large number responded. During the evening testimonies were given, and arrangements made for getting the new converts into connection with some church.

A work of grace has been accomplished at the Bible Christian Chapel, St. Just, and the Wesleyan chapel at Helston, where special meetings have been conducted by Mr. G. W. Clegg.

Obituary.

MISS ANNA MARIA FOX, FALMOUTH.

This remarkable woman who has recently passed away was the daughter of Robert Were Fox, F.R.S., and was the only sister of Caroline Fox, extracts from whose journals were published sixteen years ago under the title "Memories of Old Friends." The two sisters, who were born in 1816 and 1819 respectively, were closely united in all the good works which have made their names memorable in the history of their native county. A member of the Society of Friends throughout her life, Miss Fox nevertheless had a wide range of sympathy, and her charities were confined within no sectarian limits. She retained her marvellous energy and zeal for all philanthropic enterprises up to the last, and after a very short illness passed peacefully away in her eighty-second year.

MRS. F. A. HOMER, SEDGLEY.

The beloved wife of Mr. F. A. Homer, J.P., of Sedgley, passed away, at her residence, on Wednesday week. Mrs. Homer, who was in her sixty-fifth year, was widely known, highly respected and esteemed, and will be missed, especially by the poor of the parish in which she has lived so long. She was ever ready to give a helping hand to those in need, and she was a true help-meet to her husband in the mission and temperance work which he has carried on with such marked success for a large number of years. Mrs. Homer was the first in the Black Country to inaugurate mothers' meetings, which have been continued at the Temperance Hall ever since 1864. In times of disputes in the nail and other trades she established a soup kitchen at her residence, and to some extent alleviated distress. She also took considerable interest in young girls, fitting them for service, and helping them in other ways.

MISS AMELIA LAWRENCE, BARCELONA.

This earnest young missionary has been called to her rest, passing away at Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona, on Nov. 29. Her sister writes:—

"Our sister Amelia has been called home. Her illness lasted seventeen days, and during that time her sufferings were intense, but through them all she very manifestly enjoyed the sustaining presence of the Lord, and was very happy in his love.

"Since our dear father's departure nearly four years ago she has laboured with me and with our younger sister, Hester, in Gospel work at Caldas de Montbuy. Her work was chiefly in the school, and very faithfully she performed it. She was beloved by the little ones and by the parents also, and we shall greatly miss her help. During this time of trial we have been much comforted and encouraged by the sympathy and love of the Spanish people amongst whom we labour. Not only those who have believed on the Lord since our residence in Caldas, but also our neighbours, the parents of our scholars, and many other persons have manifested the most touching kindness, and have been ready by night and by day to render us every assistance in their power.

"Friends from Barcelona and other places attended the funeral, which was a glorious opportunity for Gospel testimony. A large number of people from the town were present, and listened with the greatest attention to Gospel addresses at our hall, and afterwards at the cemetery."

The Life of a Prisoner cannot be made a model of comfort, but it need not be made needlessly painful, and it should never degrade the prisoner. Statements like those made by Mr. Edward Carpenter and Rev. Douglas Morrison create a painful sense of anxiety as to what really goes on behind the scenes. When such men contrast our system with that in operation at Elmira, in Japan, and in the Andaman Islands, we wonder; and we wonder still more when they hint that even Siberian and Russian methods are better than the English. That the Elmira prison is not perfection is very certain to that well-informed prison reformer Mr. William Tallack. He says: "It is not for a moment to be claimed that no success attends the Elmira system. But what measure of success results may fairly be ascribed to the fact that the Governor, Mr. Z. K. Brockway, is one of the best disciplinarians in America." It will be news to many if Japanese prisons and those in the Andaman Islands, in Russia and Siberia, do really set so good an example.

The Y.M.C.A.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF Y.M.C.A.'S.

The half-yearly meetings of the National Council of Y.M.C.A.'s were held at Exeter Hall on Friday week under the presidency of Sir George Williams. Representatives gathered from all parts of the country in larger numbers than on any previous occasion. The day's proceedings commenced with a devotional meeting. This was followed by conferences as to the desirability (1) of the practice on the part of members of the Associations of self-denial in furtherance of Y.M.C.A. extension at home and abroad, and; (2) the formation of a Y.M.C.A. Volunteer Missionary Union on lines similar to those of the S.V.M.U.

After lunch, reports were presented by the travelling secretaries upon the principal features of their work for the past year. At the business session it was stated that, since the meeting of the Council in December, 1896, the number of centres of work—Associations and auxiliaries—in the English union (omitting Scotland) had increased from 1,079 to 1,165, while the membership had risen from 73,387 to 75,836. The value of building property owned by the Associations in the Union had also been augmented during the year by £26,920, the gross total now amounting to £456,445. Membership campaigns had been organised at many centres, and had been the means of enrolling large numbers of young men. Special men's meetings had been arranged in London and the provinces for the purpose of directing the attention of young men to the evils of betting and gambling, vice and intemperance. Much direct evangelistic effort had also been put forth, in many instances with the direct co-operation of the Council, who had retained throughout the whole of 1897 the services of Mr. W. R. Lane as special missioner. The home staff had been strengthened by the appointment of an additional visiting representative for the Midlands, and a travelling secretary for Lancashire; while, in the foreign department, Mr. Frank Anderson, B.A., had completed a successful year's work amongst students in the Bombay Presidency, and the services of Mr. R. D. Pringle had been continued by the Council as general secretary of the Bombay City Association. A worker had also been appointed for a tour in Egypt and Palestine in the interests of work for young men, and the Associations were now directly represented by a worker in China. The projects that were contemplated for the immediate future were (1) the appointment of an additional travelling secretary for the South and East of England, and (2) the appointment of further workers for the foreign field.

BRIEF NOTES.

On Wednesday evening the members of the Worthing Association met, at the invitation of Mr. W. Hind Smith, for a social evening. There was a large gathering, attended by the principal clergymen and ministers of the town.

The work of the Hampstead Association, which has been practically in abeyance during the summer, was restarted for the winter session on Thursday evening, when a social meeting was held, and was well attended by young men.

The front of the Madras new Y.M.C.A. building, on three streets, is to be of a beautiful variegated sandstone which was discovered in opening up the East Coast railway, near Tada, a village situated about thirty-five miles north of Madras. This will be the first building of stone in South India.

With the assistance of the French National Council, the Marseilles Association has collected locally the requisite funds for its establishment in spacious premises, and for the salary of a secretary. The Cette and Castres Associations have recently been able to remove into independent premises, and their work is progressing rapidly.

On the first Sunday of November the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A. began special services in the Alhambra Theatre, and large gatherings of young men have attended weekly. On the last two Sundays Rev. Herbert J. S. Wood, of Liverpool, was the speaker. A number of young men were deeply impressed. It is intended to carry on these services all the winter.

The membership of the Melkavoo group of Associations on the hills of Travancore at present numbers 290, recruited from the hill Aryans, who but fifty years ago were wild tribes. The Malayalam secretary paid a visit to these Associations, and held meetings for prayer, Bible study, and making arrangements for organised work in accordance with Association principles. The average attendance was about 200, and 130 have covenanted for the "Morning Watch."

The Cape Town Association reports on the various special efforts put forth to reach young men passing through the town en route for the interior. The membership is now 855. Among the evangelistic agencies are the Sunday afternoon talks, the Bible-class, and the Young Men's Own. The reading-room and library have been well sustained, while the employment bureau and the boarding-house have been the means of helping and guiding many young men at a trying time.

Mr. Rakotonirainy of Madagascar, student in the Felix Neff School in Montpellier, gives the following details of Association work in his country:—"At Antananarivo there are many temples. Each one possesses a Y.M.C.A. in connection with it. When Messrs. Lauga and Kruger arranged conferences for young men, the Association members of Antananarivo and round about met in a grand temple. We were in all about 2000 young men. The Y.M.C.A. to which we belong, and of which I had the honour of being secretary, numbered about 100 members when we left Madagascar."

The Y.W.C.A.

Plans for larger and more commodious premises to keep pace with the growing work of the Institute in Springfield, Mass., have been prepared. The cost will be about £6000. The new building will include a gymnasium.

The Brixton branch is now well established, and located in very eligible premises, well situated for the work. There are 218 members and six boarders, with accommodation for a larger number. An agreement has been made to purchase the lease of the premises which they now occupy, for which £800 will be required, including repairs and alterations.

The Leeds Day School Teachers' Branch of Y.W.C.A. had a most helpful Bible Exposition on Exodus xxxiii., from Professor Armitage. On the 11th Rev. E. O. Williams, China Inland Mission, showed Chinese costumes and curiosities to a gathering of Leeds teachers, and also spoke earnestly. He had a most appreciative audience. The branch increases in interest and numbers.

Much activity is being manifested in the various Y.W.C.A. centres in America, and the arrangements for the autumn meetings and classes in connection with the various institutes have now been completed. More than 500 young women attended the lecture and entertainment given early last month at the New York Association. The industrial classes are now open, under the charge of experienced teachers. The Omaha Institute also inaugurated its autumn session with a large gathering of members and friends. The programme of the classes held at Indianapolis gives evidence of active and progressive work.

Christian Endeavour.

Australia, Germany, and Ireland have recently held enthusiastic national C.E. conventions.

The next International Convention is fixed for July 6-11, 1898, at Nashville. This is the first time the International Convention has been held in the Southern States.

After working in the mines all day, members of the society at Menzies Goldfields, South Australia, walk three or four miles each way to attend the Endeavour meetings.

On the continent of Europe, Christian Endeavour is moving forward. Forty-four societies are reported from Germany; there are several in Austria and Hungary, and perhaps one or two in Russia.

The bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church have appointed the Rev. W. D. Chappelle, of Columbia, S.C., to give his whole time after January 1, to promoting the Allen Christian Endeavour societies throughout the denomination.

This week, under the presidency of Rev. Edwin R. Barret, of Liverpool, the National Council of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavour is assembled in London. Society No. 5,000 of the British section has now been formed and duly enrolled. The total London membership is officially estimated at 25,000.

The invitation committee of a C.E.S. in Buffalo, N.Y., call on the proprietors of boarding-houses in the vincity of the church, and obtain from them the names of all boarders in their houses. A letter inviting them to the Endeavour meetings and church services, a card with the various church announcements, and a card with the name of the member sending it are then placed in an envelope and addressed to each resident.

Church Gambling.—"Rev. C. Sharpe presided over what he called a 'game of skill.' We have frequently seen the same thing on racecourses, where the police promptly suppress it. However, it was here for a good object, and was doubtless a source of considerable profit." So says the Isle of Wight Observer, in describing one of the side shows at a "Gilbert and Sullivan bazaar," held recently on behalf of Ryde Parish Church.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Canon Hinds Howell, rector of Drayton, Norfolk, has entered on his ninetieth year.

The newly-appointed vicar of Scredington, Rev. Kelita Coggon, was inducted to the charge on Saturday week.

Much indignation was felt last week at St. Botolph's Bishopsgate, at the appearance of "Father Ignatius" as Adventist lecturer.

An effort will be made to raise £20,000 for the enlargement of Wakefield Cathedral, as a memorial of the late Bishop Walsham How.

Mr. Douglas M. Thornton, so well known in connection with the Student Volunteer Movement, has been accepted as a missionary of the C.M.S.

Rev. John Wade, Rector of Haworth, has announced his intention to resign early in the new year. He has been rector of the parish for nearly thirty-seven years.

Rev. H. J. R. Marston, Rector of Icomb, has been appointed to succeed the late Rev. Marcus Rainsford at Belgrave chapel. Mr. Marston, who is totally blind, is well known throughout the country for his lectures in connection with the N.P.C.U.

The Islington Clerical Meeting for 1898 will be held on Tuesday, January 11, not in the Wilson Memorial Hall as usual, but at St. Mary's Hall, Islington Green. The subject is "Certain Prominent Lessons from the Ordination Service of the Church of England." The speakers are known and trusted men.

Congregational.

Rev. J. Kneen has been recognised as pastor at Loughborough.

Rev. Pearson Cooper has been recognised as pastor at Leominster.

Rev. Rhys Harries has been recognised at Kingsbridge, South Devon.

Heron Court Church, Rugeley (Rev. T. H. Alexander), has celebrated its centenary.

Rev. Charles Deeble has been recognised as pastor of Westminster Chapel, Birmingham.

Rev. John Lloyd has been elected President of the Congregational Union for South Australia.

Rev. G. J. Allen enters upon his pastorate at Newnham, Glos., with the beginning of the New Year.

Mr. Horace A. Smit, son of Rev. M. E. Smit, of Bridlington Quay, left England on the 3rd inst., in the P. and O. ss. Britannia, for medical mission work in the Punjab.

Rev. W. Hardy Harwood is now recovering from an attack of influenza which has kept him away from his pulpit at Union Chapel for three Sundays. On Sunday the anniversary services were conducted by Principal Fairbairn.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal took part on Tuesday at Walthamstow in the proceedings connected with the unveiling of a window in Trinity Congregational Church, in memory of the late Rev. W. S. Haslam Fielden, at one time its pastor, and for many years subsequently the secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society.

Calls.—Rev. J. Burr Vincent, of Dresden, Staffs, to Bacup; Rev. C. J. Lidstone, to Ashford, Middlesex; Mr. B. James, to Richville, New York; Rev. J. C. Evans, of Hoddesdon, to Woodbridge.

Resignations.—Rev. W. Tonkin, of Shelley, Huddersfield; Rev. W. Derwent, of Northgate, Devizes; Rev. John Shebratte, of Rendam, Suffolk.

Baptist.

Rev. John Jackson has been recognised at Meltham.

Mr. A. H. Horlick has been ordained at Coleford, Glos.

Rev. F. C. Hughes has been recognised at Berkhamsted.

Rev. R. A. Burrows, late of Douglas, has been welcomed at Burslem.

Rev. R. Walker has commenced his ministry at Marlow-road, Maidenhead.

Rev. F. D. Waldock has arrived from Ceylon, where he has laboured as a missionary for thirty-five years.

Rev. John Bell, of the Baptist Missionary Society, was married on October 12, at Wathen, on the Congo, to Miss Jacoba Feisser (of the same Society).

Rev. W. Holman Bentley has reached this country from the Congo in fairly good health, but not in time, as he had hoped, to see his father, Rev. William Bentley, before his death.

Rev. George Anstie Smith, son of the veteran missionary, Rev. James Smith, so long associated with the work in Delhi, sailed on Friday to resume his labours in the Kalka and Kharas District of Northern India.

In connection with the anniversary celebration at George-street, Hull, Rev. F. B. Meyer preached last Tuesday afternoon. It was a very wet day, but a large congregation assembled. While some 170 people were entertained to tea, Mr. Meyer addressed the ministers of the district. The evening meeting was presided over by Mr. A. Cochrane, chairman of the local Congregational board, and addresses were given by Revs. F. B. Meyer, J. J. Mackay, G. Douglas Reid, J. S. Griffiths, and the pastor (Rev. J. E. Shephard).

Calls.—Rev. James Mursell, of Derby, to Downs Chapel, Clapton; Rev. R. E. Chettleborough, to Hockliffe-street, Leighton Buzzard; Mr. A. N. Cauldry, of Bembridge, Isle of Wight, to Bloxley; Rev. John Maclean, of Gorbals, Glasgow, to Great Victoria-street, Belfast; Rev. A. Bremner, of Dumfries, to Lossiemouth.

Resignations.—Rev. John Tuckwell, of Westbourne-grove; Rev. Douglas Thompson, of Bunyan Tabernacle, Norbiton; Rev. O. M. Owen, of Major-road, Stratford.

Methodist.

Mr. William Sampson, the Cornish evangelist, has concluded a very successful mission at Southport.

The Wesleyan Naval and Military Convention will be held on February 9, 1898, at Wesley's Chapel, City-road.

It is proposed that a Memorial Hall should be put up at Pontypridd in memory of the late Rev. John Evans.

Rev. F. Rudd, of Leeds, who has been ill for some time, is now recovering, and is able to take occasional duty.

Rev. J. Gill, of Archibongville, West Africa, reports that he has good health, and that the mission is full of hope.

A series of special services has been conducted by Mr. A. Booth at Endington. The results were most gratifying.

Rev. H. T. Meakin has got a scheme in hand—the erection of a large hall and a block of mission buildings on a commanding site in Bermondsey.

At a meeting of ladies held at Upton Park Chapel, E., to hear an address from Mrs. Buckenham, returned from Central Africa, it was decided to form a "London Primitive Methodist Women's Foreign Missionary Society.

Rev. J. Day Thompson, the well-known Methodist minister, who returns in April to England, is likely to be succeeded at North Adelaide by Rev. E. Wibberley, of Melbourne.

Presbyterian.

Rev. James Forbes, late of Castlederg, has been ordained at Cross-street, Burton-on-Trent.

The Regent-square congregation, amongst many agencies for good, supports a medical mission in Compton-place.

We hear that Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross, of Westbourne-grove, will be unable, owing to ill-health, to occupy his pulpit for a week or two.

Rev. J. Pengwern Jones, missionary in Sylhet, India, has published in Bengalese a collection of children's hymns, and is now preparing for publication in that language a hymn and tune book in both old and new notations.

At a largely-attended congregational meeting, held on Thursday evening, at Marylebone Church, Edgware-road, it was agreed unanimously, on the recommendation of the selection committee appointed by the congregation, to invite Rev. George Hanson, M.A., successor to Dr. Fleming Stevenson in Rathgar, Dublin, to accept the pastorate, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Pentecost.

Calls.—Rev. W. E. Shaw, of Swansea, to Roath Park, Cardiff; Rev. J. McOwan, of Paisley, to Maryport; Rev. R. Scoymgeour, of Monikie, to Jersey. Elections.—Rev. A. D. Cameron, Probationer, Ussie, Ross-shire, to Minard Free Church; Rev. James Iverach Munro, Edinburgh, to Canisby, Caithness-shire; Rev. Alex. S. Inch, Dundee, to Free High Church, Dumbarton.

Salvation Army.

New Homes for the reception of woman criminals will shortly be opened in Glasgow and Montreal.

The officers in charge of the Boys' Home in Fetter-lane have been instrumental in restoring no less than 260 runaway lads to their friends during the past year.

Special efforts for deaf and dumb people have been commenced in Plymouth. Many have professed conversion, and a deaf-mute woman conducts evangelistic work amongst the afflicted children.

General Booth sails for New York on Jan. 8, a farewell demonstration being arranged to take place in the Albert Hall two days beforehand. He will conduct meetings in forty cities in the United States and Canada.

Fallen Asleep.

At Elm Lodge, Mill Hill, aged sixty-one, Rev. Elvery Dothie, a retired Congregational minister.—At Mevagissey, Cornwall, on 5th inst., suddenly in chapel, Mr. William Hooper, a faithful preacher of the Gospel.—At his residence in Edinburgh, Rev. John E. Craven, a pre-disruption minister, late of Newhills, Aberdeen: At Carlisle, Mr. R. R. Buck, aged seventy-five, a prominent leader among the Congregationalists.—At Taunton, Mr. George Stuckey, aged eighty-nine, for many years an earnest worker.—At Morecambe, on 3rd inst., Mr. A. Baxter, aged sixty-two, an earnest helper in Christian service.—At Northampton, Mrs. Whincup, wife of Rev. J. Whincup, a very active leader both in Christian effort and B.W.T.A. work.—At Eskdale, West Cumberland, Mr. Joseph Huddart, a prominent Wesleyan.—At Amprior, Ontario, Canada, Mr. S. W. Kenny, formerly of Dublin, an earnest Christian worker, aged seventy-five years.—At Ardmore House, Inchicore, Mr. Henry White Leittrell, a devoted member of the Methodist Church, aged sixty-seven years.

Sundry Notes.

SCOTTISH.

Mr. Stewart, children's evangelist, from Glasgow, has just concluded (Dec. 11) a fourteen days' mission for children in the Railway Mission Hall, Abbeyhill, Edinburgh. Mr. Stewart is peculiarly fitted for the work, and his addresses on the "Pilgrim's Progress" with limelight illustrations, were of such a nature that the interest was sustained to the close. The meetings each night were attended by upwards of 600 children. Deep interest has been aroused, and fruit has been gathered.

Mr. Isaac Selby, formerly an infidel lecturer, has been giving a series of addresses in Edinburgh during the past week in defence of the Word of God and the Christian religion. He is a man of eloquence and culture, possessing a wide range of knowledge, and has shown himself well able to deal with the evidences and reality of the Christian religion. His ability in answering questions and his courtesy in meeting opponents has won for him the respect and esteem of all. We look for much blessing from his labours in the particular line to which he has given himself, and for which he is so well adapted.

Every Sabbath evening during the past three months the Pavilion Theatre, Edinburgh, has been well filled, and very many who probably would not attend Divine service in a church or chapel have heard the Gospel. The word preached has been blessed to many souls; at every meeting there have been anxious ones seeking the Saviour, many cases of husband and wife both saved have come under notice. Drunkards have been reached and converted; many have been made glad by seeing the salvation of our God. The meetings go on till January, and it is expected that the interest and blessing will continue during the remaining meetings.

The Foreign Missionary Society of the Glasgow United Y.M.C.A. held its annual social meeting in the Christian Institute on December 8. This society, which has been in existence for some years, meeting weekly for prayer and the diffusion of the missionary spirit, has some eighty-nine honorary members throughout the world. The report of the year's work showed progress; twenty missionaries had addressed the society, several interesting papers had been read, an active correspondence with the foreign field had been sustained, and three members had left for active service abroad. During the evening there were short addresses by Miss Bailey (Syria), Mr. A. Hamilton (Angoniland), Mr. G. M'Connell (Shansi), Dr. Revie (Central India), and also by Mr. E. H. Taylor, youngest son of Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, who shortly leaves for Shanghai.

It is stated that on the coast of Scotland, from Berwick-on-Tweed on the south to Arbroath on the north, there are nearly 5000 resident fishermen, with a fishing population of 18,000, and that over 120,000 seamen, of whom 40,000 are foreign sailors, annually enter the various harbours within the same limits. The Scottish Coast Mission, with headquarters at Edinburgh, is doing a good work among this class. During the past year the missionaries of the society spent 18,852 hours in the mission work, paid 30,100 visits on shore, and 9,680 visits to ships, and have conversed with nearly 60,000 sailors and fishermen. They have conducted 1234 indoor meetings, with an average attendance of 116, and have held 285 open-air meetings, with an average attendance of 140. In addition to this they have conducted 575 meetings with young people, with an average attendance of 100. Scriptures and tracts have been circulated in twelve different languages. Such a work commends itself to the sympathy and prayers of God's people.

IRISH.

A memorial service for the late Rev. Dr. Crook has been held in the Centenary Church, Dublin.

The Dublin Methodist Council has resolved on a new departure, namely, to purchase a tent for aggressive evangelistic work in the metropolis, and also to supply an evangelist to work it.

Mr. Richard W. Booth has purchased the house adjoining the Methodist Orphan School, Dublin, and has presented it to the committee. This will provide accommodation for thirty-six girls, and the estimated cost of the necessary alterations will be £1500.

A conference in connection with the Three Years' Enterprise of the Church Missionary Society has been held, by invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Stoney, at Rathlaline, Newmarket-on-Fergus. The Bishop of Killaloe presided. Ven. Archdeacon Wolfe, of Fuh Chow, gave a report of the remarkable progress of mission work in China, and Rev. A. J. Cullen, of Bhaggalpur, India, gave a vivid description of the sufferings of the lepers in India and the efforts made to alleviate those sufferings. It was resolved that the diocese would support its own missionary working under the Dublin University Fuh-Kien mission in the foreign field.

We learn that the schools in connection with the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics are very much in need of teachers, both in Dublin and in country stations. Mrs. Smyly writes: "We are sadly in want of young men to be trained as teachers for those schools—truly converted young men. Most of our men are English, and we like them. The work is great in Ireland—people greatly changed, and numbers coming boldly out. A fine, intelligent young priest has come out lately; and, though leaving all he cares for, he is steady and determined, and says there are many of the same mind as himself, but as yet have not courage.

PERSONAL.

Dr. J. Elder Cumming is, we regret to hear, suffering from painful throat affections, which are likely to be cured by a change of climate; hence he has taken two months' leave of absence.

Rev. F. B. Meyer is about to start for a month's work in the United States. It is expected that he will commence his services in Albany, proceed to Rochester, and possibly Buffalo, and then go on to Chicago, Kansas City, Washington, and Baltimore.

Rev. W. H. M. H. Aitken.—A correspondent writes to the Leeds Mercury: "The clerical memorial to the Prime Minister, the Lord Chancellor, and the First Lord of the Treasury urging the claims to preferment of Rev. W. H. Aitken, is quite a new departure in regard to Crown patronage. Its promoters have, however, been exceedingly fortunate in securing a large measure of influential support. Indeed, all schools of thought in the Church are joining in this effort to do honour to Mr. Aitken, whose work as a missioner is fully recognised by the clergy."

Rev. R. C. Hallowes, of Arklow, we regret to hear, has been laid low by a very serious illness, from which he is slowly recovering. For five weeks our earnest friend, a vigorous open-air preacher, has been confined to his bed, and in a recent letter he informs us of his great solicitude that the Open Air Mission for Ireland shall close its financial year without debt. Two months ago he was preaching in towns where, at the beginning of the year, it was declared to be unwise to attempt such a thing, and the people listened with remarkable attention. Mr. Hallowes adds that a fortnight ago, when bidding farewell to friends in expectation of death, he rejoiced in the fact that he had sung and preached the Gospel in the streets of Ireland. He appeals for material support for the Mission.

"GOD'S LITTLE CHILDREN."

Dr. BARNARDO'S HOMES now contain nearly 5,000 Waifs and Strays, among whom are 400 Little Incurables, Deaf, Crippled, or otherwise Diseased, and Nine Souls are added every 24 hours to this Great Family, which is at present in Very Urgent Need of Immediate Help. Even the smallest gifts will be thankfully received.

CLAPTON MISSION.

By means of Social, Philanthropic, and Evangelistic Agencies, the deserving and necessitous poor of Lower Clapton, Homerton, Hoxton, and Whitechapel are being ministered to in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Free Breakfasts have been supplied to 150,000 children, 40,000 cases have been assisted by the Medical Mission. Many of the Lord's poor have had free residence in the Seaside Home of Rest, and thousands of the destitute have been fed and clothed. Last Christmas 3,000 poor persons were assisted with food and clothing.

We are in urgent need of Funds. Appeals from starving children and adults are made to us. Will you help us to respond to them? Contributions may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or to

THE BOOK WORLD.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM.

Of the many and various works of Rev. F. B. Meyer, few have made a deeper impression upon the spiritual mind than The Shepherd Psalm, in which Psalm xxiii. is opened up in heart-musings and soul lessons. In that remarkable little work Mr. Meyer writes in the spirit of the pathetic lyric which he expounds, and the succinctness of treatment suits the need of our busy days, when many of Jehovah's sheep have all too limited experience of the green pastures and still waters. The Psalm is not only music for the soul, but teaching for the life, and to this many readers of Mr. Meyer's book have borne hearty testimony.

Having been much used in America, Mr. Meyer has dedicated a new edition of the work to his beloved friend, Mr. Moody, and in remembrance of weeks of happy fellowship in Northfield Conventions has called this The Northfield Edition of the Shepherd Psalm. In every way beautifully produced, this edition is sure to be in large demand for presentation purposes. Printed in clear, bold type, on enamelled art paper, the book is quite tempting to the reader, and appropriate designs and emblems adorn every page. At this season of the year many will regard such a volume as specially suited to accompany Christian greetings. (Cloth, watered silk finish, gilt edges, 5s.; leather, padded, rolled gold, gilt edges, 7s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

STORY BOOKS.

In Dolf Wyllarde's charming story, "A Lonely Little Lady" (5s. Hutchinson), we get another peep behind the scenes in fashionable London, and we realise once more how sad and empty a child's life may be if deprived of the true mother's love, although she has all that money can buy. The sweet little figure of Brownie will win many a heart.

The Fairy Stepmother. By Esea Gray. (James Clarke & Co.) Stepmothers are not in every instance a striking success; but there are many other cases where their influence in a household has proved beyond doubt that they were God-sent. We have in this very prettily told story an illustration of the latter sort. Old and young alike will read it with pleasure and profit.

In For Cross and Crescent (5s. Shaw & Co.) we have another of Dr. Gordon Stables' popular books for boys. The capture of the little hero with his small ladylove by robbers, and his subsequent adventures with Richard Cœur de Lion in the Holy Land, followed by their well-known captivity, are incidents which the author has woven into an embroidery of dangers and deliverances such as all boys love. An Island of Gold is by the same author, and if his pen usually gives us more stirring scenes than occupy the first hundred pages, young readers will find plenty of adventures in the latter portion, which treats of perils encountered by the crew of the good ship Sea Flower on a cannibal island. The book is sure to be a favourite. (3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.)

We can only give brief mention to the following:—Through Storm to Calm, by Emma Leslie. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society) is a lively tale of the last century, when John Wesley's evangelistic fervour had caused a "Methodist fever" to spread through the land. From Under the Shadow, by Annie B. Foskett (R. Culley), records some interesting chapters in the social life of the "Bassington Methodist Church," and ends, of course, with wedding bells. Mistress of the Situation, by Jennie Chappell (S. W. Partridge), tells admirably how a lady's help became a sister of the family. The King's Daughter, by Pansy (S.S. Union), is a temperance story written in the pleasing fashion of this well-known author. Grandmother's Album, by Harriet E. Colville (2s. Religious Tract Society), combines history and romance in a very skilful way. On the Edge of a Moor, by the author of "Probable Sons" (Religious Tract Society), is a story of country life in which visitation, adventure, trial, and life's compensations are impartially mixed. Marion Harland's Awakening, by Edith M. Edwards (S.S. Union), has a special lesson for wilful and wayward girls.

Other readable books for young and old alike are: The Baby Philosopher, by Ruth Berridge (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons); A Helping Hand, by M. B. Synge (1s. 6d. Nelson & Sons); Ronald Cameron's Discipline, by Ellen A. Fyfe (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society); and Shut in to Serve, or Harold Winter's Lifework, by L. Phillips (1s. 6d. R.T.S.), the last-named telling the story of an invalid who nevertheless was diligent in work for Christ. The success achieved by John Ackworth (Rev. Fred R. Smith) in his "Clog Shop Chronicles" is well continued in a sequel entitled Beckside Lights. (3s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) The pages admirably "realise" life in a Lancashire mill village, with a Methodist chapel and a clog shop as centres of interest. The story is well constructed, and the dialect is that which prevails around Bolton. The adventures of a bear family form the subject of a new animal story, The Adventures of a Siberian Cub, just published by Jarrold & Sons (3s. 6d.) The work originally appeared in Russia, where it had an extensive sale, and has been already translated into French, German, and Norwegian. The English version is by Mr. Leon Golschmann, of the Russian Embassy. It has been admirably illustrated by Miss Winifred Austen, and will greatly delight the young folk. Four simple stories for the children, earnest and pointed in purpose, are told in Fina's First-Fruits, by Lena Tyack (C. H. Kelly). Helpful lessons are given on the privilege of cheering and comforting the afflicted.

Those who wish for a pretty selection of children's poems will do well to get Poems of Childhood (Saxon & Co.). Many are old favourites, but are none the less welcome for that.

The Christmas number of Woman (6d.) is accompanied by a coloured supplement, entitled "Christmas Posy," containing verses for children, with amusing pictures. (10 and 11, Fetter-lane, E.C.)

A new volume of daily readings is the Ian Maclaren Year Book. The readings are from the works of Dr. Watson, and the book is got up in dainty form for presentation purposes. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The annual volume of The Boy's Sunday Monthly (56, Paternoster-row) makes a very attractive collection of good reading for the young. It will provide interesting reading for restless boys and prove the channel of much valuable information.

The perennial interest attaching to our great national poet will secure attention for A Book about Shakespeare. By J. N. M'Ilwraith. (2s. Nelson & Sons.) The story of his life is told in a simple style, suited for the young, while some little account is interwoven of his imperishable works.

Dr. Joseph Parker's address at Exeter Hall on Gambling has now appeared, Gambling in Various Aspects (James Bowden, Henrietta-street, price 3d.). It should be widely circulated; its trenchant and telling invective are well fitted to startle many who are forming, unthinkingly, an evil habit.

A Crimean Veteran and other Stories. (1s. nett. A. H. Stockwell & Co.) These are very delightful sketches of visits among aged poor of the country almshouse type. The author has a keenly observant and sympathetic eye, and his chapters are idyllic in the best sense of the word.

Nature Notes, the very attractive magazine of the Selborne Society, completes its eighth year with a number full of interest. The papers include "A Country Garden in Winter," and there are many curious and interesting notes (2d. monthly. Bale, Sons, & Danielsson, Great Titchfield-street, W.)

Mr. J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park, N., is making up cards in Christian Workers' parcels for 2s. 6d. post free (original price 10s. 6d.), with Christmas and New Year greetings, and Scripture texts in floral designs. This collection includes some cards that will be specially welcome to visitors among the sick and poor.

There is always something worth the attention of preachers in The Homiletic Review, the December number of which includes, with other excellent features, a budget of helps and hints for Christmas discourses. Dr. Gregory writes in the "School of Bible Study" department a very useful article on the Book of Revelation, with an outline plan of that wonderful portion of Holy Scripture. (1s. Funk & Wagnalls, 44, Fleet-street.)

Friends of the late Dr. E. Herber Evans will gladly refresh their memories or store their minds with some of the excellent things that fell from the lips of that eloquent preacher. His brother Justin has collected into a goodly volume (True and False Aims (6s. Hodder & Stoughton), a choice selection of his sermons, whose message is bold and fearless, winning and wise, and in which may almost be heard again "the sound of a voice that is still."

With reference to our notice last week of Rev. D. H. D. Wilkinson's book on Baptism (Seeleys) we have pleasure in stating that the author of the book repudiates objections that may logically be raised to his teaching as to children being brought by baptism into the covenant of grace. Mr. Wilkinson is not sacramentarian in his views; and is content that "the secret things belong unto the Lord," and, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

The importance of interesting children in missions has long been recognised by great missionary societies. The Church Missionary Society have just issued a singularly-attractive child's book. The Great Big World: a Missionary Walk in the Zoo. By Agnes M. Batty. Illustrated by Lilian Stevenson. (Price 1s. 6d.) It is simply charming and will delight the tiny mites, planting, in many cases, the seed of a future life of consecration to the cause of the Gospel among the heathen.

In booklets of sterling value, Mrs. C. Skinner has disseminated sound and helpful teaching on the Master's Gifts and Messages to Women. Now, in Sisters of the Master (1s. Partridge & Co.) she writes of Mary of Bethany, Lydia of Thyatira, Persis the Beloved, and other characters of New Testament and later times, not excluding our own Queen Victoria. Mrs. Skinner shows how all ten of her subjects became "Sisters of the Master"—by doing the will of God; and thus her pages are worthy the prayerful perusal of all who would live the obedient and fruitful life.

Many a preacher finds it difficult to keep up the supply of illustrative stories wherewith to point his addresses to the young. Dr. Louis Albert Banks, an American minister who has sent forth several volumes of striking sermons, has now come to the help of the children's address by issuing Sermon Stories for Boys and Girls. (4s. Funk & Wagnalls Co.) Nearly fifty in number, and all carrying important lessons, the stories will be welcome to many a pastor and teacher, and the book will not be above the reading powers of intelligent boys and girls.

For the fourteenth year the "Ruby" Almanac and text book has been issued, with the title Fine Gold (2d.) The alternate pages are filled with gleanings from various spiritual fields. The contents justify the title of the pretty booklet. Uniform in style are six text-books for every morning and evening in the months, practical excerpts accompanying the selections from Scripture. These are Echoes of Song, Light on the Daily Path, and Morning Joy and Evening Blessing. Others, with chromo covers, are Chimes, Songs of Rest, and Sunrise and Sunset (all 2d. each). J. G. Wheeler, 88, Mildmay Park; W. G. Wheeler and Co., Paternoster Row.

Young men have many periodicals seeking to influence them for good, but few can urge stronger claims upon thoughtful attention than The Guide, which well describes itself as "a help to present progress and future well-being." As a monthly, this little paper finds its way largely among members of the Y.M.C.A. and kindred institutions. The bound volume is as good as its excellent predecessors, the chief series this year being "Pioneers of Progress," "Poets of the Victorian Age," and "Men I Have Heard," by the late Professor Ferguson, of Glasgow. The pages are solid without being heavy, at once instructive and interesting. (London: Wm. Mackenzie, 69, Ludgate-hill. Glasgow: Wm. Love, 221, Argyle-street.)

There is no lack of new children's books this season, and among the most attractive, in the juvenile judgment, should be included All the Way to Fairyland, a volume of sunny stories by Evelyn Sharp, with coloured illustrations by Mrs. Percy Dearmer. (6s. John Lane.) The pages conduct us well into the interior of the enchanted country, and they are so simple and bright that the little ones who hear or read them are sure to take after the best examples of fairy folk. Another capital book (same publisher and price) is King Longbeard; or, Annals of the Golden Dreamland, a book of fairy tales, by Barrington MacGregor, illustrated by Charles Robinson. A map of Dreamland, and many other amusing engravings, enrich the book, which is dedicated, by permission, to the Duchess of York.

The story of England's many noble piles of ecclesiastical architecture is full of interest, as may easily be learned from Our English Minsters, a second series of illustrated sketches by various writers. (7s. 6d. Isbister & Co.) The story of St. Paul's Cathedral is told by Canon Newbolt; while York Minster is described by Dean Purey-Cust. Many historical allusions as well as much curious information finds embodiment in these well-written sketches. The same may be said of the other articles—Ely Cathedral, by Canon Dickson; Norwich, by Dean Lefroy; St. Alban's Abbey, by Canon Liddell; Salisbury Cathedral, by Dean Boyle; Worcester, by Canon Teignmouth Shore; and Exeter, by Canon Edmonds. The engravings are of a high order, and form a valuable feature of an instructive and entertaining volume.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

AMONG the happiest innovations of Christmas goodwill is the distribution of toys given by children in happy, comfortable homes to their less fortunate brothers and sisters in the slums of our cities. By this means the spirit of unselfishness is fostered in early youth, and many sad little lives are made joyous at least for a time. In many places boys and girls are responding to the appeal in a generous way, and will have a taste of the delight of bringing happiness and light into homes too poor to gain them otherwise. Parents would do well to foster this spirit in their little ones. In many families no opportunity is given for the cultivation of this kind of unselfishness, and it is no wonder that children grow up without a thought outside their own interests. Education in self-sacrifice cannot begin too early.

Last Sunday was the day for which the Peace Society had requested united prayer for the cessation of international warfare. Probably there were few churches wherein special reference was not made in some way or other. This subject, unlike many others which now claim a special Sunday, does not lead the minister away from the Gospel message proper. Every sermon should be one of peace and goodwill. So that when asked to preach a special discourse on peace, the preacher is disposed to say with one whose deacons asked him to preach to young men, "I cannot do otherwise." But there is a charm as well as a power in united prayer, and it is a sublime idea that on the same day the whole nation should be prostrate before God pleading that wars might cease. Would that it were truly so!

The prayer for peace is a petition of great comprehension. It includes the disestablishment of militarism, with its oppression in days of peace and its nameless horrors in time of deadly conflict. It likewise supplies an answer to the argument of a correspondent that "as the State may set aside the Divine command as to killing" so also it may set it aside as to stealing (territory), bearing false witness (international deception), keeping the Sabbath (during military operations), and as to personal purity (among troops, principally unmarried). Of course, the State may not "set aside" any of God's laws. It often transgresses them, and it suffers in consequence. All unrighteousness brings its penalty. When we pray for peace, we imply the unrighteousness of war and its many sad accompaniments. The God of Peace, who is the God of love and purity, righteousness and truth, will in due course give a complete answer to the prayer.

For some time past a generous reader has been paying the annual subscriptions to send this paper to 75 missionaries abroad. His death unfortunately terminates this arrangement at the end of the present year, but we hope other friends will come forward to supply his place.

That the paper is appreciated by lonely workers in the mission field is evidenced by the letters which we are frequently receiving, The following is an extract from one received recently :—

I am under great obligations to the good friend who has so kindly and regularly cheered my life by sending me THE CHRISTIAN. Let me say that I greatly value the paper, especially for its consistent testimony to the truth.

The subscription abroad is 8s. 10d. per copy per annum, post free.

Many of our readers have been availing themselves of our publishers' offer of the Paragraph Bible (see advertisement on page 31) for giving away at Christmas and the New Year, and it certainly forms a very handsome and useful present. Appreciative letters continue to come from all parts, such as the following :—

It was a most Christian act to give us mission workers the chance of such a volume for the sum of six shillings.

My mother—an old lady of 84—bids me write and thank you for the beautiful Paragraph Bible safely received. She is quite delighted with it, and has taken it into constant use—at once finding the beautiful clear print most grateful to her failing eyes

The Paragraph Bible is everything that one can desire, and I can give it my unqualified recommendation.

The Bible has given me fresh pleasure and help in my studies. The references being so clear and close to each verse, is a very helpful feature.

The recent action of the Midland and South-Western Railway Companies in favourably considering the claims of their employés for more generous treatment is an example well worthy of being followed. The men were well-advised to restrain themselves from the threatened strike at this busy season of the year, and the employers in these two instances have promptly met their action by friendly concessions. Many railway men, as is widely acknowledged, have real hardships to bear, and it will be a public benefit if their lot is made more tolerable. Meanwhile, the result of the negotiations in the engineering dispute hangs in the balance, and the appeal to the men will be settled by Christmas Day. We hope the spirit of the season will so far prevail as to foster an attitude of concession on both sides, and so put an end to this disastrous and suicidal strife.

The Bishop of Liverpool has made a very correct diagnosis of the present religious condition of the country. He says that there are myriads in the churches who exhibit no interest in vital religion. If a preacher is only clever and eloquent and earnest, he is thought to be all right, however strange and heterogeneous his sermons may be.

Popery or Protestantism, no Atonement or an Atonement, a personal Holy Ghost or an impersonal, future punishment or no future punishment, High Church, Low Church, Broad Church, Trinitarianism, Arianism, or Unitarianism, nothing comes amiss to some people. They think doctrine of no importance; they think everybody is going to be saved, nobody going to be lost. Their religion is made up of negatives; and the only positive thing about them is their positive dislike to distinctiveness.

That last point is the serious one—"positive dislike of distinctiveness." In the olden times there might be, in some instances, too much attention paid to doctrinal differences, and distinctions in words might be made to serve for more important things. But we have got away from that, and nowadays it is refreshing to come upon men to whom some beliefs are so dear that not on any account would they sacrifice them. Another remark of the venerable bishop deserves quotation :—

It is a simple fact that wherever spiritual religion is strong and vigorous in a church, the honour of Sunday is evident; wherever it decays, Sunday ceases to be observed. In a word, Sunday is the barometer of every so-called Christian nation.

The Consistory Courts have condemned the Popish practices of St. Mark's, Marylebone. The High Church clergy have made it a matter of conscience to use a ritual which is not distinguishable from that of Rome. By the fact that the Church is established they are commanded to use a Protestant ritual of which their conscience does not approve. What will they do? The only consistent alternative is for them to join the Roman Church.

A movement has been initiated, under the auspices of the Bishops of Durham and Newcastle, called "The Committee for Aid in Lessening the Difficulties of Faith." Its object is to meet the case of those who desire help in meeting the more weighty objections sometimes urged against the Christian religion. Eminent laymen as well as clergymen are to be utilised for sermons, lectures, and conversations on various perplexing questions. That a useful function may be fulfilled by such a society is obvious. No good is done by ignoring the difficulties felt by genuine inquirers. Everything depends, however, on the spirit in which such a movement is carried on. Most of the perplexities of faith vanish and become easily bearable once the heart is really turned to God; and until this end is reached their removal does no good. The best antidote to unbelief, as every minister of experience knows, is a thorough conversion. If this condition is clearly and loyally maintained, then all wise helps to a clearer intellectual attitude on matters of faith are likely to be a real benefit, but not before.

The Church Review expresses the opinion that "the mere indiscriminate circulation of the Scriptures has led to deplorable results." In what way? No doubt it is well sometimes that experienced and well-read Christians should aid in their interpretation, but the inference that the Scriptures require the presence of some ordained minister to act as an authorised interpreter is not to be admitted. The Ethiopian eunuch, no doubt, needed the guidance of Philip, and in every age and place men need help, but we do not fear to trust them to the Scriptures and the Scriptures to them. Such freedom has not led to such "deplorable results" as bondage to a Church, the interference of which has often led to the Scriptures being superseded. The Church, whatever it be, must be judged by the Scriptures, not the Scriptures fixed by the Church.

If Englishmen do not understand the nature of the Anglican and Roman Revival of these latter days, it is not for lack of biographies of the eminent men who played a chief part in creating it. The last to be added is THE LIFE and Times of Cardinal Wiseman (24s. Longmans), the haughty prelate, who, "from out the Flaminian Gate," announced the formation of the new sees in England:—

So that at present, and till such time as the Holy See shall think fit otherwise to provide, we govern, and shall continue to govern, the counties of Middlesex, Hertford, and Essex, as ordinary thereof, and those of Surrey, Sussex, Kent, Berkshire, and Hampshire, with the islands annexed, as administrator with ordinary jurisdiction.

As in Purcell's "Life of Manning," we have the picture of a conflict both about persons and principles. "What Wiseman suffered from Protestants in the Papal aggression agitation of 1850 was nothing to what he suffered from his own bishops and clergy twelve years later." Whence it is clear that the boasted unity of the Church of Rome is not "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

We do not for a moment suppose that any practical result will accrue from the attempt which is being made to get Cardinal Vaughan a seat in the House of Lords. If the matter is taken up at all seriously, then every other religious denomination must be represented there too. That, be it remembered, is the point. It is not a mere question of admitting a peer who happens to be of the Roman Catholic persuasion. There are many such in the Upper Chamber at the present time. This is an attempt to the Romish Church definitely represented in the Lords by one of its leading priests; and if one Dissenting body be represented, there should be no invidious favouritism shown by choosing that special denomination with which the great majority of British people have the least sympathy.

A correspondent, who admits "a sneaking sort of regard for the United Parliamentary Council of the Retail Liquor Trade," writes to the Westminster Gazette:—

Let me point out the most fatal objection to any measure forbidding the sale to children under thirteen of intoxicating liquors for consumption off the premises. Its effect would simply be—to put it mildly—a direct encouragement of the breeding of a race of young prevaricators of the truth.

We have always maintained that this evil is already flagrant under the present system: the child learns to steal, by sipping on the way home, and when questioned on the matter, denies having done so, and thus grows in the habit of untruthfulness. In addition to this, the child who goes to the public-house gets among bad company, and learns the language of sin.

With regard to this sale of intoxicants to children by the owners of licensed houses very definite action is being taken in some parts. The regnant power acknowledged by the publican is, of course, the magistrate—and the magistrate can be best approached on a matter of this kind by those bodies who are not professedly total abstinence organisations. In one of the northern suburbs the matter is being taken up by the School Board. An appeal to the magistrates from that body chosen by the electorate to safeguard the interests of the children should be effective in getting them to make some stipulation when granting licences.

The atrocious murder of Mr. William Terriss, which filled everyone with so much consternation, brings into relief a very serious thought. We have often wondered that there are not more such crimes committed. In a gigantic city like London there are crowds of ambitious men, very few of whom can, in the nature of things, gratify their ambition; many of these can see that there is such a slight difference between themselves and those who are lauded by society that they sink into cynical despondency, and are often filled with envious hate. Unhealthy ambition is an evil thing in the Church as well as in the world. It is well for us all to remember words of John, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." There is only one remedy, viz., so to live in God's sight that earthly success will not be an indispensable ingredient in our cup of bliss; to say with Paul, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therein to be content."

An Anglican contemporary expresses the opinion that the villages of our country are more ungodly than the towns. The rustic simplicity having disappeared nothing is left in its place but the self-centred cunning which was always a characteristic of villagers. We greatly doubt the accuracy of this statement. It may be true of certain villages, or of sections of villages, but it is often found that the warmest hearts, the purest lives, and, in some instances, the most intelligent beliefs, are to be found in villages. Rural districts have supplied some of the best men and women to our great cities.

In a recent speech at Liverpool that Christian statesman, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., said, in regard to cruel experiments upon animals:—

I am afraid that experiments of this kind are rapidly increasing, and that the Act which was passed to regulate vivisection is little more than a dead letter. I am informed that centres of vivisection are rapidly increasing all over the country, and that the hardening effect upon young students is lamentable.

Mr. Smith went on to describe experiments, not merely those made in the alleged interests of science, but also from wicked depravity, such as cutting off the ear and, in succession, the paws of a poor dog, to see if it would still lick the hand of its tormentor, which the too-confiding creature actually did! Has the Christian Church no duty to God in this matter, especially through its pulpits and schools? Should there not be a far more general feeling of obligation to obey the sacred precept, "Open thy mouth for the dumb"?

Mr. Augustine Birrell, M.P., called attention in very impressive language, in an address on Browning to the fact that three of the greatest writers of our time—Carlyle, Tennyson, and Browning — won their way to their great positions without yielding a jot of their convictions, or attempting to write to please. "No one of them bowed the knee to Baal." They had faults; they knew poverty and depression of spirits; for long it seemed as if there was no room for them in the country they best adorned. But they lived through the long weary years of work, of obscurity, of waiting, of want, firm in their determination to be themselves, to be true to their sense of their calling, and then came their reward. The strength of their souls has passed into their books. The same may also be said of a living author—Ruskin; many a golden image he has broken, but to none has he bowed the knee No more useful lesson can a young man learn than that he must be true to his deepest convictions, to his highest sense of duty, and to the Spirit of God within him.

The progress of Christianity in the interior of China is vividly described by Rev. A. E. Claxton, of the L.M.S., in a letter to the Independent and Nonconformist. In Sz-chuan, a huge province of 70,000,000 inhabitants, the first Protestant Mission was started in 1877, since which time the work has been growing steadily, and has now reached such results in converts, organisations, and other evidences of well-founded solidarity, that mandarins, as well as "the people," seem to be convinced that Christianity has "come to stay." Chungking, the centre of this mission enterprise, though not the official capital, is the market, the distributing centre, the throbbing heart which vitalises the four great western provinces. Four of the great Missionary Societies work harmoniously together here; and their converts, numbering hundreds, are yearly increasing. Opposition and hostility are gradually dying down. The whole story is an exhilarating statement of the bright prospects before Christianity in China.

The preaching of a revived Islamism which has been going on recently is creating a state of unrest and dissatisfaction among the inhabitants of the Caucasian mountains, and in other countries where Mohammedanism is strong. Recent travellers in Central Asia tell us that the Mohammedan authorities there are busily sending out young "Mullahs," whose object is "to kindle an enthusiasm of the faithful living under Christian governments." This is largely the result of the Sultan's triumphs over European diplomacy. Its power for mischief is limited in Europe by the restraints put on Turkish tyranny, and in Asia by the justice of our Christian rule over Mohammedan subjects. The sword of Mahomet can be kept in check only by England's faithfulness to the spirit of Christ.

We continue to observe with intense interest the movement for freedom of conscience and in the direction of Gospel light among the Roman Catholic priests of France. Leakage from the ranks of the priesthood through open immorality and bald scepticism, has long been a matter of general indifference; but when men of faith and honour, of character and ability, deliberately follow one another in the assertion of spiritual liberty, and withdraw from the Church of Rome, the condition of things is one that should engage the earnest sympathy and prayerful interest of Evangelical Christians, whatever their nationality or religious distinctions. The December issue of ex-Abbé Bourrier's paper, Le Chrétien Français, written by priests and ex-priests, contains remarkable letters sent by curés to their bishops, also particulars of the ordination of M. Bourrier as pastor in the Reformed Church of France. In the course of his address, the ex-abbé declares for justification by faith; one Mediator between God and men—Jesus Christ; and the Word of God as alone authoritative in spiritual things

These positions, of course, exclude some of the deadliest corruptions and errors of the Romish Church—salvation by personal merit, many mediators between God and the sinner, and submission to all manner and forms of human authority. These things are being found out in France, and good men and true are shaking themselves free from the fetters of superstition and falsehood. In our own favoured land, however, Popery is making the best of great opportunities, consequent upon a criminal forgetfulness of the past and its lessons; and the course of events will undoubtedly necessitate, later if not sooner, another Reformation. Meantime, a priest at Canterbury is advertising for money in support of a Roman Catholic church and school, with promises that—

Every donor of at least 1s. 6d., will be presented with Indulgenced Rosary Beads (Dominican Dolour or Five Wounds) that have touched the Sacred Relics of St. Thomas, or a lovely little Crucifix specially blessed for a holy and happy death. Early application is necessary.

The final clause would suggest that the supply of these beads and crucifixes is limited. Certain it is, however, that so long as the money flows in, the supply will hold out, for in the words of Demetrius the silversmith: "By this craft they have their wealth."

Aspects of Christmas.

THE religious and social celebrations of Christmas-tide fulfil two purposes. The first is commemorative. We call to mind the central fact of history—that God was incarnated in a human Saviour, who was manifested to "take away our sins," and lead us back to Divine favour and fellowship. There is growing peril amid the secular rejoicings of the time, lest we ignore this tremendous and soul-inspiring fact. The birth in Bethlehem was a fresh starting-point in human history—the beginning of a great world-process of redemption. The end of that process is still far from realisation, so far as human foresight can penetrate the veil of time; but even so far, it has been the fountain-head of all that is fairest and sweetest in life. Millions of souls are rejoicing in heaven to-day because of what Christ has done for them; millions more are rejoicing on earth, in a knowledge of sure salvation; millions unborn will yet rejoice in the same. This consciousness it is that gives its central meaning to the happy memories that cluster round the season.

The second function fulfilled in Christmas-tide is also religious, but it is religious on the social side. This is the season of "goodwill among men." The competitions of trade, the animosities of class-distinctions, the chasm between rich and poor, are obliterated or bridged over for a little while by the interchange of kindly favours and good wishes. Christmas-time is an annual "truce of God," and gives a faint suggestion of what the world would be if the Spirit of Christ were to rule the whole year. It is fashionable to be kind to one another just now. So far Christmas is an unmixed benefit. But not till this gracious and brotherly spirit is extended throughout the fifty-two weeks of the year will it do its perfect work in the world. It will not do this till Christ is master of all life, "King of kings, and Lord of lords." Our prayer should, therefore, be "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Let these fulfilments suggest a spiritual analogy. As the Day-spring from on high has visited our world, so also does the Day-star arise in faithful hearts (Luke i. 78, 2 Peter i. 19). As Christ appeared among men to minister and suffer and die, so He may still be manifested in the souls of his followers unto fruitful service, patient continuance in well-doing, and a present realisation of the eternal life. It is the work of the Holy Spirit in this dispensation to make the absent Christ not only present to, but also active in, those who surrender themselves to His indwelling. Even as Christ declared or interpreted the invisible God to the world, so believers are permitted to declare Christ, exhibit Him in words of grace and truth, and works of faith and mercy, before the eyes of angels and of men. The Lord Jesus did always "those things which pleased" the Father; and in like manner it is our privilege so to submit ourselves to God that He may "work in us that which is well-pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ" (John viii. 29; Heb. xiii. 21).

Thus there is an inward as well as an outward Christmas; a past manifestation of God in the person of Christ, and a present manifestation through those of the children of men in whom God works "to will and to do of His good pleasure." (Phil. ii. 13.) As it is written: "I will dwell in them, and walk in them...I will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." And again (concerning Christ and the Church): "We are members of His body, of His flesh, and of His bones." "I have been crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Not only did Christ give Himself for us, but He also gives Himself unto us: "I am in my Father, and ye in Me, and I in you." Praise God, there is a Christmas arising from the heart's experience as well as one arising in the history of mankind, and inscribed on the calendar of time. Herein is found the secret of a blessed and fruitful life—life in Christ, life with Christ within. May all readers of The Christian be enabled to realise the depth of meaning enfolded in the familiar words: "Christ in you," "Christ formed in you." "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable Gift" (2 Cor. vi. 16, 18, ix. 15; Eph. iii. 17, v. 30; Gal. ii. 20, iv. 19; John xiv. 20; Col. i. 27, iii. 1, 3; 1 John ii. 6).

Rev. J. McNeill's London Mission.

JANUARY TO MAY, 1898.

THE following are the arrangements for Mr. McNeill's first mission, January 16-28:—

Jan. 16, Sunday, 11 a.m.—Marylebone Presbyterian Church, W.

Jan. 16, Sunday, 3.30 p.m.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, W.

Jan. 16, Sunday, 6 30 p.m.—Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butts, S.E.

Jan. 17-21, Monday to Friday, 12 to 1 p.m.—City Temple, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Jan. 17-21, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m.—Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Jan. 23, Sunday, 11 a.m.—City Temple.

Jan. 23, Sunday, 3.30 p.m.—St. James's Hall, Piccadilly.

Jan. 23, Sunday, 6.30 p.m.—Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Jan. 24-28, Monday to Friday, 12 to 1 p.m.—City Temple.

Jan. 24-28, Monday to Friday, 7.30 p.m.—Metropolitan Tabernacle.

No Saturday meetings. Due notice will be given of subsequent missions.

For the past six weeks much prayer has been offered up for God's blessing at prayer meetings in connection with nearly 100 places of worship. On January 9—the Sunday prior to Mr. McNeill commencing his mission—there will be a special meeting for prayer at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, commencing at 8.15 p.m. Friends are asked to come together to wait upon God for his blessing.

A letter of welcome to Mr. McNeill has been signed by a hundred and sixty of the clergy, ministers, and laymen. Amongst those who are interested in the movement are the following:—

Mr. T. A. Denny, Chairman and Treasurer.	Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard
Canon McCormick.	Mr, E. M. Denny.
Preb. H. W. Webb-Peploe.	Mr. Robinson Souttar, M.P.
Rev. Oswald Dykes, D.D.	Mr. F. A. Bevan.
Rev. E. A. Stuart.	Mr. Robert Scott.
Rev. J. Clifford, D.D.	Lord Kinnaird.
Mr. Peter McKinnon.	Sir Douglas Fox.
Captain J. Candy.	Sir George Williams.
Rev. Darlow Serjeant.	Mr. H. M. Matheson.
Mr. R. C. Morgan.	Mr. J. H. Tritton.
Rev. Henry Sharpe.	Mr. Saml. Smith, M.P.
Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.	Mr. Edward Rawlings.
Rev. F. B. Meyer.	Mr. A. H. Baynes.
Rev. Thomas Spurgeon.	Rev. G. F. Head.
	Mr. W. H. Seagram.

Contributions towards the expenses of the mission (which will extend to May) may be sent to the treasurer, Mr. T. A. Denny, 7, Connaught-place, W., or to the secretary, Mr. N. R. Hughman, Exeter Hall (Room 20).

Zenana Missions.—Writing from India, Rev. A. R. Cavalier says he has been much impressed with the reality of the missionaries and their work. The more he sees of it the deeper is his conviction of its worth, and the admiration for the workers. God is greatly blessing their efforts.

A Churchman's Notes.

Bishop Tucker's address on taking farewell of that portion of the C.M.S. field in East Africa, which will now have separate episcopal supervision of its own, is full of words of statesmanlike wisdom and Christian perception. He refers to the hindrances to the development and independence of the native churches, and emphasises as the chief difficulty—

> That deep-rooted tendency which there is in the Anglo-Saxon character to anglicise everything with which it comes in contact.

In illustration of this, the Bishop points out several phases of Church life and government, on each of which he has much to say that is wise and balanced. The whole address will merit careful consideration.

The state of affairs in the diocese of St. Asaph is very sad and disheartening to all who love truth and peace. The revolt of so many of the clergy against their Bishop is but a symptom of much that has been known to the initiated for several years past. The whole situation calls for earnest prayer.

What a pity that a moderate Churchman like the Bishop of Gibraltar, even if he cannot approve, does not see his way to be silent about the work of reform in Spain and Portugal in which the late Archbishop Plunket was so deeply interested! As to the alleged resentment among the Spaniards and Portuguese at the intrusion of foreigners in Church matters, are we not to heed those in the land who call for us to "come over and help"?

The subjects and speakers announced for the forthcoming Islington Clerical Meeting give every token of a most profitable gathering. We are especially glad to see Mr. Chavasse's name on the list. He is heard in London far too seldom. Private information shows that his work and influence at Oxford were never higher than at present. Wycliffe Hall was again full last term.

An article on "Church and Dissent" in last week's Church Times is interesting and significant as a clever presentation of the (so-called) Catholic position. But it is utterly alien to the spirit and letter of the Prayer Book, as well as to the historical attitude and beliefs of the reformers who drew up the formularies of the English Church. Tested by the Bible, the article is very doubtful and will do no service in the direction intended. "In vain is the net," etc.

The movement on the part of rich parishes in "adopting" a poorer one, and of thus becoming associated with its work and interests has received an happy illustration in the affiliation of St. George's, Birmingham, with Malvern, by which an additional curate will be provided. There are few parishes so needy as St. George's or so well worked under the wise and spiritual leadership of Rev. G. A. Sowter.

The C.M.S. are beginning to make public their proposals for celebrating the centenary in 1899. Special gatherings in London and elsewhere are suggested, and in due course will be announced. May the wisdom manifestly granted to the committee in relation to the Three Years' Enterprise be continued in the arrangements for crowning that effort in 1899.

We are glad to notice that an Oxford Medical settlement has recently been started in South London in the parish of the rector of Bermondsey. An Oxford man, Dr. J. S. Standfield, M.A., of Exeter College, is in charge of the work; he is at present assisted by Mr. A. H. Gibbon. This beginning, it is hoped, may lead to the formation of an Evangelical settlement in South London, which will find helpers from the ranks of young Oxford graduates who are looking forward to ordination and desire some experience in work among the poor.

The New Hebrides.—Addressing the Synod of the Presbyterian Church of Otago, New Zealand, on November 2, Rev. Oscar Michelsen, whose work in the island of Tongoa is well known to our readers, quoted some interesting figures. There are, he said, in the New Hebrides 2,600 church members and 10,000 adherents. The Otago Mission may be credited with the half of these. Mr. Milne counts up 2,000 converts, and has a communion roll of some 800 members. The New Hebrides missionaries keep up the tradition of the great apostolic missionary, St. Paul, in regard to manual labour. Two-thirds of their time is taken up in this way, and only the remainder can be devoted to specially religious work.

The Testimony of Jesus

Concerning Himself.

By Rev. Dr. JAMES CULROSS.

HE SPEAKS WITH AUTHORITY.

COMPARATIVELY early in his ministry, when great multitudes followed him, Jesus went up into a Galilean mountain, and gathering his disciples round Him, He addressed to them what is commonly called, "The Sermon on the Mount." It is no sermon in the ordinary sense, but properly the legislation of the Kingdom of Heaven, which He announced as "at hand." It is the new covenant, parallel to the words spoken at Sinai in the old. As was fitting, it is spoken in an imperial tone: "Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time—but I say unto you." The people were astonished at a difference from what they were accustomed to in the harangues of the scribes—He spoke with authority.

From the time of Ezra the scribes were the professional expounders both of the law and of the traditions of the elders. They formed an order in Israel. They were scholars by profession, and the nation owed them a great debt. They could trace their "orders" to the prophets, whose "successors" they claimed to be. They might speak dogmatically and peremptorily on matters of scholarship; but their words awakened no echo in the conscience, any more than does a good deal of the preaching of to-day. They collated and arranged the opinions of the past; they balanced probabilities; they set forth and criticised the judgments of famous rabbis of former ages; but the past they represented was a dead past. Many of them, being small men, dealt in platitudes, frivolities, hair-splitting, small subtleties—as, e.g., the proper length of a Sabbath-day's journey; the work that might, and the work that might not, be done on a Sabbath; how a son might evade his filial duty and yet be blameless; what oaths were binding and what not; and similar casuistries; but they failed to carry with them the heart and conscience of honest men.

On the other hand, to the learned ingenuities and sophistries of officialism, Jesus opposed direct and clear speech that went straight to the understanding and the heart. He was, indeed, an unauthorised teacher. He held no "licence" from any body of men, and to the official mind He was to be classed with men like Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. He did not begin by asserting and establishing his position, and taking his stand on it. He simply spoke the word straight from God, and left it to take effect. Coming from "the bosom of the Father," He did not need to reason out his views; He knew, and hence could speak with absolute assurance and consequent authority.

He leaves us, then, to take His word without question, as that which settles all controversy. Amid the thousand uncertainties of the present day, its problems that were supposed to be solved and that are opened up and debated afresh, amid the conflict of voices affirming, denying, questioning, we listen to the voice of Jesus that rises calm, clear, assured, above all the confusion and clamour. In some quarters doubt is preached as if it were a higher thing than faith. Doubting Castle has been renovated and beautified, and furnished with all modern conveniences and luxuries, and is advertised as a delightful resting-place for wearied pilgrims, if, indeed, it be not the true Home where the journey ends. Men (who never knew its agony and have no right to speak) repeat with jaunty Sadducean pride these lines:—

> There lives more faith in honest doubt,
> Believe me, than in half the creeds.

What an awful if for Christian ears is rising up on every side, sometimes in tones of flippancy or cynical scorn, sometimes with a profound and most pathetic earnestness, as of men on a battle-field who know not how soon they may be shot. The Book is assailed; not merely its inspiration, but its common honesty; and is reduced to a collection of fancies and legends and unsound philosophisings, intermingled (it is granted) with marvellous gleams of human insight and genius. Every fact of revelation, every truth, every doctrine—the resurrection from the dead, the judgment, the life to come, the atonement, the forgiveness of sin—every refuge in which our guilty souls find shelter, every promise to which we turn in hope, all separately and all together, are called in question. The Gospel in its very essence is doubted, being regarded now as a dream, now as an imposture, and now as a tyranny. Reason, passion, learning, philosophy, wit, buffoonery, sarcasm, historic and scientific knowledge, the keenest critical skill, the most amazing faculty of originating hypotheses—all have come forth to create doubt and uncertainty. Christ Himself, mocked and buffeted afresh, is deposed from his throne of supremacy; and who sits down in the empty seat but the doubter that deposed Him? But if Jesus Christ is the Son of God, we need not be moved; we can patiently and calmly wait, knowing assuredly that, though the grass withers and the flower fades, his Word abides, his "verily" is the verily of God.

Love in a Cottage.

"Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."—Psalm xxx. 5.

"Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."—Psalm xxxiv. 19.

UPON the mountain-side stood a small cottage, the dwelling of a shepherd and his wife. I had made their acquaintance in my almost daily walks past their door. I was always cordially welcomed, and after a hot and tedious walk, or a longer climb than usual, I was glad to have such a haven of rest awaiting me. Humble folk though these people were, poor and uneducated, yet I always regarded them with reverence, and even love.

The inside of the cottage reflected some of the character of the wife; clean, tidy, orderly, and bright with womanly touches, such as many might have envied with more at their command. But she herself had vastly more in her than her cottage revealed. Living alone with her husband, rarely seeing any other face, and quite content to have it so, her earthly love was wrapped up in him, and worthy indeed was he of it. His wants, his comforts, his thoughts and feelings, were all anticipated; and often the thought struck me as I watched them, What if he died? I need not have asked it; I did not know her then.

And how she loved the nature that was so grand around her mountain home! Often, when climbing the path in the evening, I would see her standing at the door, her expressive face full of love, delight, and reverence. One evening I came thus close to her before she noticed me. The sun was setting, and its last rays gave an exquisite, softened hue to everything on which they fell; the scene was perfect, it touched one's heart with its loveliness. "If only we were like that!" she said, and I understood her.

But nature was not always smiling so. A few days later I was sheltering from a fierce storm beneath my friends' humble roof. The clouds were heavy and black, the rain fell in torrents, many trees had been laid low by the angry wind. The scene was desolate and sad, and I could not repress a sigh. My shepherd friend glanced at me and said, "You do not like the sight?" I shook my head half impatiently. How could anyone like it? I thought to myself. I was young, and could see nothing in it but gloom. We were alone then. Presently his wife joined us, and he said to her, "Our friend does not like this sight." I looked at her, half expecting her disapproval, too; but she did not speak; she was looking out of the window, with sorrow written on her face. It was but for a second or two, then all the usual quietness of expression came back. She spoke softly:—

"There is tumult and confusion there, but there is

PEACE AND CALM TO COME.

A time of struggle is always distressing, but we often have cause to thank God for it when it is over."

She herself had been through the tumult and confusion, and for her the peace and calm had come. She had lost three beautiful children. Before she had spoken she had laid her hand upon her husband's arm, and now he was looking down upon her with a smile that lay like a sunbeam upon his homely features; though her words, the deeper meaning of which he knew so well, had brought the tears to his eyes. The deaths of his bairns must have caused him three sharp struggles indeed.

The neighbours (the nearest was almost half a mile away) spoke of these two affectionately and gratefully: many a tale could they tell of good received at their hands.

Two years went by before I was able to go and see my friends again. Then it was to see but one of them: he had died. One wild wintry evening he had been to assist a neighbour who was in trouble. Coming home he slipped, so it was supposed. They found him lying unconscious on the path. Unconscious they brought him to her, and unconscious he died. My heart was full as I came in sight of the cottage; it was but three weeks since his death. She opened the door and took my hand, a smile of welcome, as of old, lighting up the sad face.

"Come in," she said, and seeing that my quivering lips could not form the words I would have spoken, she added: "I know what you would say, and thank you, sir. There has been tumult and confusion..." and she stopped.

"But peace and calm have come?" I asked, gently.

"I am afraid I cannot say that yet, sir," she said, "but they are coming," and her smile was sadder than tears. She pointed through the casement. The afternoon had been cloudy and overcast; there was a high bank of cloud opposite the window, but it was broken by a beautiful golden streak, reaching from end to end.

"They are coming," she said, smiling. "Quickly," I answered, and could smile too.

Since that time, my own life has often been under the clouds; but in the thickest darkness, when my heart has been torn and tormented, I have remembered that if there are tumult and confusion now, peace and calm will come. I wait, and bow my head—and they come!

The Sin of Achan.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

II.—IN ITS RELATION TO ISRAEL.

"O Lord, what shall I say when Israel turneth their backs before their enemies!"—Joshua vii. 8.

JOSHUA'S supreme trouble as he lay upon his face before God, after the lamentable defeat at Ai, was expressed in the words, "What wilt Thou do for thy great name?" The agonised question reveals very clearly the meaning of that defeat, and shows Achan's sin in its relation to the nation of which he formed a part. Again we are cast upon the consideration of first principles in their bearing on the whole question of man's service to God.

In the Divine ideal, the recipients of definite and peculiar blessing were such, not exclusively for their own benefit, but as channels of communication to others. The whole Book of God, with its story of past and present dispensations, discloses the same great underlying truth, without variation or deviation on the part of the Most High. The one great responsibility which has ever rested upon the people of God, whether regarded as a nation or as individuals, is that they should be a means of revealing to men the Divine glory.

God has ever exercised the principle of selection, so that from certain people or individuals may be reflected the light of his glory upon surrounding spiritual darkness. God's choice is never capricious, but is based upon Divine wisdom, and goes beyond apparent natural fitness. Had you and I been constituted a committee to select a human deliverer for Israel, we should not have gone to the Sinaitic peninsula, and sought for a shepherd who for forty years had cut himself off from his fellow men. But in the purpose of God that isolation meant

SOLEMN PREPARATION FOR A GREAT WORK.

Far beyond the paths of human prudence in such matters, God ever moves within a sphere of highest wisdom.

Men and nations are thus chosen to exhibit the glory of the Divine name; the name which reveals the character and unfolds before mankind the infinite mystery of God's being. It was for the manifestation of the glory of God that Jesus Christ Himself came, and it is for the same purpose that his Church exists to-day. Various dispensations have had varying methods; the one purpose of infinite love has always been that God's way might be known upon earth, his saving health among all nations.

THE PART RELATED TO THE WHOLE.

The nation of Israel was, for the time being, God's media of revelation to surrounding nations—a national message to corrupt nationalities.

A nation is composed of individuals. The perfection of the nation consists in the perfection of the individuals who compose it. Perfect individualism is that which fills its niche in God's great whole. Imperfect individualism has as its chief sin that it spoils the whole. The nation of Israel was not a mere concurrence of individuals banded together by human laws; it was a great whole, through which the glory of the Divine name might be made to shine. To this end every individual life was placed within a sphere of Divine law and order. Each life responsive to that law fitted into true position in the nation; but let one soul break away from the true law of individualism, and the community is unable to fulfil its high function. It is only from such an outlook as this that we can understand how sins, apparently trivial and unimportant, were visited with such swift and awful judgment.

Israel, God's chosen people, living under Divine law, had been defeated? Why? Because, in that community, one man had broken the law, denied the truth, and insulted righteousness. The mechanism of that great nation for revealing the glory of God is thrown out of gear and spoiled by that one act. Men perpetually talk about the "littleness" of sin; but no one minimises the catastrophe to his own watch when the mainspring is broken, though the whole of the works are otherwise intact. There, in the heart of God's nation, the great "mainspring" of principle is broken by the sin of one man. This sin was of the whole people for the time being, because it prevented the nation fulfilling its Divine function as a revealer to other peoples of the glory and purposes of God. When the host of God went up against Jericho, it might have been said, as Tennyson wrote of Sir Galahad:

> His strength was as the strength of ten,
> Because his heart was pure.

The nation moved as one man, strong to overcome, because united in loyalty to God.

It was not by great military prowess that the city was taken. It was rather united in implicit obedience to God; and the blow struck was the blow of God, of the glory of whose name they were but the passing revelation.

THE TRIUMPH OF A PURE PEOPLE

Before the attack on Ai, one soul had, in gratification of rebellious lust, hidden in a tent a Babylonish garment, shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold. This robbed the whole nation of its unifying principle, so that it became but an aggregation of men powerless for God's work. We shall never read the history of Israel aright if we seek therein for evidences of human prowess and successful military organisation. When they ceased to be responsive to God, they turned their backs before their enemies; but even Ai was subsequently taken and overthrown when the evil among themselves had been searched out and put away.

Lessons of responsibility on our part come to us from such a story. First, we are reminded what is the true function of the Church of Christ to-day. In the varying aspects of dispensational truth, God is unchangeable, infallible, and progressive in his dealings with man. Dispensationally, as well as historically, it is true that the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ; but the great underlying principles of Divine government ever remain the same. God's hostility to sin is one of the principles which abide; and another is, that, in successive ages, He has manifested Himself to the nations of the earth by chosen channels—by the patriarchal fathers, by the Israelitish nation; for a brief space of exquisite light, by Jesus Christ Himself; to-day by the catholic Church of Jesus Christ.

WHAT CHURCHES EXIST FOR.

In order that my application of the truth may be more particular, I take the word churches. These exist primarily, not to serve the life of individuals, but that the neighbourhoods where they are situated may know God. He has committed his name to us that we may reveal it to men; and this not only in the teaching of the pulpit but in the lives of our church members. Our Revised Version reveals the true meaning of that passage in Eph. iv. 12, showing that apostles, pastors, teachers, prophets, and others are for the perfecting of the saints, unto ministering. We exist to minister to the world, and to show men the heart of God. We do well to scatter far and wide the Word of God, but no eyes except those illumined by the Spirit can see God's truth upon the sacred page. The Book belongs to he Church of Christ, and we are to hold it fast; but the world can only know its truths as they are re-incarnated in us. Thus, we are responsible to manifest the glory of the name we bear.

How is this to be realised? The Church will be strong for its work in proportion as its individual members are what God would have them to be. We now touch the peculiar iniquity of individual wrong-doing; and the sin of one who has joined himself to the Church of Christ is doubly heinous, inasmuch as it robs a church of power to do God's work in the world. I fear church membership is often undertaken very lightly and granted too easily. It is regarded as a sort of correct and pleasant thing to enter upon, but it involves an oath of allegiance to the King of kings, and faithfulness to the whole Church of Jesus Christ. One Achan in a church may be the means of keeping in dense spiritual darkness multitudes living where that church is called to serve.

No church of Jesus Christ may tolerate sin within its borders. It is a false charity which permits man or woman to retain church membership while living in evil—and a heartless treatment of the world. That sin must be put away when it is discovered is a point upon which I need not dwell. But sin must be sought out; and here it is that many are averse to the message of God, while the preacher delivers such a truth with some degree of reticence. We would be the last to be continually hunting for sin; but, to take no larger outlook, what of the perishing thousands of our own land? To save them, judgment must begin within the house of God. Missionary enterprise, evangelistic effort, philanthrophic movements are being paralysed, negatived, and rendered impossible by a false pity which tolerates unholy lives in our churches. Were the attention of conferences, presbyteries, and church councils solemnly directed to this great question, probably more would be done towards rendering the Church of Christ powerful than in any other way.

A CRUEL THING TO THE NEIGHBOURHOOD,

QUALITY, NOT QUANTITY, IS POWER.

God's instrument for doing his work is too often wrecked by the presence within it of the principle of sin. Brethren, our churches must have discipline. Let it be the discipline of love, of tenderness; let our methods with the wrong-doer be ful of the very compassion of Christ; but let us never forget that so long as sin is hidden in the tent of one man, the whole people of God are thereby weakened, the work of God is hindered, and his purpose is frustrated.

World-wide Circle of Prayer.

Dear Sir,—May I call attention to the "Circle of Prayer" for the increased manifestation of the grace and energy of the Holy Spirit, that He may work through the Church for the exaltation of Christ and the winning of souls?

This circle of prayer is on the first day of every month, both in private and collectively, at suggested hours, such as 7 a.m., noon, or evening. All Christian denominations are united in it in our own land and in Asia, Africa, America, and Europe.

Similar unions in prayer are said to have given the impetus to the foreign missionary enterprise of a century ago. Shall we not unite to implore Divine aid in the formidable task of evangelising our own country, both in cities and villages, before the close of the present century?

In Birmingham we meet in the Y.M.C.A. Assembly Rooms from twelve to two on New Year's Day with different chairmen each half-hour. I trust other towns may take similar action.—Yours faithfully, James Rutherford,

A Member of the "Circle" Executive.

A Woman of Fashion.—A daily paper gives a painful description of the life lived by a modern woman of fashion. The better part of the morning is spent in the hands of her "women"—the hairdresser, the manicure, and the face masseuse—and the rest is devoted to a drive round to the dressmakers and the milliners. Then lunch and a siesta, followed by tea and gossip. Then "before dinner the toilet has to be seriously considered again." We have also heard of men who "spend an hour before the glass arranging their necktie to satisfaction." And this is life, this is modern civilisation! The savage warrior's decoration is nothing compared with this waste of money. No wonder they suffer from ennui, and find life not worth living.

FROM OTHER LANDS.

Notes from America.

It was pleasant to hear at Winnipeg that the visit last winter of our evangelist brother, Charles Inglis, had left permanent results in the continuance of not a few who had then been led to Christ.

Minneapolis on the Mississippi, in the State of Minnesota, was an Indian Reservation fifty years ago, but is now a splendid modern city of over 200,000 inhabitants. It is laid out in squares and blocks, like most other American cities. The first settler is still alive. It is interesting to hear those who have been witnessing the marvellous growth of the city speak of the first efforts and beginnings.

Owing to the 60,000 Scandinavians in Minneapolis, an enthusiastic reception was given to when, on his lecturing tour through Western America, he came here on November 19.

In the evening demonstration, which took place at the West Hotel, there was a great display of local talent, music and songs having been purposely written for this occasion and dedicated to the Northern hero. His drive to the Swedish Tabernacle resembled a triumphal progress. He was seated in a carriage drawn by four white horses, and conducted by a torchlight procession composed of different societies. An audience of over 3500 awaited him at the Tabernacle, and with much attention followed the lecturer's account of his three years' long journey.

To those who, like ourselves, were prevented from peeping with Nansen into the ice-world—the regions where even the germs find it too cold to breed disease—the reports given in the Press revealed not only a genius, but also the soul of a poet. The magical accounts of the Polar scenery spoke to the imagination like a fairy tale. In describing the beauty of the Polar nights, he spoke of the different coloured lights as "ever-changing, never-resting—peaceless, like the yearning soul of man."

In the same place, where these words seemed to lift up a veil from the speaker's soul, Mr. Moody, a few hours before, had spoken to a similar crowd of quite a different experience, giving everyone the opportunity of sharing it. The message was as the result of faith in Christ, the Saviour of men.

These two men, Moody and Nansen, who exercise so great an attraction over people wherever they go, seemed to be attracted by and to each other. Mr. Moody managed to hear Dr. Nansen's Saturday lecture in Norwegian, which a gentleman sitting by interpreted to him, and he spoke in high terms of his courage; he returned from the lecture calling Nansen the pluckiest man alive, though he thought his heroism might have had a higher and worthier object and result.

In his turn, the Arctic explorer, who never had been to a similar meeting before, attended the men's meeting held at Westminster Church on the Sunday afternoon. His staying for the after-meeting seemed to manifest his appreciation for the Bible explorer. May we not hope that it indicated an interest in the Bible itself?

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Since it was inaugurated by the Pilgrim Fathers, 277 years ago, the last Thursday in November has been observed in America as a day for thanksgiving and praise to God. In the course of time the day has largely lost its original strictly religious character; but though in many a home circle the spirit of thanks and praise may have no part in the enjoyment, yet the custom is one of the best institutions that Americans owe to those early immigrants.

On that day Christian hearts beat in unison. Believers of kindred spirit forget the little differences of their denominations, and gather together in one place to worship Him from whom all blessings flow. We attended a solemn service at the Presbyterian Westminster Church, the largest and handsomest in the town, decorated for this occasion with palms and chrysanthemums. The united congregations of the north side of the city—Methodists, Baptists, and Congregationalists—filled the church to the uttermost.

The service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Pleasant Hunter, pastor of the church. After the usual reading of the Bible alternately with songs by the choir and the congregation, Rev. Charles B. Mitchell (Wesleyan) uttered thanks in prayer for the increasing prosperity of the country, the liberty enjoyed by white and black, the intellectual advantages open to all races in the United States, the spreading of the Gospel, the higher standard of Christianity, according to which Christians find their centre in Christ and not in creeds, and the hope for a better future dawning in the spiritual kingdom.

The sermon on 1 Sam. vii. 12 was preached by Rev. W. B. Riley (Baptist), described to us by members of the Bible Committee as a faithful minister of the Gospel, and an aggressive worker for the kingdom of God. Results are worth mentioning: During his ministry of nine months two hundred members have been added to the church.

The next day, as we were travelling to Denver, Col., we scanned many a paper in order to know the topics of the various thanksgiving sermons. Many propounded their views on politics, but few of those reported were in the same strain of gratitude to God.

At Denver we were delighted to meet with Mr. Gravatt, one of the early students at Mount Hermon Seminary. An intelligent, well-instructed lover of the Bible, with a mind open to learn from any quarter, loving the truth for its own sake, free from crankiness, walking in the middle of the paths of judgment, a wayfarer on the King's highway, avoiding by-path meadows of speculation and doubt, Mr. Gravatt promises to be one of the most useful men in this busy and increasing city.

YOUNG MEN AFRAID OF WORK.

A prominent mill man of the State says: "I have young men coming to me asking for work. I ask them what they want to do. In nearly every instance I find that they want a clerical position, even though the salary is less than that received by the man who handles a shovel and a pick. 'If you want to work for me,' I say, 'let me have your name, and I will notify you when there is an opening. You must know, however, that you are to accept the place I assign, even though it means that you shall handle a shovel.' The applicant seldom shows up again."

The above extract from a Denver paper may contain a useful hint to young men seeking a career in the United States, or in any of our colonies.

Among Indian Pariahs.

The work of the Gospel is progressing in and around Madras. My efforts are confined just now to four villages occupied entirely by Pariahs. About thirty of these have become professed disciples of Jesus Christ, and form my congregation. There are many inquirers, but owing to financial straits I have only two workers at present. I desire to employ two others from January next, and ask the sympathy of your readers. £2 per month will ensure their support.

Will friends send me some tracts, Christian magazines, and a few copies of the Bible, for free distribution among soldiers, nominal Christians, and Hindus? Reference as to my work here may be made to Miss E. R. Wood, Tract Depôt, Queen's-road, Buckhurst Hill, Essex.

A Remarkable Awakening.

In recent letters Rev. F. R. Bunker, of the Zulu Mission of the American Board, writes of a remarkable revival in and around Adams Mission Station, Natal. He says:—

"About the beginning of the year meetings were held at Inanda and the stations at the north end of the mission by an evangelist, Elder George Weavers, of Tabor, Iowa, U.S.A., a plain man of God, with little education of this world, but a faithful student of God's Word, and a man of much prayer. The Holy Spirit used him to begin a work which has since swept like a mighty tide over the whole mission. Conviction of sin and fleeing to Christ for refuge seem contagious in the land. There is no leader of the movement except the Holy Spirit. Sometimes He uses a missionary to utter his message, and sometimes He uses a school girl or boy, or calls an ignorant kraal girl, just out of heathenism. No matter what the instrument, men listen and act as if their lives depended on it.

"The revival has passed through our schools with great power. The 180 girls at Inanda Seminary have been shaken like leaves in the tempest. The same is true among the sixty girls at Umzumbe. The boys in Amanzimtoti Seminary have been wonderfully stirred. Sleep was abandoned to afford time for confession. The teachers stood amazed to see the work which they had struggled so hard to accomplish done so easily and thoroughly by the Spirit's power. In March I was given temporary charge of Imfume, and went to spend Sunday there. We had a pleasant service, and I found that some of the Christians were anxious to receive such blessings as were coming to other stations. I said to them, 'Meet together, and pray for the blessing, and God will send it.' That evening, while the church members were praying, the Spirit came upon them, and against their will, and against the protest of leading members, they began to confess their sins with strong cryings to God for pardon. One of those who had opposed the work was compelled to confess his sins, and the other was silenced. Awful things were confessed then and during two following weeks, when all-night meetings were held.

"I especially remarked the tenderness of conscience that characterised their confessions, a most unusual thing among the people. It usually takes a lawyer's skill to make them see that they have sinned at all. In the entire history of the mission there has been no such awakening among the people. The work of teaching and training which this movement necessitates seems appalling to our depleted band of missionaries. Pray for us that He who has begun the work may perfect it until the day of Christ."

Distress in Newfoundland.

In a letter from Mr. J. W. Marriott, of St. John's, Newfoundland, one of the Colonial and Continental Church Society's agents, acknowledging a box of clothing, etc., says:—"We were never more in need of such assistance. I had a box from England nearly as large as yours some time ago, but it is all gone now, except a few things I have kept for cases of distress in St. John's. I am afraid the people of Labrador have a dreadful winter before them. Mr. Pitcher, the Society's agent, writing from Cape Charles, says that 'unless something is done, the spring of 1898 will tell of starvation on the Labrador. If he had had a dozen such sacks he would find use for them. He states that he has seen hard times when travelling in the winter season, but he feels sure that this will exceed all the others.

"Canon Pilot has since heard from or about Mr. Pitcher, and it seems he is hesitating to undertake his winter missionary journey through the scattered settlements between Battle Harbour and Sandwich Bay, as he fears the poor people may not be able to feed him through his journey, or that if they did it would be at the expense of suffering for themselves."

Sailors' Rest, Palermo.—The missionary to sailors at this Sicilian port, Mr. M. Neilson, in taking a retrospective view of what has been accomplished during the past two years, states there is reason to thank God and take courage for the future. He says: "We have tried to teach and influence for good all the seamen visiting the port, and we are encouraged to hope that our efforts have not been in vain. We are in special need of a magic-lantern and slides, which will be a most valuable help in bringing the sailors together, also good literature for distribution on board ship.

How our Christmas Began.

MRS. LEWIS was sitting in her private room, surrounded with piles of warm material, from which she was planning garments for the needy ones in winter.

"Mother, mother, why do we have presents at Christmas?"

"Why do we kiss under the mistletoe?"

"Why do we burn logs and have evergreens?" burst in a chorus of young voices, all at once.

"Hush, children, hush; one at a time, please; what is it that you want to know?" asked the astonished lady. After listening to the repeated questions, and noticing that the young folks were really eager for their answers, she said, "It will be a long story, and I shall have to take you back many hundreds of years; but if you will all sit down quietly, I will try. Girls, you may run some of these seams for the warm skirts, and you boys may paste these pictures in the calico books, and we will talk and listen and work all together. When Christmas comes you shall each give the garment or book you have made yourself to some child who is ill or poor, so that we shall have twelve happy children instead of six.

"It is about certain that the 25th of December is not the day on which the Saviour was born into this world. The name Christ's-mass tells us that it had its origin in the Roman Church.

"You have heard how dreadfully the early Christians were persecuted, and how thousands of them were killed at Rome and in other countries. Some years after that there came a new Emperor of Rome named Constantine, and he became a Christian, but as he was afraid that he might offend some of his people who still wished to remain in their old religion he determined to adopt many of the Pagan forms and ceremonies to the new religion, and so the simple worship of the New Testament became mixed up with many Pagan rites. Among other things was a grand festival about the end of December in honour of the birthday of the son of the Queen of Heaven. Visits were paid, presents given and exchanged between friends, and it was a time of great rejoicing. When the Christian religion was adopted by Constantine, he changed this festival into one in honour of the birth of the Saviour. Now that is how our Christmas began.

"Some of the Christians would not keep the festivals, and only retained the Sabbath day and anything for which they could find a command in the New Testament. Others felt it would be a help to them if they remembered some of the feasts and fasts, only they would keep them in a better way; so Christmas Day was one which was retained by them.

"Now," said Julia, "why do we burn logs and put up hollies and evergreens?" and "Why do we kiss under the mistletoe?" asked little Robert.

"Well, darlings," said mother, "this means another story from long, long ago. The evergreens and the mistletoe are also relics of the old Pagan days.

"Five hundred years before Christ came, the prophet Zechariah spoke of Him as 'The Branch.' An old Greek story said that the mother of their sun-god was one day changed into a tree; and when the Divine Son was born He was 'the branch': the tree was burnt but the branch remained ever green. From this old story we can trace the beginning of our burning the yule-log on Christmas Eve and hanging up holly and evergreens on Christmas morning.

"I think, too," continued Mrs. Lewis, "you have read about the Druids, who were the leaders of religion in this country more than 2000 years ago. They, also, had got a little of this old story, and they held the mistletoe to be a sacred plant; they called it 'a Divine branch' which came from heaven and grew upon a tree that sprang out of the earth. You know that the mistletoe does not grow out of the ground, but lives on the oak trees. The heavenly branch was grafted into the earthly tree, and this showed how heaven and earth were reconciled. Sin had parted them, and thus they were joined together again. From this the mistletoe became the token of God's love and reconciliation with man, and the kiss is the well-known symbol of pardon and peace.

"We keep Christmas as a time of rejoicing, because the birth of our Saviour brought joy to earth, and was celebrated with joy in heaven; we give presents in remembrance of God's great gift to us; we try to make others happy and tell them the grand tidings, that we may get praise for Him who loved us so much that He left his glory and came down to save us from our sins.

"In Germany they have a pretty custom for children to make a little garment for the Baby Jesus at Christmas-time, and these are given to poor or sick little ones, because Jesus said, 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me.'

"Dear little May has been sewing for me; she has done her best, and I do not laugh at her big stitches and say they are no good. Our very best work for God is very imperfect in his sight, yet He loves to have us do it; and if we do our best because we love Him and long to please Him, Jesus will help us, and his blessed Spirit will teach us to do better every day."

His First Christmas.

Suggested by an incident which occurred at the Ragged School Union Home for Cripple Children, Southend-on-Sea, Essex. A little fellow seeing his presents on Christmas Day, on emptying his stocking asked how often does Christmas come, and on being told every year, replied, "No, that's a story: I've been alive seven years, but I ain't never had one before."

Lo! through heaven's shining portals,
Came the Christmas angel bright,
Wreathed with love-gems and immortelles,
Spread her snow wings fair and white.

Merrily the bells were ringing
O'er the snow-clad ice-gemmed earth,
When some cripple children singing,
Joined in happy Christmas mirth.

Glad and bright the sweet child-faces
In that fair and spacious room,
Though, alas! in many cases,
Theirs a life of want and gloom.

Yet their hearts beat high with gladness,
Peace and plenty reigneth here,
All forgotten pain and sadness
In the festive love and cheer.

When a little laddie merry,
From his stocking full of toys
Turned his eyes to leaf and berry,
Then unto the girls and boys.

"I say, Christmas is just jolly,
But how often is it here?"
"Why," said gentle little Polly,
"Don't you know, it's every year."

"Nay," said he, "it does not ever,"
Counting still his treasure store;
"I am seven, and I never Had a Christmas Day before."

Christian children, lad and maiden,
To whom Christmas draweth near,
With its joys and blessings laden,
Carol sweet and merry cheer:

When school o'er, at home you're meeting
With the friends you love so well;
When you send the loving greeting,
Christmas themes recite or tell:—

'Midst it all, dear hearts, remember,
As the festaltide draws near,
Those who in this chill December
Know no Christmas joy or cheer.

To Christ's little sufferers lowly
Be his angels on love's wing,
For the Christ-child pure and holy,
Loving Christmas gifts to bring.

Happier then your Christmas golden,
Merrier your mirth will be,
For his benediction olden,
"Ye have done it unto Me."

Modern Miracles.

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S., Ed.

I DO not think the age of miracles is past. No one who studies Christian work among the residuum can fail to find abundant examples of the mighty transforming power of a Christian environment to undo the evils of heredity, and by the grace of God to transmute the baser metals of the slums into the "fine gold of the Sanctuary." One grain of example is worth several pounds of precept. Here is my grain:

GEORGE WHITE: SAVED FROM A WHITECHAPEL SLUM.

George White, a poor rough street tramp, was found wandering in a ragged and filthy condition in Whitechapel, near midnight, by one of our rescue officers. Being absolutely homeless, he was, in accordance with my habit, admitted at once to our Shelter, pending inquiries. I found that he had a father living who was an inmate of the Shoreditch Workhouse, and never likely to leave it. His mother had died in the Workhouse some ten years previously. The lad had lived on the streets and by the streets; and there was nothing now before him but a street life, or a life of crime. That he had kept honest up till now was a wonder, for he had had many temptations. During a few months' training and sharp discipline in our Labour House,

GEORGE WHITE: NOW ON A FARM IN CANADA.

George so pleased me by his conduct that I allowed him to volunteer for Canada. But in his, as in many other cases, I was led to my decision by observing how really he had come under the power of the Gospel while in our Homes.

I have had many reports concerning George's progress since he left me. One runs thus: "He is doing excellently well, and gives promise of growing up a credit to the institutions. He has not the easiest of places, but the boy is thoroughly happy and is doing his duty faithfully and honourably." The last report of all speaks of him as "possessing splendid health, growing fast, and giving hopes of becoming a big man." George White writes capital letters home, while his employer's account of him assures me that the lad has won his confidence. The evidence that George is steadfastly walking in the narrow way as a humble follower of Christ is also undoubted. This grain of gold needs no gilding! I will only ask the readers of The Christian to look at the two sides of the picture in proof of the change that has taken place in George White.

Here is another example. James Tolhurst was a Liverpool corner-boy. When he did not wander the streets, he got an occasional shelter with a married sister and her husband, who, with his father and three other children, lived in a stinking cellar, so vile that when the attention of the sanitary authorities in Liverpool was directed to it they broke up the home and dispersed the dwellers therein. James had been in custody several times for loitering and obstruction, and for being in the company of known bad characters. His ostensible mode of getting his livelihood was as a shoeblack about the streets.

JAMES TOLHURST: ONCE A LIVERPOOL "CORNER BOY."

One may ask, almost in despair, as that rough fellow stands before us, "Can anything be done with him"? Here is the answer. He was taken in hand, as many others of his class have been, licked into shape, got into thoroughly good habits by regular training and smart, unremitting discipline; while at the same time every opportunity was sought, and not in vain, to win heart and mind for Christ. Eventually his conduct so pleased me that I allowed him to go to Canada. Here he was placed upon a farm, and at first he gave a great deal of trouble by his unsettled conduct. All that, however, has now been long changed. When last I heard of him he was doing well upon a homestead of his own, where of course he will have to work hard for the next few years to make both ends meet, but where there is an undoubted prospect of independence. Think of a boy taken from a street-life like his ever becoming an independent, well-conducted agriculturalist, the owner of a small farm of his own!

Such cases as these are indeed proofs that the day of miracles is not over! As I write, I am training some hundreds of young fellows for the over-sea journey in the spring, and at this Christmas season I ask for the prayers and loving help of all who feel that to stretch out the hand of help to these young fellows and to save their lives from going to ruin is true Christian work in the highest sense of the word.

FINSBURY PARK INSTITUTE.

PERHAPS no class of our great and heterogeneous community is more deserving of sympathy than poor and neglected youths in their early teens. The sin or the indifference of parents too often gives these lads the key of the street in the evening hours when they ought to be under the shelter and security of the parental roof. Thus thrown upon his own resources and devices, not to mention the temptation of companions older in the knowledge of evil, it is almost a miracle if a boy does not speedily graduate in the school of vice and crime. The only preservative, speaking humanly, is for the lad to get under influences that will lure him from the broad, downward path into the narrower, but the holy and happy way.

At such a critical stage of life the Institutes for poor working lads have been found of priceless service. One of these Institutes has been in operation at Finsbury Park for ten years past, and it has indeed proved a blessing to the neighbourhood. This is proved to demonstration by last year's report of the institution. Some 230 lads availed themselves of its varied privileges; these were divided into senior and junior branches, boys' brigade, and probationers' Sunday class. Of course, the fact is recognised that you cannot, as a rule, grow wise and ancient heads on very young shoulders; and so the instruction, the discipline, and the recreations are such as befit boys full of spirit, with no thought of dark-browed care weighing them down. There are teaching classes, there is physical drill, there are suitable mirth-provoking entertainments, while the greatest boon of all—the knitting of the young lives into the love of Christ—is by no means neglected.

One happy feature of such efforts is the amount of voluntary service that they evoke. Love, and not reward, is the constraining principle of the workers, and they find that the reward, though unsought, richly comes to them in youthful characters transformed and lives directed into channels of righteousness and usefulness. This Institute has found favour with the neighbouring churches of various denominations, whose members have guaranteed the annual cost of up-keep and oversight. A building debt of £1,000 odd is, however, a heavy burden to the institution, and an earnest endeavour is being made to clear that incubus out of the way. The effort is a praiseworthy one, in which all lovers of London's poor lads may well lend a hand. The hon. director and secretary of the Institute (which is at 44 and 46, Poole's-park, Seven Sisters-road, N.) is Mr. Arthur Willis.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, December 26.

"In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof," etc.—Amos. ix. 11, 12.

THESE verses were quoted by the grave, white-vestured James in that memorable gathering of the Church to consider the admission of the Gentiles on equal terms with Jews (Acts xv.). It is well worth noticing the special turn which the Lord's brother gave to the closing words of the quotation. He reads into it the deeper meaning of the Holy Spirit. The quickening and blessing of the chosen people has always meant the blessing of the world.

It was so, as James says, at Pentecost. The blessing which descended on the hill of Zion passed to all lands. They went everywhere preaching the Gospel, until some began to utter it also to the men of Antioch, and great numbers streamed into the Church (Acts xi); and thence the widening circles broadened out, until Ephesus, Athens, Rome, and distant Spain and Britain were included.

So will it be when the end of the present age has been reached. We, the Church, shall sit with Christ in the heavenlies, occupying the place now held by the devil and his demons, who will no longer be the prince of the power of the air; but the Jews, using that term in its strict sense, having been brought to God, shall be the evangelists and apostles of the world. Then the residue of the Gentiles shall seek unto the Lord. Ponder, specially, that 15th verse. Then pray for the grafting again of the branches into their own olive tree (Rom. xi. 15, 24, 26).

MONDAY, December 27.

"The house of Jacob shall possess their possessions."—Obadiah 17.

As long as Edom invaded and annoyed the house of Jacob the people were unable to possess their possessions in peace. But its dominion was to be ended, and then there would be no cloud in the sky, no barrier to their uninterrupted joy.

There are many instances of people not possessing their possessions. Such are those who put their plate, and valuables into furniture depositories, and for years leave them to neglect; who have shelves of unread, uncut books; who do not realise that coal and iron mines lie under their estates; who never enjoy the wealth of love and tenderness in their friends' hearts; and refuse to avail themselves of resources which are well within their reach.

But too many of God's people are like this. The Father has caused all his fulness to reside in the nature of Jesus; He hath given us all things that pertain unto life and godliness in Him; He hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in Christ Jesus; in our Saviour are treasures of wisdom, of purity, of prevailing power, of love and patience. The Divine Merchantman has come to us to give us gold tried in the fire, white raiment, and eyesalve. But we go blundering on in our own selfish, sinful, faltering way. We do not possess our possessions. We do not call into practical use the boundless reinforcements awaiting us, at every hour, within the tiniest beckoning of our faith. We are like the manufacturer who refuses to use the steam-power, though it is laid on into the mill; or the householder who refuses to touch the button of the electric light in his house.

TUESDAY, December 28.

"Jonah rose up to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord,...and he found a ship going to Tarshish."—Jonah i. 3.

Opportunity does not necessarily indicate either expediency or duty. Because the ship happened at that moment to be weighing anchor and the sails to be filling with a favouring breeze, Jonah might have argued that his resolution was a right one. Whether he did or not, there are many times in our lives when we are disposed to argue that favouring circumstances indicate the right course. But it must be remembered that they never can belie God's summons to the soul to do his will. That must take precedence in determining our path. The court of conscience is the supreme court of appeal; and to run away from known duty cannot be right, though circumstances seem at first to smile.

"He paid the fare thereof." Yes, if we go opposite to God's will, we always have to pay for it. The loss of self-respect, the broken peace of conscience, the deprivation of God's blessed presence, are part of the fare. And even when we have paid and lost it all, we fail to get what we purchased; we are dropped out of our chosen vessel in mid-ocean; and God brings us back to land at his own expense, and in a ship of his own construction. The morning may be fine, but it is soon overcast: the sky may be clear at starting, but God sends a great storm after the runaways to bring them back to Himself.

WEDNESDAY, December 29.

"I said, I am cast out from before thine eyes; yet I will look again toward thy holy temple."—Jonah ii. 4. (R.V.)

That is well, O, truant soul. Look again! Thou art in the heart of the seas; the flood of sorrow enwraps thee; storms of trouble are sweeping over thee, but look again toward his holy temple. All that sorrow has been sent to bring thee back from thy wanderings, and cause thee to look again. Thou couldest not look so long as thy back was towards the will of God, and thy face towards Tarshish; but now thou art turned again, and art on thy way back, thou mayest look again in the direction of the altar and its sacrifice, the High Priest and his mediation. Look again. Look off unto Jesus, the Author and Finisher of Faith.

Look again! God invites thee, too. Though thou hast turned thy back on Him these many years, He waits to be gracious; his face is wreathed in tenderest yearning love. One look, the least, the most abashed, from the greatest distance, will be eagerly noticed and instantly reciprocated. "They looked unto Him and were lightened," so wilt thou be. And He will bring up thy life from the pit. Does thy soul faint within thee, then remember the Lord. Let there be but one yearning desire for Him, and it will come in unto Him as a prayer to his holy temple.

THURSDAY, December 30.

"The word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time."—Jonah iii. 1.

We must not presume on this, but we may take it to our hearts for their very great comfort. God's word may come to us "the second time." Jonah evaded it the first time, but he was permitted to have a second opportunity of obeying it. Thus it was with Peter; he failed to realise the Lord's ideal in the first great trial of his apostolic career, but the Lord met him on the shores of the lake, and his word came to him a second time.

God is not waiting to notice our first failure and thrust us from his service. He waits, with eager desire, to give us the joy and honour of being fellow-labourers with Himself. He waits to be gracious. Therefore, when, in our madness, we refuse to do his bidding, and rush off in another direction, he brings us back, amid bitter experiences, and says, "Go again to Nineveh with the message that I gave thee originally."

How many times He will do this I do not dare to say. He forgives indefinitely, unto seventy times seven; but how often He will re-entrust the sacred message and mission it is not for me to say. But there is, without doubt, a limit beyond which He cannot go, lest our own character suffer, and the interests of other souls, who may be dissuaded from obedience by our example, should be imperilled. Yet He hateth putting away; and the word of the Lord will come to the restored backslider a third and fourth time.

FRIDAY, December 31.

"The Lord prepared."—Jonah iv. 6, 7, 8.

This book is full of this word prepared. We are told that the Lord prepared a great fish, a gourd, a worm, and a sultry east wind. It may be that all these have come into the few brief chapters of our lives, but we have not always realised that God was behind, preparing, directing, and using them.

He prepares the fish (i. 17). When we are at our wits' end, apparently going to destruction, He interposes and arrests our progress, and brings us back again to Himself. He prepares the gourd, that it may come up to be a shadow to our heads, and deliver us from our evil case. The gourd of friendship, of property, of some cherished and successful achievement. Ah, how glad we are for these gourds; not, however, sufficiently quick to attribute them to the loving providence of our Heavenly Father.

He prepares the worm, and the east wind. In Jonah's case God desired to teach that what the gourd was to his servant the great city of Nineveh was to Himself; and that He pitied, and loved it, and greatly valued it. So to teach us some deep lessons our gourds are allowed to wither. In spite of all we can do to keep them green, their leaves turn more and more sere and yellow, until they droop and die. And when they lie prone in the dust the east wind is let forth from the Almighty hand—the malign breath from which the gourd would have delivered us. O child of God, fainting in the east wind, do not ask to die, but get thee to the blue misty shadow of the great Rock in a weary land, to the Man who is a shadow from the heat.

SATURDAY, January 1, 1898.

"Behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place, and will come down and tread upon the high places of the earth; and the mountains shall be molten under Him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire."—Micah i. 3, 4.

Are you looking out to-day on a range of mountains that block your passage and screen off the rays of the sun? Do your difficulties seem to have accumulated till they act as insuperable obstacles to the fulfilment of your most cherished purposes? Perhaps, divided from your friends, hemmed and blocked in from the fair sunny lands of the vineyard and the goldening corn, despairing of tunnelling or scaling the Himalaya and the Alps. It is a sad and drear prospect, enough to daunt the most courageous spirit, and break down the most heroic courage. But look again at this text.

"Behold, the Lord cometh forth out of his place." He steps forth from his pavilion, intent on some great and glorious project. He treads on thy high mountains as on the furrows of a ploughed field. They are nothing to Him. Beneath his tread the mountains melt, and the valleys cleave. Wax melting before the fire is the simple but sublime image of the instant subsidence of whole ranges of difficulty. Wilt thou not walk with Him? Wilt thou not follow Him? Wilt thou not dare to believe that He can make his mountains a way? All things are possible to Him, and to thee also if thou wilt walk with Him. Who art thou, great mountain? before Zerubbabel? Thou shalt become a plain.

Public House Mission.—On Wednesday last a very remarkable meeting was held in the Athenæum Hall, Tottenham Court-road, in connection with the London City Mission. It was Mr. J. J. Browne's sixth annual meeting, to commemorate his work amongst the public houses of St. Panoras. Over eighty of the potmen, wives, barmaids, landladies, and other employes sat down to tea, after which Mr. H. Marnham, Rev. R. Dawson, Mrs. Bax, Mr. W. Prentice, and Mr. Browne spoke. The speeches were interspersed with bright singing. At the close a publican's son intimated that having been blessed by Mr. Browne's visits, he had left the business, and was now living for Christ.

Red, White and Blue Christian Institute.—We number quite 500 now of women, lads, and girls. On Sundays we get a small hall filled with fellows averaging eighteen and nineteen, of the lowest, roughest class, many of them known thieves and several having already been to prison. Considering what they are the order is wonderful, and they do listen to the sweet old story, which is most clearly told them Sunday after Sunday. Each evening we close with a hymn and prayer, and often then get the opportunity of just a few words of straight talk with these fellows. Indeed we have, hard though the work is, great cause to be very thankful.

AMONGST the many that came under the personal influence of Rev. Robert Aitken was a young man of business in Liverpool said to have led a worldly, careless life, but who, from the moment that he gave himself to God, seemed determined to yield himself unreservedly to his Master's claims. Clement Carlisle was, when the present writer remembers him, in early childhood, a man of very singular devotion, and Mr. Aitken's own estimate of him was that he was about the most saintly man that he had ever had to deal with.

He astonished Mr. Aitken by coming to him one day, saying, "I have given away my last shilling and I never intend to have another! I am sure that you will be able to find me bread and water and one suit of clothes in the year, and my whole time from this day forward shall be given up to the work of God under your direction."

The proposal was a startling one, but the thing was arranged, and from that day to the day of his death, Mr. Carlisle was a constant inmate of Mr. Aitken's house, and his right-hand man in all the work that had to be done. At this long distance of time the writer of these lines retains a vivid recollection of the last days of that saintly career. He well remembers being asked by the dying man to write out in big round characters this text, to hang upon the foot of his bed: "Arise ye and depart; for this is not your rest!" Only a few weeks before that text was written, and its mandate obeyed, the dear man had been the means of winning his last soul for Christ. He was only a Cornish miner, but if he had been a prince Mr. Carlisle could not have followed him up with a more delicate or persevering interest, and at last he succeeded in arranging a meeting with him in the little temporary church at Pendeen, where so many

STURDY MINERS WERE WON FOR GOD.

His efforts were crowned with success, and the good man returned to the Parsonage spent and fatigued, but overcome with the sense of God's goodness. He threw himself on a chair on entering the room where Mr. Aitken was sitting, and burst into tears. Mr. Aitken, supposing he was suffering from an exhaustion that rendered him almost hysterical, was about to order in some refreshment, when Mr. Carlisle exclaimed, "Oh no! I'm not ill, but it just breaks me down completely to think that the Lord should use such a poor miserable sinner as I am to save a fellow-sinner's soul!"

Well does the writer recall that wonderful funeral. He had been working amongst those hearty Cornish folk for only a little more than a year, but they all knew and loved him, and nearly the whole parish followed his remains to their resting-place, and many a loving tear was shed around his grave.

"They have given me a singularly appropriate name, I find," said he, with a quiet smile, one day, "they call me 'the old gentleman'; that's a name they have for the devil himself in the part of the world where I was reared!" He was not fifty years old at the time he obtained this sobriquet, but much sickness and an unduly ascetic habit of life had perhaps made him prematurely old.

But the story of a Christmas dinner referred to at the head of this paper belongs to an earlier period. Some twenty years ago, the writer was accosted in the streets of Liverpool, by a man who introduced himself as Mr. Carlisle's quondam landlord. "I think I must tell you," said he, after a few remarks about this extraordinary man, and the singular devotion and self-denial that characterised him, about Mr. Carlisle's Christmas dinner-party. He came home one evening a few days before Christmas, and sending for my wife, told her that he had a good many friends to whom he had had no opportunity of showing hospitality, and so he had determined to give a dinner-party on Christmas day. Greatly astonished at the proposal of such convivialities, my wife yet assured him that she would leave nothing undone to make the dinner-party a success, and arranged that something like a dozen covers should be laid. All that could be regarded as appropriate to a Christmas dinner was carefully provided, no expense being spared, for this was to be something very exceptional, and altogether a contrast to Mr. Carlisle's usually frugal habit of life. As the hour arrived, there came a ring at the door, and on opening it I beheld one of the sorriest specimens of humanity that I had ever set my eyes on, standing on the door-step. He had washed his hands and face (with indifferent results indeed), but that was all he had done to relieve his miserable appearance. He was clothed in rags, and looked as if he had just been turned out from the casual ward of a Union.

"A REAL GOOD STORY

"'What do you want?' I asked, with some impatience, knowing how heavy was the drain that such as these made on my lodger's limited resources.

"'Please, Sir,' was the reply, 'does Mr. Carlisle live here?'

"'Yes,' I answered, 'but he can't see you now, for he is just going to sit down to dinner with some friends; you must come at some other time.' My feelings may better be imagined than described, when the wretched object replied:

"'Please, sir, Mr. Carlisle told me that I was to come here to dinner, to-night!' By this time, two or three more began to appear on the scene, each seemingly more ghastly than the last, but as I stood there dumbstricken with horror, and wondering how I was to break the dire intelligence to my wife, Mr. Carlisle's cheery voice was heard behind me in greeting, as he stretched out his hand to one and another, welcoming them as if they had been noblemen; and soon the festal chamber was crowded with the strangest-looking guests that ever adorned (?) a Christmas board.

"But as we saw those haggard faces lighting up with an unwonted satisfaction, and the first shyness give place to feelings of confidence and pleasure, as Mr. Carlisle continued to do all that man could do to make his guests feel both at home and happy, my wife and I began to admit that he was right after all."

"Good Tidings."

WHAT are the "good tidings" of Christianity? That the golden chain of Messianic promise, lowered link by link from the eternal Founder, has at length reached to our earth and is there riveted by the incarnation of the God-Man. What blessings come to us in consequence of this union the leaping tongue of seraphic fire could never make known; but not the least is the continuous presence of Immanuel—God with us. When Christ came into the world He came to stay. Not only was He born in Bethlehem, but He is formed in every Christian "the hope of glory."

Good tidings! After a long night of pain, when every nerve has been stretched on the rack of agony, how welcome is the first gray streak in the cold east that gives glad promise of the coming day. If relief is so welcome to the weary watcher who waits the sunrise, what must be the joy of him upon whose soul-night the Sun of Righteousness has shone? Do you know the soul-night? Has your soul ever wakened to find itself alone?—without God—without hope—under the lurid sky of his displeasure? Every soul has not the same knowledge of the night. To some, coming to Christ seems like the glad awaking of the little one roused by its mother's kiss; while to others it is the terror of the thunder that startles one to find it still is night. My own experience was the latter. Roused from sleep by the death of a friend, I was from eight to ten months without hope—alone in the darkness—trembling yet rebellious. I knew God was angry. A great cloud of sin hid Him from me, and I dared not approach. I was hope*less*. The temptation to suicide surged up before me. I shall never forget the horror of those months. "The pains of hell gat hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow. Then called I upon the name of the Lord: O Lord, I beseech Thee, deliver my soul." Oh, it was a bright morning that slowly dawned after that terrible night! and I have his promise that it shall shine more and more unto the perfect day. It was "good tidings" when I knew that unto me was born a Saviour.

But not only to me, but to all perplexed and weary ones, comes this glad message: "Thy God reigneth!"

"How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace."

What a suggestive picture! The armies of the king have been engaged with the enemy far away from Jerusalem. The watchmen are upon the towers of this city of the hills. A man is seen making his way down the olive-shaded slopes. A messenger of peace. He comes with joy. The king's host has been victorious. The king's rule is established in peace. Rejoice, O Zion: thy king reigneth!

Such, of old time, was the frequent message to Palestine; a cry which has rung throughout the ages, wherever the feet of the Son of Man have made beautiful the mountains of separation. Let us look at these mountains gilded with his coming. They were once the altars of heathen idols; now the howling of fanatics is hushed before the Messenger of peace. How beautiful were the feet of Messias when from his Father's house He published salvation! Shall not our feet also be shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace as we go in and out of the homes of men? Can we not remind the toiler that "God's in his heaven—all's right with the world"? Will no one teach the orphan to say, "Our Father which art in heaven"? Must the outcast be left with none but the stars of heaven to pity her, while the Christmas bells ring out through the still air, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, to men good will"? Nay; ye cannot be selfish; "ye have not so learned Christ."

Wandsworth.

Mrs. M. E. Kirk.

THIS lady is by birth an Englishwoman, and from early life has been engaged in Christian and temperance work. A member of the Society of Friends, she has imbibed and inherited much of their earnestness of purpose, which has told largely on her labours.

For ten years she has been secretary of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Victoria, and recently visited England, with the view of learning from its various organisations methods which may be of service in the newer country. An eloquent speaker, with a direct simplicity which goes straight to the heart, she cannot give that gift full play owing to her many other weighty duties.

So great have been her labours in organisation that the constant pressure weakened her health, and her committee deemed it necessary to loosen the strain for a time if they would retain one of their best workers. They requested her to visit England and America, and gain the rest of a long voyage. She was appointed a delegate to the World's Convention held at Toronto in October last.

Besides her work of general supervision and secretarial duties, she is editor and business manager of The White Ribbon Signal, promoter of "The Frances Willard Club," superintendent of the Working Girls' Home, and with the women of the Christian Temperance Union has lately rendered the entire country great service by appeals to Parliament, which have been effectual in raising the moral status of women.

In such a new country as Victoria there are many questions which would be severely left alone if the Women's Christian Temperance Union did not take them up. Their work includes: Drawing-room meetings, district conferences, public meetings (with temperance always to the front), the unfermented wine question, health and narcotics, prison work, Press work, literature and circulating libraries, franchise department, hospitals and the sick, evangelistic missions, railway effort, temperance booths, labour among seamen, work among foreigners (principally Chinese), juvenile work, prevention of cruelty to children, homes for working girls, rescue and social purity work; efforts still further to raise the age of consent, and to place women on lunacy boards and as factory inspectors.

Of the many spheres of labour in which Mrs. Kirk has been engaged, she is, perhaps, to be most honoured for that which she has wrought for the good of her sex. She resembles her forerunner, Mrs. Elizabeth Fry, in visiting gaols and houses of bad repute, in her struggles for the most degraded of her sex. A short time since there was an endeavour to enforce the C. D. Acts in the Colony. As they were introduced under "health clauses, many were entirely ignorant of that which was implied. Mrs. Kirk and her committee appealed strongly against them, not only in Parliament but to members of the Intercolonial Medical Congress, and to men and women throughout the country. By the circulation of carefully-formed opinions and by increasing prayer to One who can over-rule affairs for good, the current was turned. On another occasion, when one of the judges had adopted an antagonistic attitude with regard to the age of consent clause in the Crimes Act Amendment Bill, Mrs. Kirk and her earnest supporters rose to the occasion: they gave time, money, and influence to the unsought-for but needed work, and succeeded in preventing any lowering of the age, which had been agitated for.

The Babe of Bethlehem.

Not in Zion's gilded palace,
Not beneath proud Salem's dome,
Shall immortal love, incarnate,
Heaven's Immanuel, find a home.
Bethlehem's manger shall its welcome
To the holy Infant give,
And from humble, lowly shepherds,
Adoration first receive.

Heralded by hosts angelic!
Earthly glitter pales and dies;
Earthly rays before it centred,
Were but puerile vanities;
Grace and Truth, the manger tells us
Shall the depths of want explore,
Presage of the love proclaiming
Heavenly tidings to the poor.

"In a manger!"—now in glory,
All the work of suffering done,
From the throne is ever echoing—
"This is my beloved Son";
Manger, cross, and throne resplendent,
All unite in one acclaim,
Telling forth the peerless glory,
Centring in the Saviour's Name.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

Surgical Aid Society.—The Lord Mayor presided on 7th inst. at the annual meeting of this society, held at the Mansion House. Mr. R. C. Tressidder, the secretary, read the annual report, which stated that the number of patients assisted had increased from 14,063 to 14,550, bringing up the weekly average to 280 patients, and the grand total since the commencement of the society to 176,920. During the year 22,247 appliances had been given to patients. Addresses followed by the Lord Mayor, Prebendary Kitto, Rev. Walter Green, Sir Henry W. Peek, and others.

THE SONG OF THE ANGELS.

"Unto you is born a Saviour."—Luke ii. 11.

O rest, my brother, rest awhile,
And strain your ears to listen,
What soothing music fills the air,
It makes the eyes to glisten!
The burden of an old-time song
To hearts of men appealing;
It wafts its message all along,
God's wondrous love revealing.

Rest, rest awhile beside the way,
And listen to the chorus,
It echoes through the ages still
And travels on before us.
For ever with the turning year
The angel choir is singing,
"Peace on the earth, good will to men,
Salvation, Christ is bringing."

Through all those distant, fading years,
Through all their gloom and sorrow,
In clear and captivating strains
No human voice could borrow
The music of the heavenly choir,
Its message oft repeating,
Has sounded through the earth below
This golden Christmas greeting.

No song more sweet has filled the earth
Since angels broke the silence;
No words have brought such healing balm
To sin's unending violence.
Their heavenly music steals abroad
Dispelling gloom and sadness,
And making human hearts to glow
With light, and love, and gladness.

O weary one, it is for thee
The angels still are singing;
O, restless heart, it is to thee
The words of peace are winging.
Let heart pass on the words to heart,
And tell abroad the story
Of God, the Father's, wondrous love,
Of Jesus and his glory.

A Son of Sorrow.

ADVENT.

James v. 7, 8.

Christ is coming, sweet vibration,
Thrilling all creation's chords,
Quiver of glad expectation,
Reaching e'en her wildest hordes,
Hope and earnest of salvation,
Jesus, Saviour, Lord of lords.

Christ is coming, golden story.
As o'er yon horizon grey,
O'er green vales and mountains hoary
Steals the dawning's roseate ray;
He will rise, his beams of glory
Turning darkness into day.

Christ is coming, word of blessing,
As the spring-tide's tender balm.
Upon all its kiss impressing,
Lulling storms to cradled calm,
Healing all with love's caressing,
Changing requiem into psalm.

Christ is coming. Are we yearning
To behold Him owned by all,
Of his Spirit meekly learning,
Waiting for the Bridegroom's call?
Then shall we, with love-lamps burning,
Tread the Lamb's fair bridal hall.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

'Tis Christmas time, sweet Christmas time!
Who does not long to bless
The widow in her lonely home,
The poor and fatherless?
Who round their cold and dreary path
A sunbeam would not throw,
To lighten with a beam of love
The burden of their woe?

Richer we grow as more we give,
The treasure stored above
Increases with each ministry,
Each ministry of love.
And dearer to our Father's heart
The secret gift of those Whose cheerful right-hand offering
Not e'en their left hand knows.

Help in Time of Need.

THE terrible fire in the City has brought great suffering and privation upon many families, and numerous useful agencies have striven to relieve the distress. Worthy of mention in this respect is the well-known society, the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. At the beginning of the present month of December, 1897, the committee considered a great number of distressing cases, and foremost of the instances of prompt admission may be mentioned the following:—

A family living in Camberwell were suddenly reduced to poverty through the death of the father, caused by paralysis of the brain. In a short time the mother's strength gave way, and she had to be removed to the infirmary, where she still is. The eldest girl, aged seventeen, bravely struggled on, and, by working at a City warehouse, maintained herself and the little ones at home, the youngest of whom was but four and a-half years old. But the bread-winner was, alas! among those deprived of work by the recent great fire, and it became a matter of urgent necessity to secure admission into homes for the younger children. Application was made to the National Refuges at the headquarters, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, W.C. No votes, elections, or wearisome delays were allowed to block the way, and within a few days of the application, Florrie was received into the Girls' Home.

A characteristic feature of the Society is that very urgent cases are often RECEIVED ON THE VERY DAY OF APPLICATION.

Page after page could be filled with heart-stirring instances of ready help given in this way. At the present moment there are about 800 boys and girls in the Society's Institutes, which comprise eight homes and two training ships. Mr. H. Bristow Waller, the secretary, will gladly supply a copy of the fifty-fourth annual report to any who have generously resolved to do something this Christmas-tide towards helping the poor and needy. It contains about 200 pages of very readable and finely-illustrated matter, and gives a graphic description of what is being done on board the Arethusa and Chichester training ships at Greenhithe, Kent; the farm and Shaftesbury Schools at Bisley; the Boys' Homes at Shaftesbury-avenue and Twickenham; the Girls' Homes at Sudbury and Ealing.

Several of the society's old boys, now stalwart firemen, were engaged in fighting the flames at the City conflagration; and photos of some of these brave fellows (once destitute lads) are shown in the report. Numerous letters there are, too, which tell of the success in after life of those who have passed through the Homes and Ships.

Best of all is the

as is evidenced by such letters as the following extract taken from the report:—

"I can always speak well of the Institution that I was an inmate of and the useful knowledge taught there, both to me and my brother, for we were both in the same school. In speaking of myself, I have learnt to love the Saviour, and trust in the fulness of his grace to give the strength to serve Him as my King, Lord, and Master. I send a small donation of a two-shilling postal order to go to help support the Homes, and if it were in my power to help you more I would do it, but at present I am not in a position, as I have to support my widowed mother and to support the home.—G.S."

During the past fifty-four years 15,000 destitute children have been rescued from misery and want, and given a good start in life; but (here comes the sadly familiar sentence) "the work languishes for lack of funds." The Society has had to borrow £5000 to provide for the immediate wants of the children under its care. If every reader of this appeal will kindly send something they will realise the blessedness of co-operating with Christ Himself in ministering to the wants of the suffering poor.

CHRISTMAS BELLS.

The Christmas bells that used to ring
When I was but a little boy,
They still chime out for Christ, the King,
And soothe my heart with wholesome joy.
They have not changed one single note
In all the years now flown away;
But sweetly still their voices float
Across the world so old and grey.
Welcome sounds to pilgrim me,
Whose life has been a strange affair,
As changeful as the winter-sea,
And just as hard as I could bear.
I did not think to hear them still;
I thought they must have tuneless grown
While I was climbing up the hill,
With sighs and sorrows all my own.
But ring they do, the Christmas Bells,
The same old bells that used to chime
When but a boy, where mother dwells,
I heard them ring for Christmas-time.
And ring they will for evermore,
As year by year is on the wane,
Till life and all its cares are o'er,
And Christ Himself shall come again!

The Home of Industry.

In an occasional paper issued the other day Miss Macpherson, reviewing the work of the year, says:—"As a united band of workers, we have sought to witness, among the thousands in Bird Fair on Sunday mornings, among the toilers in factory and workroom, and among the mothers, widows, and young people, gathered in their various classes and meetings. We praise God that his grace has been sufficient, and that He has owned the testimony borne in the salvation of precious souls. Some of our helpers of the past year are now on their way to India, and elsewhere, to 'witness for Him,' while the last to say farewell from among our young men has been accepted by Mr. D. L. Moody for training at the Bible Institute, Chicago. We rejoice that once more we have been enabled to rescue, train, and emigrate two more bands of young children. Good news has come during the past summer of many an excellent home where the boys and girls have been placed."

Among the many incidents given in this paper we find the following letter from a banker's lady: "We think Alice a very nice child. She is a credit to your Home, for she is very polite, and knows so much for one so young. She is so happy, sings early and late, drinks lots of milk, and people tell me she is growing fat. Everyone likes her, and it is quite pathetic to hear her say her prayers, and hear her pray that her little sister and brother may come to Canada, and find good homes, and kind friends, to tell them right from wrong." Who was Alice? Early last spring she was found crying bitterly in the street by a policeman, who took her to the workhouse. The Board of Guardians kept her six weeks to get her nerves quieted, and to cure her bruises made by the ill-usage of her father, then sent to ask if Miss Macpherson would receive her.

Many interesting incidents are given, in the paper referred to, from the work among the aged widows, young men and women, in Bird Fair, out with the Bible barrow, in the homes of the sick, and in the hospital wards. Here is an instance of answered prayer:—

"Young H—— first attended the evening school about four years ago; careless and indifferent about spiritual things. Not long after, signs of a lingering disease began to develop, and made rapid progress. One's heart ached for the poor lad, slowly but surely dying, and not saved! He could not bear the thought of passing away from this life, his whole desire being to recover. After lying in one of our hospitals for many weeks, and appearing somewhat better, he was sent to a Convalescent Home by the sea, and there the word was sent to him which brought light and liberty to his soul. He returned home, after some time, weak in body, but rejoicing in Jesus. The change in hid face was wonderful; the anxious expression has disappeared, and a sweet patient look had taken its place. His longing now was, not to get well again, but to go to be with his Saviour. The Lord gave him a short time to witness to his relatives and friends, and then took him home.

"During the past year we have sought to visit and care for the sick, among the many poor belonging to our Mission. Our nurse has had great joy in ministering to them; in some cases soothing the dying ones, and watching whilst they passed from earth's toil and poverty to the many mansions above. One, who had for many years loved to attend the meetings, having been found of the Lord in her Sunday-class, was taken ill suddenly. She had over-worked, toiling to support her husband, who, from an accident, had been unable to work for several years. When seized with pneumonia there was no strength to battle with the disease, and after a few days suffering, it was evident that she was sinking. Too weak to talk, she would from time to time open her eyes, and looking tenderly on nurse she would say, 'Tell them at the Home not to pray for my life. My work is done. I am going to my Saviour, whom I love. Don't try to keep me back.'" Other work is also going on among the poor and neglected of the East End. Full information may be had of Miss Macpherson, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E.

The Hooligans of London.

BY MR. J. W. C. FEGAN.

FOR many years past I have strongly felt, and on every possible occasion sought to emphasise my conviction, that London's greatest need at the present time is a revival of the INFLUENCE OF THE OLD RAGGED SCHOOLS.

When the State undertook the compulsory education of the young, many voluntary schools for very poor children whose work had been of an evangelical as well as educational nature were abandoned or starved out of existence. The Ragged School Union has, however, nobly succoured those who have bravely struggled on in their devoted labours, realising that they had a commission from the risen Christ which no State legislation could supersede.

The Board Schools have done valuable work in educating the children of the poor on a scale which voluntary schools with their limited means could not attempt. But, especially as regards very poor children whose home-training is neglected, while they have imparted to them a measure of knowledge (necessarily superficial in the majority of cases), they have not moulded manners or formed character, still less have they been a missionary influence, like the old Ragged Schools.

A Ragged School planted in a street of evil repute, with a labyrinth of courts in which the roughest and most degraded folks herded together, often completely changed the character of the immediate neighbourhood after a few years of loving, patient Christian influence—as the police often gladly testified—but a Board School can never have the same influence upon such hearts and lives. I have often heard the police and others contrast the pert, defiant, mischievous spirit manifested by the Board School children of to-day with the civil, obliging, and considerate behaviour of children who used to be under training in the old Ragged Schools.

One of the next touching evidences of the influence of Ragged Schools was to my mind the loving eagerness with which, say, a neat, respectable maid-servant who felt she owed a debt of gratitude to the old school she never could repay, would, when visiting her parents in some slum, come and sit in her old class and drink in again the message of redeeming grace and power from the lips of her old teacher and with beaming demonstrativeness associate herself once more with "the dear old school."

Further, the gentle and unselfish labours of a teacher would work such a change in some rough boy or wild girl that the hearts of the parents would be touched, and they would be drawn under the influence of the Gospel through mission services, mothers' meetings, etc., held in the Ragged School so affectionately spoken of by their children.

I feel I may claim to speak with some definiteness on this question, as it was through experience gained in Ragged School work that I (like Miss Macpherson, Mr. Charrington, Mr. Quintin Hogg, the Hon. T. H. W. Pelham, Lord Kinnaird, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. George Hatton, and others) was led into wider Christian service. In fact, I believe I may say that three-fourths of the Christian rescue-work in London to-day is directly or indirectly the outgrowth of the Ragged School work which Lord Shaftesbury, John Macgregor, and others inaugurated about fifty years ago, and which the Ragged School Union bravely seeks to sustain still.

For twenty-seven years I have lived almost continuously in the slums of this great city, and for the last fifteen years in what is now admitted to be "the most overcrowded and poverty-stricken district in all London." "Ruffianism in Southwark," "Tragedy in Stamford-street," "The Blackfriars Gang Again," etc., are head-lines familiar to all newspaper readers of late years, until the united vestries of certain parishes on the south side of the Thames between Waterloo and London Bridge have made a strong appeal for increased police protection.

The hooligans that infest street corners and waylay passers-by in dark byways are the very class that Ragged Schools gather under their subduing influence.

The sight of hundreds of these youths drifting to irretrievable ruin around us has moved me to urge upon my friends in council to secure some premises where with the help of, I hope, some Christian friends who will read these lines, and some young men who have been themselves rescued through our Homes and are now anxious to hold out a friendly helping hand to others, I could gather some of these undisciplined, uncared-for lads under Christian influence with useful elementary instruction, and healthy, manly recreation.

My Council have been able to secure on favourable terms large premises until lately known as Christchurch Parochial Schools (boys, girls, and infants). We propose, under the name Southwark Home Mission, to commence with a mission hall, Bible-classes, night school, mothers' meeting, drawing and singing classes, gymnasium, etc., adding a medical mission, and otherwise developing our operations as our means and strength under God's blessing will allow.

My object in writing thus is twofold, first to draw attention to the need of such work generally as it has pressed upon my heart and conscience for some years past, and secondly to ask for the prayers, sympathy, and co-operation of readers of THE CHRISTIAN in this effort in particular.

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.

How Joe was Saved.

JOE wasn't in the least penitent. That wasn't what brought him to the Lighthouse Lodging House. He was simply starving. He "didn't want no religion," only something to eat. He got it, and then went to rag-sorting for his board and lodging. Joe was a "bad character." He had begun life as a thief at ten years old. He had been in prison twenty-six times, had had hard labour and been flogged and punished in every conceivable way. He slouched up to the Lighthouse, dogged, sullen, utterly hard, and callous.

It is no easy matter to woo back a soul. For a long time Joe came and went, unmoved and untouched, to all appearances. Then one night he flung himself down at the penitent-form, and cried that he was a big, black sinner. For long Joe knelt there, then he went off to bed, and for four hours cried and prayed. At the end of that time there was a shout of, "It's done, it's done!" that made the shelter echo!

Last week Joe wrote to his spiritual father from the Farm Colony, where he was drafted. The following are a few extracts from his letter:—

"To tell you the truth I find this place very healthy, I seem always hungry. You know we don't receive any money for some time, we get a shilling's worth of tickets and buy our own food, which is excellent. I thank the Lord that I realise that He saves me now. He has never left me since that blessed Sunday night, but He has been my refuge, my hiding-place every moment. Oh, what a Saviour, after cursing Him to his face! Captain, I am glad to have you to write to, as I have not a friend in the world—I mean, an earthly friend. It is my own fault; I cursed them and abused their goodness, but I am glad Jesus forgives me and loves me. I am going to be true. That is what God wants, true men. It is my prayer night and day that Jesus will keep me faithful."

Here is another incident: "When stationed in Dublin," writes Adjutant Leggoe, "I found a man, now keeping a successful butcher's shop, who informed me that he had been rescued from poverty by our Social Officers, who found him on the Thames Embankment, sleeping out, without food or lodgings. They helped him to the Shelter, and put new life into him. He is now doing well, and after telling me how grateful he was, told me to come to him whenever I was in want."

These incidents are illustrative of many such in the new report of the Salvation Army Social Scheme; an annual record which teems with facts and figures—such as the number of meals supplied, of lodgings to the homeless, of the outcast and destitute received, sheltered, and set on their feet again, of the operations of the Labour Bureau, the City and Farm Colony, the Police-court, and slum work. It is stated that "the total cost to the Darkest England Fund of keeping the whole of these various undertakings going during the year has been about £13,000, exclusive of money spent on building and other capital outlay.

"The total turn-over of the scheme for the year, including the sales of goods manufactured by the people in the various institutes, was £136,660.

"Of that sum only £4,000 was expended in the salaries of officials—persons connected with the scheme, including legal, medical, and other professional charges."

General Booth estimates the special loss sustained on the Farm Colony by the recent flood at nearly £5,000.

The Children of Whitechapel.

AFTER half a century spent in the Lord's service, I am still labouring amongst the poor neglected children and adults of the East End, relieving their temporal wants, "feeding the hungry, and clothing the naked," instructing the ignorant, befriending the friendless, helping the helpless, and seeking above all to set Christ before each needy soul.

Nor has our work been in vain, for hundreds have been led to the Saviour. The children flock to our schools. Three times each Lord's day they gather to hear about the love of Jesus, drinking in the sweet story of old, told by teachers whose own hearts are on fire with the love of God. Our great need is—more teachers.

The Infant Day Nursery is open for the reception of the infants, whose mothers—many of them widows—gladly leave them in the morning to be clothed, fed, and cared for by a qualified nurse. This is work done for Jesus. It has proved a great blessing to those mothers who bring their children regularly. They leave their infants in the greatest confidence, and work on during the day free from anxiety about their little ones, who are happy and comfortable.

Besides the Sunday-schools, we have Children's Services, Band of Hope, and a Ragged School, which is highly commended by the educational authorities. Amongst the little ones thus brought under our notice are

MANY OF THE VERY POOREST CLASS.

For instance, among others we have at present three children (ages ten, eight, and six) who are really without a home. After sheltering for the night somewhere, their parents (who seem fond of them) bring them here knowing they will be cared for as well as taught. More than once they have been brought four miles in a morning from where they had slept the preceding night. We receive them gladly for the Lord's sake.

We have long been drawn out on behalf of the young women, for whom the streets are so full of temptations. The various evening classes and meetings attract these in large numbers. The ladies who have devoted themselves to this special work have been used to bring many of these young people to the Saviour. The good influences of club, clothing clubs, Bible classes, Gospel temperance meetings, and Kinnaird Institute have been largely useful among these.

Nor is our work confined to children and young people—their parents and relatives come about us in large numbers, and our Gospel and temperance meetings are crowded, while the poor mothers flock to the mothers' meetings—their

ONLY CHANCE OF HEARING THE GOSPEL.

In this district thousands of women are suffering from the degrading vice of drunkenness; husbands are unhappy, children are neglected and wretched, homes are broken up and made desolate, children come to us hungry, ragged, and shoeless, and whole families suffer most bitterly. We have a female missionary visiting the women enslaved by drink—she is received everywhere most kindly. This branch has been very successful, some are thoroughly reclaimed and kept by the power of God. It is interesting to note that the poor themselves contribute a large part of the missionary's salary.

The Gospel, moreover, is carried into the lodging houses, and the poor inmates are helped in many ways to a better life. Open-air preaching in the courts and alleys is vigorously maintained, with much encouragement. Combined with all this there is constant visitation of the poor homes around us.

Rescue work is also carried on, and we cannot praise the Lord too much for the blessed work He permits his servants to do in connection with the Midnight Meeting Movement. It is an agency which certainly reaches the fallen and friendless. How many how many poor girls have been rescued, how many precious souls saved, will never be known until we meet in glory.

Many motherless girls with good characters have been received into our Training Home, Nonington Hall, and, after teaching, are sent out to domestic service, where not a few are doing well.

During the summer we were able to send away a large number of children and ailing adults to enjoy rest and change. H.R.H. the late Duchess of Teck, in whom we have lost a personal friend and a true helper, was in the habit of receiving at Combe Warren some of our poor women requiring rest, change, and fresh air. They will never forget the kindness and sympathy they have received from her. Everything was done for their comfort and pleasure. They enjoyed the nourishing food, the beautiful walks in the wood and in the lanes, and returned cheered and comforted, with health much improved. H.R.H. took a personal interest in each case, calling at the Cottage and speaking to them. H.R.H. the Duchess of York, too—better known to many of them as the Princess May—has always been very kind to our poor women.

Through Mr. Barclay's great kindness, we have also been permitted to send to his beautiful place, "The Alexander Home," at Bookham (erected as a memorial to a beloved relative), many of our poor children.

While the spiritual interests of the poor children and adults are ever the first consideration, we feel deeply their temporal needs, and exert our utmost to relieve their wants. No child is sent hungry away from George Yard, while every effort is made to provide the shivering with clothing. The exceeding bitter cry of the distressed poor rings in our ears, and we endeavour to cheer and comfort them, and alleviate their sore need. For Christ's sake and in his name we minister to the sorrowing and neglected whose pitiful condition presses daily upon us. GEORGE HOLLAND.

Sermon-lane Mission.

FEEDING the hungry is a practical part of Christianity, for which very efficient arrangements were made last week, in connection with this Mission, located in the centre of a densely populated and very poor Islington district. The Cattle Show was open, and, as usual, brought together a little army of poor "sandwich" men. For their especial benefit excellent provision was made on the Tuesday and Thursday, over a thousand dinners in the aggregate being served out on the two days. Our representative was present for a short time the other day, and was very favourably impressed by what he saw and heard. Large tins of steaming, savoury soup, each accompanied by a good hunch of bread, were speedily disposed of by appreciative recipients. Nor were the needs of mind and soul overlooked. Ladies and children enlivened the meal with sacred song; and earnest words spoken by Rev. J. WAKERLEY were brief, pointed, and hope-inspiring, as showing what God's grace had done for men whom the speaker had met with in equally forlorn condition. Undoubtedly the auditors were thoroughly attentive. May God grant that fruit unto eternal life may yet be reaped from seed thus sown in faith. We understand that like happy service was rendered by Rev. J. Boyd (of St. Augustine's Church), Rev. T. H. L. Jones, and Mr. T. Nixon.

We have touched upon only one among the many aspects of a work which, in all its operations, is permeated by the spirit of the Gospel; and the Christmas appeal issued by the president (Mr. J. Dix Lewis, Penrhyn, Hornsey-lane, N.) shows that in order to continuance of its varied agencies with increasing efficiency, it is necessary that about £400 be entrusted to the committee.

Strangers' Rest, Liverpool.—A reunion of friends interested in the excellent work carried on amongst the strangers and foreigners coming to this city was held last week, at the Strangers' Rest, 24, Park-lane. At a meeting held after the conversazione Mr. T. A. Leigh took the chair. Mr. A. Armstrong (superintendent of the Liverpool Town Mission) spoke earnestly to Christian workers, as did also Mr. W. Summers, of North Africa Mission, who gave an address on missionary work. The annual report states that 362 meetings have been held in the English language, and a large number of tracts have been distributed and good work done among Jews, Germans, Spaniards, and sailors of other nationalities. The "Strangers' Rest" is a handy rendezvous for sailors, where religious services are carried on in various languages, and where reading and writing can be accomplished comfortably, a real boon to the many strangers who come to this seaport from all quarters. There is earnest need of more Christian workers.

International S.S. Lessons.

January 2.

"JESUS AND JOHN."—Matt. iii. 7-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."—Matt. iii. 17.

DURING the next two quarters our lessons will include the biography of Christ as told in the Gospel of Matthew. The teacher should familiarise himself with the map and general geography of Palestine, as well as with the customs of the time. The "words" of Jesus are now receiving special attention from Bible students, and the teacher should seek to impress "these sayings of Mine" on the hearts of his scholars.

John the Baptist was born B.C. 5, six months before Jesus. His father and mother both descended from Aaron. He was related to Jesus. He began to preach about A.D. 26, and baptised Christ the following year. His work was carried on in the wilderness of Judea—not a desert, but a hilly, thinly-inhabited district lying west of the Jordan. The baptism of Christ was probably at Bethabara, five miles north of Jericho. In this lesson we have an account of—

I. Some of John's hearers (7, 8, 9).—They belonged to the two great sects—Pharisees and Sadducees. He holds up the mirror of truth to them that they may see themselves as God sees them. They came probably to hinder and criticise. They were like a brood of vipers (poisonous snakes who gave no warning rattle of their approach), sly and hypocritical. He asked them who had warned them of danger, seeing they claimed to be so good Repentance is the first essential, and then the good life following, but these wished for the name of godliness without any inner spiritual reform. They thought that being descendants of Abraham was the passport into God's favour, but God could as easily make children out of stones as out of a brood of vipers. Note that there can be no real religion in the life unless the heart be right. Sir Walter Raleigh said to the headsman, "It matters little how lies the head providing the heart be right." "Out of it are the issues of life."

II. John's warning (10).—The axe was laid at the root of the Jewish Church, and if it still bore no fruit of righteousness, it would be cut down. So is it with all in Christ's vineyard—people and institutions—if they are not fruitful for good, they are hewn down, i.e., their opportunity for bearing fruit is taken away from them. See Matt. xxv. 28, 29.

III. John's testimony to Christ (11, 12).—Note John's humility. Many people fear to praise their friends, lest it should detract from their own glory: the truly great man praises all virtue and worth. The baptism of John was but a symbol of the real baptism. "Holy Ghost and fire," i.e., the Spirit of God and enthusiasm. The symbol is a mockery without the real spiritual baptism. The former was observed but once; the latter should be repeated every day of our lives. John also points to Christ as a judge. Compare with the thresher, using his fan or shovel, throwing the mixed corn and chaff into the air, and while the chaff flies to a little distance the heavier wheat falls back to the ground. Everyone who met or heard Christ was judged by his treatment of Christ. If a man rejected and spurned Christ, it revealed at once what that man's spirit was. Some time to-day—every day is a judgment day—every act of life decides what our spirit is, and whether we belong to Christ.

Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by for ever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

IV. The Baptism of Christ (13, 17).—John said, "I have need of thy spiritual baptism. Why do you come to me for the shadow of what you can give in substance?" Whatever it was right for other men to do—the Christ would take that step too as an example to them if nothing more. Each right step had to be taken in order that he may complete his life work (15). This was a crisis in the career of Jesus. This was the occasion when he won the full assurance of God's presence and approval. He could go forward now with firmer tread. The way was clearing. It was a testimony, too, to those around, and proved that God was with his Son Jesus. The teacher should emphasise the use to be made of similar moments of solemnity in our lives, crises when we are baptised with the Spirit and with fire.

A Modern Crusade.

A SERIES of public meetings, on a large scale, have been arranged by a united committee of Y.M.C.A. and other workers for the purpose of arousing public opinion with regard to the kindred evils of gambling, drink, and impurity. The campaign was opened last week with three large meetings in the Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W. No pains will be spared to make this "special crusade" as effective as possible. A series of three consecutive meetings will be held at intervals of a fortnight at various centres throughout the Metropolis during January, February, and March, concluding with three gatherings in the Guildhall. The next of the series will be Jan. 11, 12 and 13, in Shoreditch Town-hall, and Jan. 25-27 in the Northern Polytechnic, Holloway-road.

A most encouraging start has been made, and it is hoped that the high level of spiritual tone and intensity reached last week may be sustained throughout. Amongst many cases dealt with in the after meetings was one in which a young man came to the front and spoke to Rev. George Gladstone, of Glasgow, one of the speakers of the evening. His story was that of the prodigal son. He had run away from his home in Scotland and for many months was unheard of. He had attended Mr. Gladstone's church in Glasgow. Seeing the latter's name advertised to speak in the Queen's Hall, he thought he would like to creep in unnoticed to hear him. The mention of a mother's unchanging love broke him down. His penitence seemed deep and real, greatly intensified when he heard that his mother was dying. Before starting for London the hope was expressed that somehow or other Mr. Gladstone might get to hear of the wanderer—humanly speaking, a most remote possibility. But "God moves in a mysterious way," and the prayer of a dying mother for her wandering boy was heard.

The first of the series, held on Tuesday week, was presided over by Mr. J. H. Tritton, the special subject being "Gambling." Before the meeting began, the Fisk Jubilee Singers (a band of coloured American minstrels) sang sweetly quaint hymns and choruses of camp-meeting and log-hut. Mr. Porter, secretary of the "Crusade," announced that he had received letters of sympathy from the Duke of Connaught, Lord Wolseley (who will act on the committee), and the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Bishop WINNINGTON INGRAM, in a vigorous speech, said he did not want to speak merely as the youngest bishop on the bench, but as an old East-end missionary, and he would give them a few facts which would enable them to make up their minds. He narrated the case of a young man who had been tempted to misappropriate the savings of his companions, and narrowly escaped ruin. Looking out of his window on one occasion, he saw one who was apparently collecting billets doux across the road, so he laid a trap for that man, and ran him in. Within a few hours the man was fined £5, but what did a fine of £5 matter to him when he had £20 on him in silver and copper, the pence of the poor? He would make it penal to incite to betting, a misdemeanour to publish the betting odds, and have it statutorily declared that a betting-ring was a "place."

Dr. R. F. HORTON followed with an animated address, showing that gambling was just as much a vice as drinking and impurity. It was a vice which, because it had been the peculiar pastime of the rich, was difficult to put down by law. They had heard of noblemen, enjoying the not inconsiderable income of £15,000 a year, becoming bankrupt from the same cause. They could not be blind to the fact that men of station and influence had thrown their ægis over the Turf. Of a Cambridge undergraduate it was told that he excused his presence at Newmarket on the ground that he had "gone to see the new Vice-Chancellor of the University." In the interests of humanity, and in the name of that meeting, he asked our social leaders to remember that this pastime of the rich is proving the ruin of the poor; that it is demoralising thousands of bright young men; that it is ruining the homes of countless working men; and that it has now begun to demoralise the women, and even the girls of England. He wished our public men could realise the evil consequences of gambling, so that they might be induced to bring their vast social influence to bear against betting and other "sports" which are destroying young England.

The second meeting of the series was held on Wednesday. The theme was Drink. Sir Douglas Fox presided. Musical selections were given by the Royal Holdfast Bell-ringers, and the principal speakers were Rev. J. W. Horsley, late chaplain at old Clerkenwell Gaol; Rev. George Gladstone, Glasgow; and Mr. C. T. Studd, the well-known cricketer.

Sir DOUGLAS FOX, in opening the meeting, referred to the "trinity of evil" against which the crusade had been initiated, and appealed to the men of London to keep the little ones of their own households well outside their environment.

Rev. J. W. HORSLEY spoke on the hereditary influence of drink. Jehu caused seventy of the sons of Ahab to be slain rather than they should perpetuate evil in the land. That was, perhaps, a drastic measure, but we in our days know clearly the awful force of heredity and the early influences of environment. The modern disease of alcohol was directly responsible for the death of 40,000 people in England every year, not counting those who had died indirectly—that is, three times the number of those who died, of the various nations, at the battle of Waterloo.

Rev. G. GLADSTONE, following on the same theme, urged, in glowing terms, upon the men present the healthful antidote of total abstinence.

Mr. C. T. STUDD, M.A., who was received with loud cheers, began an eloquent evangelistic address by saying that drink was a curse, undoubtedly, but it was only one curse among others which drink might cause. They had heard of various cures; but the cure was that of the Lord Jesus Christ, which was instantaneous. Like was said to cure like. Some got drunk on spirits. He hoped that they would get filled with the Spirit, as the disciples did on the day of Pentecost. If they had a Christ-craving as strong as the drink-craving they would be paralysed in the right way. Many instances were present to his mind of men who had turned from their errors and had acquired new life in the fulness of Christ.

The last of the Queen's Hall meetings was held on Thursday, when the great hall was crowded. The special subject was Impurity. The speech of the evening was delivered by Rev. F. B. MEYER, who roused the utmost enthusiasm by the spiritual intensity of his address, glowing with warm sympathy for the tempted, and righteous indignation against the wrongs inflicted on the weaker sex. Taking, for example, the words "Out of the heart are the issues of life," he traced the insidious onset of temptation. Evil thoughts, cherished and fostered, lead surely on to evil deeds which once would have been abhorred by the doer, but for the gradual depravement wrought by the grosser imaginations within. The reading of impure books and the contemplation of suggestive pictures must be sedulously shunned by all who would "keep themselves pure." Like a black speck in the blue, a cloud no bigger than a man's hand, which swiftly covers the sky and bursts in a disastrous tempest, so do the secret thoughts, so often gloated over, work the ruin of many. In view of such temptation there is but one unfailing resource—the restraining power of Christ, apart from whom there is no safety, when the floodgates of evil are open. His most urgent word to young men would therefore be — when tempted, call on Christ, in whom alone there is deliverance. Let us seek that in some measure his purity may be ours, and then we shall be a blessing to those around, instead of being partners in their sin. In a passing way Mr. Meyer gave particulars of the work of the Watch Committee in Lambeth, showing that some 130 evil houses had been closed, and that many young men had been led to see their sin, and in some cases to accept the Saviour.

An earnest evangelistic address followed by Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR, setting forth the abounding mercy of the Lord Jesus Christ, who is ready to receive, pardon, and empower all who flee unto Him for refuge.

A Christmas Party for the Lonely, Craven Lecture Hall, on Christmas Day. There will be service in St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, at eleven, when Rev. Hugh Price Hughes will preach. The dinner will be on the tables at one o'clock. Tickets for the day, including dinner, tea, and supper, 2s. 6d. each. Mr. and Mrs. Price Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Guy Pearse, and their families will be present during the day. After dinner Mr. Pearse will tell some Cornish stories. We shall be glad to see any Christian friends who, but for this arrangement, will spend a lonely Christmas Day. Tickets may be obtained only from W. T. PIPER, Secretary.

Craven Hall, Foubert's-place, Regent-street, W.

Sheltering Home, Liverpool.

THE twenty-fourth annual meeting of the friends of the Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street, was recently held at the Institution, Myrtle-street, Archdeacon Madden in the chair.

Mrs. Birt explained that the meeting was held in the Institution this year instead of as usual at the Town-hall, by way of celebrating the silver anniversary of the foundation. Twenty-five years ago last November the meeting which inaugurated this invaluable work was held in the Law Association rooms. The institution had been the means of rescuing in a permanent way about 200 children every year since 1872. During the past year 400 children had applied for admission; 168 were, after examination and investigation, admitted, and there were left in the Home last October 60. The total in the Home during the year was 228. Of these 136 had been emigrated to Canada, 65 were placed in Liverpool, and 27 remained in the house; and 26 had been admitted since November 1. Mrs. Birt read many extracts from letters showing how well the children were doing with their foster parents in Canada, and how fond their foster parents were of them. There was, however, no work without its trials, and in this they had occasionally to record failures and lapses from moral rectitude.

Mr. Thin (hon. treasurer) submitted his balance-sheet, which showed that the expenditure during the year was £3022 16s. 11d., being £327 3s. 4d. more than the income. Through the kindness of a few friends that adverse balance had been wiped out, and now there was a balance of £10 to credit.

Addresses, earnestly advocating the claims of the Home, were delivered by Dr. John Watson, Sir E. Russell, Mr. S. Smith, and others.

Christmas is Coming.

CHRISTMAS is coming (the young people sing)!
Coming with treasures befitting a king.
Boxes and hampers, delivered by rail,
Letters and parcel arriving by mail.
Coming with holly and mistletoe bough,
Dishes and dainties—we're scenting them now.
Coming with ornament, picture, and toy,
Workbox for maiden and tool-box for boy.
Coming with people we love to have near,
Schoolmates, companions, and all will be here.
I hope we'll have frost—ay, and plenty of snow;
Ice for a slide and a snowball to throw.
Coming at daybreak and staying till late;
Christmas is coming; we hardly can wait.

Christmas is coming (the older folks say).
We, who were severed for many a day,
Brothers and sisters and loved ones will come,
Meet as of yore in the old house at home.
Spirit with spirit communing will share
Sorrows and joys, and their notes will compare.
Then, as our wont, at the happy Yuletide,
Gathered again by the old fireside,
Fittingly kneel at the close of the day,
Praises to offer, for blessings to pray.
Bountiful Christmas, may we, you make glad,
Carry your gifts to the lonely and sad!

Christmas! (a mother cries) why do you come,
Mocking with laughter my desolate home?
Where is your friend for the poor in their woe?
Where is your fire for the frost and the snow?
Where are your shoes for my little ones' feet?
Where is your bread for the hungry to eat?
Feasting and comfort for others may be;
Christmas has naught for my children and me?
Hush! this is poverty making me rave;
Heaven awaiting me over the grave.
Hark! there's a carol; 'tis "peace and goodwill";
Christmas is coming, and blessing me still.

Giving Drink at Christmas.—The National British Women's Temperance Association is most anxious to direct attention to the danger of the mistaken kindness which at the coming season so frequently takes the form of beer or spirits given to postmen, porters, cabmen, carmen, and others. A glass of intoxicating drink given to such may be but one of many given the same day, and may lead to disastrous results; and there are, among the men referred to, many to whom the offer of a single glass is a cruel temptation—some whose lives have been blighted by drink, and who are even fighting bravely to keep the pledge of total abstinence. To such, and indeed to all, a cup of warm cocoa, coffee, or tea would be a real boon, and this may be given without any risk.

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. LANE IN WORCESTER.

An eight days' mission has been conducted here by Mr. W. R. Lane, and we are all rejoicing because our best expectations have been surpassed. From the first to the last day of the services our public hall was filled each evening; and on the second Sunday we had a large overflow meeting. But numbers were not the only signs of blessing. A most gracious spirit of inquiry was manifested from the first, and a large number, both old and young, professed faith in Christ. We are hoping that this is but the beginning of a large work during the winter. J. Bell Johnston.

The men's meeting on the second Sunday was the largest meeting known here. The hall was packed, and a deep impression was made upon those present, the subject being "Purity." The meetings on the two Sunday evenings were also very largely attended; hundreds were disappointed at not being able to gain admission. The week-night meetings are well attended, and a great awakening has taken place, and numbers have decided for Christ. The mission has been a great success and a blessing to many. Charlton Jones.

IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.

For the past fortnight a series of special meetings has been held in this hall. The mission has been conducted by Mr. W. Bell, the superintendent, with local help, and although no special evangelist has been engaged, great indeed has been the blessing. The meetings have been well attended, Christians have been revived and given themselves more fully to God, sinners have been awakened, and many have professed conversion. Earnest prayer is asked that the revival may continne.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Mr. Bewley Weaver writes from Nelson, Lanc.:—"We are having tokens of rich blessing. Church crowded; many seekers."

Mr. J. J. Sims has finished a fifteen days' mission in Ealing. A goodly number have professed to accept Christ, several being very bright cases. There were two noticeable features of this mission, one that as many as forty-nine petitions were sent in, embracing over 100 unsaved relatives and friends, for whom prayer was offered; the other that each night few went away until the after-meeting was over—all seemed riveted and loth to leave. The afternoon Bible addresses on "Being filled with the Spirit" were very fairly attended by Christians of all denominations, who greatly appreciated them, whilst the Gospel meetings increased nightly until the close. The audience was rapt and attentive, and each evening proof was given of the Spirit's working in the hearts of many. Mrs. Sims, occasionally assisted by Mr. F. H. Hutchins, sang with much power some new Gospel hymns.

An eight days' mission held in the Borough Hall, Stockton-on-Tees, has proved very successful, the hall being filled each evening, and also on the Sunday afternoons. The preachers were Rev. F. I. Feltham and Mr. B. R. Hopkins, the leader of "The Men's Own." Open-air services were held in the High-street, and 100 members of the church visited the various shops and houses, and gave 10,000 personal invitations. A mid-day prayer meeting was held each day.

A mission has been held at Yatesbury, Wilts, by Mr. J. H. Greene, of South Croydon, from Dec. 5 to 12. Well-attended services have been held twice daily in the schoolroom. Many have been brought to Christ, and believers have been stirred up, in answer to much prayer.

A series of evangelistic services were conducted by Rev. H. K. Byard, of Winslow, in Little Kingshill, Bucks, in the first week of December. Rev. J. Robinson, of the Baptist chapel, opened the mission on Sunday evening with a rousing sermon, Mr. Byard sang solos each evening, and his addresses were full of the Gospel, delivered with much earnestness, that evidently impressed the hearers. It is believed that much good has been done.

A mission has been held by Pastor R. Howton, of Glossop, in the Baptist chapel, Dronfield, the centre of a group of small villages in Derbyshire, where the Gospel is much needed. His labours have been used of God. The church has been quickened, and numbers profess conversion.

A Gospel mission has been held by Mr. Edgar Fennel at Gorse Lane, Swansea, with encouraging results. Large numbers passed into the inquiry room and were pointed to Christ. Most of these were senior scholars in the Sunday-School.

Mr. D. M. Bayne, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded a three weeks' mission in Saltcoats, N.B., on Sabbath, Dec. 12. Faithful messages have been delivered, many of God's people have been blessed, and souls have been won for Christ.

The Home Mission, Hawick, N.B., has closed a very successful two-weeks' Mission, when Mr. W. D. Dunn addressed large and interested audiences night after night. Several young men and young women professed conversion, also a number of boys and girls, while the believers were stirred up and blessed. The afternoon Bible-readings were well attended, and proved "times of refreshing." One attractive feature of the Mission was Mr. Dunn's most interesting and instructive lecture on Palestine, which had a large and sympathetic audience.

A fortnight's mission was brought to a successful conclusion on 17th inst. in Salisbury Hall, Edinburgh. The evangelist was Rev. C. E. Crosthwaite, of Govan, who has had large experience in evangelistic work, both in this and the sister isle. His addresses, which were listened to by appreciative audiences, were lucid and trenchant. God's people were greatly blessed, and fruit unto life eternal was gathered.

A united mission has been concluded in the Town Hall, Stourport, Worcestershire, by Rev. W. Mottram. The meetings were arranged by the Free Church Council. During the second week the services grew in interest and power to such an extent, and the blessing was so great, that it was decided to continue for fourteen days. The workers have been greatly cheered by the large number who have been brought to Christ. Special meetings were arranged for women and children.

On Sunday last Mr. C. B. Jolliffe, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded a three weeks' mission in the Congregational church at Marshfield, Glos. It has been our privilege to have Mr. Jolliffe three times before, but this time the power of the Lord has been manifested and realised more than any time previous. With thanksgiving to God we shall look back to the refreshing Bible-readings and the simple, evangelical story of redeeming love.

A series of Gospel services has been held in Newburgh, N.Y., by Mr. C. H. Yatman. Large congregations were attracted, keen interest was aroused, and large numbers were found convicted of sin and seeking guidance in the way of peace. It is announced that at one church seventy-three young converts have been received "on trial" as the result of this mission.

At Mankato, Minn., five churches recently united in evangelistic services under the lead of Dr. L. W. Munhall. Over four hundred persons confessed Christ as their Saviour. At Menominee, Mich., three churches have united in special services, and scores of persons are turning to the Lord. The work in both places has resulted in the quickening of Christian consciences and renewed consecration.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has concluded his missions at Waterbury and Moosup, Conn., U.S.A. Large numbers in each place professed conversion. In the latter place, twenty-four of those who gave in their names were Roman Catholics.

Requests for Prayer.

For a Mission to be held by Mr. Rochfort in Cage-lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, Jan. 12 to 16.

For a little village cause, near Reading—that God would bring the people in and pour out his Spirit in blessing.

Praise.

For the results of a mission by Rev. C. Musgrave Brown in Holy Trinity parish, Lee.

For blessing given in the Town Hall, Trowbridge, during a united Mission by Mr. John Elliott.

Letter to the Editor.

A DEPRESSING CHRISTMAS CONTRAST.

Sir,—At such a season as the Christian festival of Christmas, when most of us are looking forward to all sorts of social enjoyment and good cheer, a sense of humility should constrain us to think with a pitying contrast of the terrible sufferings of our brave soldiers in the cold hills of Affridiland, hounded on to aggressive hostilities that are scarcely in harmony with our commemoration of the birth of the Prince of Peace, when the angelic choir proclaimed peace on earth and goodwill towards men.

The aggressive wars we have long been engaged in reflect disgrace on our boasted Christianity. Indeed, it is preposterous to speak of England as a really Christian country, when, besides other national crimes, we consider the many iniquitous wars waged in the present reign, such as the Chinese opium war, the invasion of Afghanistan in 1839 through our miserable jealousy of Russia, and, lastly, on the same account the deplorable annexation of Chitral, which led the frontier tribes to oppose a policy that seemed to them to threaten their independence, for doing which they have had their land mercilessly ravaged with fire and sword. For this our missionaries at Peshawur will have imposed on them the trying task of replying to the Mohammedan taunt, Is this your boasted Christianity? Christian people ought to be faithful to their God in denouncing all these invasive wars that have disgraced England so many years, and that irrespective of political party and self-interest.

S. Dewe White, Colonel,

Dr. Elder Cumming.

We have received with peculiar pleasure the following letter:—

Please correct a mistake about me in this week's Christian. I am quite well, and hope to go at the close of January to visit some of the missions in the Holy Land and the East, at the request of the Keswick Convention committee. My companions will be (D.V.) Rev. F. Paynter, Guildford, and Rev. J. J. Luce, Gloucester.

What induced me the more readily to agree to the request was that for the last two or three years I was troubled with throat complaint at that season, which the doctors think may be cured by the change of climate there. J. Elder Cumming.

Band of Hope Union.—At the Mansion House, on Monday night, Princess Louise attended a gathering in celebration of of the jubilee of the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union, for the purpose of receiving purses in aid of the special fund of £25,000 which is being raised this year in connection with the movement. An address of welcome was presented to her Royal Highness by Mr. F. Smith, after which Canon Barker made a short statement, in the course of which he said that there were now in the United Kingdom 26,000 Band of Hope societies, with a membership of 3,240,000. About fifty purses, containing an aggregate of £20,000, were handed to Princess Louise. Addresses were delivered by Dr. Clifford, Dr. Newman Hall, and others.

Daily Reading and Prayer.—Many who are not already members of any such fellowship may be glad to know of the Bible Reading and Prayer Union, started by Dr. J. B. Paton. This must not be confounded with the Bible and Prayer Union, founded by Rev. Thomas Richardson, the consecutive portions of which are followed in our "Daily Homily." The later Union has, says Rev. W. R. Crosbie, a distinctive feature in that, "Along with communion in Bible reading, there is also union in prayer, one prayer being brief and personal, to which the mind may recur throughout the day in quiet moments. The petitions of the other prayer express a sense of the responsibility and delight of membership in Christ's Church, and seek that Divine grace through which the life of each member of Christ's Church, and the manifold services of his Church in the world, may be inspired and fulfilled." A specimen card will be sent by the secretaries, 22, Forest-road, Nottingham, to any wishing to join, or desiring to introduce the Union to churches, or, P.S.A's., or Christian Endeavour Societies.

Obituary.

MR. J. J. BOWREY, JAMAICA.

A great loss has fallen on the churches in Jamaica by the death of Mr. Bowrey, who has for years been the trusted adviser of the London Missionary Society. His death occurred on Nov. 19, at Kingston, from malarial fever. He had filled the chair of the Congregational Union of Jamaica, and for several years had been its treasurer. He was the son of Rev. James Bowrey, who laboured as a missionary in British Guiana, and the love which he had for the coloured people was continued in the son. At the last meeting of the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society letters were read from him pointing out the pressing needs of the churches in the West Indies, and pleading for increased aid.

REV. THOMAS GREEN, ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.

This devoted minister has been called away, to the deep regret of all familiar with the story of his life-long and fruitful labours. Born in London in 1830, he became in due time a member of Rev. Thomas Binney's congregation at the Weigh House. Having decided upon the Congregational ministry, he entered Spring Hill College in 1851, and graduated at the London University, where he took his M.A. degree, with honours in Hebrew. His first call was from the Ryecroft church, of which he became the minister in 1856. With these attached friends he remained during the whole of his ministerial career, only retiring from active service a few months ago. There were few positions of importance in relation to Nonconformity that "Green of Ashton" had not filled, and filled with credit and success. In 1890 he was Chairman of the Congregational Union, the highest distinction which the denomination has to bestow. He took an active interest in the duties of citizenship, and during the cotton famine, as at other times, rendered great service to the town of his adoption. Mr. Green was a hard worker, and somewhat prematurely bore the marks of white winter. His bright and genial presence will be greatly missed by his colleagues.

REV. WILLIAM CLARKSON, L.M.S.

One of the oldest missionaries of the L.M.S. has been called home in Rev. W. Clarkson, who died, in his eighty-first year, on Monday week at Tunbridge Wells. Born in 1817 at Salisbury, he came to London, where he was received into the membership of the church in Orange-street, Leicester-square, at the age of sixteen. He studied in Homerton and Western Colleges, and in 1839 was ordained and appointed by the London Missionary Society to labour in Surat. After five years' work in that place, where his first wife (Miss Mary Ann Austin, of Hackney) died, he commenced a new mission at Baroda, and subsequently laboured at Dhevan, where he married Miss Mary Flower, sister of Rev. W. Flower, his colleague. On his return from India in 1855 he became pastor of Tacket-street Church, Ipswich, then at Folkestone. Afterwards he removed to Bideford, where he laboured nine years, and in 1870 undertook the pastorate of Trinity Church, Croydon. Since leaving Croydon, fifteen years ago, Mr. Clarkson has been living in retirement at Tunbridge Wells. He was the author of "India and the Gospel," "Christ and Missions," and "Missionary Encouragements." Two of his sons are now in the ministry—Rev. W. F. Clarkson, of Above Bar, Southampton, and Rev. J. R. Clarkson, of Bassingburn.

REV. WILLIAM ROBERTS, B.A.

As minister of Horbury Chapel, Notting-hill, for over forty years, Mr. Roberts was widely respected; hence his death at his residence, 26, Sanfoin-road, Balham, on Tuesday last, will be generally regretted. He belonged to a generation which is now rapidly passing away. He entered Highbury College in 1842. At the close of his college career, in 1847, he became pastor of the Congregational Church, High Wycombe, where he remained till 1850, when he entered upon the scene of what may be called his life's work at Notting-hill. That he should have sustained with continued success and esteem the labours of this important Metropolitan charge for a period approaching half-a-century is in itself an eloquent testimony to the mental and spiritual resources which he brought to his task. His preaching, based on deep evangelical convictions, gave evidence of wide reading and independent thought. His labours were by no means confined to the pulpit. He took an especial interest in foreign mission work. For many years he was trusted counsellor of the London Missionary Society, and was the first minister to be elected Chairman of its board of directors. He was also a trustee of The Evangelical Magazine Widows' Fund, and a member of the committee of the Religious Tract Society. Since his retirement from Notting-hill he has resided at Balham, where he has rendered valuable service to the local churches.

Personalia.

General Booth writes:—"I have just closed a wonderful campaign in Lyons, Nîmes, Geneva, Neuchatel, Berne, and Basle. I hope to leave for Canada and the United States of America early in January."

Rev. F. B. Meyer leaves England by the Majestic on January 12 for the United States, where he will fulfil engagements in various parts of the country, chiefly addressing meetings of ministers. Mr. Meyer hopes to reoccupy his own pulpit on the first Sunday in March.

Dr. Fairbairn, Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford, has been invited by the missionaries of India and Trustees of the Haskell Lectureship there to visit India next winter or in the spring, to give the second course of the lectures in connection with the Lectureship.

Bishop Burdon, who resigned the see of Victoria, Hong Kong, a few months ago, is returning to China as a missionary. He is seventy years of age, and has been in the mission field for forty-four years, during twenty-three of which he has acted as Bishop. He proposes to settle at Pak-hoi.

Rev. Thomas Connellan, of Dublin, has again visited Manchester, and lectured on subjects connected with the Papacy, at Central Hall. The police were in strong force, but there was no need for their services; clearly proving that the rank and file of Romanists will not interfere with free speech if they are not egged on by their ecclesiastical leaders.

Mr. H. M. Dyke.—We have had a letter from this venerable missionary, who, although very frail, writes expressing his continued sympathy with the Lord's workers in London. His daughter-in-law appends a note, saying that since writing he has been seriously ill and is still very weak. He had a slight attack of paralysis, and for a whole week thought he was going home. Now, however, he is much better.

Pastor Hoyois, of the Belgian Missionary Church, has been on a brief visit to London, with the object of enlisting interest in evangelical work in Belgium. From time to time the heroic undertakings of the Belgian Missionary Church have been described in our pages, and most cheering progress has been recorded. Having returned home, the pastor may be addressed—57, rue Notre Dame, Mons, Belgium.

Theatrical Employes.—Mr. William Forbes gave a tea on Thursday week at Orange-street Chapel to about 100 young women engaged in theatres. The Religious Tract Society presented a number of pretty Christmas cards; the Bible Flower Mission sent bright muslin bags in varied colours, filled with lavender, and having suitable Scripture texts attached. Testaments were also given to many of the young women. Mrs. Burnett Smith (Annie S. Swan) gave a sympathetic address. Mr. Forbes has been engaged in this work for twenty years.

Marylebone Medical Mission.—The pressure of need, and of much sickness is felt in the poor district around Edgware-road Station. Dr. Chambers and his helpers are kept fully employed, and feel greatly the importance of help in relief for the sick poor and warm coverings for the suffering whose lack of the barest necessities of life is often most distressing. The latest report of this excellent work shows a wide range of operation, and gives many cheering examples of the wondrous influence of the double ministry in healing the sick and ministering the Gospel. Copies may be had of the superintendent, Dr. R. Chambers, 12, Bell-street, Lisson-grove, N.W.

City of London Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, Victoria Park, E., stands in the heart of the East End, and affords relief to that vast multitude of the poor who look to this hospital when afflicted by diseases of the heart or lungs. The hospital contains 164 beds, of which no less than 120 are now closed for want of funds. A very large number of eligible and consumptive patients await admission, and some of these, who would have occupied the beds and been relieved, have already passed away before their time came for admission. The committee earnestly appeal for generous support. The secretary is Mr. T. Dudley Ryder, and the address as given above.

The Y.M.C.A.

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS' ANNUAL ADDRESS.

In his New Year's address the President says:—The past year, like those which have preceded it, has been crowded with blessing. God has set his seal upon our efforts. There has been steady growth in almost every direction. The traditions of the past have been fully maintained. The Y.M.C.A. is an increasing force and power in our land. The retrospect awakens profound gratitude, and fills our hearts with hope and courage for the future. I rejoice to think of the thousands who, in connection with our Y.M.C.A.'s throughout the world, are witnessing for Jesus Christ, and are seeking, by example and precept, to win their fellow young men to Him.

The motto text selected by the National Council—"Be strong, and work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of Hosts" (Hag. ii. 4)—furnishes suggestions and lessons especially appropriate to our personal life and to our Association work. It suggests to us "strength for work: Christ's presence our inspiration," which is the burden of my New Year's message.

In our work, like the Jews of old, we are too often and too easily discouraged. Discouragement is fatal to progress. It is the weapon the devil uses to defeat our good endeavours. The reason he uses it is because he finds it so effective, and one under which we so easily fall.

Brethren, suffer the word of gentle rebuke and exhortation. As associations, let us give discouragement no place in our midst. There is no room for it. The building of the temple may not proceed as quickly as we desire, but it shall be completed. The topmost stone shall be laid amid the triumphant shouts of victory. We must not permit obstacles or opposition to hinder us. Rather let us trample them under our feet, and in a spirit of courageous, enthusiastic determination proceed with our work.

"Be strong and work, for I am with you, saith the Lord of Hosts." This is a rousing, stirring call to action. My supreme desire is that it may be regarded as such by all our Y.M.C.A.'s throughout the world. It was originally addressed to Zerubbabel the governor, to Joshua the high priest, and to all the remnant of the people. Not one was excluded. So now I would have every president, treasurer, secretary, and individual member realise that it is a personal and definite call to duty. We need to press upon each other the recognition of personal obligation and responsibility, and to realise that the growth and usefulness of the work depend upon the individual effort put forth by each member.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Durban Association, has appointed Mr. G. H. Humphries as its secretary.

The last two missions conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, under the auspices of the National Council—in connection with the Blackburn and Worcester Associations, were among the most successful of the year's series.

The Bible-class in connection with the Dundee Association, which is so largely attended by the youth of the city, has celebrated its 21st anniversary. The class is conducted by Mr. Wm. Stewart, and the present large membership—slightly over 1000—is in great measure the result of union between classes conducted by Mr. Stewart and Mr. Smith, the secretary of the Y.M.C.A.

The New Brighton Association held last week good meetings in celebration of its 25th anniversary. The annual report read by Mr. T. A. Leigh, showed much activity and many encouraging tokens. Amongst the speakers of the evening were Mr. C. McArthur, M.P., and Archdeacon Madden, who supported most effectively the peculiar claims of the association in its work amongst young men.

The Anglo-American Association, Paris, has celebrated its twenty-ninth anniversary very successfully, by a meeting presided over by General Horace Porter, U.S.A. Ambassador, who congratulated the association upon the work it was doing, and trusted all the desires of the committee would be achieved. Mr. Herbert E. Kinsley, secretary, reported the work as flourishing. Many speakers referred to the desirability of larger premises which would certainly tend to ensure much more effective work.

Two missionary members of the Hackney Association have died on the Congo. Two other members have volunteered to fill the gaps. Mr. B. J. Lower is now on the river, whilst Mr. A. N. Salmon has entered Harley College to prepare to follow. Another, Mr. E. C. Notman, has been invited to take charge of a native Baptist church on a small island off the coast of Costa Rica; he starts early in January. Many other members have recently volunteered for the foreign mission field. Mr. Frank Reynolds, another member, has been elected secretary of the Shoreditch Association. Nearly all of these have been converted through the instrumentality of the Hackney Y.M.C.A.

John-street Chapel, Bedford-row, W.C.—For help in Christmas distribution to the poor. The Holborn and Clerkenwell districts are densely populated, and there is much poverty.—Frank L. W. Nicholson, John-street Chapel, Bedford-road, W.C.

The Children's Mission, Camberwell.—To provide two hundred children with a dinner at Christmas and free breakfasts during the winter months, also New Year's tea to children. Clothing and boots also wanted.—A. H. Roe, 251, Southampton-street, Camberwell, S.E.

Union Hall Mission for the winter's work, the funds for the general expenses being now absolutely exhausted; also work amongst the blind, and the large number of poor living around the halls.—William Holmes, Treasurer, 156, Alexandra-road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

The Westminster Lodging-house Mission has since its formation in 1889 reclaimed 160 hapless fallen girls, while Gospel services are held each Sunday in eight different lodging-houses. The leader is A. Gordon, 3, Princes-street, Westminster.

Lansdowne-place Ragged-school.—For the benevolent or Samaritan fund. At Christmas time some very poor persons are helped by provisions for a dinner on Christmas Day, with 1 cwt. of coals.—F. Fisher, Cromer Lodge, Church-road, Brixton Hill, S.W.

Chiswick Mission.—Mr. Robert T. Smith, Thornton Avenue, Chiswick, asks help to send 1 cwt. of coal to poor mothers, to render assistance to widows with young children, to provide comforts for the sick and aged, and to make the motherless children in our Home happy.

Surrey Square Mission.—To cheer the hearts and homes of the poorer friends by giving them a parcel and some living. Living in the midst of sickness and poverty, we are able to discern the real from the counterfeit cases.—Chas. A. Pavey, 13, Pepler-road, Old Kent-road, S.E.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.—We are now hard at work, raising help for Christmas; but the general and Samaritan funds greatly need assistance.—Superintendent of Eastern division, Mr W. Mead, 95, Gurney-road, Stratford, E.; central office, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.

John Street Chapel.—To bring together to a substantial dinner as many aged and poor as the funds will admit, and in cases where sickness or age prevents coming to the meeting, to supply dinners at their own houses.—Address to William T. Russell, 11, Manor-place, Paddington-green, W.

The Salvation Army, City Colony headquarters.—To brighten the lives of our large family of about 5000 men, largely the waifs and strays of society. It is proposed to provide these 5000 men (and as many more as funds permit) with the best dinner possible.—W. J. Richards, 272, Whitechapel-road, E.

St. Giles's Christian Mission.—For the winter's work amongst the poor. Relief is given in clothing, firing, and food to the hungry. Also to provide Christmas dinners to a number of struggling hard-working families who cannot provide sufficient food for themselves.—Wm. J. Wheatley, 4, Ampton-street, Regent Square, W.C.

South London Wesleyan Mission.—On behalf of the very poor, to recommence hot breakfasts for the neglected children of the streets, also to provide Christmas fare for the deserving poor, many being widows in distressing circumstances.—Revs. J. H. Hopkins and H. T. Meakin, 12, Chapel-place, Long Lane, S.E.

Union Tabernacle, S.W.—To cheer at Christmas time the widows and aged, and those we know to be in distress from cold and hunger; also to provide a treat for several hundred poor children and members of the mothers' meeting. Warm wraps, blankets, boots, and shoes, meat teas, suppers, puddings, &c.—D. M. Cameron, pastor, 515, Wandsworth-road, S.W.

London Central Wesleyan Mission.—For Christmas dinner funds, by which we were able last year to provide at least 1500 dinners and the distribution of several tons of coal during the cold weather following Christmas. For parcels of cast off and new warm garments for the poor. Our workers are meeting with most needy cases.—(Rev.) John E. Wakerley, Lloyd-square, Clerkenwell.

Leather Lane.—A large medical mission is carried on here; also Gospel meetings for young and old, and many other useful agencies. The deaconesses who are labouring there, and who are daily coming in contact with the sore pressing needs of the district, will be grateful for any help, cast-off clothing.—Address, Sister Gwendoline, 59, Doughty-street, Gray's Inn-road, W.C.

The Strangers' Friend Society has been engaged for over a hundred and twelve years in helping the sick poor of all nationalities and creeds. A staff of a hundred and sixty-five Christian workers are striving day by day to carry a little sunshine into saddened homes, by visiting and ministering to the necessities of the afflicted. The treasurer is Alderman Sir J. C. Dimsdale, 50, Cornhill, E.C.

Gifford Hall Mission, Gifford-street, Caledonian-road.—For help to provide 350 dinners and materials for as many teas to the very poor, at their homes, on Christmas Day. Also to give New Year's entertainments to upwards of 500 Sunday scholars; to supply coals and soup to the very needy throughout the winter; and to furnish comforts to the sick and infirm.—B. Hitjer, 1, Wood-lane, Highgate.

The Clapton Mission, embracing the districts of Lower Clapton, Homerton, Hoxton, and Whitechapel, for free breakfasts to destitute children, soup kitchens, medical dispensaries, and various agencies amongst thousands of the poorest and most necessitous families. It is wished to give a Christmas parcel to some hundreds of the most urgent cases.—Thomas Jackson, 8, Rushmore-road, Clapton, N.E.

North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women.—The general maintenance fund is exhausted, not sufficient to meet last month's expenses. The present number of inmates is eighty-three, twenty-three are between eighty and ninety-three years. We are anxious at this Christmas time to give them a little extra cheer.—Henry and Anne Bright, Hon. Superintendents, 77, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N.

Camberwell Mission.—The committee are desirous of giving a number of the poorest families a dinner on Christmas Day; also to maintain the benevolent work of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, ministering to the wants of the cripple children, providing clothing, blankets, etc., and in a variety of other ways seeking to mitigate the lot of the poor children and their parents.—A. H. Ward, 59, Arodene-road, Brixton Hill, S.W.

The Evelina Hospital for Sick Children has lately been put in thorough repair and furnished with all the most modern appliances. The Out-patient Department has been enlarged, and the building is about to be extended to accommodate 100 patients, the sixty-six cots which it now contains being found inadequate for the treatment of the numerous applicants for relief.—The Secretary, Evelina Hospital, Southwark Bridge-road, S.E.

The King Edward Christian Missions, Spitalfields, on behalf of some of the poorest children, the sick and aged identified with these schools and missions. There are upwards of 3000 children and poor people in attendance, and amongst them are many who through sickness and other causes over which they have no control, are sadly needing help. Nourishing soup dinners are given to the very poorest school children.—Charles Montague, Hon. Supt., 75, Bedford-square, E.

London City Mission.—On behalf of the thousands of poor distressed Jews and other foreigners, that its fifteen missionaries, who preach the Gospel and read the Holy Scriptures to these aliens in about twenty different languages, may be able to minister in Christ's name some temporal good to those who at the Christmas-tide will be suffering from lack of food, fire, and clothing. Help in money or kind, or clothing (old or new).—James Dunn, Sec., 3, Bridewell-place, E.C.

The Church Army.—Help for the outcast and starving. There are some seventy Labour Homes and other institutions throughout the Metropolis and provinces. Every London Home is full. 9000 cases—men, women, and boys—were dealt with in 1896. Fifty-three per cent. of all we receive turn out well. Daily we are turning away from our doors really helpable persons. Money and old clothes of every description, coal and bread tickets are urgently needed.—W. Carlile. Hon. Chief Sec., 130, Edgeware-road, W.

United Kingdom Beneficent Association.—For the "once better off." Hidden away in some lonely street unknown to the clergy, district visitors, and others, lives the poor lady, shrinking from observation. It is now twenty-one years since the Christmas appeal was first made on behalf of our poor candidates, and the subscriptions from that time have amounted to £19,453 4s. 6d., and been distributed in about 6,500 gifts, varying from £5 to £1 each. There are now 355 names on the list, who have been helped in various ways.—Ada M. Kirby, Cerne Abbas, Branksome, Bournemouth.

The Ragged School Union.—For funds for its great work among destitute and neglected children, for loving ministry among 5000 home cripples, in pain, weakness, and sorrow, and for the large winter's relief and clothing operations. During the past year the Council has promoted considerable expansion of enterprise, notably, in the work among cripple children. Of these there are now upwards of five thousand registered. This rapid growth of effort is, unfortunately, coincident with a falling off of funds. With a depleted exchequer and heavy recurring responsibilities, we have to face the fast approaching winter, and if sufficient is not forthcoming to carry on the varied work in all its branches, successfully maintained now for over half a century, the result will be disastrous. "What then?" Certainly a considerable amount of privation to many of the families of the deserving poor throughout the metropolis.—John Kirk, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand

THE BOOK WORLD.

NEW YEAR AND OTHER BOOKLETS.

Among these practical reminders of the flight of another period of time, we always gladly welcome those issued by Messrs. Partridge & Co. There are three before us. Broken Communion, by Rev. C. A. Fox, is the very striking address he delivered at the St. James's Hall Convention in the spring, and reported in our columns at the time. Miss S. M. Nugent's booklet, The Harbour of His People, overflows with suggestive and stimulating reflections on the constant renewal and cleansing that should come into the fruitful Christian life through Divine channels. God's Carpenters is the somewhat unusual title of Rev. E. W. Moore's New Year address; it is based on a passage in Zech. i., and will be found to yield many pungent and timely thoughts bearing on the life and testimony of the Church of Christ. (1d. each.) The book of Nature is an open page whereon the devout student may see the image and reflection of many a spiritual lesson. Mr. J. E. Hawkins in his words for the New Year, God Speaking, passes in review many such lessons learned from contact with things seen. (1d. 36, Baker-street, W.)

A number of booklets and leaflets by Mrs. Gorges are published by Mr. C. Caswell, of Edmund-street, Birmingham. Christmas Day (1d.) is a pleasing Advent poem. A New Year's Motto (1d.) is also in verse, the motto being "as one whom his mother comforteth." Two useful Gospel booklets are Only Believe and The Cedar and the Palm (6d. per dozen). Two booklets by Henrietta S. Streatfeild are also published by Mr. Caswell. A Message from God Unto Thee. (6d. per dozen) contains words of exhortation for the New Year; while Facts Stranger Than Fiction (1d.) deals with missionary progress. Several seasonable booklets have been published from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. First comes A Two-sided Christmas, by Rev. P. B. Power, in large type, and then Mary's Choice, a New Year's Bible Study for elder girls, by M. Maude. (Both 6d. per dozen.) Be Strong for Jesus, by Rev. George Everard, is a stirring appeal to Christians. Gilt-Edged Securities, to be had this year, by Rev. P. B. Power, sets forth some of the choice possessions and blessed realisations of God's children. (Both 1s. per dozen.)

STORIES FOR YOUNG AND OLD.

The boys will find Geordie, the Black Prince, by Rev. J. M. Russell (2s. Jarrold & Sons), a thoroughly readable and stirring story.

Our girls have read eagerly, and apparently with much interest, Miss E. R. Boddy's new tale, Mab's Burdens. (1s. 6d. Shaw & Co.) The story is sweet and simple, very attractive and high-toned in purpose and spirit.

Little ones who delight in fairy tales will be charmed with Fairy Greatmind. By Maude M. Butler. (1s. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.) A pleasing little tale with a wholesome moral on the real pleasure of doing good to others.

A dreamy school-girl, passionately fond of books, has a supposed visit from an ancient philosopher, an outline of which is given by Mr. J. B. Alliott in Eirene: A Christmas Interview with Pythagoras. (Marshall, Russell, & Co.) It is interesting, but the theory of the transmigration of souls, as here presented, is scarcely healthful for young people.

A Wife's Faith. By Mrs. Stevenson. (1s. 6d. Church of England Temperance Society.) A temperance story illustrating the fatal grip of the drink crave. Successful as the wife's prayerful efforts prove in the end, she has to suffer sorely in the process. The Royal Commission Leaflets, issued by the same Society, present succinctly some of the strong points in the evidence borne before the Royal Licensing Commission.

Miss M. F. Cusack's writings derive a peculiar interest from her unique personality and experience. In her latest book, His Yarn, the former Nun of Kenmare shows that she has powers of descriptive narration as well as controversial abilities. The little volume contains two stories, the first, which furnishes the title, giving the true and touching story of a coasting sailor's life and conversion; and the second, also founded on fact, relating the experiences of an Irish girl in New York. (2s. 6d. London: Marshall, Russell & Co.; Bournemouth: The Author, Castle Court, Boscombe.)

MISCELLANEOUS.

Rev. Andrew Murray gives help to the observance of the Lord's Supper in his little book, The Lord's Table. (1s. Nisbet.) The pages aim not only to give Scripture teaching, but also to cultivate a devotional spirit in those who would obey the Lord's command with spiritual profit.

Teachers and mothers will find useful models for talks with their children in Royal Sights and other Talks by E. Wilmhurst. (Wilmhurst, 10, Paternoster-square. 1s. net.) The opening lesson is from the Queen's life, and the others take their themes mainly from nature; but all are made to serve a higher and deeper spiritual purpose.

Sunday Afternoon Verses. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) This selection of verses from those that have appeared from time to time in The British Weekly is a singularly choice one. It would be added interest to the collection if the authorship of the poems had been revealed wherever it was possible; but that cannot detract from the high and genuine quality of the thought here embodied and expressed.

Treasures of the Snow: Talks to Children. By Rev. Thomas Hind. (1s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book-room.) The children who heard these talks must have been interested and instructed thereby. No less will those who read them, or hear them read, find pleasure and profit in the simple parables from nature. Those Three, by May Lewis Smith (1s.), from the same Book-room, will charm the tiny ones with its story and full-page pictures of child-life.

Rev. George Jackson's name stands for a sympathetic interest in young people; and in A Young Man's Bookshelf (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly) he aims to create a taste for the good things of literature. The papers included in this attractive volume deal with the Scriptures, biography and travel, poetry, fiction, and miscellaneous subjects. On many points discussed there is room for wide divergence of judgment; but Mr. Jackson is always true to his avowed purpose, thoughtful in method, and suggestive and helpful in his counsels.

Though coming after many others in point of time, the annuals issued from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling, are among the most welcome of the season, because of their excellent purpose and substantial utility. The British Messenger (1s. 6d.) is full of good things for the home, and its evangelistic mission is always obvious. Equally pointed as to letterpress and bright as to illustrations is The Gospel Trumpet (1s.) which is in large type, such as the aged will most highly appreciate. The year's parts of Good News are also put in a tinted cover. (4d.)

Lectures and Sermons of Peter Mackenzie. Arranged by Rev. Joseph Dawson. (3s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book-room.) As Richard Weaver, that honoured Evangelist, was called from the mine to be a soul-winner, so Peter Mackenzie came from the colliery. His "Life and Labours" has already gained a wide circulation, yet none the less will thousands welcome these memorials of his inimitable lectures and searching sermons. True, his unique personality lent an element which cannot be reproduced, but even in cold type these specimens of his utterances reveal traces of his singular power to attract and sway. His peculiar charm lay in his realistic painting of Bible scenes and characters; and of this the reader will find abundant evidence in the volume before us.

It is a great pleasure to call attention to books illustrative and confirmatory of Scripture history, and to commend such works to the diligent perusal of thoughtful Christian people. We welcome a very readable book on the subject by Rev. W. Bramley-Moore, M.A., bearing the title, Marturia, and presenting, in a carefully-digested form, "the testimony of the ancient records and monuments in the British Museum to the Historical Accuracy of Holy Scripture." Reprinted from The King's Own, the papers are five in number, and will be useful to Christian workers. An introductory chapter of much interest is followed by others devoted to Egypt, Babylon, and Assyria. The concluding section of the book deals with Palestine, Greece, and Rome. There have been many publications of this kind during recent years, but we know of nothing so well calculated as this book to meet the needs of the general reader. The scope is comprehensive, the style is simple, and the cost is small. The author has had the help of experts in this effort, by which he vindicates the Word of God, in the hope that it may become more precious to Biblical students, and have the more complete confidence of devout Christians. (2s. 6d., post free, from the author, 26, Russell-square, London, W.C.)

Not all works of Christian biography can be described as means of grace, but this designation may honestly be given to John MacNeil, late Evangelist of Australia, and author of "The Spirit-Fitted Life." The memoir has been compiled by his wife, and edited by his warmly-attached friend, Rev. H. B. Macartney, of Melbourne. Mr. MacNeil was a native of Scotland, and studied in Edinburgh; but he exercised his ministry in the Australian colonies, where he was held in universal respect. His watchword was "Australia for Christ"; and whether labouring in the older settlements or on goldfields remote from civilisation, he was always earnest and resourceful, engaged in the King's business, and greatly honoured in the service. Many of the letters of the lamented evangelist are interwoven in the story, also some extracts from his diaries. The book has something for all classes of readers To Christians it cannot fail to be interesting, seeing (in the terse statement of the editor) they will find here a conversion and a decision; a call to study, to open-air work, and to ordination; an anointing of the Holy Ghost for service, and a most remarkable bodily healing; a career of revival, and a sudden summons to glory! There are excellent portraits and other illustrations. (6s. Marshall Brothers.)

Mr. C. Russell Hurditch's Message for 1898 is fully illustrated, and on every page there are earnest words. (½d. Shaw & Co.; 4s. 6d. per 100, post free, from Evangelistic Mission, 164, Alexandra-road, N.W.

Rev. Charles Bullock has selected some gems of song, and published them in a booklet, Happy Songs for a Happy New Year (4d. "Home Words" Office). Many will find spiritual refreshment in the pages.

Mr. Dudley Kidd has written a remarkable booklet on unreality, with the title Let's Pretend. It should be of great service in evangelistic work. (1d. South Africa General Mission, 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon, S.W.)

A splendid biographical sketch for the young is John Cairns, D.D., LL.D., his life-story, with lessons, by Rev. Alexander Andrew, D.D. Old as well as young should read this outline of the career of one of Scotia's many great gifts to the Church of Christ. (1½d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Mr. J. Forbes Moncrieff year by year sends forth useful addresses at this season. His latest works are Bravest and Best (1½d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling), in which, with abundance of historical allusion, he makes a spiritual appeal to young people; and Out and Out, an address to elder scholars on thoroughness in the Christian life. (1½d. Glass & Co., Howard-street, Glasgow.)

Choice cards, embossed and folded, for enclosure in envelopes, have been issued by R. Brimelow, 1, Cambridge arcade, Southport. On the fly-leaves hymns are tastefully printed (1s. and 2s. per dozen). The One Thing Needful Almanac is in its twenty-sixth year. In addition to calendar and Scripture selections, there are pages with useful information and spiritual gleanings. (1d. and 3d.)

The Roll Text Almanack, 1898. Messrs. J. F. Shaw & Co. have for a number of years made a specialty of this daily remembrancer (price 1d.) so well adapted for hanging on the wall of bedroom or study. The sick and aged find it a great comfort, from its large type and readiness of reference. The Bible-Searching Almanack (book 1d.) will also be prized by many as encouraging the young folk in a profitable habit of searching the Scriptures in order to discover the references.

Notices.

Will the friends who have been posting The Christian to Mr. W. G. Peate, of the China Inland Mission, Shanghai, kindly cease sending, as the copies are not required.

Moravian Missions.—The office of the London Association in aid of Moravian Missions has been removed from 2, Furnival's Inn to 7, New-court, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

Treating at Christmas.—A correspondent writes to emphasize the suggestion made in previous years that friends should abstain from offering strong drink to policemen, postmen, and other public servants at this joyous season. The money would be better expended if given to societies specially devoted to the interests of these classes.

The "Christmas Boat."—Miss Child's annual unloading of her gift-laden vessel took place on Saturday night, when the "Welcome Home," Canning Town, was literally besieged with sailors of different nationalities, the coffee-bar, the various rooms, and the large hall being well filled. The singing of sacred songs, addresses in different languages, and testimonies by sailors as to the power of the Gospel upon their lives were going on in all parts of the Home. An overflow meeting was held in the large yard, where a lady sang and addressed the Scandinavians in their own tongue. It is the practice at the "Welcome Home" to have a real "Yulefest" the week before Christmas Day, and the unloading of the schooner Jane, which loving hearts and willing hands had loaded with parcels of useful articles for the sailors. Mrs. Tuck, Mrs. Anderson, and Miss Williams acted as stevedores. The recipients numbered over 300 from all parts of the world. During the evening a beautiful ornamental copper coffee-urn with an engraved inscription was presented to Miss Childs by one of the seamen.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. S. R. Cambie, vicar of Gorsley, has accepted the vicarage of Spondon, Derby.

The Bishop of Saskatchewan and Calgary leaves Liverpool this day per s.s. Parisian.

Rev. H. Sinclair Brooke, curate of Holy Trinity, Tulse-hill, has accepted the charge of Pembury.

A new Church Army labour home for the outcast has lately been opened in French-street, Southampton.

Rev. E. J. Hardy, the historian of "The Love Affairs of Famous Men," has been appointed Donnellan Lecturer for 1898-99, in Trinity College, Dublin. The Lectureship resembles the Bampton Lectureship at Oxford.

The centenary of the C.M.S. will occur on April 12, 1899. It will be commemorated in London by special services on Sunday, April 9, and Sunday, April 16, 1899, and by special gatherings during the intervening week. The second Jubilee Year is intended to be celebrated on November 1, 1898.

A Church Nurses' Guild has been formed to promote Christian fellowship amongst nurses who are members of the Church of England. The Marchioness of Northampton has accepted the office of lady president. Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence is the chaplain of the guild, and Miss Wethered is the secretary.

Rev. Arthur Hart, who took a prominent part in the Barnwell Mission while at Cambridge, has succeeded Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield at St. Peter's, Upper Holloway, where he is proving the right man in the right place, attracting large numbers of men on Sunday afternoons by a special course of addresses on important spiritual topics.

The Bishop of Peterborough having received under the will of the late Lady Jane Dundas £1000, to be distributed for the benefit of foreign missions of the Church of England, has disposed of it as follows:—To the S.P.G., £300; C.M.S. £300; Universities Mission, £100; Zenana Mission, £100; South American Missionary Society, £100; Oxford Mission to Calcutta, £50; Cambridge Mission to Delhi, £50.

Congregational.

Rev. Henry Dolamore has been recognised at Baldock.

Rev. J. A. Balshaw has been recognised as pastor at Corne Abbas.

A special mission has been held by Rev. E. Darley at Towcester.

A seven days' mission has been held by Rev. F. Knowles at Kebworth Harcourt.

Mr. H. G. Brown, of New College, has been ordained to the pastorate at East Ham.

Mr. H. C. Waller, of Gravesend, has been appointed pastor-evangelist to assist Rev. A. Cowe in his work at Guildford.

Rev. J. T. Eynon Davies has been recognised as pastor of Spa Fields new church, Lloyd-square (Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion.)

A united devotional meeting was held last week in Wycliffe Chapel, Philpot-street, E., by the members of four East-end churches.

Rev. T. Simm, having resigned the pastorate at Petersfield after fifteen years' service, the church has passed a resolution expressive of deep regret.

Dr. Sewell M'Farlane, returned missionary from Chi Chow, North China, has accepted the invitation of the L.M.S. to go as a deputation to Australia.

The Congregationalists of Sunderland are arranging for Dr. Parker, of the City Temple, to conduct a three days' mission, commencing on Monday, Jan. 17.

Rev. Robert Harley, F.R.S., met with an accident on Thursday in alighting from an omnibus in Pall Mall. In consequence he has had to cancel all engagements.

The church at Streatham-hill, under the care of Rev. J. P. Gledstone, has celebrated its anniversary. Amongst those who took part in the services were Revs. Charles New, A. N. Johnson, and J. Shaw.

The committee of the "Dale Memorial" are issuing an appeal for subscriptions to enable them to carry out in full the scheme for the memorial to provide a fund for a gold medal, to be given annually in King Edward's High School for Boys. About £100 is required.

During the serious illness of Rev. G. Thompson, of the New Church, Eastbourne, which for six months has entirely laid him aside from his work, Mr. C. Evan Evans, of Hackney College, has acted as his locum tenens with much acceptance and success. Mr. Thompson has now recovered, and on Sunday resumed his ministry with every prospect of continuing with renewed vigour.

Calls.—Rev. A. D. Anderson, of Preston, to Hood Memorial, Glasgow; Mr. A. W. Anderson, to Chingford; Mr. E. Slater, to Kirkheaton, Huddersfield; Rev. Percy Martin, of Richmond, to Park Chapel, Camden Town; Mr. O. Gregory, to Rooden-lane Church, Preston; Mr. John Inglis to Bon Accord Church, Aberdeen; Rev. W. E. Shaw, of Swansea, to Roath-park, Cardiff.

Resignations.—Rev. Joseph Phillips, of Codicote; Rev. C. Wright, of Epping.

Baptist.

Rev. W. Carey Sage has been recognised at Duffield.

Rev. W. E. Harries has commenced his ministry at Blaenycwm.

A chapel is being built at Snodland for the congregation now meeting in the institute.

Rev. James Mursell, of Derby, has accepted the pastorate of the Downs Chapel, Clapton.

A fruitful mission has been conducted at Gorse-lane Chapel, Swansea, by Mr. Edgar Fennell, of Newport, Mon.

The recent sale of work in connection with the Sunday-school Missionary Association at Camden-road realised £162.

Mr. Herbert F. Chipperfield, a deacon of Mount Pleasant Church, Northampton, has been recognised as pastor at Stantonbury.

At Trinity Chapel, Marylebone, Rev. J. C. Carlisle reports that since January forty-six persons have been received into fellowship.

Rev. A. Hall, of High-street Church, Merthyr Tydvil, formerly of St. Leonards, has accepted the pastorate of Queen-street, Port Elizabeth, South Africa.

The statistics given at the recent annual meeting of the Pastors' College show that of the twenty Baptist churches in London which have a membership of 500 and upwards, at least one-half are ministered to by men trained by the late Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

The late Mr. S. Knight, of Rushden, bequeathed £100 to Spurgeon's College, and the same to the Orphanage, £50 to the Baptist Missionary Society, £20 each to ten churches in Beds and Hunts, with £95 to the ministers, and £10 for the renovation of Succoth Chapel, Rushden. The residue was divided between the College and Orphanage, and has proved so substantial that each of the institutions will receive a total of £498.

At a missionary meeting last week in Chatsworth-road Chapel, Norwood, Pastor A. G. Brown related the following incident: Soon after his daughter had decided to go out as a missionary to China, an old lady called upon him and stated that the Lord had told her to give him "that," offering him successively five £100 notes. The old lady then took her departure. "Thus," said Mr. Brown, "I made the gift of my child, and the Lord found the money for her support."

Undismayed by the deficiency which this year faces the Baptist Missionary Society, the Committee have resolved to undertake the thorough restoration of their college buildings at Serampore, which suffered so terribly through the disastrous earthquake a few months ago. Mr. W. R. Rickett, the treasurer, states that the Society is at present £7000 ahead of its income, and there are few treasurers, whether for home, colonial, or foreign missions, but have just now a similar story to tell.

The Cornwall Hall Mission, Brixton-hill, S.W., has been under the superintendence of Mr. B. I. Greenwood for ten years, who has devoted much of his time to the work, and through his instrumentality many have been led to the Saviour. But it became expedient for him to relinquish the responsibility of the mission, through having been called to an important position in connection with the "Nyassa Industrial Mission," Central Africa, and other branches of work. Mr. C. H. Sheen, of Harley College, has accepted charge of the mission, and a Baptist Church has been formed of which he has been ordained pastor.

Calls.—Rev. H. F. Griffiths, late of Zion, Cambridge, to Bridlington Quay; Rev. G. Woodvine Ball, of Salcombe, to Brixham; Rev. W. L. Tweedie to Stockton; Mr. H. F. Chipperfield to Stantonbury; Rev. John Edmonds, of Grimsby, to West Green, N.

Resignation.—Rev. D. Flavel, of Carlton, Bedford.

Methodist.

Rev. J. Eastwood, of Hartlepool, is seriously ill.

A fruitful mission has been held in Ardsley, near Wakefield.

A new chapel is to be built at Wellington, Salop, at a cost of £1600.

Mr. S. Plummer, of Belvedere, a leading London Methodist, is dangerously ill.

At Lemington-on-Tyne a cheering awakening is in progress among the Primitive Methodists.

The memorial stones of a new Wesleyan chapel in Leicester, to be known as Belgrave Hall, were laid on Monday week by Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P.

At the anniversary of the Lozells-street Mission Hall, Birmingham, begun about eighteen years ago by two voluntary workers and still carried on by them, it was shown that much good work is being done, with considerable encouragement.

Sister Lucy Hawken, the Wesley deaconess who has been assisting in the nursing of Methodist sufferers from typhoid at Maidstone, is herself laid low by the disease, and is a patient in the West Kent Hospital. She has received a medal containing her name and inscription, in recognition of services rendered in the campaign.

The friends of City-road Chapel are losing no opportunity of realising the conditional promise of £5000 for the endowment of Wesley's House, and for the perpetual maintenance of the work at the chapel. Already a goodly number of promises have been received towards the £2500 needed for fitting up the house as a residence for Christian workers, and as a museum of Wesley relics.

The United Methodist College in Victoria Park, Manchester, is rapidly approaching completion, and will, it is anticipated, be ready for occupation about Easter. Two thousand pounds has still to be raised to secure the conditional offer of Mr. Alderman Duckworth, M.P., to bear the cost of the new wing (£3,000) if the £20,000 fund raised by him is invested as an endowment, the floating debt cleared off, and the building opened free of debt.

Presbyterian.

Principal Dykes has been laid aside for three weeks by a slight attack of influenza.

Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, of Ealing, has been ordered absolute rest, and has left for Cannes.

Rev. Dr. Mathews, of the Pan-Presbyterian Alliance, has returned from attending officially the Nestorian Synod in Southern Persia.

Rev. John McNeill will, it is expected, begin his London mission by preaching in Marylebone Presbyterian Church on Sunday, January 16.

Anniversary services have been held at St. Andrew's, Kilburn. The report shows a variety of good works both congregational and at the Granville-road Mission.

Rev. George Hanson, of Rathgar, Dublin, has decided to accept the call to Marylebone. He belongs to the fourth generation of a family of Presbyterian ministers. As he is an eloquent preacher, it is expected that he will be able to keep together the large and important congregation which was attracted to Marylebone by Dr. Pentecost and his gifted predecessor, Dr. Donald Fraser.

Calls.—Rev. T. G. Molyneux, to Vauxhall-road, Liverpool; Rev. T. Radcliff Barnett, to Broughton-place U.P. Church, Edinburgh, as assistant; Rev. R. K. Hanna, to White Abey; Rev. P. Macdonald, of Stornoway, to Kirkhill, Inverness.

Resignation.—Rev. W. D. Barry, of Jerusalem Chapel, Cardiff.

Fallen Asleep.

At Stratford-on-Avon, on 11th inst., Mrs. Sarah Bailey, aged seventy-six, widow of Rev. G. Bailey, and mother of Revs. Amos and G. T. Bailey.—At Ashford, Mr. Jonas Sulston, a valued S.S. superintendent.—At Northampton, Miss Ellen Gray, aged eighty-four, a true and simple follower of Christ.—At Cullompton, Mrs. Horne, beloved wife of the Baptist minister.—At Hampstead, Mr. T. Burnett, a generous supporter of Christian work.—At Wootton Bassett, on 4th inst., Mr. G. Watts, one of the oldest Primitive Methodist leaders, and for forty-nine years a preacher of the Gospel.—At Luddenden Dean, Hebden Bridge, Mr. Thomas Midgley, known far and near as one of the oldest local preachers in Northern Methodism.—At Hamilton, Londonderry, Mr. W. Latimer, a hard-working evangelist.—At Bungay, on 6th inst., Mr. Samuel Colborne, a very active helper and leader in Christian work.—At Northampton, Mr. John Lay, aged ninety, for many years a leader in work at Grafton-square.—At Kemnay, Aberdeen, Rev. George Peter, one of the oldest pre-Disruption ministers.—At Aberdeen, on 13th inst., Rev. Dr. John Fyfe, Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University.—At Dublin, Rev. Henry G. Carroll, for forty-nine years rector of Glasnevin, an eminent classical scholar, who spent several hours of every day for almost fifty years in the study of the Scriptures in their original tongues, aged seventy-nine years.—At Stannary House, Stainland, on 18th inst., Mr. Edward Walker, aged seventy-three, a prominent Wesleyan leader and preacher.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, December 20, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

OWING to the intervention of the Christmas holidays we have been obliged to hold over a number of communications, with which we hope to deal in our next and following issues.

The tendency of most people in looking back at the lapse of another year of their life, is to dwell mainly on their trials and losses and bereavements. This is to miss the most precious lessons of the past. The right spirit is that of the Psalmist, "They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness" (cxlv. 7). If in such a mood a backward glance is sent along the months, the least fortunate will recognise a Divine hand in their life ; they will realise their many deliverances and rescues from sin and trouble ; and the way will be bright with recollections of mercy. We find in the fields of memory, as elsewhere, what we seek. If we look for signs of the goodness and love that have followed us all the days of our life, we shall not fail to find abundant proofs of it. This is the hallowing of memory.

The past is rescued from oblivion by memory ; the future is laid hold of by hope—"By hope are ye saved." Our outlook into the unknown future is as much governed by our habitual mood as are our recollections. The despondent fill it with shapes and fears of dread, and go forward to meet imaginary troubles as though they had the reality of assured facts. The hopeful march on with courage and resourcefulness, and often accomplish great things because of their confidence that all will come right. We should cherish this buoyant mood, basing our expectations of good on the assurance that as God has hitherto been with us, so He will continue to be. The Bible is filled with the future, and is always on the side of optimism, because it proclaims the doctrine of Divine providence and love. Those who rest their faith on the Book have no cause to be despondent as regards their own future, or the future of the world, for both are in the hands of the Most High.

While we have been celebrating the reign of the Prince of Peace throughout the world, and all Christian countries are still ringing with anthems of goodwill, we are reminded by stern facts that his kingdom has yet to dawn among the nations. Might is still largely Right in the world. Racial differences and animosities have lately been rather accentuated than allayed. Bristling armaments, huge standing armies, mutual jealousies, and a policy of selfish aggrandisement, make the whole diplomatic world a hotbed of conflicting interests. The Christian Church alone stands out clear and steadfast as a witness to the principles of which the angels sang long ago. And yet we know that the future is with us, and that the only real hope of the world is in the victory of the Son of Man. "Fear not, little flock ; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."

The old year is closing amid an ominous demonstration of naval power off the Chinese coast on the part of Russia and Germany. It began with an ostentatious flourish of trumpets on the part of the German Emperor, who sent some ironclads to demand "satisfaction" for the murder of certain missionaries ; but the real aim of the movement is showing itself to be anything but spiritual in character. The situation is full of explosive possibilities, and it is impossible to say to what this strange action on the part of the chief European Powers may lead. The lust of empire is the dominant force in Europe just now, and the cynical spirit beneath the amenities of diplomacy clearly shows through the thin veil of pietism that overlays it. The spectacle is not an elevating one, and it may have disastrous consequences nearer home than China.

Progress is never uniform, but has many back eddies in its current ; and the story of 1897 is by no means one of steady onward movement either at home or abroad. The Jubilee celebrations marked the high-water mark of unity and patriotic feeling, and the widespread prosperity of the country has been unquestionable. But no sooner were the rejoicings over the completion of Her Majesty's sixtieth year of reign passed than the bitter engineering strike arose, which still holds on its course with unabated hostility. Since then the hope of any effective arbitration treaty with America has vanished ; the disastrous Greek and Turkish war complicated the Eastern question ; the diplomatic position of this country has become increasingly isolated ; and we have been plunged into a tedious and useless war with the hill tribes of India. The air is just now peculiarly dark and lowering. It will be well for us to remember at this hour that our sufficiency is of God and not of man, and to use our threatened and actual troubles as means of humble self-discipline.

The return of our troops from the inclement Afghan Mountains, and the temporary cessation of hostilities, afford an opportunity for staying this useless and deadly war on the Indian frontier. There seems to be a general feeling against it, and the conscience of the nation is uneasy. We do not like to impose the cost of it upon a famine and plague stricken country, and that means that the British taxpayer must meet it. Unwillingness to be mulcted in his pocket, and forced in his conscience, ought to make the resumption of fighting an impossible thing. But the country must speak out. Is it too engrossed in money-making, in sports, and in home affairs to give any time to the great question of how we are ruling a population seven times larger than our own? If it will not think voluntarily it may one day have to do so under the pressure of necessity.

The occupation of Egypt by Britain has many debatable aspects, but it is cheering to find emphatic testimony to the blessings of British rule in that unfortunate country during the last 15 years from so impartial a quarter as the North American Review. Mr. Penfold, late American diplomatic agent in that country, says :—

> There is no better example of economical progress, through administrative reform, than is presented by Egypt under British rule. Security is assured to person and property, slavery has been legally abolished, official corruption is almost unknown, forced labour for public works is no longer permitted, and native courts have now more than a semblance of justice. Hygienic matters have been so carefully looked after that the population has increased from seven to nine millions in a decade or more. Land taxes have been lowered and equalised, and are systematically collected, and scientific irrigation is so generally employed that the cultivable area has been considerably extended. Egypt was probably never so prosperous as at the present time.

This is a good record, and the appreciation is the more valuable as coming from one who confesses that he is not an Anglomaniac.

According to Dr. Berry, who has just returned from his mission to America on behalf (among other things) of the cause of international arbitration, there is not much prospect that the treaty with this country will pass through Congress this session. At the same time, every responsible and educated American is as much in favour of the principle as is the whole British nation, the question dividing us being the binding character and extent of this particular treaty. As opinion differs on this point, it will be probably best to wait until the judgment of the American people ripens, rather than to secure an imperfect and unworkable treaty just now. There is clearly much educative work to be done before the matter is ready for settlement, and not a little softening of international prejudices must take place among the political leaders in the States. In spite of the recent set-back, Dr. Berry believes that the wildest of Governments, whether in Downing-street or Washington, could not drag the two nations into war.

All who are acquainted with work in the foreign field will have heard of cases in which native Christian workers have left established organisations, and have appealed for funds wherewith to prosecute enterprises on their own account, and without responsible control or oversight. Impressed with serious evils arising from this growing practice, the Madras Missionary Conference and other influential Christians in India have addressed a circular to the Churches of Great Britain, Australasia, and America, particularly with reference to the actions of persons who have been workers in South India and Ceylon.

With reference to the independent undertakings of such, it is pointed out that they are usually small when compared with the purposes set forth in the printed appeals. In order to check the evils complained of, benevolent people are recommended, before contributing money, to satisfy themselves that the applicants are the accredited agents of a responsible committee of persons residing in the neighbourhood of the work, also that a duly audited balance sheet is regularly issued showing that funds are applied to the specific objects for which they were given. The circular states, with excellent reason, that no really good cause will suffer by the exercise of these and other precautions, as those who plead for such causes will have no difficulty in giving the guarantees required.

The distinguished French Protestant divine M. Sabatier, recently delivered a notable address at Stockholm, in which he thus describes the social results of the methods pursued by the Roman Church in France in endeavouring to re-establish the principle of church authority :—

Between sacred and profane, between layman and cleric, an impossible gulf has yawned. They no longer exchange rational arguments; it is mockery on the one side and anathema on the other. The result has been supremely disastrous to the religious sentiment. Gambetta's motto, "Clericalism is the Enemy," has become the watchword of the Republic, and, unfortunately, by clericalism the masses mean religion. In the eyes of numbers, to pray and to believe in God is to be "clerical." Even neutrality is not permitted. In certain circles it is considered to be the mark of a good Republican to declaim against priests and against God.

A more eloquent commentary on the mischief wrought by priestly claims it would be hard to conceive. Where the established form of religion directly provokes atheistic tendencies among the community it is clear there must be something radically rotten in the system. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

A house-to-house visitation made at Bolton has brought to light some sad and some encouraging facts. It has shown that the religious accommodation of the town is 22,000 sittings less than the need. The Roman Catholic Dean O'Brien warned his people against the visitation as "an impertinent intrusion." At least 6500 families admitted that they seldom or never went to a place of worship ; reckoning five persons to a family, this gives 32,500 persons who are regularly absent from public worship ; of course only 62 per cent. of these could attend if they wished. Of the families visited only fifty-four avowed themselves as being opposed to Christianity, and most of these were Spiritualists—a remarkable testimony to the deadening influences on heart and conscience of a system which exists to gratify the curiosity. Only eight avowed themselves as sceptics ; Bradlaughism is dead. Some 2500 persons were engaged in Sunday work, which is mostly avoidable ; 480 small shops are open on Sunday. Drink comes in with its usual sad tale, and is a great cause of Sabbath desecration.

Our honoured friend and brother, Mr. George Müller wishes it to be widely known that he has vacancies for a number of orphan boys and girls at his Orphan Houses, Ashley Down, Bristol. Will Christian workers bear this in mind in their labour among the poor? It would be wise in helping children bereaved of both parents to send them there instead of to other institutions, and thus leave room in the latter for the reception of other cases which would not be eligible for the Bristol Houses.

The following from the Daily Telegraph is a striking admission :—

Unsatisfactory and disappointing though it must be, it would seem to be beyond denial that compulsory education has not done as much as was expected towards improving the morals of the children of the lower classes. It would appear as though the Board School grindstone, while it develops the scholarly abilities of those who are disposed to be well-behaved, has the disastrous effect of putting a prematurely keen edge on the wit of youngsters with whose cleverness, shrewd cunning and a perverse inclination to prefer wrong to right is inextricably blended. This, unfortunately, receives affirmation almost daily at the police-courts.

Little by little the principle for which we have always contended is proving itself, namely, that the heart as well as the head must be reached to secure any lasting "moral improvement." Some of the most noted criminals have been men of high intelligence and education ; and Mr. Fegan is quite right, as he urged in the article which we published last week, that the Christianising influence of the old Ragged Schools did more to improve the manners and minds of rough urchins, than the most elaborate system of education will ever do.

The same is true of the Ragged School Union and similar agencies to-day, which have the same spirit and do the same work. There is simply no limit to the possibilities of such effort. The poor children multiply faster than the workers ; the demands outrun the resources. The present ragged schools are crowded out with these street children, who look tidy because they have been cared for, washed and cleansed, and are under Christian influence and instruction. It is a question of men and means. Starve out these missions, and the host of London's hooligans will speedily increase.

The Head-Masters' Conference last week gave prominence to the question of the abuse of athletics in our public schools. Finally, after an interesting discussion, they passed the following resolution :—

While fully recognising the value of athletic sports in school-training, this conference earnestly deprecates the increasing importance and excessive publicity that are now accorded to them.

It is a good sign that our educational leaders are really waking up to the magnitude of the issues involved in this question. The remedy is largely in their own hands. The present place accorded to athletic sports in school curriculums is to a great extent the fruit of a foolish competition on the part of the masters with a view to advertising their own institutions—a vice into which many private schools have also fallen. It will need courage and self-denial to turn back the tide which has been flowing so strong, to the great debasement of education among the upper and middle classes. In this reform, parents should loyally assist by sending their boys resolutely to schools where their intellectual and moral interests will be kept in their true place of pre-eminence.

The result so far of the subscriptions and donations to the Prince of Wales's Hospital Fund has been announced as amounting to £187,000, of which £20,000 is annual subscriptions, and £1500 is interest on £99,000 already invested. It is hoped that an additional £40,000 will be in hand by the end of the year from the sale of hospital stamps. The Prince has expressed himself as very desirous to increase the permanent income of the Fund, and to apply it with care and foresight to the most needy and worthy objects. The outcome of the endeavour is far below first intention and anticipations, but this is easily accounted for by the number of Jubilee appeals, and the incidence of the Indian Famine Fund, which diverted a large amount of available money. One of the reflections, indeed, suggested by the experiences of the Jubilee year is that extra and special appeals invariably affect the flow of generosity towards the ordinary charitable institutions, many of which have suffered severely this year.

The question presses more and more—what can be done to arrest the spread of the gambling propensity among the young? It is clearly no use appealing to many of the parents, for they are seized with the same infatuation, and the little ones learn the vice from their elders. One source of the trouble, among the poor at least, may be found in the sense of deadly monotony which afflicts their lives. They crave some excitement, that they may get out of themselves and their squalid surroundings, and this is the direction in which they seek relief. The result is a demoralisation and ever-increasing poverty that is appalling to think of. A correspondent suggests the obtaining in Sunday schools of pledges against betting ; but whether or not this course is adopted, it would surely be wise to urge elder scholars and members of young people's societies to eschew a habit which is at once in flagrant violation of the eighth and tenth commandments, and involves dishonour to the entire moral code.

Young persons who think it is the easiest thing in the world for anyone possessing a certain talent to shine in the use of it had better notice the price paid by Spurgeon to be a good and acceptable, as well as a useful, preacher. He apprenticed himself to a hard, exacting master—himself—when he was only a lad, and the terms were rigorously enforced. A lad who would prepare for the pulpit as carefully as he did, who read and meditated and prayed, who assimilated his mental and spiritual food, who walked for miles through muddy fields on dark nights in order to minister to a few humble folks in a poor chapel, was destined to succeed. A young minister who would begin on £45 a year, and consent to have his salary made out by presents in kind, was worthy of success. It was his absolute consecration, which abhorred idleness, slovenliness, and love of ease, that caused him to labour with all his heart, and soul, and mind, and strength.

Mr. Clement Scott, than whom no one is better qualified to speak of the effects of the stage upon character and morals, has communicated to an interviewer a sweeping condemnation of the modern theatre. After thirty-seven years' experience, he affirms :

There is no school on earth so bad for the formation of character, or that so readily, so quickly, and so inevitably draws out all that is worst in man or woman, as the stage.

He adds further that it is practically impossible for a woman to remain pure in the profession. This puts a terrible responsibility on Christians who contribute to the maintenance of the theatre. The moral deterioration of our sisters is a high cost at which to take amusement.

We cut the following extract from a review of Dr. Parker's booklet on gambling, which appeared in the Methodist Times :—

We ourselves on one occasion, on two days in succession, placed a request for prayer into the basket at a religious convention, asking for prayer that God would awaken the conscience of the nation on the question of gambling and of those commercial transactions which are of the nature of gambling ; but the leader of the meeting on both days suppressed the latter part of the request! It is practical hypocrisy to speak with severity of the petty sin of an occasional bet, and to sanction systems of business by means of which gambling is carried on to the tune of hundreds of thousands of pounds.

The leader of that convention may now reflect on what he gained by suppressing this request for prayer. He did not gain secrecy ; for now the thing is sent all over the world.

The book, "Our Churches, and Why we Belong to Them" (Service and Paton), to which we recently called attention, suggests two reflections. First, that many of the historical reasons that led to the formation of distinct bodies of Christians in days gone by have lost their significance, and no longer justify the continuance of so many separate communities of believers, which entails a vast waste of energy and resources ; and, secondly, the spirit shown by these writers proves that the times are favourable for the closer rapprochement of the churches to one another.

The New Hebrides Mission Ship.—Recently, in the Presbyterian General Assembly of Victoria, the relative advantages of a mission ship, and the encouragement of commercial communication with the islands, were warmly discussed. In the result, a motion, asking the Assembly to approve of a new Dayspring being procured, was carried by a majority of one—fifty-nine votes being given for and fifty-eight against the proposition. Though this decision may not lead to the abandonment of the project, it is likely to cause some delay in its realisation.

The Love of Christ.

By Mr. CHAS. COOK.

I. Infinite in its Measure.—In John xv. 9 our Lord says, "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." Not "as the Father loves you," but as God the Father hath loved God the Son, "so"—in that infinite measure—"have I loved you." Set side by side two things wondrous in their contrasts, but yet finite. A grain of sand—place it in imagination beside this planet. How great the contrast! One drop of water—compare it with the five oceans. How gigantic the difference! Yet are these all finite.

But contrast the finite with the infinite—a moment of time with eternity; the area covered by the largest cathedral with boundless illimitable space—these figures better convey the truth that Christ hath loved his people with an infinite love.

II. Suitable in its Choice.—Paul says, "He loved me and gave himself for me," and Paul considered himself the "chief of sinners." William Tell said to his wife,

> Did I not love thee from out the maids of Uri
> Less for thy beauty than that thy soul
> Thy beauty overmatched.

His disciples have no outward beauty, nor moral worth, yet hath He loved them. Some persons have married and found they were not mated; some have loved for outward beauty, but when that paled the love also waned. There is no moral beauty to attract Him toward us. Christ does not love his people because they are comely; but He loved us while yet in our sins, and it is his province to make us comely. He does not choose us because we are holy; but in order to make us so.

Forty years ago an English nobleman wooed and won a rustic village maiden; he had her educated abroad, and in due time she became the Countess of S——, and was thus fitted to grace the position she was called to occupy. She was loved while in her lowly station, uncultured and unlettered; and because of the love which he bore her fitness followed as a consequence through his desire and means. Salvation is of grace, not merit. Christ stooped to raise us to his Throne. "He lifteth the beggar from the dunghill, to set him among princes, and to make him to inherit the throne of glory"; but, as Paul puts it, "We are his workmanship." He will make us, once black as sin, to shine in all the refulgence of Himself, in "that day when He shall make up his jewels."

III. The Love of Christ is Perfect in its Quality.—I have seen a picture describing a wreck—the heavens black, the sea engulfing an ill-fated ship—a poor woman sinking beneath the waves, but, holding up her hands, she bears up her babe. Beneath the picture is the title, "My child, my child!"—a true picture of pure maternal love, self forgotten, only the loved one thought of. So in the text just quoted, "He loved me and gave Himself for me."

Cyrus asked his captive, the Prince of Armenia, "And what will you do to save your wife from captivity?" "Let her but go free and I am willing to die." Struck by his nobility, Cyrus gave them both their liberty. Journeying homeward, the husband descanted on the good looks of the monarch whose captives they had been, and said to his wife, "Was not the king handsome?" "I do not know," she answered. "I was not looking at him; I had no eyes but for the man who was willing to die that I might live." Would that every sanctified one could as truly say this of Christ, who "loved the Church, and gave Himself for it."

UNSAVED READER,

turn thine eyes to Christ; his blood was shed for thee. God Incarnate, the Son of God, was made Son of Man for thee, that thou, a sinful son of man, might be made a son of God. Jacob loved Rachel, and said to Laban, "I will serve thee seven years for her"; but when those years had expired he had to serve yet other seven years. "And they seemed unto him but a few days for the love he had to her." So with "Jesus, lover of" our souls, who served for us those three-and-thirty years, who for the joy set before Him endured the cross, despising the shame.

> He and I in that bright glory
> One deep joy shall share.
> Mine to be for ever with Him,
> His that I am there.

IV. Unchanging in its Character.—Having "loved his own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." Henry the Eighth loved (?) his wives one after the other, but sent them to Tower Hill that their heads might roll in the sawdust. Not in such fashion does Christ love his bride. She may turn aside to other lovers. Alas! many backsliders have done so, and found their backslidings reprove them. "It is an evil and a bitter thing to forsake the Lord our God"; yet Christ's love is unchangeable. He has loved us with an everlasting love, and says, "Only acknowledge thy transgressions." "I will heal their backslidings; I will love them freely."

WEARY, TROUBLED BACKSLIDER, tired of thy wandering and thy failures, thou hast turned from thy Lord; look away to Christ, the changeless One, look to Jesus until, bewailing thine own turning away from Him, thou mayest sing:—

> But Thou hast never turned from me,
> Since Thou my love didst gain;
> And when I've left thy blessed self,
> Thou'st won me back again.

In the early days of the gold fever in California, a wealthy man left England, being engaged to a lovely lady. Fortune favoured him, and, besides being concerned in the gold diggings, he embarked in other business schemes; but fortune's wheel rolled at last in the wrong direction, and he lost all he had gained, and became comparatively a poor man. He sent back by the next mail a few lines releasing the lady from her engagement.

Some weeks previously he had sent her a nugget of gold as a souvenir. On receipt of the letter she smiled; a few days later the nugget was changed into a plain circlet of gold, and with it she sent him simply the passage from Ruth: "Entreat me not to leave thee; for whither thou goest I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried; the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

Here in a qualified sense was a changeless love, but Christ's love can never know any change. With Him there is no variableness nor shadow of turning.

> We change; He changes not—
> No change Jehovah knows.

Loved before time was, loved while time is, and loved when time shall cease to be, by Him who says, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love."

God's Poor.

IN the cold weather now coming upon us, it is well to remember the multitudes of poor in our great cities, hundreds of whom are in this sad state through no fault of their own. Let us learn how much the Lord thinks of the poor.

I. He considereth them (Psa. xli. 1).—The margin has it "the weak and sickly." How many are there who, when they are asked to give, do so in haste, instead of praying over the matter and considering those needy cases! If many who give would also, as time and opportunity permit, themselves seek out the weak and sickly, how often would they prove the truth of that word, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

II. "He prepares food for them" (Psa. lxviii. 10) Here again we are reminded of the Divine forethought. "He prepares." When the Lord wanted to teach Jonah a lesson of obedience, he had four things prepared; and he prepares food for the poor. In New Testament times the Church laid up in store for the first day of the week, when the collection was made for the poor and other purposes. Let God's people take time not only to consider the poor, but also to prepare for trying times of want.

III. "He heareth the poor" (Psa. lxix. 33).—How often in visiting does one get more than one gives. The prayer of the poor man is so real: he prays in the Holy Ghost, he asks for the thing he feels he needs; this is true prayer, though it may not in all cases be good English.

IV. "He shall deliver him" (Psa. lxxviii. 33).—In the millennial kingdom the poor will be his special care. The oppressor will be put down. In that day there will be no grinding the poor seamstress to make a dozen garments for a few pence. Oh, the cry that goes up from thousands of garret-rooms day and night in this great city! Our prayers ought to be continuous, as we see and know of the dire distress almost at our own doors.

V. He calls upon men to defend and deliver the poor and needy (Psa. lxxxii. 3, 4).—Money is a great curse or a great blessing. The forces of evil or of good are greatly accelerated by money. Self-love and covetousness are joint characteristics of the last days (1 Tim. iii. 2). Let all hear the praise of the Lord in this, that we defend and seek to deliver the poor.

VI. He setteth the poor on high (Psa. cvii. 41).—What a contrast to the present state of things. What multitudes of godly poor live, in patience and much grace, on scanty fare, and for the most part are content and happy. How different are the ways of God and the ways of men! In a little while, when the King shall come in his glory, then those will be near Him who are rich in faith, not, of course, excluding those who may have riches and also the faith, and wisdom to know how to use them.

VII. I will satisfy her poor with bread (Psa. cxxxii. 15).—The foregoing texts have touched the responsibility of the rich towards the poor; this one is full of decided encouragement to the poor themselves. He will satisfy. This is always the way with the Lord. Remember the ravens—bread and flesh in the morning and evening. He will send it. The poor shall be satisfied. He will do it. Who will be his messengers? Let me quote three more Scriptures regarding the poor: The right of the poor (Psa. cxl. 12). God hath chosen the poor (James ii. 5) Christ Himself was poor (Ps. xl. 17). There are many who are looking to the Lord for special help in this cold wintry season; many who will not ask of man. How wise and pleasant it will be if the many thousands of those who have means, and who are in the habit of giving through well-known channels, will, in addition to all this, go themselves into scenes of poverty, and tender the so-much needed help personally. What blessing it will bring to both giver and receiver!

More About my Bible.

BY MR. B. J. WILLATS.

SOME months ago a paper of mine appeared in The Christian under the heading "My Bible." For some time afterwards I continued to receive letters from all parts of the world on the subject of Bible study. This, at least, made manifest into what out-of-the-way places The Christian travels. I have been much gratified by the testimony of very many who have written to me speaking of the value of that paper, amongst others such a venerable Bible student as Mr. George Müller, of Bristol. I have thus been led to add the following to my former statement, which I hope may induce all Christians who may chance to read these lines to become hearty lovers of our dear English Bible.

Mr. D. L. Moody has recently remarked as a singular fact, that so few Christians, otherwise well educated, know much of the Bible. He says that he can secure a hundred men who can teach Latin and Greek well, where he can find but one who can teach the Bible. This, too, has been my own experience. Surely it is a very sad one.

Many of my correspondents have asked me to state the best books to read, and the best men to hear, for the furtherance of their knowledge and interest in the blessed Book. Let me briefly give my own experience, in the hope that I may incite others to share with me the extreme joy and strength which this study gives.

I always read the daily papers and the current magazines in order to note God's working in the history of men here and now, and to gather illustrations for my village preaching. Then I frequently read the following: Baxter's "Reformed Pastor," Bunyan's "Pilgrim" and his "Holy War," Bishop Hall's "Contemplations," Gurnall's "Complete Armour," "Romaine on Faith," etc.

Of sermons, I find those by the following very helpful and inspiring: F. W. Robertson, Phillips Brooks, Henry Ward Beecher, Dr. Maclaren, McCheyne, and C. H. Spurgeon; also Dr. Parker's Bible.

I endeavour to read one of Mr. Spurgeon's sermons every week. They are always full of sound common sense, manly earnestness, and spiritual inspiration. I have met with Christian teachers in many parts of the world who have told me the same thing in reference to the sermons of C. H. Spurgeon. I must also mention Dr. Vaughan's book on "The Revelation." But, after all, I find the very BEST BOOK TO READ IS THE BIBLE ITSELF.

In going for a quiet holiday I have found it deeply interesting and beyond measure inspiring to take such histories as that of Abraham, Jacob, Moses, Job, David, and others, and just live with them in their own lives, growing into living sympathy with their aims and thoughts and their yearnings after God. In this way my holiday haunts have become sacred spots, and I love to revisit them again and again, and recall the bygone scenes, with their pathos and inspiration. This plan has made my vacations a thorough change, and has been infinitely better than carrying my town burdens with me during my holidays. Thus I have lived for days together in company with sometimes in the Doone valley, on the Malvern Hills, or on the Downs, and in the villages of the Isle of Wight. I can visit many a spot made for ever special and sacred to me, by some event in the history of these far-off lives becoming suddenly vivid to my imagination by some local circumstance, until the whole country around has become illumined with an Eastern light, a tender pathos, and the very presence and power of the Unseen.

MEN AND WOMEN OF BYGONE AGES,

In my recent visit to Jamaica, among the Blue Mountains, I have lived over again many of the Bible scenes, until whether it was the West Indies or Palestine I have scarce been able to determine.

In this way I have become saturated with the lessons of Bible truth until they have become part and parcel of my very self.

Then I have also found how powerful is the teaching of the Book to guide and cheer and DOMINATE THE LIFE.

I was once told by a Christian widow lady in the West Indies that she found that simply reading the book of Proverbs at morning prayers, when her half-dozen servants were present, had most visible and salutary effect on their conduct. Such testimony to the character-making value of the Book is manifest to all experienced believers.

Then for seasons of affliction, there is no comparison possible between any of our prose or verse writers and the Bible itself. I know what I am talking about, for during the past four years I have been called to pass through that most unutterable agony of trial—the separation by bereavement of the wife of my youth, whom I loved next to my adorable Saviour. Many a time, literally as well as figuratively, I have on the very words of Jesus as contained in so many parts of the four Gospels.

There has been nothing beneath the sun comparable for comfort, guidance, and inspiration with the unspeakably blessed Book of God. With that as our inheritance we need fear no evil and no earthly trial.

As to living teachers and preachers, I may say that for the past thirty years (I am now fifty-six) I have held it true that no one section of the Christian Church, least of all any one man, holds all the truth. I go to hear all the good and earnest men I can, of every denomination, and of none, and I gather light from all of them, more or less. I shall ever be thankful that for five years of my early manhood I was schooled largely by the Plymouth Brethren, and by my own beloved and gifted mother, who knew her Bible better than any person I have ever met.

To any humble-minded lover of Jesus I would make my last remark—it is this. If you want a stimulus to live a healthy, robust Christian life, cultivate private prayer daily, reading the Word of God, visitation, and preaching work amongst the poor.

If we honour the Master by labouring to tell others of his love, sure am I that He will honour us by giving us a spiritually rich and joyous life.

Hanwell, Middlesex.

In the Arctic Regions.—Letters are only received at rare intervals from the Arctic Mission station of the C.M.S. at Cumberland Sound, and it is only quite recently that Mr. Sampson's letter describing his work last year has arrived. He writes: "On Christmas Eve I gave a lantern exhibition to about eighty souls, lasting for two-and-a-half hours. At the close I was completely done up, owing to the intense heat and the dreadful stench arising from the oily persons of the Eskimo present and the nature of their clothes – all undressed furs." At another station he had for church and school a house in which the dogs were fed. It was 5ft. 6in. from floor to ceiling, the walls being made of barrels and the floor and seats of hard snow. He had to stand over two smoking Eskimo lamps. "I am glad to say we were packed like sardines," he writes, "and had a splendid time singing hymns and reading the Gospel according to St. Luke."

Looking Forward.

BY DR. BALGARNIE.

ALTHOUGH our lives are measured by days rather than by months and years, we somehow make more of our anniversaries than of the sun risings and settings of our days of grace. Yet it is by fidelity in that which is least that we are enabled, through God's blessing, to achieve that which is much.

Each day of the Christian Year has its record of profit or loss to our Master, and each day should see something done by each of us for Christ. Has He not done something each day for us? Should the Lord "let us alone this year also," and renew to us our lease of life for 1898, let each resolve to fill up our daily record by something done, said, or given, in the interests and service of Him by whose mediation we are spared. Three hundred and sixty-five littles will amount to much when this year has passed into history.

The Hebrews have a proverb: "Greater is he who causeth a thing to be done than he who doeth it himself" (which they expressed by the change of a single letter of the verb). How many will our example stimulate? How many will our words "provoke to love and good works"? If the angels rejoice more over the conversion of some than others, they doubtless rejoice greatly over that of the workers. Those who have been forgiven much love much, and that not in the word only but in deed and in truth. "Forward, then, ye faithful!"

"Just as I Am."

IN a recent issue of The Record, Rev. Dr. Moule told the story of this well-known hymn, as the facts had been given him by Mrs. Synge, niece of the authoress. As many inaccurate accounts have gained currency, we give a summary of this authentic statement:—

The daughter of a gentleman living at Clapham and Brighton, Charlotte Elliott was born in 1789, and died in 1871. From the first her life training was such as would be given in a home ruled by the noblest evangelical faith, and alive with mental interests and power. In the common sense of the words, she was never "in the world" at all, though there was a time, at Clapham, when she entered a good deal, and with the utmost pleasure, into literary society. She was often an invalid; and in one such time of heaviness she was almost overwhelmed with a conviction of sin, and well-nigh despaired of salvation. Then Cæsar Malan crossed her path, and was made the messenger of God to her.

Her brother, Rev. H. V. Elliott, having conceived the plan of a school at Brighton to give, at nominal cost, a high education to the daughters of the poorer clergy, a bazaar was held in 1834 to raise the needful funds. Through physical weakness Charlotte was unable to take part in the enterprise, and she was distressed with thoughts of her apparent uselessness. Then it was that she rested her soul upon the grand certainties of the Gospel, and was given the victory over her emotions and fears. She dwelt upon her Lord, his power, his promise. Taking pen in hand, she deliberately wrote, for her own comfort, the "formulæ of her faith." Her heart always tended to express its depths in verse, and so she restated the Gospel of pardon, peace, and heaven. There, then, always, not only at some past moment, but "even now" she was accepted in the Beloved—"Just as I am."

As the day wore on her sister-in-law, Mrs. Elliott, looked in, and having read the hymn asked for a copy. Then the lines stole out of the quiet room into the world, where now for sixty years the hymn has been sowing and reaping, till a multitude whom only God can number have been blessed through its message. Through it the invalid believer has done, indeed, a work for her Lord—a work living and growing still, surely not to be completed till He comes again.

The Sin of Achan.

By Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN,
New Court Chapel, Tollington Park, N.

III.—IN ITS RELATION TO THE SINNER.

When I saw among the spoils a goodly Babylonish garment, and two hundred shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold of fifty shekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them; and behold, they are hid in the earth in the midst of my tent, and the silver under it.—Joshua vii. 21.

ACHAN, standing before Joshua, in the presence of the assembled crowds of Israel, with the strong white light of God beating down upon his soul, and when he is no longer able to conceal his wrong-doing, tells in stammering accents, yet with regular and marvellous precision, the true story of his transgression—"I saw, I coveted, I took." Those three words reveal

THE PROGRESSION OF HIS SIN.

Let us recall the awfully solemn occupation of that day upon which he saw the garment, the shekels, and the wedge. God's hosts were doing his work of judgment upon an absolutely corrupt city. Strange as it may seem in these days of God's gentler dealings with men, they were fulfilling to the letter the words of the Divine commandment, as they destroyed not only the whole of the inhabitants of that place but all its wealth, except the gold and silver sacred to the service of the house of God. In the midst of it all one of the soldiers of Israel saw.

Probably thousands of other men saw, but not as he did. It was in his eyes a pity that so goodly a garment should be destroyed. Moreover, he admired it. Then followed desire to possess it, and this in violation of God's law. The destruction commanded to be wrought at Jericho was no mere military manifesto of the moment. In Deut. vii. 16 is a statement of the law, requiring execution of God's judgment to the letter. In face of this law Achan coveted, and so human will was set up against the Divine, while sensuous desire shut out the larger outlook from God's standpoint. How easily and naturally came the third stage, "I took. A garment devoted to destruction, shekels of silver, and a wedge of gold restricted to the service of the house of God—I took them. I hurried away, and hid them in my tent." By that sinful act Achan denied the principle of victory, the purpose for which Israel was made a nation, and the very movement of God, which is ever towards righteousness. He joined hands with the corruption of Philistia, and passed over to the ranks of the enemies of the Most High.

Deep down in the life of Achan there was something more than that of which he makes confession. Sin never begins when its opportunity is presented. The opportunity is simply the moment for revealing to the sinner what he is; and God is ever thrusting down into human life means of self-revelation. Other men than Achan have seen and have not sinned. How is it that this man, seeing, sinned? Because he alone among the sons of Israel was an atheist. Not that he was a man who would blatantly have denied the existence of God—an atheism of which there could be no fear then as there is none now; but he was one who did not believe God. From the lowest point of consideration—that of self-interest—we judge that had Achan really believed the word of God he never could have touched the accursed thing. Digging in his tent, he seeks to hide from Joshua his act of disobedience to God. Thus we may safely say that he does not believe in God; for it is inconceivable that believing in God he could have imagined that God could fail to see such hiding.

Here we touch the very depth of the sin. Achan did not believe in God, or he could not have disobeyed. Unbelief is always the specific root sin from which all others spring. A man's sin lies not in drunkenness, impurity or lying, but in unbelief. If a drunkard be brought to believe in God, straightway he comes into living, actual communion with Him, and quenches his thirst. A man who believes in God and lives within the region of law, quickly responds with "Amen" to every volition of the Divine will. Achan "saw," and believing neither in God nor in the word which He had spoken, he coveted and took.

Having spoken of this sin as Achan confessed it, and as to its true origin, we may now regard it in its essence. It was the sin of suicide. Man always destroys himself when he betakes himself outside the Divine government. One who carves his own path, makes his own fortune, does as he pleases, flings off restraint, is walking straight for the abyss of darkness.

There was still more in that sin. Achan was a traitor to the state. He who ignores the laws of social relationship and lives only for self, not only harms himself but of which he forms a part. Such treachery leaves no alternative but Achan's removal by death.

In rebellion against God, however, the sin goes far deeper. God's law was as tender as it was clear. It was to save Israel from the corrupting influences of the nation which God was destroying that He had forbidden his people to take of the accursed thing; hence the sin of Achan was a blow distinctly aimed at Divine government.

We need not dwell upon the form of judgment which fell upon the man; but under this second division of our subject we may look, first, at the Divine declaration that in that camp there was sin. There were something like 600,000 men who went up against Jericho; and to me, it is for evermore a wonderful testimony to the purity of the nation at that time that only one man was guilty of this sin. But one man had committed it, God knew it, and his love to the whole nation demanded instant judgment. The great declaration is made, "Israel hath sinned"; and Achan makes no confession. So that great nation, standing in the presence of God and of Joshua, resort to their usual method of casting the lot, believing as they then did that this was directly under Divine control. The lot falls upon the tribe of Judah, but no confession is made. The circle must narrow around the culprit, and the family of the Zerahites is taken. All Judah stands free from blame except the one family; and no confession is made. Under the Divine arrangement narrower still does the circle become, until the household of Zabdi is taken; but no confession is made. At last one man stands out from all others, and Achan is taken. Then he

MAKES CONFESSION BUT IT IS TOO LATE.

Had he made it half an hour earlier, he might have saved himself. God is ever slow to anger and plenteous in mercy; but the man who does not own his fault until he is detected and nailed to his sin never truly confesses at all. All the night following the defeat at Ai was available for Achan to reveal himself to Joshua, as the cause of the disaster; but the morning broke, the proclamation went forth, and his unbelief fostered the hope that he might be overlooked among the crowd.

Who shall say that his punishment was not just and well deserved? He has sinned against himself, against the slain in battle with their widows and orphans, against the nation which he has degraded, and against God. Who to-day will pity Achan? Surely his sin was of the deepest and darkest degree.

In gathering up the lessons derivable from this personal aspect of Achan's sin, I may say the season of the year now upon us was not in view when this series of subjects was undertaken; yet I know of no more fitting line of thought for the members of our Church than that which lies before us as this year of grace draws to a close. The Church of Jesus Christ is to-day God's witness to the world. of his righteousness, compassion, and power; and she lives, moves, and has her being amid things which are devoted unto destruction. The prime necessity of the case is, that she herself be clean from all that is of the world. The worst sins against God's humanity are those which have been committed in the line of progress. Achan was on God's side, outwardly and ostensibly, therefore his sin was greater than any committed by the men of Jericho. The sins, which we try to counterbalance by fresh activities for God, rob us of power and paralyse our efforts. A man outside the pale of Christ's Church, who rails against it, and tempts God by blasphemy in public assembly, works less harm than one who, numbered with us, is tainted by practical atheism, and hides in the tent of his own life something accursed of God.

SURROUNDED BY GOOD INTENTIONS,

The progression of sin to-day is the same as in the case of Achan—sight, desire, act. Young man, you have not "taken" yet. "No, but I have coveted." Well, thank God, you may go back upon your wrong-doing before you have actually "taken." Or, maybe, you have not coveted yet; but you have seen and you have pitied. Beware of thinking things doomed of God to destruction too precious to be lost. What the eye pities the heart soon covets; then quickly follows the act which ruins thy life and hinders the progress of God's kingdom. Behind sight, desire, and act may always be found the self-life uncrucified, and practical atheism or unbelief. Such is the attitude which leads man to covet, take, and be lost.

THY SECRET SIN! "WHAT SECRET SIN?"

I cannot say; but you know. It must eventually be declared. It has never been hidden from God. Do you remember the little room where, as a child, you saw upon the wall that text which you have laughed at since, "Thou God seest me"? It is none the less true because the snows of winter are upon thy brow, father; or because thou hast begun to face the conflict, young man. You have taught in the Sunday-school, preached the Gospel, perchance; but there was the secret sin. God lays his finger upon such sins, however "little"; and his decree is, that things done in secret shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops. There is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed, and we cannot evade God. There is no slum, alley, secret chamber, securely-locked drawer, into which God cannot see. He knows all secrets, and is perpetually working for the development, manifestation, and destruction of evil. The circles of Divine judgment must narrow around you until you stand confessed for what you are: if Judas, then a thief; if Achan, then a rebel.

It should also be

OUR ABIDING JOY THAT GOD KNOWS

all about us. How such a conviction comforts us in moments of sorrow, pain, and temptation. Then, is there any sin which He cannot forgive and cleanse? None but persistent and final unbelief. Remember that the extortion of truth by the righteous act of God works thee no blessing. Whether you are willing or not, a day will come when you must confess sin. Will you do so when God shuts you up to yourself, to your sin, to Himself, and when it is too late? Blessed be God, that time has not come. Go to your own secret place of communion with God, and say to Him, "Here is the sin which my friends know nothing about and which I have hidden in my heart. I saw, I coveted, I took; but, O God, put it away." God is full of compassion; and where such confession is made, it is the sin He will destroy and not the sinner.

The New Year will soon be upon us, and we do long that God may use us. "To thy tents, O Israel!" Unearth that hidden thing, not in the eye of friend or pastor, but under the eye of God, devote it to destruction, and so be at one with God. Then read Joshua viii. and see what follows. Ai shall be taken now, the hosts of Israel shall again become God's channel for his purposes, and shall move forward conquering and to conquer. It is the little hidden sins that stay the hosts of God: let us, by God's grace, put them away.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

SUNDAY, January 2.

"The breaker is gone up before them."—Micah ii. 13 (R. V.).

THE mind of the prophet conceives of the people as captives in a foreign city, surrounded by lofty walls and frowning gates. Like impassable barriers, these lie between them and liberty. There seems no hope of their being able to break forth, but all suddenly a Breaker appears, who, summoning them to follow, forces through the opposition of armed men and of mighty bulwarks. First the Lord, then their king, and then hosts of men.

No finer description could be imagined of the resurrection which we celebrate as the first day of every week recurs. Looking forth from heaven at the mystery of the resurrection, when the triumphant Lord stepped forth from the restraint of watch, and ward, and stone and demon hate, and the grim fortress of the grave, the angels might fitly have appropriated these words, "The Breaker is gone up" before his redeemed ones. See! they too are breaking forth, and passing on through the gate, their King passing on before them.

This is also true of every new era of time and novelty of circumstance. Circumstances, like prison walls, may confine us, but our Breaker is always preceding us, breaking down opposition and strong ramparts of apparently impassable difficulty, breaking down the suspicion and hatred of men, breaking down the mailed force of hell. Keep close beside Him, as the armour-bearer behind Jonathan. Let there be no perceptible interspace. Dare to say with the Psalmist, "My soul followeth hard after Thee." The iron gate of the city will open of its own accord, through which you shall pass into a large place.

MONDAY, January 3.

"I truly am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin."—Micah iii. 8.

Nothing needs more of the Spirit of God than the preaching which declares to men their sins. No one is so thoroughly hated as the candid friend. Just because conscience attests the truth of our utterances, the soul of the sinner resents our plain speaking. You may condemn sin generally as much as you like, but when your hand comes near the broken bone, or the diseased flesh, then there is at once a violent outcry. Nothing is more needed in the present day than particular preaching, the careful analysis of motive, the discrimination of shades of wrongdoing; but the ministry of John the Baptist is only possible to those who come in the spirit and power of Elijah.

We need power like that with which the Apostles gave witness to Jesus Christ. We need judgment to detect graver and lighter offences, and trace the connection between sin and its consequence. We need might to withstand the opposition we shall inevitably meet.

But all these may be had with the filling of the Holy Ghost. Do not be content with a few drops at the bottom of the bucket; ask to stand always beneath the flowing spring and be filled. The disciples were filled suddenly on the day of Pentecost, but they were being filled perpetually (Acts xiii. 52. Gr.) The fulness of God may be yours to the fullest limit of your capacity to receive. Open your heart wide as you will, and it shall be filled.

TUESDAY, January 4.

"In the latter days it shall come to pass," etc. —Micah iv. 1.

These words are repeated in Isa. ii. 2-4. The holy men that wrote the Bible lived upon the inspired words of their predecessors. Amid the dark night this promise of God shone like binary stars.

No doubt these words were fulfilled in the Gospel dispensation; and the century which is now so near its close has been remarkable for the exaltation of the Church before the eyes of the world, and by the confluence of many nations towards it. In very many cases peoples have flung away the religion of their ancestors, and have gathered within that Christian temple which has been built upon the foundations of Judaism. Out of Zion there has gone forth the law, and from Jerusalem the Word of the Lord. In Jesus the Jew, is the centre of the world's vision.

But the full accomplishment of these words waits behind the curtain that is so soon to be rent at the coming of our Lord. Then holy influences will proceed from the chosen people who shall have been led to recognise Christ as their Messiah. From these the Gospel shall go forth unto all the world. Beneath the hallowing influences of that age swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, and spears into pruning hooks; the cannon shall be as obsolete as the tomahawk; the explosives of war shall be stored in museums; whilst schools for training the art of war shall be used as missionary seminaries.

There shall be no war, because there shall be no fear. "None shall make them afraid." And there shall be no fear, because universal love shall reign towards God and man.

O, long expected day, begin!

WEDNESDAY, January 5.

"He shall stand, and shall feed his flock in the strength of the Lord ... and this Man shall be our Peace."—Micah v. 4.

He that comes from Bethlehem Ephratah, leaving a trail of light that conducts the eyes of all generations back to the little village, "the least amongst the thousands of Judah," is the Everlasting Jehovah, whose goings forth have been from of old. This is He that stands and feeds his flock, amid the passing centuries.

What majesty is his! He shall stand amid the swirling waves of change, the shifting quicksands of time, and the drifting cloud-wrack of revolution; erect, unchangeable, unmovable. And not He alone, but his flock which has gathered around Him out of the windy storm and tempest. No common majesty mantles that gentle form; it is the majesty of the Name of Jehovah, the glory that He had with the Father before the worlds were, the very nature of the Eternal.

What tenderness is his! He feeds his flock like a shepherd, and gathers the lambs in his arm. Though He is great to the ends of the earth, He is the Prince of Peace. He makes peace, does his work calmly and tenderly, lays the foundations of peace by yielding his life to the death of the Cross without resistance or complaint. "As a sheep, dumb before his shearers, so He openeth not his mouth."

What strength is his! Strong with the original strength of Deity, with the acquired strength of perfect obedience, with the strength that accrues from the successful prevalence over his foes. His strength is ours because He loves us perfectly, and it is the boast of the strong to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to seek its own.

Strong Son of God! Immortal love!

THURSDAY, January 6.

"He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"—Micah vi. 8.

The perfunctory sacrifices of lambs and rams, rivers of oil, and of tender children, were eagerly practised by the surrounding nations, such as the Moabites, but were abhorrent to God. What to Him is the outward rite without the holy purpose, the child's form of obeisance, apart from filial love! But He hath stepped out of the infinite to show us what He desires.

To do justly is to preserve the balance of strict equity: if an employer, treating workpeople with perfect justice; if a manufacturer or salesman, making and selling what will thoroughly satisfy the just requirements of the purchaser, if an employee, giving an exact equivalent of time and diligence, and conscientious labour, for money received.

To love mercy is to take into consideration all those drawbacks which misfortunes, which enfeebled health, or crushing sorrow may impose on those who owe us service or money, or in some other way are dependent upon us.

To walk humbly with God implies constant prayer and watchfulness, familiar yet humble converse, conscientious solicitude, to allow nothing to divert us from his side or to break the holy chain of conversation. We must exchange our monologue, in which we talk with ourselves, for dialogue, in which we talk with God as we walk with Him.

But this threefold attitude is only possible to those who know the cleansing blood, the daily confession of sin, and the occupation of the soul with the light of truth and purity in which God lives and moves.

FRIDAY, January 7.

"Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me."—Micah vii. 8.

Thou art glad, O child of the darkness, that the child of God has fallen into the pit: thou laughest derisively and in scorn. But wait to see the end of the Lord, for He is very pitiful. Thy rock is not as our Rock, and of this thou shalt be the judge. Our God will chastise with many stripes those of his children who persist in wrongdoing. He will withdraw the light of his face. He will permit the backslider to bear his indignation. But He does not keep his anger for ever, or allow the enemy and avenger to wreak all his vengeance. He may use the stripes of the children of men to a certain point, but immediately they exceed it, and take unhallowed license, He steps in and delivers his beloved, enabling the returning and restored soul to cry, "Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy; when I fall, I shall arise: thy destructions shall come to a perpetual end."

Wait, O soul; thy God will presently arise to plead thy cause, and execute judgment for thee; do not put forth thine hand to save thyself; wait on Him, He will deliver thee; He will bring thee forth to the light, and thou shalt behold his righteousness in the ordering of thy life. Only acknowledge thy sin, cast thyself on his mercy, and accept what He may appoint by way of chastening.

In darkest shades, if He appear,
My dawning is begun;
He is my soul's sweet morning star,
And He my rising sun.

SATURDAY, January 8.

"The Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet."—Nahum i. 3.

God's dealings are often terrible. He rides on the whirlwind and wraps Himself in the storm. But the child of God looks beneath the dress to the Father's heart, which beats with as much love when attired thus as when arrayed in the smiles of a summer eve. The whirlwind serves a useful purpose in cleaning the trees of rotten boughs, and searching the corners of fœtid courts; the storm, in deluging the gulleys and drains; the clouds, in forming the fertilising showers on the thirsty land. God is in it all.

God's way is generally hidden. The clouds as dust conceal Him, but we must not dwell with melancholy foreboding on the clouds, as if they were all. God is behind them, working for us, coming to our rescue, showing Himself strong on our behalf. Whenever the clouds gather over your life, be sure that God cannot be far off—the dust He raises in his mighty progress betrays Him.

God counts our great things as very trifling. A cloud is a great thing to us; it sometimes seems to equal the Alps in magnificence, in height, in girth; but to God it is only as a grain of dust is to us. Our difficulties, perplexities, and anxieties are very little things to Him. With one movement of his hand He could sweep them away, as you can move dust motes from your table. Trust Him—

Through seas, and clouds, and storms
He gently clears thy way;
Wait thou his time, so shall thy night
Soon end in joyous day.

INDIA.

Secret of India's Awakening.

By Mrs. M. B. FULLER, Alliance Mission, Bombay.

WE feel deeply that the great need of India is not so much more men and more money as a great and deep spiritual awakening. We believe that such an outpouring of the Spirit would do more for the work in India than years of the most patient careful teaching can do without it.

We are to consider the secret of such an awakening. Would that we missionaries and Christian workers might read the accounts of Bible revivals on our knees.

We live in the dispensation which was ushered in at Pentecost. Why should we be so weak? Why should God be so often misrepresented to the heathen about us? In view of it all, are we ever ashamed and confused? God is no respecter of persons. As He worked in days of old, how much more will He work for us now since the advent of the Holy Ghost! Then what are the conditions of his working?

(1) We must see and feel our need. Our helpfulness is great, and is all right if it makes us turn to God. Instead of doing thus, how we sigh and plead with the committee at home for more men and more money. We say, "If we could only open this school here," or "that home there," and "if we only had a medical missionary to get the hearts of the people ready for us." Yet it is nothing with the Lord to help whether with many or with them that have no power. (2 Chron. xiv. 11.) The revivals of which we read in the Old Testament all began with one man. Is there not an Ezra, a Nehemiah, or a Daniel in your mission or station whose heart is so agonised with the need that he can pray and prevail? How often powerful revivals have begun at home through the prayers of one or two godly women, whose hearts have been rent by the spiritual dearth about them, and have wrestled in secret till God has stirred up the people and poured out his Spirit. If two of you agree, it shall be done!

(2) Confession of Sins. In all the instances of revival mentioned in the Bible there was a deep and humble confession of sin, and a deep sense that God had been dishonoured. Do we feel deeply that many of our people are cold and not living wholly for God, that there is often discontent and murmuring among us? Do we see how deeply this dishonours God and misrepresents him to the heathen?

Before God can bless, there must come the cry "I have sinned."

(3) A discerning of the time. Daniel knew "by the books" that the time had come for God to return his people from their captivity, and he gave himself to prayer. Are there no signs for us? Does the activity to revive Hinduism mean nothing to the child of God? I have been in India for nineteen years, and I have never seen the condition of things among missionaries and all classes of Christian workers that now exists. The fulness of the Spirit is the theme of almost every missionary gathering. Some of us older missionaries, who have worked here for years without this experience, have only come to know in the last few years the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Do not these things indicate that God is drawing nigh to us, drawing out our hearts to give us the long-coveted outpouring? Oh, that we may discern his will in these signs, and rejoice in them as an earnest of much to follow.

(4) Prayer. All deep revivals have always been preceded by a spirit of prayer. Dear fellow-students and missionaries, how much we can avail through prayer. Let us bring all the tithes into the storehouse, and prove the Lord and see if He will not open the windows of heaven to us, and pour out the blessing we need. Much has been said about prayer. Oh, let us give ourselves to prayer for a deep spiritual awakening among us.

Before the heathen can be reached, the Church of God must feel the fire of Pentecost. If the Church is cleansed, there will be no difficulty about the heathen. "And the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes."

In conclusion, we believe that the great work which many of us long to see done in India will never be done except through the special outpouring of the Spirit. Hosts of our Christians have never witnessed a revival. They have never seen men under deep conviction of sin, deciding for God and coming out boldly in the joy of salvation. They are strangers to this power of God. In some communities there never has been a time of definite effort on the part of the whole church to reach their Hindu and Mohammedan neighbours. We believe that an outpouring of the Spirit is the only cure for much of the discontent and murmuring about more pay, the jealousy and strife that so eats the heart out of work.

And we also believe that nothing else will impel the hundreds of Hindus who are intellectually convinced of the truth of Christianity to brave the influence of caste and public opinion and confess Christ boldly before men. The Christian religion is a supernatural one, yet how little many of our people know of the supernatural. Oh, that a fire may kindle in this great country, creating deep conviction of sin and such a radical change of life that men will go back to their friends and be ready to lay down their lives to win them. This is no enthusiastic, imaginary picture. It is what has been witnessed in every land. The Gospel is yet the power of God unto salvation. "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years" (Hab. iii. 2).

Scenes in Benares.

MISS JOSEPH, who for twenty years has been labouring in Benares in connection with the Baptist Zenana Mission, in a letter describing famine relief work, says:—

"Benares was filled to overflowing with destitute persons—homeless and friendless. They roamed about in the day begging, and slept out on the streets at night with nothing to shelter them from the drenching rain. Among them such revolting sights were to be seen as mothers snatching food from the hands of their little ones to eat it themselves, and purposely reducing their infants to skeletons in order to excite the sympathy of the public to give them alms. Who speaks of the softening influence of adversity? Experience proves that unsanctified, unblessed affliction hardens rather than softens the heart.

"A great many of the destitute went to missionaries for shelter and food, and all missionaries have been engaged more or less in relieving them. Old orphanages have been enlarged to receive double or treble the number of children that used to be harboured in them. New orphanages have been started all over the country, homes and places of industry have been established for widows and women deserted by their husbands, and thus this calamity has served to bring thousands under Christian influence who would not otherwise have come.

"We have picked up no less than 140 famishing cases, all except twenty being children. Of these eighty-nine are still in the hands of Christian missionaries. Some, who have been restored to their parents, had deceived us into believing that they had no parents or friends, but after sheltering and feeding them we found their relatives. It was touching to witness the sorrow of the children at parting with us, and their unwillingness to go back to their parents. We might have secured many more children had we been willing to buy them, but we did not think it right to do so. There is a slight fall in the price of grain, and less distress now. We have had a splendid rainy season, and expect a good harvest, but the consequences of the famine will long be felt."

Telugu Mission.

Rev. J. Cain, who works among the Kois in the Telugu Mission of the C.M.S., in a letter describing relief operations says:—"The Kois support their own poor in a generous manner, and are lavish in their gifts of grain to other needy people. For twelve years we have not known more than four or five Koi to be begging at our bungalow; so when the number of Koi women begging crept up to 400 or 500, we knew to what straits they had been driven. Through the aid given by Christian friends in England, Australia, and India, many lives have been saved, homes have been prevented from being broken up, and orphans cared for. Moreover, serious riots have been prevented, and the Gospel has been pressed home in a way that would not otherwise have been possible."

Widows at Poona.

Writing on Pundita Ramabai's work at Poona among famine widows and orphans, Rev. Thomas Evans, late of Mussoorie, India, says, "The Pundita has gathered into her Christian Home some hundreds of helpless and destitute Indian women and children, rescuing many from a fate worse than starvation. A great flood of blessing has followed her work, and lately several scores of the inmates have professed love to the Saviour in baptism. It is very evident that this is a work approved of by God, and the Pundita is full of faith and good works. It has been laid on my heart to collect a few donations in this country, and I have already received £10." Mr. Evans's address is Newport, Pembroke.

Famine Orphans.

WRITING to a London benefactor, Rev. J. O. Denning, of Narsinghpur, India, says:—"We have rescued over six hundred orphans from the famine, and sent most of them away to other mission orphanages. Now we have enlarged our boys' orphanage so as to accommodate 400. We have at present on hand 250, and expect to take in the other 150 in a short time. We must keep them for several years and rear them to manhood. On entering the orphanage the boys leave their heathen practices and assume Christian ways. Many of them, we believe, have found the Saviour. We teach the children the common branches of learning, and where special intelligence is shown higher branches will be taught. Each one is trained to follow some useful employment.

"I have rented a field of sixteen acres, and am starting a poultry yard: these will find work for some. Others will learn carpentry and shoemaking, and, as time passes, other lines of work will be added. We expect most of the lads will follow their trades, and hope that a goodly proportion of them will be our future preachers and teachers, and carry the Gospel to their own peoples. Moreover, in such conditions, the children being shut off entirely from the influences of heathenism during the susceptible years of childhood and early youth, we expect a type of Christian character rarely attained until the third generation of those reared in homes surrounded by heathen influences. Of late, what with various relief undertakings, over seven hundred people have been dependent on me for their daily bread, and many besides have had partial relief."

A Missionary Waylaid.

In a recent letter, Mr. Man Sukh Lal writes:—

"I wish you could have been with me a few nights ago in the village of Wagáshi, when about 100 people, nearly all of them converted from heathenism, sat grouped round me and listened to an hour's Gospel address. The work increases so rapidly that it is impossible to keep up with it. If I visit one town or village every day, it takes six weeks for me to get round to the first again.

"On leaving Wagáshi I heard a shout in the jungle, and saw a man plunging through the rain water up to his knees. 'Stop, sahib, stop, some people are coming to see you.' About fifteen panting individuals came rushing up to shake hands. 'We heard you were coming this way, sahib, so we have come across country to ask you to stay and talk to us about Jesus whom we have begun to serve.' We were able to hold a meeting seated in the sandy road, while the heathen stood silently at a short distance and looked on. One of the converts, in the name of the rest, offers me fourteen annas as an offering to the Lord's work. And this at a time when, through the famine, not one of them can afford to eat even rice or millet grain!"

Mr. and Mrs. Lal are working in Gujarat in connection with the American Methodist Episcopal Mission, but part of their support has to be provided by friends in Britain. Will your readers join in prayer for much blessing on their work?

Women Doctors.—Lord Sandhurst, Governor of Bombay, believes in women doctors. Those who indulge in chaff about the "new woman" can have no idea of the infinite blessing skilled attention of women can be to their sisters in the East.

Trade in India.—Notwithstanding the ravages of famine and plague in India, on the whole trade statistics are encouraging. For 1896-7 there is an increase in imports of over 2,000,000 rupees when compared with 1895-6. Exports, however, fall short during the same period of nearly 34,000,000 rupees. This decline is explained chiefly by the interruption of trade in Bombay by the plague, and the practical extinction of the importation of wheat.

Notes from America.

WE reached Colorado Springs on Saturday night, Dec. 4, a town beautifully situated and elegantly laid out at the foot of the Rocky Mountains. We went to the First Baptist Church on the following morning, and attended the Sunday-school, which here, as is usual in America, took place immediately after the morning service. We were kindly and courteously spoken to, seeing that we were strangers, by three different members, and invited to come again. In the afternoon I heard, at the Y.M.C.A., an address by a Congregational minister who was staying in the town for his health.

His subject was the judgment in Matt. xxv., which he made the basis of a solemn and heart-searching appeal to the unsaved, while he spoke of believers as having already passed through judgment in their suffering Surety and Substitute. A brief testimony meeting followed. At the close an old gentleman asked me if I agreed with the exposition of Matt. xxv. He had studied it for sixteen years, and was sure the judgment was proceeding now. Of course, in a very real sense it is, but the time is coming when the issues will be finally decided. He put me in mind of other ways in which the Gospel of Matthew is manipulated, and by which some familiar portions are rendered almost useless for Gospel purposes. The S.S. lesson was Phil. ii. 1-11. Speaking on verse 4 ("Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others"), the leader dwelt on the system of "combines"—the modern form of

> The good old plan,
> That they may take who have the power,
> And they may keep who can.

Very plain things were said about the millionaires who make their riches by combining to raise or to depress prices. The power of money is as cruel as the power of the sword. The people are becoming awake to the ruthless possibilities of commerce, and are learning that the mischief and mercilessness of the military system in Germany may be out-Heroded by the despotism and tyranny of the commercial system in America. In business competition many advantages are on the side of the United States. One of these is that they are free from the precedents by which we are enthralled. Our instinct is to be conservative, that of America is to go ahead. We cannot make a new move without clearing away the old. Here there is nothing to clear away; they have simply to go forward.

One great curse of the present day, more in America than in any other country in the world, is the rapid concentration of wealth in few hands; and every new discovery of the forces of nature increases the power of those who are able to take advantage of it, and who as a rule use it not as stewards on behalf of others, but for their own aggrandisement. It is true that some millionaires give largely to religious and charitable objects; but as money made in the liquor traffic, when so given, is by many regarded as robbery offered in sacrifice, so wealth gained by unrighteous means, though in legitimate businesses, is coming to be similarly judged. No amount of contributions to good purposes can condone unrighteous methods of making money.

Our dear coloured sister Amanda Smith has just concluded a ten-days' mission at the Episcopal Methodist Church. She seems of the same mind as Mr. Moody with regard to the work needed. Her main emphasis was laid on the revival of believers knowing that a quickened church will prove the fittest instrument for bringing other souls under the reign of God. Whether or not we agree exactly with all the terms employed, the teaching of this devoted woman is definite, uncompromising, and intelligible. It may be summed up in the words that Jesus Christ died, "the Just for the unjust, to bring us to God."

THE AMANDA SMITH ORPHAN HOME.

Every exhortation is pointed by some incident in the experience of herself or that of others. One secret of her attractiveness is her natural and jubilant way of telling the good tidings. Her face is radiant, her voice rises in enthusiasm, and the gesture with which she accentuates her homely language and quaint expression, if not classical, is natural to her and effective with her audience. Many came forward for prayer, though far more Christians, to give themselves up more fully to God, than sinners seeking salvation.

Mrs. Smith, who makes it one of the points of her preaching that ours should be a common-sense religion, is practical in her sympathies. Seeing the need for an Industrial Orphan Home for coloured children, she has been led to buy a house, large enough to accommodate forty children; but, not wanting to open it until able to do so free of debt, she rented it for a small sum, and for two years has been raising money towards the 5000 dollars needed; 2250 dollars are to be raised to complete the sum. The Home is situated at 147th Street North, Harvey on Illinois Central Railroad, about an hour's ride from Chicago. Mrs. Smith is trusting the Lord that He will enable her to complete the work. Perhaps some of her English sisters may like to help her.

Bishop Tucker on Missions.

THE see of Eastern Equatorial Africa having been divided, Bishop Tucker has issued a charge in which he takes farewell of that portion of the diocese included in the coast districts and the Usagara Mission. The Bishop, who, it is understood, will retain the oversight of the Uganda and interior missions, takes the opportunity afforded by his charge of dealing with the questions of the development of native churches, and European control. He writes:—

"Were I asked to give an opinion as to what, in my estimation, has much hindered the development and independence of native churches I should unhesitatingly answer, 'That deep-rooted tendency which there is in the Anglo-Saxon character to Anglicise everything with which it comes in contact.' See how this operates in the mission field with respect to the churches which are built for native congregations. Our ideas in this matter are very crystallised indeed, not to say fossilised. Of course, we must have our chancel here, our pulpit there, our reading-desk in this place, and our font in that; and, of course, we must have our pews. The missionary sets to work, souls are gathered, and a little Christian community is formed. Then a church is built after the

MOST APPROVED ANGLICAN PATTERN

—a church which would be no discredit to the suburbs of some manufacturing town in England, but which in India or Africa is an absurdity, unsuited alike to the climate and the Oriental cast of thought of the congregation for whom it is built. In Uganda, I am thankful to say, we have been enabled to cast many of these ideas to the winds, and the result is an uprearing of churches adapted both to the climate and the mode of thought of the people. Their maintenance and repair are a comparatively light burden to bear, and a larger proportion of the offertories is free to be used for the evangelisation of the regions beyond.

"Then, look at our fixed ideas as to a native ministry. The threefold order of bishop, priest, and deacon we regard, and no doubt rightly so, as necessary for the effectual building up of a native church. But we find that, generally speaking, in the mission field there is a great gap between the rank and file of our earnest Christian men and our fossilised ideas as to the qualifications necessary for admission to the order of deacons. How is it to be bridged? Is it not possible to be a little more primitive in our notions than we are?...If native churches are to be developed on healthy lines and within a reasonable space of time, there must be a larger and freer use of

THE MINISTRY OF LAYMEN.

"I come now to the question of control. Naturally, the European missionary thinks that he can do things much better than any native. He therefore attempts to do everything himself. In this, in my opinion, he commits a grievous blunder, and, unless turned from his purpose, will mar the development of any native church with which he may have to do. The fact is, the native can do many things much better than the European, and should be used from the very beginning. The missionary should do nothing that the native can do. Closely connected with the question of control is the use in missionary work of European funds. Of course, up to a certain point the employment of such funds is necessary. But they should, as far as possible, even when needed be kept in the background. It must always be remembered that where European money is used there will, sooner or later, follow European control. The power of the purse in hindering the development of native churches is truly appalling. Nothing is so fruitful of disaster, in my opinion, as the misuse of European funds. From the very moment of the conversion of a soul there should be the setting forth before that one of the duty and privilege of giving."

On the subject of self-government, Bishop Tucker says:—"We should adapt ourselves, as far as possible, to local circumstances. Anything that we can lay hold of in the native method of administration and use for the purposes of the Church will be a distinct gain, and will help materially in the direction of development."

The Fires of God.

The Lord our God is a consuming fire.—Hebrews xii. 29.

By REV. G. HAY MORGAN, Woodberry Down, N.

THE character of God is liable to be misjudged by us, because we are often disposed to accept a single description of it, and think we have seen the whole. An old German fable of "The knights and the shield," tells how a baron had erected a shield by the wayside (just as Catholics erect crucifixes to-day), in order that knights might express their devotion as they passed by. Two knights staying at the castle one day, held conversation about the baron's shield. One admired the inscription which he had found written thereon. "Oh," said his companion, "that is not the inscription on the shield. I passed by it but to-day, and I read quite differently." Both felt equally sure they were right, and protested that the other was wrong. Their host advised them to go and visit the ancestral shield together. They did so, and found that each had looked on only one side of the shield. Each was right, because he told the truth; each was wrong, because he had only told half the truth. So

MEN GET HALF-CONCEPTIONS OF GOD.

They see, perhaps, a portion of his character, and they are right in declaring what they see; but they are wrong in supposing that the range of their limited vision includes it all. Our fathers talked about the justice of God, and the horrors which would fall on those who disobeyed his commands. To-day men speak more of God's mercy and love. Both are right, and these two very diverse qualities are not incompatible after all. How can we trust one who is not absolutely just? Is it not the consolation of the oppressed that their oppressor will be judged with righteous judgment? Is it not the hope of the misrepresented, the victims of the defrauder and the libertine, that God shall "bring forth" their "righteousness as the light, and" their "judgment as the noon-day" (Ps. xxxvii. 6)? "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right" (Gen. xviii. 25)?

The varied names given to God in the Bible are like milestones which mark the progress of the human race in its knowledge of God. As men discovered new traits in God's character they GAVE HIM NEW NAMES.

After having fought many battles under God's leadership—battles from which they issued triumphant—they said, "The Lord is a Man of war." When David had been tended and guided by God, just as a shepherd watches his sheep, he said, "The Lord is my Shepherd." Christ came and taught us to call God "Our Father"; and John, looking at God through the revelation given in Jesus Christ, said "God is Light," and, musing on the same character in the radiancy which streamed from the Cross of Calvary, he cried in ecstasy, "God is Love."

Moses reminds the children of Israel of their experience in Horeb (Exod. xix. 17, 18). "You call to mind," says Moses, "the awful sights which you beheld in Horeb." Well, remember the power of God, and if you will disobey his commandments and make to yourselves other gods to worship, that power will be used against you, for our God is a consuming fire."

The remarkable point about this description of God is that we not only find it retained in the New Testament, but find it reiterated by such diverse persons as Paul and the beloved disciple John. So that while the name was given under circumstances which obviously warranted its use, there must be some permanent meaning in it which should not be lost sight of.

First, then, learn the lesson that rebellion against God is not only wicked, but foolish.

We "grown-ups" are very childish after all, sometimes. If we cannot get our way, how we fret and fume, not only against men and circumstances, but against God and the whole system of religion! Charles Dickens says of Mrs. Jarley, when matters went against her she felt disposed to

"TURN INFIDEL."

So when God appears to disappoint us we think we will have no more to do with Him.

Cæsar made a banquet. On the day when the guests should arrive, a hot south wind, called a sirocco, came on and compelled the people to remain indoors. In anger Cæsar sent out his archers to shoot straight up in the heavens at Jupiter, their chief god. The arrows did not reach Jupiter, but they fell back to earth and killed the archers. So with the arrows which rebellion aims at God; they but fall back and injure those who shoot them.

See those strong iron girders supporting heavy goods; truly they seem to defy the most ponderous weights you could put upon them. But see them now, after the flames have licked them gently for a few hours! The massive iron beams are coiled and twisted and wrenched like a submissive straw in your hand. So it is with God, who is a consuming fire. Whatever your position may be you cannot with rebellion or even with indifference. He is the Lord of Hosts. His messengers are everywhere and are ready to discharge his arrows. Let not the rich man boast in his wealth, for God may provide it with wings whereon it will fly away. Let not the agriculturist boast in his barns, or the merchant in his warehouses—a spark from God's fire may level their proud structures to the ground. Let not intellect boast in its knowledge, nor beauty in her charms, for one arrow from God's shaft will blot out their memory; one germ of disease transform the rarest symmetry into loathsome decay.

Again, God's fire has a purifying influence. The afflictions of life are "celestial benedictions which assume this dark disguise." As in the fire gold and silver are tried, purified, and cleansed of all base metal, so the Lord cleanses his people. There is much earthiness in the best of men, much pride and selfishness, much impure intention, much blindness as to the true worth of things. These can only be purged away by the experiences of God's furnace. "It was good for me to be afflicted," said the writer of Psalm cxix. "Before I was troubled I went wrong, but now have I kept thy law."

> "Thrice blessed is he to whom is given
> The instinct that can tell
> That God is on the field when He > Is most invisible."

Further, there are fires which will be kindled before the Judgment Throne. Paul, in 1 Corinthians iii., gives us another sense in which "our God is a consuming fire." Our deeds will be all tested, and their true nature revealed by fire. This has nothing to do with our salvation. We are srved through Christ, and through Christ alone. The life comes through Christ, but the crown which fadeth not away, and which others may take from us, has to be won. Heaven comes through Christ, but as to who shall sit on God's right hand depends upon attainment in the spiritual life. There will be many crownless saints in heaven, saints whose earthly deeds were of inflammable material like wood, hay, and stubble, whose actions possessed little of the solidity of stone or the purity of precious metal. Every action of life will be tested by fire; not only great deeds which stand out as crises in life, making us the admiration or the laughing stock of men; but the small, insignificant things—the unkind or angry look, the fretful, peevish movement, the kind, helpful shake of the hand, the patient forbearance with unkindness in others. These are the trivial things which go to make up life, and these are the things that will be tested.

Men went "to see the fire." It was to them nothing more than a grand, awful, dramatic spectacle. But others in the crowd saw their own property going up in smoke and flame—they trembled to think of the end of this searching examination of the goods they had manufactured; they had not prepared them for an ordeal like this. I pray you remember you will be INTERESTED SPECTATORS OF THIS GREAT FIRE.

Manufacture deeds that will stand this trying test. Insure your actions by infusing the Spirit of God into them. Your course of life must in many respects resemble that of worldly men—your business, your home, your social transactions will be performed in common with the unrighteous. If at last it is found that the Spirit of Jesus Christ was regnant in every deed, it will stand the fire, and you shall receive a reward.

Before I cease I am bound to speak of the last occasion when we shall see the truth exemplified that "our God is a consuming fire"—when the sun shall fall, and the stars shall be removed from their places, and this earth, so firm and steadfast, shall melt with fervent heat. This general collapse of all created things through the flames of God's fire is something which you and I shall see. Are we prepared for it? On yonder where grass grows ten or twelve feet high, in a soil created by the humus of centuries, there are travellers crossing the wild luxuriant domain. The noon draws nigh, and the guide sees in the distant horizon a mass of flame and smoke. The company watches it for a brief space of time, and they realise with horror that a prairie fire is following in their track. As they hear the thunder of wild horses scampering past them, fleeing from the flames, they know how powerless they are before this dread and intractable foe. What shall they do? Their swiftest flight is useless. To lie down where they are is to be burnt to death. Their guide strikes a match and sets fire to the dried grass and herbage around; the fire is fanned by the strong breeze, which bears it away from them; they follow it, and find themselves on an area where their fire has burned. The prairie fire approaches them swiftly, but can only burn around them. Their stratagem has saved their lives.

Looking away on the horizon of the world's future, I see the smoke and fire of the collapse of a created universe. The mighty men and kings are calling upon the rocks and the mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from the wrath of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. The fire is approaching you, for "every eye shall see Him." What will you do? See, the fire has burnt a circle round one spot where there is safety. It is round the Cross of Calvary. There is salvation for you at that spot. Gather in that circle, hide beneath that Cross, and the conflagration of worlds shall have no terrors for you.

A New Year's Temptation.

THERE was busy life on the quay side at S—— one bright June afternoon, and busiest and noisiest of all—their shrill laughter mingling gaily with the hoarse shouts of sailors and porters—was a group of boys who had rushed out of school to vent their exuberant spirits in a place where the consciousness of being a nuisance seemed to give keenness to their fun. They dodged the rolly men, gave back gibe for threat, and conducted themselves generally as some English boys think it manly and plucky to do.

In striking contrast to the prevailing horse-play, however, was the conduct of one lad, a bright, curly-headed little fellow, who, though full of fun and mischief, uttered no rough words, and yielded with ready politeness to any of the shouts of warning and abuse with which he and his companion were assailed; and it was wonderful to see the quickness of his movements, for he had but one leg, a crutch doing duty for the other. He was swinging himself round with a merry shout from his position in front of an approaching truck, when one of the roughest of his playmates gave him a sudden push that jerked his crutch, and the boy fell backward with

A SWIFT PLUNGE INTO THE RIVER.

There were men in that rough-voiced crowd with hearts tender as any woman's, and one or two quickly leapt to the boy's help; but before any one could reach him he was seen to fling his crutch on to the landing-stage, with an effort that sent him farther into the stream. When, a few minutes later, he was brought safely to land, and his half-dazed consciousness restored, they asked, "Whatever did ye throw the crutch out for, Tom?" And the strong men standing round drew their sleeves across their eyes as they heard the simple answer—

"Why, I thought if I died, ye know, it would make firewood for mother."

I knew that mother, and I wish to tell here a striking incident in her history, which I had from her own lips, and which is strictly true. She was a widow, left by the early death of a good husband with sole care of five young children; and soon after the eldest, Tom, had disease of the knee-joint, which rendered amputation necessary. How she maintained herself and the bairns in her quiet, refined way was a wonder to her friends; but she was brave and capable, could wash, and clean, and cook, and, best of all, had strong,

SIMPLE FAITH IN THE WIDOW'S GOD.

As the years went on, she had always at least a bare sufficiency, and out of her poverty she and her children contrived regularly to raise one penny a week for my missionary collecting book; and when I married there was, in a chief place of honour amongst my wedding presents, a glass jar for store-room use, which cost fourpence, and was the joint gift of the family group. But there came at last a keen trial to her faith. "I knew you would like to hear all about it, ma'am," she said, with the eloquence of deep emotion. "I have been selling tea-cakes lately, and it has been a great help; so last week, as the Monday after would be New Year's Day, I made an extra quantity. To buy the materials I had to take the rent money, but I quite thought I should double it, and so was not anxious. On Saturday afternoon I set out with my basket full, expecting soon to come back for a fresh supply. Instead of that, I sold scarcely any! All who could afford it had made cakes for themselves, and I came back at last with a heart as heavy as my basket, with the rent due on Monday and only a few pence towards it."

"But why did you not come to me?" I asked.

She raised her head proudly. "I've never asked charity yet, ma'am, and I don't think the Lord will permit that I ever shall. But I had a hard time of it, and the children were ready to cry, for they do not often see me so down-hearted. On Sunday morning Satan was very busy. We had not been up long before a neighbour sent for two tea-cakes, as she was going to have company, and it did not seem to matter my saying that I could not sell on Sunday, for after that one and another kept sending or coming, and I could easily have sold every cake I had in the house."

"And were you not tempted to give way, Sarah?"

"No, Ma'am, I can't say that I was; the sin was so very plain to me that it did not seem possible to do it. But I had an awful struggle with unbelieving thoughts, wondering why the Lord had put me in such a difficulty by not letting me sell my cakes on Saturday.

"We all went to the mission service at night, and I got great help and comfort, and it was very sweet to think that God was really caring, though I could not see how. I had the children round me when we came back, and we did pray for help; and then we went to bed to save fire and candle. Next morning I didn't feel near so brave and confident as I should have liked, and when we sat down to our breakfast I could not eat anything for listening for the landlord's step, for he always comes early. Then there came a smart rap at the door! "That's him," I said to Jenny; "you go, dear." "No, mother, it's the postman; and he's brought you a letter! And oh! ma'am, if you believe me, it was from my brother William in the South of England, who has never spoken or written to me for years. Now he wrote to say I had been so much in his mind lately that he felt he must wish me a Happy New Year, and send me a little present, and in the letter was a P.O. order for the exact amount that was owing to the landlord! And I had been doubting God's care!"

And here the good creature fairly broke down, and wept such tears as honest, grateful hearts should when God has appeared and wrought a miracle of mercy on their behalf. And I am not ashamed to own that I wept with her. M. C. F.

Visiting the Indians.

AN interesting incident of our journey was our visit to St. Peter's Indian Reservation, near West Selkirk, about twenty-five miles from Winnipeg.

A youth whose mind is filled with the thrilling stories of Indian life would feel disappointed to see a community of 1200 families peaceably settled on both the borders of the Red River. Yet to Christians it is a delight to see the change wrought by the Gospel. The descendants of their wild ancestors not only live the civilised life of our country people, but many of them are also followers of Christ.

During our stay at Winnipeg we had the pleasure of becoming acquainted with Dr. Rolston and Mr. W. R. Mulock. The former is the medical superintendent and the latter the hon. treasurer and secretary of the Dynevor Hospital, St. Peter's. We were kindly received and entertained by Dr. and Mrs. Rolston. The latter is a sister of Mrs. Ord Brown, of Blackheath.

The following day we attended the church service. It had been snowing all the night, and in the twenty-minutes' long walk, and in crossing the river by the ferry, we encountered some difficulty. The church, a stone building, holds five to six hundred people. The service was partly in English and partly in Cree. Most of the Indians speak English, and the children are being taught in this language. To those who could not easily understand, a résumé was given in Cree by the chief, Mr. Ashem, who alternately with Dr. Rolston takes the service in the pastor's absence.

In shaking hands at the close, one of the members remarked, "I hope you have not found any difference between you and us Indians." The peculiar stress which he put on the word "Indians" made me mention it to Mrs. Rolston, who in a few words sketched the Indian character:—People shy and reserved to strangers, yet of an intense feeling, proud of being Indians, and yet imagining themselves to be spoken of with contempt by white people. Their prejudice and enmity for new methods were great obstacles to the early missionaries. Years of unwearied toil in the effort of evangelising passed before any results were seen.

In 1832 the Indians began to settle down to home-life. In 1837 a church was built. The last thirty years have been greatly blessed. In 1868 St. Peter's settlement became a fully-organised parish. Its present minister, Rev. T. G. Anderson, is devoted to his work. He preaches every Sunday in three languages—Cree, Soto, and English. The later years were marked by sickness and heavy mortality in the settlement. This induced Archdeacon Phair, the C.M.S. superintendent of the Indian work, to open a hospital in March, 1896. It contains a dispensary, a surgery, two wards capable of holding a dozen patients, also a small emergency ward and several rooms that can be utilised for patients.

Dr. Rolston, retired fleet surgeon, served twenty years in Her Majesty's navy in the Baltic during the Russian war, on the North American, West Indian, Australian, and (during the Maori war) the New Zealand stations. In Canada he volunteered as surgeon to Major Boulton's scouts, and at Fish Creek and Batoche, etc., he was conspicuous for his bravery on the field and the manner in which he attended to

THE WOUNDED WHILE UNDER FIRE.

Without promise of remuneration, but in simple faith that our Lord would move his people to supply their wants, he and his wife have devoted themselves to the missionary work of taking charge of this hospital for the alleviation of the suffering Indians, and so aiding the spread of the Gospel among them.

During the first year of the hospital's existence over 1300 patients have been benefited by treatment, thirty-two of these actually inside patients, although this latter gives a very imperfect idea, as many who ought really to be in the ward prefer to sleep away, and many during summer months come from long distances and camp (with their families) close to the hospital, all of whom require feeding, and washing, and nursing, more or less.

A hospital, of course, is a novelty to an Indian. He is an erratic creature, full of himself, and to do him good he must be taken as he is, and not only himself but a good many belonging to him.

By the way in which the Rolston family, including their son and daughter (the latter teaching the native children), are carrying on the work of the Lord, both as regards soul and body, and put up with trying circumstances, one can easily perceive their enthusiasm for the cause of Christ. The ladies love to play and sing to the patients. They also consider it an important part of their duties to see the Indians at their own homes. Unfortunately their time is too limited to permit of much visiting. There is a need for one or two Christian-minded nurses willing to share the responsibilities and blessings of the work of love.

The Indians, though reserved, are by no means irresponsive to real sympathy, as we could see in bidding good-bye to the patients at Dynevor. One of them, a bright Christian, not being able to express himself in English, wrote to us in the Cree language in syllabic character as follows: "John Meehun thanks God for giving you strength to come so far to see us sick people, and we thank God for giving us sickness that we might think of Him more and more, for He knows best what is good for us. We thank Him and put our whole faith and trust in his Holy Name."

We left a dying boy, a victim of consumption at Dynevor. He had touched Christ in faith, and whilst I am writing this, I hope that he has already passed through the valley of the shadow, and is safe in the arms of Jesus.

St. Peter's was clad in its loveliest winter garment as we passed through on our return to Winnipeg, the sun shining from the deep blue sky, and the frozen snow sparkling as if covered with diamonds.

The following day we left Canada for the United States, carrying the conviction with us that every work where Jesus is present must and shall prosper. So be it with Dynevor. Wilma Morgan.

In the South Sea Islands.

THE picturesque suburb of Sydney, N.S.W., called Hunters' Hill, is situated between the Parramatta and Lane Cove Rivers, some six or seven miles from the Australian Metropolis. This has been the home for some years past of Rev. John Jones and his family.

Those who have kept in touch with missionary work will remember how, in 1887, Mr. Jones was ruthlessly expelled from the island of Maré, in the South Pacific, by the French Government. Mr. and Mrs. Jones were pioneers on the island, undergoing many hardships and braving many dangers to win the Loyalty Islanders to Christ. These devoted servants of God have seen the second and almost a third generation of Christian natives grown up under their teaching. Though the European missionaries are no longer on Maré, yet the native pastors carry on the work earnestly and faithfully.

The work so long carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Jones and their helpers has stood the test of time and of persecution. The people have the New Testament, Psalms, Genesis, and Exodus in their language. Mr. Jones and his brother missionary, Mr. Creagh, have just finished the Hexateuch in the same language, the proofs coming from the Bible Society, London, by each weekly mail for corrections. These gentlemen are advanced in years, and are the only missionaries who understand the language. They would very much like to complete the printing of the whole Bible, under the auspices of the British and Foreign Bible Society before the Master comes and calls for them.

Mrs. Jones, née Herbert, the subject of our sketch, was born March 21, 1823, at Olney, the town of Cowper and Newton. Her early life was spent there, and she loved to talk of reminiscences of the place and those great men.

In due time she entered the Gray's Inn Road Institution for training teachers. She was a born teacher, possessing superior powers of managing and influencing the young. She was very successful as a public school teacher both in London and in the provinces, and became head-mistress of a school of about 300 children in the city of Worcester, from which place she was married to Rev. John Jones, and joined him as a missionary of the London Missionary Society to the South Sea Islands.

The mission party, consisting of Rev. S. M. Creagh and Mrs. Creagh, and Rev. J. Jones and Mrs. Jones, left England in the "Scotia," December 6, 1853, and reached Sydney, April 1, 1854. After staying one month with Christian friends in Sydney they left for Samoa, where they awaited the arrival of the "John Williams" to carry them on to the Loyalty Islands. They arrived at Maré, one of the islands of that group, in October, 1854, accompanied by Rev. J. P. and Mrs. Sunderland, nearly twelve months after leaving their English home. Mr. and Mrs. Jones laboured there for thirty-four years.

Mrs. Jones at an early date commenced a boarding-school for boys and girls. These were kept and trained under the missionary's influence. Mrs. Creagh a year or two afterwards organised a similar school on the other side of the island. These boarding-schools proved of untold advantage. The whole island became ultimately sprinkled over with the pupils who had thus been trained, who became nuclei of light and influence for good. Two examples will show the length of service: One of Mrs. Jones' first pupils was a little wee girl, who ultimately became the ~~head~~ chief's wife, and is now a grandmother. A little boy, also, entered about the same time. After being trained in her school he entered the institution for training native ministers under the care of her husband, and went out as one of the first missionaries to New Guinea with Dr. Macfarlane and Rev. A. W. Murray. He laboured there for about twenty years, and is now retired to Maré for well-earned rest.

The amount of work she accomplished on Maré was immense. She possessed great power and influence over the natives, and, moreover, was very brave. On one occasion, in the early days of the mission, her husband being absent on duty, she heard a report that a band of warriors were approaching along the road which led past the mission's compound, and were on their way to attack an adjacent village. She went out calmly, stood in the way, and alone, without anyone to help her, she unarmed the whole troop, saying to each man, with commanding voice and gesture, "Give me your club and spear." These she took from them one by one, and put them over the fence of the mission premises; then she said, "Now you go, return home; you shall not go to fight with the people at Lata." She then carried the captured arms to the mission house. When her husband returned he was amazed to find her in possession of such a lot of implements of war, and said, "Were you not afraid?" She said, "No; I felt I must do it, and thus prevent a fight which might have had most disastrous consequences." The next day the men came to the mission house, saying they had agreed to obey Angaeshola, "the lady," begged for their clubs and spears, and promised they would not fight any more. These were given back to them, and never after did these men venture on a similar course, but they became devotedly attached to her. She possessed the power of command, hence the natives highly respected her.

In 1885, after a long, faithful, and devoted career by the side of her husband, ill health compelled her to leave Maré and come to Sydney, two years before her husband was expelled from the island by the French Government. After that time she was a great sufferer, and was physically unable to do much in the Lord's service, but she taught in the Sabbath school at Hunter's Hill Congregational Church as long as her strength would allow.

The rising generation in Maré will know of her only by report, but the middle-aged and old people who participated in her service, when they hear of her death, will exclaim, "Kolo ni Angaeshola me shede"! ("Alas for the lady, the beautiful, the good.")

She was taken seriously ill on June 30th with gastric influenza, which brought on peritonitis; she suffered very great pains and died on July 5th. Only four hours before her death she was talking enthusiastically to a neighbour about the prophecies relating to Christ's second coming. In one of her very severe paroxisms of pain she exclaimed, "Oh, what will it be to be in a world where there is no pain!" Conscious to the last moment, she passed away trusting in Jesus only.

The funeral was a simple one, befitting one who had earnestly and unostentatiously done her Master's work through a long life. Many friends followed her to her last earthly resting place, deeply sympathising with the bereaved husband and four daughters. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have had the love and respect of many, both in Sydney and suburbs, not only in their own denominations but in all the churches.

Destitute Armenian Boys.

THE short appeal in your issue of September 9 for clothes for our Armenian orphans and destitute boys met with some response, for which we are very thankful; but as the boys in question came to us in a destitute condition and the Home is not yet entirely furnished, the need is still great. Under-clothing, etc., trousers, coats, handkerchiefs, and shoes, such as can still be used, will find a hearty welcome. Household furniture and bedding articles we shall be very glad to receive; also books, religious, historical, and educational. Papers and magazines will likewise be welcome.

We have only boys in our Home. They are seventeen in number, and from eleven to sixteen years of age. Our aim is to train those whom we receive, that they may be useful among their people scattered all the world over. For the present we intend to keep the boys together under our own care, and make it a real Armenian and Christian Home, where they may keep their language and customs, and where they will not forget the sad circumstances which forced them out of their country. Later on we may place some in English families for adoption or temporary care. We strongly advise friends desirous to interest themselves in an Armenian boy to leave him in our Home for the present with the other boys; still they can pay, alone, or in conjunction with others, the expenses of an individual boy. Other friends might wish to receive one lad or more into their houses during the New Year's holiday, and this may be arranged. We hope the presence of these boys in England will help English young people to appreciate at its real value the blessings of God in their own happy homes.

We shall be glad of openings for meetings, either for lectures, with an exhibition of prison fetters and stocks, or with a limelight illustrations of Armenian views. We shall also be thankful to receive contributions towards maintaining the Home. Money may be sent to Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., specifying that it is for Prof. and Mdm. Thoumaian's Home. Parcels of clothing and correspondence should be addressed to the Home (nearest railway station, Woodford G.E.R.). G. THOUMAIAN.

Restoration of Lost Years.

A Hopeful Meditation for the End and the Beginning of a Year.

"I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten."—Joel ii. 25.

A GREAT calamity had overtaken the land. Swarms of locusts had appeared, and in an incredibly short period of time they had accomplished a complete desolation. Their ravages are described by the prophet in the figures of a devouring fire, an invading army, and a sterile desert. The harvest was stricken, the vines apparently hopelessly ruined, and consequently the supplies of bread and wine for the temple worship were cut off. This, to the prophet, was even worse than the famine which threatened the country.

The cause of this disaster is declared to be the continued sin of the people. Drunkenness and debauchery were rife in the land despite the remonstrances of the prophets of the Lord. Now, God strikes directly at their sin in smiting their vines.

What to some seemed to be a mere natural calamity is regarded by the prophet as a direct judgment on the part of Almighty God. This visitation is "the day of the Lord"; the swarm of locusts is "his great army."

Upon this text the prophet preaches his sermon in the name of God. The first part of the message consists of a solemn call to repentance; the second part makes liberal promises of blessing conditional upon it. "Great things" (20) have been done in judgment. "Great things" (21) are promised in the way of mercy. Let the heart but renounce its sin, and the coming years shall regain what has been lost. The years of impoverishment, which in the natural order would follow the visitation of the locusts, shall, by the intervention of God, become years of plenty. The green grass shall grow again, the harvest fields be ripe with corn, and the withered vines once more be productive. The lost years shall be restored. Such is the picture, which has its moral counterpart in numberless lives to-day.

Let us review, in our own lives, the past years of desolation. Within us lie forces—personal and relative—which belong to God. The personal are those of body, mind, and spirit.

GOD CLAIMS EACH OF THESE.

Our bodies are claimed "a living sacrifice," for use in true and pure directions only; our minds, that they may offer the sacrifice of reason to God, delivered from foolish and hurtful principles; our hearts, that they may offer the sacrifice of love to Him who is the fount of all love.

The relative forces are those of time, and of our various relations toward our fellow-men. And these powers, too, are claimed by God, whose right to them consists in the fact that He Himself is the sole source and bond of all things that exist.

To admit the claim, and to render it, are two very different things. Have we rendered it? Are all our powers, both personal and relative, accomplishing the end for which they were entrusted to us? Or are they spoiled and but desolated fragments?

The body, for example, which was intended by its Designer to be a sanctuary of the Holy Ghost, are its forces so employed that there is perfect harmony between them and the will of Him who would be our Divine guest? Or are they dissipated through self-indulgence and sin, producing enfeebled health, perpetual ennui, and perhaps premature decay? How the locusts have been at some men!

Are the forces of the mind, bright, clear, freed from unnecessary prejudices and employed in their true work? Or have they run riot through foolish reading, false judgments, and dissipation? People often complain of their inability to concentrate their minds for any length of time upon God in prayer. They forget that the mind which they bring to God in prayer is the same mind which is employed in silly thoughts, and unkind judgments, and frivolous reading; and that if their minds are dissipated through these things, they bring that dissipated mind to God. Is it any wonder that they cannot concentrate their minds upon Him? How the locusts have ruined minds too!

Again, the strength of the heart, in which direction is it set? Towards Him whom we are bidden to love with all the heart and soul and strength, or toward unholy loves and undesirable friendships? Alas!

HOW THE LOCUSTS HAVE BEEN THERE!

Once more, the strength of the will, which is our real glory—for only they who have been made in the image of God have the power to say "I will," or "I will not"—what is its trend? Often it is stubbornly set against God and against his law. Or it is frequently weakened by repeated obstinacies so that man is a king without the power to command. The locusts have deprived him of his glory.

And, finally, our time, how often it has been encroached upon by unnecessary and harmful, yet invited guests, while the pressing opportunities of life have passed by unheeded. Let us honestly summon our powers, both personal and relative, before the judgment seat of conscience, and demand of them a true account of their expenditure. Many of us must admit that the locusts have been active among us. Oh! the sad years that lie behind us—of waste, of folly, of backsliding, of fruitlessness. They are beyond us now, we cannot recall them. If only we could start life again and have another chance, how differently would we live! But it cannot be.

HOW SHALL WE VIEW THOSE LOST YEARS?

With a light heart? Nay! for that would be to add to our sin. With despair? Nay! for that would be to doubt the grace of God. How then? With penitence for the past, hope for the future. And the hope is not to be in ourselves or in our endeavours, but in the "I WILL" of God the Almighty. Upon the condition of a thorough repentance—a thorough turning of the heart to Him—He will cause those lost years to be restored. The impossible shall be accomplished. A superabounding grace shall counteract the ravages of sin, and redeem lost time. This is the unique message of the Gospel of Christ.

Take the case of St. Paul. Converted at the time when man reaches half his allotted years, he had, until that hour, in ignorance squandered his religious life. To use his own words, he was "before a blasphemer and a persecutor and injurious." But did not God magnificently recover for him his wasted years? Healed by the Great Physician, he spent his remaining years in an incessant devotion to Jesus Christ, until, worn out with service, he offered his life to God in martyrdom. And in our own generation we have had thousands of similar cases.

Let me add a word of caution. Let no man turn this grace of God into lasciviousness. If any one imagines that he can turn to God late in life, and then by magic become as if he had loved and served all his days, he bitterly deceives himself. For it takes time to recover lost years, and if we do not give God the time we cannot gain this blessing.

Presume not upon the grace of God, nor despair of its power to recover. These words are intended chiefly to give hope to people who are

CONSCIOUS OF WASTED LIVES.

Have faith in God, O man, whoever thou art that hast spent thy living riotously. Turn to Him with all thy heart, and thou shalt find out the exceeding greatness of His power towards thee. The years that the locust hath eaten shall be restored. God wills it; but if thy life is to benefit thereby, thy will must say "Amen" to his. Fredk. C. Spurr.

The Secret of Gladness.

What can make the New Year glad,
Filled with light,
In her snow-white raiment clad,
Fair and bright?

What can make the soul rejoice,
Gloom depart,
As we sing with gladsome voice,
From the heart?

Nothing e'er such bliss can bring
Here below,
Till we, 'neath the heavenly wing,
Safely know!

He who once for sinners died
On the tree,
Calls us from our wanderings wide,
His to be!

When the Saviour's love we learn,
Wondrous sweet,
Bowing low, with hearts that burn,
At his feet;

When to Him our all we yield,
Glad to be
His, who hath our spirits healed,
Slaves set free—

Then our wave-tossed bark shall we
Homeward steer,
And a welcome give to thee,
Glad New Year!

Clevedon. Wm. Kitching.

Retrospect.

"We have known and believed the love that God hath toward us: God is love."—1 John iv. 16.

A wealth of good hath compassed us,
A wealth of wisdom planned;
And o'er this year, from end to end,
God's arc of grace hath spanned.

Once more his wondrous love shines forth
With strong life-giving ray,
As Christmas with its hallowed joy,
Doth cheer us on our way.

WOMEN'S WORK at HOME.

Home Teaching Society for the Blind.

FOR forty-two years a quiet Christian influence has been brought to bear by this Society on the lives of the poor adult blind of the metropolis. To those who sit in idle, hopeless darkness come the agents of the Home Teaching Society. They are all blind themselves; they know from personal experience how their pupils suffer, and cannot fail to sympathise. They teach them how to beguile the weary hours by reading with their fingers books in embossed types, on the systems invented by Dr. Moon and by M. Braille. But they teach other lessons of even greater value. Patience and fortitude, cheerfulness and self-reliance, are inculcated by example as well as precept, and through the power of the Holy Spirit many a doubter is won back to faith in the love and goodness of God.

To those who fail to learn the art of reading by touch, these agents act as Scripture-readers, and often carry the Gospel into places which it would not reach but for the affliction of some member of the household. Sad workhouse wards, too, are brightened by their visits, and sullen discontent is not seldom chased away by the opening of the sufferer's inward vision. It often happens that the poor blind pupils themselves become missionaries, for they read aloud to others from the Word of God. One such case may be mentioned. There is an old blind woman whose daughter keeps a laundry, and in the dinner-hour the rough girls employed there gather round her as she reads a chapter from the Bible. "How far that little candle throws his beams" God only knows.

This well-tried Mission is now suffering sorely from want of funds. Owing to the death of many liberal supporters its annual income is nearly £300 below its expenditure. It is hoped that Christian friends will come forward speedily to clear off the deficit of £220. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

Women Convalescents.

THE convalescent home is the poor man's or poor woman's country-house or seaside villa. It offers in many cases more comforts than are possible at home, plus change and complete rest and freedom from care. How to profit by these homes is a problem that, unaided, many of the poor find it difficult and sometimes impossible to solve, because the simpler arithmetical calculation, how to make both ends meet so as to compass daily necessities, taxes their powers to the utmost. It is a pleasant way of spending money to assist a poor friend or neighbour to solve this problem, or, failing friend or neighbour, to go outside the circle of acquaintance and give some brave heart a brief respite in such a Home from the struggle against sickness or poverty. Such a complete change of physical and mental life, which is, in more senses than one, is a beginning of which no man can see the end; it is one of the powerful levers that modern Christian enterprise has placed in the hands of Christian men and women.

A LEAP FROM GLOOM INTO SUNSHINE,

Among the youngest of convalescent homes (for it is little over five years old) is "The Convalescent Home for Women and Children, managed by women, and intended for the benefit of the wives and daughters of artisans, and for women engaged in warehouses and shops, and for domestic servants." As the outcome of a meeting of the principal lady collectors of the Saturday Hospital Fund of the Central London district, held in March, 1892, a convalescent home was established in the following July at Great Wakering, in Essex, with beds for twenty patients. The necessity for increased accommodation was the reason for migrating to Southend-on-Sea in 1894, and at the end of 1896 further demands on the Home compelled the committee to seek still larger premises. Although steps were taken in the direction of erecting a building at Southend specially adapted for the work of the Home, the project, for financial and other reasons, is for the present in abeyance; but in June of the present year the Home was removed from Southend to East Tilbury.

Sea View, where the Home is at present located, is on the outskirts of the little village of East Tilbury, is one mile from Low Street Station, on the London, Tilbury, and Southend Railway, and four miles from Tilbury; exactly opposite the latter place, on the Kentish side of the river, lies Gravesend. Sea View, also known as the Old Rectory House (the former name of the building), is a large and commodious house, with extensive grounds, such as gardens and orchards, and attached to the house is a large meadow.

"The expenditure of the Home is nearly £1000 per annum, and the annual subscriptions average about £400." But a perusal of the annual report or a letter of inquiry to the secretary or the committee will be the best method of ascertaining the extent of its requirements. The cost of keeping a patient at the Home for one week is half-a-guinea, exclusive of the railway fare from London (2s. 6d. return). Employers of women and girls may, and many do, make arrangements for beds to be specially reserved for their workpeople, the Home being open all the year round. The secretary is Mr. Robert Frewer, 4, Adam-street, Adelphi. The hon. treasurer is Miss A. S. Denning, 27, Onslow-square, London, S.W. Lady subscribers are invited to visit and inspect the Home.

Hungry School Children.

ALTHOUGH the last two years have been untouched by exceptional distress, and the winters have been mild, yet, in the schools aided by this fund, some forty cases of want have been reported by the teachers to the Board School Children's Free Dinner Fund. No one indeed can doubt the real work there is to be done by such a society as this, if—considering the large schools in poor districts, numbering perhaps 1,400 children—it is remembered that only from one to two hundred out of these are fed, all of them either the children of widows, or of parents ill, or out of work. For example, a widow and her eldest daughter working at juvenile suit making, who earn on the average together, 8s. per week, support three children who attend school. The father of several children attending school has been thrown out of work by illness for the last twelve months; he contracted a terrible blood poisoning on drainage work. This family live on the earnings of the mother, 6s. per week, and the help of the eldest girl (15) in service.

During the last few years "defective" children have been gathered into special schools. The doctors' testimony concerning many of these children is that their greatest need is nourishing food; wherever they are within our reach, free meals are liberally supplied to them.

If the winter before us be severe, the area of want will widen and suffering must be more acute; but even if the favourable condition of the last two years continue, we earnestly plead for the children within touch of our organisation, whom we know to be starving or under-fed. The Walworth Creche.

SLUM babies at this trying season of the year are evidently well looked after at this little institution, which has now nearly completed its third year of usefulness. Many a hard-working woman bread winner has cause to bless its open door. One's heart aches to think how the babies of the very poor would fare were it not for such places, passing their lonely little lives in some wretched back-room, foodless and fireless, with a three days' old bone for coral and bells, and an empty milk tin for a play toy.

Here baby is washed and fed and made happy, and when we looked in a few days ago it was a pretty sight to see the wee things, in the half light, sitting round the great fire, with their clean pinafores and shining faces, and a row of cradles behind with just a little nose, or a tiny hand visible under its blanket.

The mother is charged 2d. per day, which makes her feel she is paying for her child, thus avoiding any semblance of charity. Visitors are invited any day between two and four. Help to meet the heavy expenses of the winter is earnestly solicited, and may be sent to the Hon. Supt., The Crèche, South-street, Walworth, S.E.

Lady Warwick is about to propound a scheme for women workers by which she hopes to alleviate agricultural depression and assist the superfluity of women's labour. She proposes the establishment of an agricultural training college for women where they shall receive training in dairy work, poultry rearing, horticulture, fruit-growing, bee-keeping, etc.

Mrs. Butler's Resignation.

PROFESSOR STUART, M.P., writes:—"The Biennial Convention of the W.W.C.T.U. (to which the British Women's Temperance Association is affiliated), held in Toronto, passed a strong and pointed resolution, condemning 'regulation' in any form. The Executive re-elected Mrs. Butler as superintendent of the Purity department, but neutralised the effect of her appointment, as well as the resolution of the Convention, by re-electing Lady Henry Somerset as vice-president.

"Mrs. Butler therefore wrote to Miss Willard, the president, resigning the position of superintendent, the acceptance of which would be compromising to herself and to the principles for which she has so long contended. This action commended itself to all who have been in close association with Mrs. Butler in the war against regulation; and the Executive Committee of the Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice has unanimously passed the following resolution:—

That this committee respectfully offers to its leader, Mrs. Josephine Butler, its cordial thanks for, and appreciation of, the prompt and consistent manner in which, at a critical time in the history of our abolition movement, she has resigned her connection with the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union as world's superintendent of its Purity department.

This committee recognises with gratitude the loyalty to our cause expressed in the resolutions unanimously passed by the members of the W.W.C.T.U. at Toronto, but it regards the action of the Executive Committee of that body (which has for one of its objects the promotion of social purity) in re-appointing Lady Henry Somerset, a pronounced regulationist, as confusing to public sentiment, and as injurious to the progress of the great principles of this committee, of which principles Mrs. Butler has for nearly thirty years been the chief exponent and defender all over the world.

And this committee expresses its determination to continue the most uncompromising warfare against regulation in all forms and under every name, and by whomsoever maintained.

"Those who oppose State regulation do so because it is immoral, unjust, and against the best interests of the Army itself. The highest military hygienic authority, the Army Sanitary Commission, has frequently expressed its opinion that regulation has been a failure, and its belief that 'the best practical method of diminishing these diseases is to be found in establishing a system of voluntary lock hospitals, and in providing the soldiers as far as possible with healthy occupation and recreation.'"

OTHER HOME MISSIONS.

The Bessbrook Homes.

AMONG the many agencies for uplifting the fallen of this great city, there are none doing a greater work among the utterly lost men than the Bessbrook Homes, 39, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, under the direction of Mr. Keates.

Most of them have belonged to the board-carrying class, and all have been as low down as possible through drink and sin. Now, however, a large proportion of the 130 sheltered in the Homes are Christians, and are earning a comfortable living in connection with the advertising agency which the manager has built up by his industry.

As many as 100 meet for prayer on Sunday mornings. The other night sixteen rose to give themselves to Christ.

Mr. Keates is anxious to get a lantern to help the meetings during the long winter evenings. Perhaps some of our readers can help him in this.

Destitute Children's Dinners Society.

LAST year's Christmas appeal enabled us to give 200,838 dinners—5,054 more than in the previous year—towards which our penny subscribers contributed £436, an increase of £22. Already this year forty-seven dining-rooms have been opened. Several are ready to be opened, and are only waiting our support in aid of their local exertions to do so. The need is urgent for the helping hand that we may fulfil our intentions. There is undeniable want of dinners for the children at Rotherhithe, the Borough, Hackney, Bethnal Green, and many other places where infantine populations are suffering cold and hunger, undermining not life alone but the possibility of health, mental and physical.

Deaf and Dumb in Ireland.—A correspondent, writing as to the needs of this afflicted class, says:—"In Ireland we have over 5,000 deaf mutes, many of whom are industrious and hardworking citizens. Our endeavour is that not one should be without the 'glad tidings.' As they are scattered over the country the mission to them is largely an itinerant one. Help towards its operations would be welcomed by the hon. treasurer, Mr. E. Allworthy, 86, Donegal-street, Belfast."

AMONG the VILLAGES.

Bucks Evangelistic Mission.

THE neglected condition of many of our villages demands the close consideration of all Evangelical Christians. It is true that a small population scattered over a wide area, together with the difficulty of access, presents in many cases serious obstacles to successful evangelisation. But difficulties are made to be overcome, and in this particular respect many workers in various parts are solving the question by means of village missions, Gospel vans, Bible carriages, and similar means. Yet the field is very wide, and the villagers are in many places practically in ignorance of the Gospel or of God's plan of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ. True, there is a church in every parish, but the clergyman is frequently overtaxed and can only hold occasional services in outlying districts. Then the preaching may be altogether above the grasp of the villagers; while yet again, extreme ritualism and sacerdotal ceremonies hide, in numerous instances, the sweetness and simplicity of the Gospel.

These sad facts concerning our hamlets and villages have been pressed once more on my attention during a visit to Aylesbury—not that the surrounding district is exceptionally dark, but simply that it affords evidence of a state of things which calls urgently for prompt and vigorous endeavour.

Some thirty-five years ago a young man, converted in London, went to Beaconsfield, and at once became concerned on behalf of the unsaved around him. This led to special services, which were richly blessed, converts from these meetings being still found actively serving Christ. Soon this young worker—Mr. J. E. Taylor—was led further afield, and became the means of opening a whole series of village halls in and around Uxbridge, Slough, Chesham, Tring, and Chalfont St. Peters (Milton's home). Gradually he was led, step by step, to the county town of Aylesbury, where very remarkable services were held in the County Hall and the Corn Exchange. This led to the erection of a mission-hall. Here a good work continues in full activity, while many from time to time have been brought to Christ. Thus has been raised, many of whom go out into the villages bearing the precious seed. I was much interested on a recent Sunday to find the hall well filled, morning and evening, by an attentive audience, to whom it was a pleasure to speak.

Meanwhile earnest attention has been given to the towns and villages in the neighbourhood. No sooner does Mr. Taylor and his many co-workers find a place where no direct evangelistic work is in action, than they endeavour to start house-to-house visitation and special Gospel services. Thus more than twenty village stations have been established, where need was found of Gospel testimony. Often it has been painful to observe the dense darkness existing as to the simplest truths of our faith. A poor villager, being asked "Do you know Christ?" replied,

"THERE'S NONE O' THAT NAME LIVING HERE."

Alas! his ignorance is far from exceptional. To reach these outlying villages evangelists are sent out from Aylesbury and many of the other stations. The preachers are converted men from the Aylesbury Hall, evangelists from the Evangelisation Society, or earnest voluntary preachers from London and elsewhere. Over 300 of the Lord's servants in the thirty-five years have rendered help.

These extensive village operations are carried on by the Bucks Evangelistic Mission, under the active care of Mr. Taylor, who has for years devoted himself with intense zeal to this work. At present, with the aid of Mr. George Hunter, he is sustaining a 200 days' special mission in such places as Aston Clinton, Weston, Kingswood, Wendover, Chesham, and Aylesbury. Already these services have been greatly owned of God. Nor is it public preaching only, for systematic efforts are made to reach every house and cottage in the locality, with a view to personal conversation and the distribution of The Evangelist, a Gospel paper likely to be of real use in arousing interest in personal salvation. A colporteur (from Mr. Spurgeon's Colportage Association) is also constantly at work, reaching every cottage and farm-house over a wide area, taking about thirty villages in his rounds with horse and trap.

This purposeful village evangelisation has been blessed in the conversion of many, and not a few of the converts are now useful soul-winners—at home or among the heathen. I have given these brief notes on a valuable mission, first in order to suggest similar organised village missions in other districts—quite as needy—and second to call forth practical sympathy for Mr. Taylor in the expenses of his sustained and fruitful efforts to make known Christ in the small towns and villages of Buckinghamshire. His address is, The Bible Depôt, Aylesbury, Bucks. PEARL FISHER.

Church Association Work.

THE work of the Church Association is to expose Romish deceits, and oppose the sacerdotal movement in the Church of England. A large and increasing number of sermons and lectures are delivered weekly under its auspices by able and learned men, sometimes in the midst of much opposition from Romanists and Ritualists.

The Colporteur-Evangelist Mission proceeds with much promise. The men employed have been carefully examined as to their conversion, and their knowledge of the Bible and soundness in the faith. They are continually travelling through the country, some on foot and some in charge of vans. They preach the simple Gospel of salvation by free grace through the blood and righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ (for the Association does not believe that Protestantism is a mere negation). They sell large numbers of Bibles, Testaments, also Gospel books and tracts, and distribute freely many thousands of tracts. Their visits are received with much gratitude by many of the Lord's people, especially in places where an Evangelical ministry has been succeeded by a Ritualist, and there is only one place of worship.

On many a village green, and in many a cottage, mission hall, or barn, the people crowd, often in inclement weather, and many hearts are gladdened with the "old, old story of Jesus and his love." The difficulty is to get away from a place. One van went by request to a town for a week, and stayed for three weeks. At the next place to which it went request was made for a prolonged stay, and nearly a month was passed there.

The efforts of the evangelists are augmented by "Wycliffe Bands" from the "National Protestant League"—the popular branch of the Church Association—who go in tens or dozens to Ritualistic parishes, distribute tracts, and preach the truth. Eleven vans have been given to the Association, but no provision has been made for their maintenance. The expense of each is about £200 per annum—for the salary of one or two men, the keep or hire of a horse, and the wear and tear of the van. Three vans are at the present moment idle for want of funds. A special appeal is now being made for £500 to promote this good work. The office of the Church Association is at 11, Buckingham-street, Strand.

A Bible-Class Federation.

THE Quarterly Conference of the Young Men's Evangelical Bible-class Federation was held on Monday at St. Cuthbert's Mission Hall, West Hampstead. Representatives from a number of Bible-classes were present. Rev. H. F. Mercer (curate) opened with a rousing speech, exposing the eccentricities and inconsistencies of many professing Christians. He believed that the Federation would incite Bible-class members to an earnest, intelligent and prayerful study of the Word of God. The discussion was well sustained by Mr. J. Dick (Camden-road), Mr. Graham (St. Cuthbert's), Mr. Childs (Sidcup), Mr. A. Leggett (Devonshire-square), Mr. R. M. Waterhouse (the secretary), Mr. Sainsbury (Belle Isle), and a representative from Brondesbury. The vicar (Rev. W. J. Watkins) closed with an earnest speech, setting forth the necessity of the Holy Spirit. This is the first occasion on which the Federation has been entertained at an Episcopal place of worship, and the reception accorded was of the most friendly and enthusiastic character. All leaders and secretaries of Bible-classes are invited to send their names to the hon. sec. of the Federation, Mr. Reginald M. Waterhouse, 24, Norfolk-road, Dalston, N.

Mr. Newton Jones is leaving England for New Zealand, viâ Cape Town (returning viâ South America) for his health, by the ss. Ruahine, Jan. 6. He will be glad to know of any Christian workers in Monte Video or Rio Janeiro. His address is 7, Poplers-avenue, Willesden Green, N.W. He intends on returning by next May.

Causes of Failure.

SIR,—Mrs. Bosanquet, in her "Rich and Poor," calls attention to the sad fact that Christianity is not in possession in East London any more than in South London. That lady says that she believes this "utter and entire failure of Christianity to lift up the East London masses out of themselves, and give them wider interests and a more steadfast hold upon realities, is largely due to the Christian ministry having allowed the spirituality of its work to be swamped by the material needs around them."

As a thirty years' worker amongst the poor of East London, I must admit that this statement is true to some extent, though I cannot accept the word "largely." In any case, is the Christian ministry wholly to blame for this?

There are many reasons, additional to what Mrs Bosanquet says; some of them exceedingly grave and melancholy. The separation of the upper classes, the alteration of business relations, the failure of the C.O.S. to realise its ideal of relief organisation, the free press circulation of infidel and immoral literature, the unrestful influence of much legislation, the developments of certain forms of clubs and trades' unions, the factory-system growth, the dying-out of old home-life due to overcrowding, the tendency of the "powers that be" towards secularisation of the Lord's Day, the use of public parks for meetings and lectures of all kinds during the hours of divine worship, the growth of intemperance amongst the young, and even certain phases of our educational system have all had their share in of to-day. But, perhaps, most of the mischief has arisen from the multiplication of religious agencies, the competition of creeds to get hold of the people, the somewhat wholesale pauperisation by indiscriminate "bribery and corruption" of an eleemosynary nature, and the jealousies and wrangling of Christian agents and agencies. Many, alas, of the varied Christian ministry have devoted themselves to vilification of one another and to injury of one another's work; thus demoralising their own membership and disgusting the outside world of sinful humanity. I confess to years of pain and perplexity, shame and sorrow, over the terrible system of injury in the shape of gossip, mischief-making, reviling, and even active antagonisms on the part of not a few Evangelical workers, ministerial and lay,

CRIPPLING ONE ANOTHER'S LABOURS.

Can things be remedied? Not by man. The harvest naturally follows the laws of sowing, and Christianity reaps as it has sown. What we need is a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Evangelical communities in East London, as well as upon the multitudes of sinners. But must not repentance and reformation precede these Divine showers of blessing, in addition to universal prayer and supplication without ceasing?

Some modification of the system of charitable operations, would assist in reducing the harvest of tares. But even if a complete reformation of the Christian ministry and of the Church membership were effected, there is no guarantee that new religious agencies may not invade East London, and reintroduce the old evils and errors, and so compelling the reformers to resume their old system. Better for us to face the situation and humbly and honestly seek a basis of Christian harmony of mind and heart, on the principles of holiness and brotherly love amongst Evangelical ministries and communities.—Yours faithfully,

WM. ADAMSON, Vicar of Old Ford, E.

A Carol Party of ladies and gentlemen collected no less than £102 on Christmas Eve by singing in leading thoroughfares in the neighbourhood of Highbury, N., on behalf of a free dinner fund for the poor.

The Post Office and the Press.—Our contemporary, The News, has had an unpleasant experience of Post Office highhandedness by the stoppage of 8000 of its Christmas number on the ground that it did not contain a sufficient proportion of "news." This would be a curious reflection on the very title of the periodical if true; but it is not, the P.O. definition of "news" being certainly vague enough to have passed these issues without mulcting the proprietors in a sum of £50 and more—to say nothing of the grave inconvenience and delay.

What to do in the Holidays.

NOW that my young friends are recovering from the effects of Christmas I hope they are ready to "buckle to" for some good work.

First, there is the suggestion I gave a few weeks ago about making blotters, pin-cushions (round flat ones for the pocket as well as larger ones for the table), and other things, each with a little text attached, suitable for giving to soldiers and sailors.

Second, for many of you the Quarterly PRIZE COMPETITION has come round once more. I am glad to find so large a number eligible to enter for it.

Of course you will all do your best, and I hope a great many will get prizes. Especially let those who have been unsuccessful before, work extra hard so that they may not be left out again. And don't forget that neatness counts for something.

A Regular Little Turk.

A CHRISTIAN friend was spending the afternoon with me, and in the course of conversation that beautiful promise in Isaiah lv. 11—"My word . . . shall not return unto Me void," was quoted. "Yes," said my friend (herself a Sunday-school teacher for nearly sixty years), "I can tell you of a true circumstance in connection with that verse.

Many years ago, in the days when village schools were very different to what they are now (with all the modern requirements—certificated masters and mistresses, etc.), there was in the pretty village of N—— an infant schoolmistress. She dearly loved the boys and girls, and longed intensely that they should early learn to know and love their blessed Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. Month by month and year by year she taught these little ones, often discouraged, yet patiently sowing the seed—God's Word.

Many years passed, old age came on, and she could teach no longer. One day a stranger from abroad arrived in the village, and anxiously inquired if Mrs. P——, the infant schoolmistress, were still alive, and where did she live? Her address was soon given, and he found his way to her little home. He then told her that he had come in fulfilment of a promise he had made to a very dear friend now dead. The promise he had given was that on his return to England he would go to the village of N—— and find out Mrs. P——, and tell her that Tom Harris (I do not know the real name) had gone home to be with Jesus—so happy, a sinner saved and forgiven, and that it was all through her. He had been, he said, "a very naughty, troublesome little boy," a "regular little turk"; but the texts so patiently taught had never been forgotten, and far away from the sweet Devon home, in a distant land, those very texts were used by the Spirit of God to show him his condition as a lost sinner, and also point him to Jesus, the Saviour—the way, the truth, and the life. We can all picture the joy of the dear old lady, now for many years safely home herself in the many mansions of our Father's house. E. T. G.

God Claims Me.

THE late Earl Cairns, when he was ten years old, heard a Belfast minister say in his sermon, "God claims you." These words stuck to the boy, and kept echoing in his soul, "God claims you." He said to himself, "And He has a good right to claim me. He made me and He cares for me; and He has sent his Son to die for me." And he resolved to yield himself to God at once. His motto to the end was "God claims me."

Our Prize Competition.

OCTOBER TO DECEMBER.

Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following Rules is STRICTLY OBSERVED, especially No. 7? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right nine times out of twelve.
2. Competitors will be divided into FOUR DIVISIONS:—
   I. Those under TEN years of age.
   II. Those over TEN and under THIRTEEN.
   III. Those over THIRTEEN and under FIFTEEN
   IV. Those over FIFTEEN.
3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "PRIZE COMPETITION," and the NUMBER of the DIVISION to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom" as usual.
4. At the top of your answer paper write very clearly your DIVISION, your FULL NAME and ADDRESS, and your AGE last birthday.
5. NUMBER YOUR ANSWERS exactly to correspond with the questions.
6. Every paper must be SIGNED by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.
7. No CONCORDANCE and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. Competitors must not help each other.
8. Answers must be posted not later than Monday, Jan. 10. The results will be announced on Jan. 20.
9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, etc., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

Every answer will be examined separately by three persons; and NO PAPERS can be re-examined after the lists appear.

Those who cannot do ALL the questions set for their division must do AS MANY AS THEY CAN, and will receive marks accordingly.

☞ CHAPTER and VERSE must be given wherever possible.

DIVISION I.

1. (a) What was manna for? (b) What was it like?
2. (a) What happened to Aaron's rod? (b) Where was it afterwards put? (Hebrews.)
3. (a) Who was let down a city wall in a basket? (b) Why? (c) What city was it? (d) Where did he go to then?
4. (a) Describe the death of Stephen. (b) What were his dying words?

DIVISION II.

1. (a) What happened near Eshtaol? (b) Who rode on seventy ass colts? (Judges.)
2. (a) What do you know of a cake of barley bread? (Judges.) (b) And a cake of meal? (Kings.)
3. (a) What tribes settled on the east side of Jordan? (b) Why did they want to? (c) What promise had they to make first?
4. (a) Who said, "Sir, come down ere my child die"? (b) To whom did he say it? (c) What was the result?

DIVISION III.

1. (a) How many Pharaohs do we read of in the history of the children of Israel? (b) What noted men were brought into contact with each? (c) In what way?
2. (a) Who "taught the men of Succoth"? (b) How did he do so? (c) Why?
3. What do you know of (a) Shamgar, (b) Deborah, (c) Boaz? (d) What king was a descendant of the last?
4. To whom and by whom were the following words spoken? (a) Come, see a man that which told me all things that ever I did. (b) Hath any man brought him ought to eat? (c) I have no man . . to put me into the pool. (d) If he sleep he shall do well. (e) In a, b, and d say also who is referred to.

DIVISION IV.

1. (a) Describe the origin of the term "Shibboleth"? (b) What man was concerned with it?
2. (a) What King of Persia commanded the rebuilding of the house of God at Jerusalem? (b) How had it been destroyed? (c) Who took the lead in carrying out the matter?
3. (a) Who said, "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans"? (b) To whom? (c) Describe fully the origin of their enmity.
4. (a) With whose death in the Old Testament (and referred to in the New) would you compare the death of Stephen? (b) What lesson does the comparison suggest?

The following are eligible for the competition:—

Personal.

Many thanks to the kind friends who have sent gifts for the sick and poor children.

MAUD EDDEY.—You may do the usual number of questions this week, but for the Prize Competition you must do those set for your actual age. AMELIA FRAZER'S MOTHER.—Many thanks for your kind note. I have done as you requested. With the stamps sent I bought some sweets to send to the workhouse. EDITH PLEDGER.—I think it would be better if you enclosed your paper in an envelope, leaving it open. BELLA MACK.—I can quite understand what sorrow you must be in, and very much sympathise with you all. QUEENIE AND LOUIS MATTHEWS.—I think if you bought ruled paper your papers would look far neater. You should rule a margin on the left side, and in it put the number of the answer, and then leave a space between each answer. At present your papers are very difficult to read. "CORONA HOUSE."—Your paper is written more neatly this week; but how can I enter you in the Correct List if you do not sign your name? LOUIE TIBBITS, G. N. and B. BROOKFIELD.—Very many thanks. You will find your initials in the "Donation List."

"Jesus Tempted."—Matt. iv. 1-11.

Golden Text.—"For in that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succour them that are tempted."—Heb. ii. 18.

Note.—The essence of temptation is generally the desire to attain some object by a short cut. Work this idea out. The path of duty is long, tedious. But often "the longest way round is the shortest way home."

The Comfort of Christ's Temptation.—It helps us to remember that temptation, so far from being a sign of our waywardness, may be a sign of our nearness to Christ.

> It is one thing to be tempted;
> Another thing to yield.

Temptation the Only Road to a Strong Character.—(Illustration: The blacksmith's arm becomes powerful through continual tests.) Repeated attempts at anything leads on to perfection. All who are in after years to hold important positions should not fear to be tempted and tried. (Illustration: Hothouse plants cannot stand the rain and cold; hothouse characters are useless for the great battle of life.) Christ knew where his strength lay before the experience in the wilderness, but after it He proved to the world that it lay in God. Take each temptation separately, and apply it. They call in question the faithfulness of God in providence, in protection, in promise.

I. Temptation through Bodily Craving (ii. 4).—After forty days wrapt in deep thought and prayer, in which the needs of the body were forgotten, Christ hungered. This was quite natural. Illustrate by the intense craving for food of those cast away on a desert island how real this temptation was. The Devil tempts him to relieve the craving by a very easy method. But the desire for gratifying Himself must be conquered. If He is to sympathise with those who are tempted by the desires of the body, it will not do to give way to the desire just when it is strongest. Christ's answer was: "Man shall not live by ordinary bread alone. God will supply the need of both body and soul when He sees fit." The reference is to Deut. viii. 3, where God sent manna to the Israelites. All the bodily appetites are there to be satisfied, but by God's method and in God's time. "We must live." No; we must be honest and do what is right. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God."

II. Temptation through Presumption (5-7).—"Pinnacle" or "wing" of temple, from which it was 600 feet sheer down into the valley of Himmon. The temptation was that if Christ had fallen from so great an height unhurt the people would believe in Him. "The Devil can cite Scripture." He often tempts us to do wrong by citing the case of some Bible character who committed a similar crime. Christ's answer was, "It is not right to tempt God," i.e., to distrust his loving wisdom by childishly trying his power. Reference, Deut. vi. 16. The practical application is that we must not expect God to do for us what we can do for ourselves, or that He will protect us in every danger into which folly and not duty has led us. We must not be careless about our health and expect God to protect us, nor rush into temptation needlessly and expect God to save us from it. We must not jump up to any lofty position, or jump down from it when there are other means (e.g., a stairway) which we can safely use.

III. Temptation Through Ambition (8-11).—Christ was to rule the world in righteousness. How was this to be accomplished? The Devil promises to give Him all the kingdoms of the world if Christ will worship him. So with us—"You shall gain your ambition if you will follow my methods." Thousands meet with this temptation and are overcome by it. Christ answers, "It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and Him only shalt thou serve" (Deut. vi. 13). "Whatever comes, I will do the righteousness of God." He never pandered to the methods of the Devil—but denounced him and his works in every place. He won for Himself the hatred of thousands, but one day the "Kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ." How Christ won. By using the Sword of the Spirit which is the word of God. In all our trials if we use our Master's weapon we shall achieve our Master's victory.

News Summary.

HOME.

OVER a thousand deserving poor have received the Queen's Christmas gifts known as the "Minor Bounty" and the "Royal Gate" alms.

After a discussion of several hours, the Glasgow Corporation decided by a large majority to reject a motion to open the People's Palace on Glasgow-green on Sundays.

Five hundred poor women in Willesden are to receive one cwt. of coals as a Christmas gift out of the balance of the Lord Mayor's grant of the Princess of Wales's Jubilee Fund.

A fellowship for women of the value of £100 for three years, to be called the Geoffrey fellowship, has been presented to Newnham College, Cambridge. The first award will be made in June, 1898.

Under the Act for the Better Observance of the Lord's Day proceedings were taken against seven Aberystwyth fishermen for fishing in Cardigan Bay on Sunday, Nov. 21. The summons was dismissed.

There are nearly 30,000 children in London Hospitals, workhouses, and other charities. The annual "Truth" exhibition of dolls and toys to be presented to these poor and suffering little folk as Christmas presents took place at the Royal Albert Hall.

The third "Rowton House," or the poor man's hotel, has been opened at Newington-butts. It contains 805 cubicles, and for the small charge of sixpence provides various hotel "luxuries," including papers and magazines, chess and draughts, "cooking utensils," and a "foot-bath"! And the speculation pays.

At a meeting of the Council of the Hospital Fund initiated by the Prince of Wales in commemoration of Her Majesty's Diamond Jubilee, it was elicited that the total amount reached £187,000, including £20,500 of annual subscriptions. The income will be £22,000 a year, exclusive of the sale of hospital stamps, which is expected to yield some £40,000.

Speaking at Northampton, Lord Spencer testified to the value of technical education. He thought that the difficulty in the way of carrying it out arose from the want of good secondary education. Much had been done for education in the Victorian age, but it was absolutely necessary to fill the gaps existing between primary and university education.

Mr. G. N. Curzon, M.P., at the distribution of prizes in connection with the London Chamber of Commerce examinations, declared that everywhere the practical was superseding the ornamental. He strongly urged that in face of foreign competition, young men and women should give increased attention to the advancement of knowledge that would assist them in the practical and ordinary business of life.

There is to be published at Darmstadt in a few days a booklet which is supposed to be written by Princess Beatrice, entitled "Consolation in Suffering: Fruits of the Reading of a Mourner, translated from the English by von L." A preface by a Hessian clergyman states "that the contents of the little book were collected and thought out in hours of the deepest sorrow, and touch upon all the questions that stir us when our dear ones die."

At the close of the eighty-second sitting of the Royal Commission on the Liquor Licensing Laws the meetings were adjourned till next February. Urgent reforms have been unanimously advocated, amongst them the imposition of greater restrictions on grocers' licences. It was also shown that relatively offences arising out of drunkenness were much more numerous in Scotland than in either England or Ireland, and that Scotch laws concerning drunkenness were very lax.

Mrs. Ann Eyre Hely has been awarded by Her Majesty the Royal Red Cross. She joined Miss Florence Nightingale's staff of nurses in the Crimea, and served until the end of the war, rendering splendid service. Mrs. Hely's advanced age prevented her journeying to Windsor to receive the order from the Queen in person. Lady Cave Brown Cave therefore made the presentation in Her Majesty's name at the Ravenstone Hospital, Ashby-de-la-Zouch, of which institution Mrs. Hely is an inmate.

A boyish combat between the youths of Hampton Wick and of Teddington, some of the combatants in which belonged to the "Church Lads' Brigade," gave occasion for the magistrate, before whom the case was tried, to speak strongly against the military form of some of the religious institutions at work amongst the young. He claimed that a "warlike spirit was fostered by these military methods, by drills, marchings, and counter-marchings;" and this spirit found vent in unseemly frays and military swagger, and so on. That there is a serious peril in this direction follows from the nature of things, and if these institutions are to be kept from working general mischief among the young their promoters must be very strictly on their guard.

FOREIGN.

In Uganda the mutineers are still holding out.

The Japanese are on the alert; a large squadron having left Nagasaki.

A number of people have been killed or injured by severe earthquake shocks at Smyrna.

Over three hundred miles of railway in the French Congo are completed. The line will be open in May.

A new telegraph cable is to be laid to Jamaica viâ Bermuda. It is to run "all through British territory."

Mr. A. C. Harmsworth has presented his Arctic ship Windward to Lieut. Peary for use in his projected Arctic expedition.

The committee of the French Chamber, to whom the bill was referred for the annexation of Tahiti by France, have approved the measure.

The new Paris journal, Fronde, is edited and composed entirely by women. The authorities have given the girl compositors a week's notice "to cease this state of affairs."

There is an alarming drought in Cape Colony, the most disastrous known for generations. Stock is perishing, and farmers fear ruin, while in some places the coloured population is starving.

The Spanish Navy is to be increased at a cost of 50,000,000 pesetas. If a public subscription is opened for that purpose the Marquis Villamayor offers £10,000, while the Marquis Comillas is expected to double that amount, and other Spanish millionaires are likely to follow.

An American, Mr. Walter Wellman, with other Arctic authorities, believes that Herr Andrée is still alive. Mr. Wellman offers to take a search party to Franz Josef Land free of charge. The American Government has communicated this generous offer to the King of Sweden.

An international committee for the relief of Eastern Christians has been formed in Rome, of which Prince Odescalchi is vice-president. During a recent journey in the East the Prince became an eye witness of nameless horrors and miseries. These he now seeks to assuage. It is intended to found a college at Rome, where the children of massacred Armenians will be educated.

Simply appalling is the modern growth of military armaments. A German military critic says: "If we could have all the armies of the Continent on a war footing and drawn up in one long procession, with their guns and ammunition and baggage wagons, the column would be more than 24,000 miles long. Marching day and night, it would take nearly a year to pass a given point."

The adventurous miners at Klondike are not to perish with hunger. A Bill has passed the United States' Senate, appropriating £50,000 for the purchase of food for their relief, provided the Canadian Government consents to the expedition entering Canadian territory. Provisions will be sold at fixed prices where possible, while in some cases of severe distress a gratuitous distribution will be made. It is expected that the expedition will start before the end of January.

Information has been received by the directors of the London Missionary Society from the deputation of the board which has been visiting the island of Madagascar. Mr. Evan Spicer left Tamatave for England in the Messageries Maritimes steamer on the 18th inst., and Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson is now in Mauritius on his way to South Africa. Both are well. The Society's work in Madagascar may possibly, in future, be more limited in extent than formerly, and may still have to encounter opposition and difficulty; but the frank, firm, and dignified representations made by the deputation to General Gallieni and other French officials have not been without effect, and there is ground for hoping that the policy of avowed hostility to the society will now be abandoned, and the same liberty be accorded to the missionaries of the London Missionary Society as is granted to those of other societies.

"The recent riots in Prague," writes Dr. A. W. Clark, "were perhaps not so bad as represented in the daily press, but bad enough they were. Lives were sacrificed, and over one thousand were wounded. I am happy to state that not one of our adherents was in any way connected with the riots ing, and that not one of them was in the least injured. Every day this month scores of persons have been arrested for their share in the riot and plunder, but we can say to the Government, 'You have had no occasion to punish any of those who love to hear the Gospel.' The bearing of our members in such a time will in the end be a help to the cause of Christ. No prisons, nor soldiers, nor policemen are needed to keep those in order who live according to the Bible. We are still under martial law, but its severity has been already relaxed. At first all houses were compelled to lock up at seven, but now they may remain open until nine, and this is very desirable for our evening meetings and Y.M.C.A. work."

The Evangelistic Field.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN WIGAN.

A UNITED mission was commenced in Wigan on Sunday, December 5, by Mr. Clarke. Several weeks previously united weekly meetings for prayer were held in the various churches, and were well attended. The preparations were elaborate and thorough. The general committee was composed of the Free Church ministers of the town, with representatives from their churches, Sunday-schools, Endeavour societies and guilds; also representatives from religious and charitable agencies outside the churches. The afternoon "Bible Talks to Christians" were greatly appreciated, and proved a source of spiritual quickening to hundreds. His fresh setting and loving presentation of Gospel truth interested, instructed, and delighted all. These talks cannot fail to lift the level of spiritual life in the churches. The evening meetings so increased in interest and numbers that at the end of the first week the committee was compelled to abandon the churches and seek accommodation in the Drill Hall, the largest in the town. On Sunday, December 12, this great building was crowded to its utmost capacity in the afternoon and evening, and hundreds had to be turned away.

Rev. Fred. Lamb, U.M.F. Church, writing to a local paper, said: "Some of Mr. Clarke's addresses are long, sustained, and closely-reasoned arguments of great power, concluding with tender and most impressive appeals based upon the argument. He indulges in no rhetorical tricks of the orator, but seems to stand close up to the individual man or woman's judgment and conscience, speaking quietly and calmly to convince the one and awaken the other, and he succeeds in a way really remarkable."

Mr. Clarke's address generally extends over fifty minutes, which is nearly twice as long as the orthodox sermon; yet the interest never for a moment flags. When he comes to the after-meeting, not many appear to leave the church or hall, and in a minute or two all is hushed. Mr. Clarke then requests silent prayer, and makes a very quiet appeal for those present there and then to decide for the service of Christ, and every night scores of people respond and enter the inquiry room. The number has already reached nearly 500. Mr. Clarke does not simply call upon sinners to "believe—only believe." He insists most strongly upon repentance—the utter abandonment of all known wrong, or even things questionable or doubtful, and insists on obedience to Christ as an element of "saving faith." Hence he calls upon his audience not only to receive Christ as a Saviour to deliver them from their sins, but as a King to whom they must render a constant obedience. There seems thus to be a manly robustness in this evangelism which in that of the past we have too often missed.

Mr. Clarke's last Sunday in the town was a great day. In the morning he addressed a large audience of young men and women connected with Endeavour Societies and Guilds. In the afternoon and evening the Drill Hall must have had from three to four thousand people packed into it. The evening meeting will not be soon forgotten. There were two after-meetings, and more than one hundred people entered the inquiry-room. Monday, December 20, was the concluding service. The young converts, numbering about 650, were admitted to reserved seats, and the other portions of the hall were filled with an eager throng anxious to share in the blessing of the closing service. Mr. Clarke, in his address to the young converts, pointed out how they must act in order to develop the current of life which had begun to flow. A singularly impressive part of this service was the reading of a solemn covenant which Mr. Clarke signed as the proxy of the great audience. In token of their assent the audience stood. At the close the evangelist was besieged by crowds of his converts anxious to shake his hand and bid him an affectionate good-bye. Thus ended a series of Gospel meetings unparalled in every respect in the history of the town. The great day of account will declare the far reaching results of this highly successful mission, for which the ministers and the Christian public are deeply grateful to God.

J. KERR CRAIG, Chairman of Committee.

REV. J. McNEILL IN HAWICK.

THIS evangelist has closed his two weeks' mission here—the last he will undertake before entering on the lengthened London campaign. A correspondent of a Hawick paper, who went to the meetings there, prejudiced against the preacher, tells how all his prepossessions vanished in the first service he attended, and says:—

The religion Mr. McNeill preaches is tremendously practical: he will have no laziness, no indulged ill-temper, allowed to comfortably exist along with church-going and sacrament-receiving. Intense faith, solid, practical life of doing good and striving to be good: this is the creed preached by John McNeill. I do not say that his exact style or grandly forcible appeals are such as an ordinary minister should endeavour to follow every Sunday in his regular ministrations. There is a quiet, most useful work of steady "building-up and strengthening" to be done, as well as the equally necessary work of rousing, awakening, startling even. But this latter work needs to be done for many, not a doubt of that—for many in Hawick as elsewhere. And this is the man for the work, with his rush of onward-sweeping eloquence, his plain home-thrusts at comfortable, unconscious inconsistency; his tender appeals in the name of a gentle, loving Saviour, and his arrows of witty, keen contempt for self-satisfied intellectual "superiority."

Drive out unworthy prejudice, forbear the carping criticism which may be able, perhaps, to seize on a slight flaw here and there (or which, at any rate, thinks it can), and then, judging of Mr. John McNeill's work as a whole—and every man, every work, should be judged by that measure alone—one can only approve of it, and hope that it may bear solid and lasting results.

MR. NIX AT HOYLAND, BARNSLEY.

FOR some weeks preparations have been going steadily forward for this mission for the six days, December 15 to 29, so that by the time a printed programme had been carried from door to door by a band of voluntary workers it seemed as if the attention of the whole community had been arrested. From first to last there was a deep and solemn impression made. About 100 signed the pledge, and many surrendered to Jesus Christ, in addition to the renewed consecration of many Christian professors.

The most important feature of the mission was the hiring of the Princess Theatre for the Sunday night service. In ten minutes after the doors of the theatre were opened nearly 1800 people had crowded into the building, whilst numbers were turned away for want of room. This evidence of a desire on the part of the masses to hear the Word of God when preached in a style so attractive as that which characterises the work of Mr. Nix raises the question whether this theatre, which has never paid its way as a place of amusement, ought not to be secured and transformed into a Gospel Hall, in which evangelistic and social work could be carried on. This theatre could be bought at once at a very low price. Any friend willing to help in securing it should communicate with Rev. Thos. Riley Belmont, Hoyland, near Barnsley.

EVANGELISTS' MOVEMENTS.

Missions have been conducted in Bulford and Durrington Chapels by Miss HADDON, of Clipston, and Rev. ROSS WILLIAMSON, of Romsey. The Holy Spirit's power was felt in all the meetings, several persons were deeply convicted of sin, some of whom made confession of Christ.

Rev. J. MANTON SMITH, who is on an evangelistic tour in America, has been well received in New York and Philadelphia. He is to conduct a mission at Yonkers, in connection with Dr. Pentecost, the first week in the New Year, and then will proceed to Toronto for a united mission.

Mr. SAMPSON opened a special mission at Holsworthy by riding round the town on horseback, with crier's bell in hand, and announcing in loud tones his intention to conduct evangelistic services for ten days. The missioner was intensely earnest, the church has been greatly blessed, and there have been not a few conversions.

Mrs. E. L. BAEYERTZ concluded a ten days' mission in the Presbyterian Church, Gloucester (Rev. G. M. Smith, pastor), on the 22nd inst. The meetings were largely attended and representative of all the churches in the city. On Sunday, the 19th, the church was crowded out, and a great many were turned away. The interest in the meetings both deepened and extended as they proceeded. Over one hundred inquirers were dealt with, and the meetings for men only was a distinct success; many of the men were broken down under the power of the truth. The Bible readings were most helpful to Christians, and the addresses on the baptism of the Holy Ghost and holiness, the last of the series, were powerful in their appeals to a life of entire consecration to God. Mrs. Baeyertz's visit will long be remembered in Gloucester. It is a long time since there was such a widespread interest in a mission and so many tokens of blessing.

Rev. T. WAUGH has held a most successful mission at Wath-upon-Dearne. Men's meetings, held each Sunday afternoon, were largely attended. Many turned to the Lord. At a meeting for women only, held in the afternoon of the last day of the mission, several decided for Jesus.

A series of evangelistic services have been conducted by Rev. W. F. HOLT in Holybourne. The weather has been in the main favourable—a fact of much importance in a country charge, and the meetings were well attended, especially towards the close. Not only the usual church-goers, but some who rarely, if ever, attend any place of worship, were to be seen at the meetings. The village has been stirred, and the interest of many has been awakened. On the last night many held up their hands to intimate that they had closed with the offer of the Gospel during the services.

Mrs. PENN-LEWIS will (D.V.) conduct meetings for workers at St. Peter's, Devonshire-street, Islington, from Jan. 5 to 7 (inclusive), at 11.30, 3.30, and 8 p.m. each day.

A successful series of Gospel meetings has been held in Knockloughrim Methodist Church, Magherafelt, by Miss Wakefield, of Portadown, and a similar series in Ashadowey Presbyterian Church by Mr. Jackson, Assembly's evangelist. In each case several professed to have been led to decision for Christ.

Mr. MONRO COLLINGS has recently concluded an encouraging mission in the Leigh Chapel, Tonbridge. One of the oldest workers in connection with the place said he had never experienced such power in any services before, as he did during an address on "Strive to enter in at the Strait Gate." Some who have long been prayed for and some who were thought to be the most unlikely came out and professed Christ. Mr. Collings is now resting for two weeks.

Last week, Mr. B. H. ANGEL closed a two months' mission in Guernsey, with encouraging results. He asks prayer for a months' mission in Hertfordshire during January.

At Vernon Chapel, King's Cross, Mr. E. P. TELFORD has concluded a very helpful sixteen days' mission. 130 names have been given in as professing to receive blessing. One very interesting case of conversion was brought about by a Christian policemen. Being requested to remove a young woman from a public-house, he spoke kindly to her and gave her his wife's address, and invited her to the mission meeting. She came with the wife, accepted the Saviour, signed the pledge, and is now in a situation.

MR. E. P. TELFORD, Taunton, Jan. 2-13; Beverley 16-27.
MR. J. J. SIMS, during January, in Bristol.
MRS. E. L. BAEYERTZ, Huddersfield, in January.
GIPSY SMITH, Newcastle, Jan. 8-17; Banbury, 22-31.
MR. F. C. SPURR, Swaffham, Jan. 1-9; Bradford, Jan. 15-23.
The WEAVER BROTHERS, Glasgow (Cowcaddens), Jan 9-28.
MR. W. R. LANE, Jan. 3-14, Mission to City men, Alders gate-street Y.M.C.A.; 16-27, the Dome, Brighton.
MR. CHARLES INGLIS, Bromley, 31; the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, in January.
MR. GEORGE CLARKE. Finsbury Park Congregational Church, Jan. 9; Putney, 16-31.
REV. JOHN MCNEILL, London, from Jan. 16, 1898. Fortnight's missions: 1, Metropolitan Tabernacle; 2 Westminster Chapel.

Requests for Prayer.

For a united mission by Mr. William Forbes at Rushden.

For a four weeks' mission in the Tent Hall Salt Market, Glasgow, beginning Jan. 2.

For a mission to be held by Mr. Rochford at Cage-lane Mission Hall, Plumstead, Jan. 2-16.

For a fifteen days' mission to be held at Lundome Hall, Charlton, S.E., Jan. 2 to 16, by Mr. James Lovell.

For much blessing upon a series of special services in Wick, beginning on January 2, to be conducted by Mr. James Walker.

1897-8.

A NEW YEAR'S GREETING.

"Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—Rom. xiii. 11.

May our loins be girded tighter,
May our pilgrim steps be lighter,
May our faces beam the brighter,
Loved ones, as we speed our way,
For our Lord is coming nearer,
As his love we see the clearer,
While his precious name is dearer,
As draws near the crowning day.

By atoning blood forgiven,
Backward all opposers driven,
Oh, what joy to meet in heaven,
Trials, woes, and sorrows gone!
Founded on the Saviour's merit,
Dead, but quickened by the Spirit,
Joys eternal to inherit,
Round the everlasting throne.

Haste we then, rich pleasures finding,
To our hearts God's precepts binding,
Earth's delights no longer blinding,
Pleasures knowing, ever new;
Telling forth the endless story
Of a Saviour bruised and gory,
Soon to meet above in glory,
Blessed, peerless home in view.

ALBERT MIDLANE.

"THERE GO THE SHIPS!"

"THERE go the ships!" Thus go the years—
But, fleeter far than fleetest ships,
As on we go, His presence cheers,
While, sounding forth from Jesus' lips—
When heart would quake, from fear of ill,
We hear his welcome "Peace, be still!"

"There go the ships!" So pass the years
In quick succession, one by one;
We come, and go, with smiles and tears—
How rapidly the race is run!
Whate'er the coming days may fill,
Let Him aye whisper, "Peace, be still!"

"There go the ships!" 'Mid flying years,
For Him we would our vigil keep,
To Jesus live till He appears—
Awake! no time is this for sleep!
And, as we seek to do his will,
We oft shall hear his "Peace, be still!"

"There go the ships!" With fleeting years
We sail as from a foreign shore.
Each day the home-land harbour nears,
Where storms are hushed, to rise no more.
Glad joy shall all the ransomed thrill,
When He repeats it—"Peace, be still!"

KINGSGATE-STREET CHAPEL.—For the Christmas festival to the poor children; also for toys, bon-bons, and the like, for a Christmas-tree.—Rev. H. THOMAS, Kingsgate Chapel, Holborn, W.C.

ORANGE STREET CONGREGATIONAL CHAPEL.—To give many poor a New Years treat, and to those who are sick and aged, coal and dinner at their own homes; and also to provide the treats for the poor children of Seven Dials, Soho, and district.

SHAFTESBURY INSTITUTE. — Help is needed to brighten Christmas for the hungry slum children, the mothers of our Crèche, the factory girls, the dustheap women, the apple and flower women, the street-hawkers who sleep nightly under our roof, and the lodging-house men in connection with the Mission.—Miss MEREDITH BROWN, Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson-grove, N.W.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.—To give to the poor and needy in the back streets and alleys surrounding the Great Hall materials for providing a Christmas dinner in their own homes, Every case is investigated. All workers give their services gratuitously. Every penny is spent in food. Eight hundred families were helped last year.—F. N. CHARRINGTON, Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E.

THE PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES' FUND AND HOME helps struggling governesses and elderly gentlewomen in the decline of life who may be homeless, without means, or in failing health; or others awaiting engagements and unable to pay. The work is sadly cramped for want of funds to obtain a small house, so necessary for comfort; the inconvenience of carrying it on in apartments is very great. The little home at present has only accommodation for three ladies. — Miss CLEMENTINA KINGDON, 22, Chatham-place, Brighton.

Obituary.

MR. PAUL ASKIN, DUBLIN.

ONE of the oldest and most respected citizens of Dublin, Mr. Paul Askin, J.P., passed away on Saturday, 18th inst. For a great many years he was a familiar figure in the public life of Dublin, an active and zealous promoter of every good work and cause. He was a sincere Evangelical Churchman, and an uncompromising Protestant, who did not hesitate to avow his principles and to maintain them on any occasion on which they were brought in question. His personal and social influence, which was considerable, was always given with whole-hearted earnestness to the support of every object calculated to promote the cause of charity in its widest sense and of practical religion. The Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland was felt to have a special claim on his advocacy and aid, he being the senior member of the committee. Many other good institutions owed much to his helpful sympathy.

REV. C. F. CHILDE.

The long and faithful service rendered by Mr. Childe, as Principal of the C.M.S. College, Islington, endeared him to Evangelicals throughout the land, who will hear with regret of his death, on his ninetieth birthday, at Cheltenham, where he had been living in retirement for the last few years. Although he had lived to a patriarchal age, he was until within a few years ago a familiar figure in the C.M.S. Committee-room, and at the missionary meetings. His appearance was at once striking and impressive, his long, flowing white hair easily marking him out in any public gathering. His interest in what he used to call "our beloved C.M.S." was almost life-long, and when, in 1839, he was appointed Principal of the College, he applied himself to the work of training candidates for the foreign field with an energy and devotion which knew no bounds. He held the position for nearly twenty years, retiring in 1858 on his appointment to the rectory of Holbrook, Suffolk. But though this official connection with the society was severed, his interest in the work continued to be as bright and active as possible. He was greatly beloved by his pupils, many of whom in after years filled important positions in the foreign field; indeed, some whose names shine most brightly in the annals of the C.M.S. were trained for their work by him.

The Y.W.C.A.

THE annual convention of the Indiana Y.W.C.A. was held last month in Terre Haute, Ind.

Although the new building of the Harlem Y.W.C.A. is not yet completed, the rooms were opened to members last month.

The Dublin Association has had a most successful public meeting in the Metropolitan Hall. After tea, Mrs. S. H. Smith, president for Ireland, took the chair (the hall being filled), and spoke of recent advances in the Y.W.C.A. work in Ireland. The Employment Agency Home, Dublin, has lately been removed to a larger house at 22, Ely-place, and maintains its good work. A new house of residence for lady students has been opened on the north side of the city. In the Belfast Institute and Home additional accommodation has been provided in the house adjoining. In Cork, the Institute and Home has been removed to 3, Sidney-place. "Since last autumn (1896), we are glad to record, that fifteen new branches of the Association have been opened over Ireland. The mission-field has at least 105 of our members." Rev. H. Montgomery gave a very earnest address.

"The Protestant Alliance Official Organ," with which is incorporated "The Monthly Letter," established forty-five years ago, is a monthly paper, the first number of which bears date January, 1898. As is well known, the Alliance was founded in 1851 as a rallying point for testimony and work on the part of Protestants generally, whatever their political opinions or views on distinctively ecclesiastical questions. The aim of the organisation is to defend the Scriptural doctrines of the Reformation, and the principles of religious liberty, against all manner of Papal encroachments and demands. The Official Organ bids fair to prove of great service in the pursuit of these important ends. It contains instructive articles, also notes on passing events and points of interest in the controversy with Rome. The paper is edited pro tem. by Dr. W. Kennedy Moore, and it is hoped that it will have a large circulation. (1d. monthly. Protestant Alliance Office, 430, Strand, W.C.)

Scottish Notes.

MISS FLORENCE BALGARNIE has been addressing large gatherings at Aberdeen on Temperance and relative subjects.

Rev. W. M. Macgregor, of Renfield Free Church, Glasgow, has intimated his acceptance of a call to Free St. Andrew's, Edinburgh.

The Glasgow Corporation have declined, by 44 votes to 18, to accede to a proposal to open the People's Palace, on Glasgow Green, on the Sabbath.

It is proposed to found a Soldiers' Home at Inverness for the benefit of the regiments quartered near the town. Some Christian workers in the place have also been entertaining the police.

Nearly 1500 patients in Glasgow of the poorer classes have been received during the year into the Mission Coast Home at Saltcoats. Much benefit has been derived from the treatment given in the home.

Rev. James Beattie sailed on Friday for Amoy, to which he has been appointed as missionary; Rev. William Hall, of Rutherglen, has accepted the charge of St. Thomas's Church, Dundee; Rev. George R. Maclennan has been appointed minister of Broughton-street Church, Edinburgh; Dr. Walter Elmslie has been ordained as medical missionary to Livingstonia.

During the past week the citizens of Glasgow have been greatly exercised over the Sabbath question. A motion was brought up at the Town Council to throw open on Sabbath the People's Palace and Museum, which have been erected on the Glasgow-green. The friends of the Lord's Day rallied in splendid form, and sent a deputation to the Town Council of 250 leading merchants and clergymen. Lord Inverclyde presented the petition, which had been prepared at a public meeting of Christian citizens. Dr. Marshall Lang made a telling speech in advocacy of the Sabbath Day, and was followed by Dr. Stalker, who delivered a short and powerful appeal. When this deputation withdrew, another one appeared before the Council representing the Labour interest, the Ward meetings, and the Trades Council. The Council, by a majority of forty-four to eighteen, decided not to open the museum on the Lord's Day.

Irish Notes.

DURING the year 176 girls have received the benefits of the Edgar Memorial Rescue Home, and have been helped to emigration or to situations.

The fund raised to commemorate the late Mrs. Alexander, wife of the Primate of Ireland, is to be devoted to building almshouses for the respectable aged poor of Londonderry.

Fisherwick-place Church, Belfast, of which Rev. Dr. Williamson is the pastor, has been sold for an assembly hall and Y.M.C.A. rooms. The site is the best in Belfast for these purposes.

Rev. A. Black, of Egremont, Liverpool, who received a call to Elmwood Presbyterian Church, Belfast, and also to Kilcreggan on the Firth of Clyde, has refused both, and has resolved to remain at Liverpool.

The Society for the Orphans of Presbyterian ministers and missionaries has received a bequest of £1000 from the late Mr. A. Pringle, of Inverness. The late Miss Broon, of Lurgan, has also left various Presbyterian charities £300.

The annual meeting of the Belfast branch of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association was held last week in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. of Belfast, and was largely attended. An encouraging report was presented, and the meeting was a most profitable one.

The Assembly's College students reach some of the most degraded characters in Belfast with the Gospel at the free Sunday morning breakfasts which are given during the winter. Rev. Henry Montgomery gives supper on Saturday evenings also to some 400 of the very poor of the city.

A conference with regard to the methods of work and other matters connected with the City Mission has been held in Belfast. The necessity for temporary halls in certain districts was considered, and it was decided to take steps to erect one of these in a locality where the want has been much felt.

Much regret is felt at the death of Rev. Thos. Armstrong, for many years Superintendent of the Connaught Schools and Orphanages at Ballina. Owing to his frequent visits across the Channel, Mr. Armstrong was nearly as well known in England as in this country, and those who knew him best loved and admired him most. He was an earnest and faithful worker.

AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

To see a masterpiece of painting on the walls of an Art Gallery, whilst a throng of conventional sight-seers is pressing past, is a very different matter to seeing it quietly, on the walls of some stately mansion, when there is time to sit down and drink in the artist's thought, or catch the different lights of early morning, of noon, or of the fading day.

Perhaps the enjoyment is the more complete when some devoted lover of the work stands beside, telling the story of its daily effect upon his mind, and indicating subtle beauties which had escaped the first superficial gaze.

It is with some such intention that this book is sent forth. That in the quiet of the sick-chamber, or of the prayer-closet, attention may be again concentrated on this inimitable Psalm; that the familiar words may be considered in the light of growing Christian experience: and that, perchance, some unnoticed beauty may be suggested by one who seldom comes to it without discerning some fresh reason to thank the Spirit of Inspiration, that He ever led the sweet minstrel of Scripture to indite the Shepherd Psalm.

THE BOOK WORLD.

MR. SPURGEON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

Catering for the many as well as for the few, Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster have done wisely by issuing The Standard Life of C. H. Spurgeon in monthly parts (1s.), as well as in four handsome volumes (10s. 6d. each). The first of each of these is now before the public. Glazed paper and large type combine to delight the eye, as the contents will the mind. The work will have a charm for young as well as old, so liberally is that which might be deemed "serious matter" intermingled with incidents, and illustrations galore.

The great preacher himself had ever a keen sense of humour, and many an amusing paragraph serves to carry home his graver thoughts. The present work is the outcome of "a plan long ago formed" by himself, so that, although he is no longer in our midst, we can traverse with him some of the scenes, from his early childhood onward, which went to make up that remarkable life, and which his own vigorous pen records with all the terseness that characterised his public utterances.

"Few men," he says, "would dare to read their own autobiography, if all their deeds were recorded in it....At times a forgetful self-complacency bids us exult in the virtue of our lives, but when faithful memory wakes, how instantly she dispels the illusion."

The first volume carries the reader through those years in which he received the first religious impressions that at later date developed into the tenacious convictions which helped to make him what he was. Forcibly he depicts the sense and horror of sin which cast him into despairing darkness; as he read his Bible its "threats seemed all to be written in capitals, its promises in small type," until the divine light broke, and he anchored in the harbour of rest to his soul.

From this period vol. i. brings us on to the commencement of his London pastorate in 1854. The compilation must be a heavy strain upon Mrs. Spurgeon, but with the diligent aid of her husband's long-trusted secretary, she hopes to complete the work within three years. Needless to add, it is full of timely application, warning, and exhortation; and we imagine it will afford material stimulus to many a preacher's ministry, as much from the inspiring example which it sets forth as from the useful store of thought with which its pages and pictures abound.

Nursery Tales Painting Book (Dean & Son, Fleet-street) is an excellent gift book for a young boy or girl showing some artistic faculty.

Poems. By Elizabeth Gifford. (2s. 6d. Eden Fisher & Co., 6, Clement's-lane, E.C.) These effusions in verse on a great variety of topics show considerable imaginative power and a pleasing gift of rhythm.

The Baptist Handbook for 1898 has made its appearance. (2s. Clarke & Co.) As usual, its denominational information, church statistics, and lists are full and carefully classified in order to facilitate reference.

Bible Gleanings from Corners of the Field. By Rev. W. E. Burroughs. (C. M. S. House.) A series of Scripture lessons which have appeared in the "C. M. S. Gleaner" during the year. They have, as might be expected, a missionary message.

In neat and compact form, Flowers in the Valley, by Rev. James Anderson, provides a daily promise, precept, and prayer for the year. It should prove to many a stimulus to devotion, as well as a comfort and a blessing. (1s. and 1s. 6d. Downie, 193, Main-street, Gorbals, Glasgow).

Rev. J. D. Kilburn has now supplemented his recent volume with a second, dealing mainly with his system as applied to the study of languages. Memory Training: Foreign Languages. (2s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.) Many, doubtless, will follow with interest and profit his development of the art of associating ideas in mastering the words, forms, and idioms of a new tongue.

Through Rosamond's Eyes. By Jessie Armstrong. (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.) A pleasing story of the seventeenth century, founded on a passage in Pepys's Diary, relating to the marriage of a girl and boy, pupils of Christ's Hospital. Charles II. and many historical characters are introduced. The religious persecution under the Act of Conformity gives a principal interest to the book.

Many will be grateful to Rev. C. G. Moore for preparing an English edition of that marvellous piece of autobiography, William Taylor, of California, Bishop of Africa. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The work is full of incident and deeply impressive. The sturdy old missionary has laboured in the Gospel for over fifty years; he preached in the Eastern States and Canada, "planted the Cross" in California, toiled in Australia, South Africa, India, and South America, and finished up with bold endeavours in Central Africa! This book almost conducts us round the globe. As we pass from one continent to another with the unwearied worker, we entertain a growing admiration of his devotion and vigour, and are led to praise God for the great things wrought by his servant. Altogether this is a model piece of missionary biography.

The good work which Rev. George Jackson is doing in Edinburgh has made him many friends, who will welcome from his pen a series of addresses on The Ten Commandments. (2s. 6d. Oliphant, Anderson and Ferrier.) The "Ten Words" are expounded in the light of the Gospel, not simply as "Do this and live," but rather "Because ye love Me, keep my commandments." The exhortions are fresh and forceful—searching, doubtless, in their application to the heart and conscience, but breathing of the fragance of Christ.

Music for the Soul. Daily readings for a year from the writings of Rev. Alex. Maclaren, D.D. (5s. Hodder & Stoughton.) In these daily readings we have wholesome food as well as music for the soul; earnest words to strengthen as well as to soothe. The readings are characterised by Dr. Maclaren's insight of great truths, expressed in his usual graceful diction. Rev. G. Coates has done good service in giving such a valuable selection of soul-stirring utterances on momentous subjects, arranged for daily meditation; they cannot fail to be a means of a grace to many.

True friendship is a choice thing. A useful study of its conditions and privileges is given in Friendship, by Rev. Hugh Black, M.A. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) After developing much that is of profit in connection with human friendship, the author finds his climax in the highest of all. "The human heart has ever craved for a relationship deeper and more lasting than any possible among men, undisturbed by change, unbroken by death, unclouded by doubt," and this, he shows, is to be found only in knowing the "Friend who sticketh closer than a brother."

Behind the Pardah, by Irene H. Barnes, tells the story of the work in India of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society. It gives a striking account of the women of India—their life and its sorrows, their spiritual needs, and the measures adopted to meet them. These pages, with numerous illustrations, depict the life of young and old in all grades of society, and afford many a glimpse of the Christian worker's experience, sometimes encouraging, and at other times disappointing, This book should do much to enlist sympathy with the work it describes. (3s. 6d. Marshall Brothers.)

The "Deeper Life" series has already contained several useful volumes on spiritual life. The latest of the series, The Christ Life, by Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A., which appeared last week (2s. 6d. Nisbet) will be welcomed as a clear exposition of the manifestation of Christ in a human soul. Says the author: "If we are to be Pauline Christians"..."If we are to be Johannine Christians"..."If we are to take our theology from Christ, we must believe in the Christ life." The conditions and privileges of this life are developed in the book, and illustrated effectively by a narration of the experiences of Gerard Tersteegen and Emmeline Duncan.

Christ and His Friends.—By A. F. Winnington Ingram, Rector of Bethnal Green, etc. (1s. 6d. Gardner, Darton, & Co.) The Lenten discourses grouped under the above simple title are sure to do good. They are plain, practical lessons drawn from the Gospel sketches of John, Simon Peter, Mary of Bethany, Mary Magdalene, and Thomas. They point out how various in expression, yet how essentially alike, was the love that all bore to their Saviour. The writer shows with no little skill how the Lord checked their faults and developed their graces; and is willing in like manner to transform all his disciples, if they respond to his will, into the higher character of his friends.

Discipleship. By Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. (1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) This small volume is Mr. Morgan's first venture into authorship, but its worth is not to be measured by its bulk. Each of the twelve chapters may be read in a few minutes, but the thought is so compressed that the book yields more real substance than many larger works. Christian discipleship is viewed in its relation to the varied spheres and aspects of human life, and is enforced in an intensely practical way. The style is terse and the reasoning simple; there is no profound or mystifying argument. We commend the little book as one that will be of immense help, especially to younger learners in the school of Christ.

Professor Ramsay's travels in the East have resulted in works of great importance for their bearing upon Christian antiquities and ecclesiastical beginnings. His wife, who accompanied him, did so to excellent purpose, as is evident from her very readable book, Everyday Life in Turkey (5s. Hodder & Stoughton). The chapters deal with life in town and country, among women and children; and an account is given of a day in a harem, also the diary of a journey. Mrs. Ramsay is an observant traveller, and has descriptive powers of no mean order. The book is certainly very entertaining, and should prove of real service to persons intending to visit Turkey, and desiring to avoid some of the inconveniences and disappointments incidental to travel in such a country.

In his little work, Success and Failure, Dr. Robert F. Horton gives us the following terse definition of the leading term: "Success lies not in achieving what you aim at, but in aiming at what you ought to achieve, and pressing forward, sure of achievement here, or if not here, hereafter." Having enlarged upon that kind of success which is in reality failure, Dr. Horton dwells upon reputed failure which is true success. He concludes with a chapter in admiration of this—the temporary failure of those who, having set their hearts on God, and far-off Divine events, are in this world dim-eyed from excess of distant light, and left-handed from preoccupation of the right hand in eternal things. This is a striking little book, characterised by pungency and force in the statement of great moral and religious truths. (1s. Isbister & Co.)

Sixteen thoughtful addresses, by leading Churchmen, on such vital subjects as the Knowledge of God, the Divinity of Christ, Sin, Atonement, the Kingdom of Heaven have been edited in a substantial volume entitled, The Faith of Centuries. Preface by Rev. W. E. Bowen. (7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co.) The pages cannot fail to interest Christian readers, especially as the writers are men of different schools of thought. Bishop Barry and Archdeacon Sinclair's essays on "Christ in History" and "the Kingdom of Heaven," are noteworthy. Canon R. B. Girdlestone deals with "Sin" and "Atonement," Canon Newbolt with "Temptation" and "the Punishment of Sin." The object of the book is to impress on that large class of religious people who cannot be described as Christians the leading facts and doctrines of Christ's religion, and to show that spite of minor differences the writers agree on essential points, and appeal to the same inspired book as authoritative. We trust the result may be definite acceptance on the part of many of Him to whom all the Scriptures testify.

A sterling temperance address, by J. Forbes Monorieff, is SAFE FOR SELF AND SAFE FOR ALL. (Scottish Temperance League, 108, Hope-street, Glasgow. 1s. 3d. per 100, post free.)

In a booklet, entitled THE MAN WHO SWALLOWED HIS DONKEY AND CART, Miss J. Smart, of Marden, tells the story of her good work among the hop-pickers in Kent. (3d. F. Williams, 6, Colonnade, Hawkhurst.)

RECREATION FROM THE CHRISTIAN STANDPOINT. By J. Adams Rawlings. (3d. C. H. Kelly.) A healthful address on matters of great interest to young people. The subject is dealt with in a manly and sensible way.

GOD'S OVERSHADOWINGS. By E. Trotter. (R. J. Masters. 6d. per dozen.) The imagery of the shadow as a place of refuge and refreshment is one familiar to Oriental thought, and the author of the booklet makes practical use of it.

WOMAN'S WORK FOR TEMPERANCE DURING THE VICTORIAN ERA. A paper read by Miss M. E. Docwra at the autumn meetings of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, and now republished in book form. May be had at the office of the Union, 4, Ludgate-hill, E.C. (Price 3d.)

WHAT IS REPENTANCE TOWARD GOD? The letter with this title which appeared in our pages recently has been printed in leaflet form, and a small packet of the same may be had freely for distribution on application by post to James Van Sommer, Esq., "Cuffnells," Wimbledon Common.

A lecture on ARCHBISHOP CRANMER, which Canon McCormick, of Highbury, delivered in St. Margaret's, Westminster in 1895, has been published by request, (2d. "Home Words" Office.) The times call for many such re-statements of well-known facts, and to increased vigilance in resisting the inroads of Romanism.

A lecture on our Protestant rights, recently delivered at Devizes by Rev. J. M. Sangar, has been published under the stirring title of NO SURRENDER. The pages are a forceful indictment of political and ecclesiastical trifling with the Protestant constitution of this country and the liberties secured thereby. We trust the booklet will have a large circulation among readers who will lay its lessons to heart. (1d. W. Wileman.)

IS THERE A ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH? is the first of a series of tracts by Miss M. F. Cusack, called "Straws" in allusion to the adage "A straw shows how the wind blows." These pages discuss the doctrine of intention, and prove, from Roman Catholic sources, that there is not a Roman Catholic Church, and that no Roman Catholic can be sure of his eternal salvation, even if he complies with all the rules of his Church, for no one can be sure that the priest from whom he receives the sacraments is really a priest! (2d., 12 copies for 1s. 6d., post free. London: Marshall, Russell & Co.; or from the Author, Castle Court, Boscombe, Bournemouth.)

The New French Protestant Review, La Foi et la Vie, has made an excellent beginning. It is to appear fortnightly, and to include (in its earlier pages) a religious study, a literary or moral study, and an adaptation from foreign literature; and (in its second part) notes on passing events and opinion, letters to different classes of people, and other features. The first number is full of good things, every page affording evidence of sincere conviction and high purpose on the part of the management. The directing editor is M. B. Couve, and the office 8, Rue d'Alsace, Saint-Germain-en-Saye, Seine-et-Oise. The subscription outside France is 12 francs per annum.

AMONG THE CHURCHES.

Church of England.

Rev. H. J. R. Marston will commence his ministry at Belgrave Chapel on Sunday next.

The new extension of the Clare College Mission, Abbeyfield-road, Rotherhithe, was opened on Thursday last.

Rev. E. G. Ireland has resigned an incumbency in the Reformed Episcopal Church, and joined the Established Church.

The Bishop of London held a special service at Fulham Palace for the admission of twenty workingmen trained by the Church Army as evangelists.

The sum of £2000 has been given by an anonymous donor toward the fund for the erection of a new church for the parish of St. Anne's, Hindsford, Atherton.

Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, and Mrs. Penn-Lewis, assisted by several members of Headquarters Staff, conducted a quiet day for Church Army workers, at the Training Home Chapel, last Monday.

The Bishop of Liverpool has issued an invitation to all the clergy whom he has ordained to meet him on January 20 for "mutual edification, devotion, and brotherly intercourse." An address will be delivered by Dr. Handley Moule.

Arrangements are in progress for the celebration of the bi-centenary of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. It is proposed to hold a special service at St. Paul's Cathedral in March and similar services in Anglican cathedrals throughout the world simultaneously.

A brother of the Bishop of Ripon, Rev. Archdeacon Boyd Carpenter, of St. George's, Bloomsbury, has been appointed Chaplain-in-Ordinary to the Queen. A man of liberal views, he is an eloquent preacher and an indefatigable worker. Amongst the young men of his parish he is very popular.

Bishop Mitchinson, writing in reference to the Church Army Van Mission in his parish, says: "The mission was zealously worked, and has proved fruitful in many good results. The interest and enthusiasm of the evangelist-in-charge in his work is beyond all praise, and his loyalty to the Church and to me, while working in my parish, unimpeachable."

Rev. G. H. Parsons, speaking at a C.M.S. meeting in Calcutta recently, pointed out that into Nepal no missionary is allowed to enter, and Bhotan is still practically closed. These two states bar the way into Tibet, another closed country, for 700 miles. In India itself there are many native States which have never heard the Gospel, including Bhopal, with 2,000,000 Mohammedans, and Kutch, with a population as large as that of Uganda.

Congregational.

Mr. Evan Spicer is now on his way home from Madagascar.

The fourth anniversary of the church at Purley has been celebrated.

Dr. Berry has had a warm welcome on his return home from the States.

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson has gone from Mauritius to South Africa.

Rev. J. H. Jowett has been preaching at Gateshead to crowded audiences.

A new course of Merchant Lectures will be commenced on Jan. 11, in the Memorial Hall, E.C., by Rev. W. Hardy Harwood, of Highbury.

Mr. D. Marston, the agent of the Cumberland Band of Hope Union, has been appointed to take charge of the Knot Mill Hall Mission, Deansgate, Manchester, under the control of the Manchester and Salford Congregational Board.

At Eccleston-square Church, S.W., a handsome memorial tablet to Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens, pastor for twenty-six years, was unveiled last Thursday in the presence of a large audience. Rev. Theodore Hitchens presided as the eldest son of the deceased and also as pastor of the church. Speeches referring to Dr. Hitchens' high character and influential work were delivered by Revs. Dr. MacEwan, Professor Redford, Edward H. Jones, P. J. Turquand, and Philip Colborne.

Calls.—Rev. J. H. Harley, of St. Neots, to Bedford Chapel, Camden Town; Rev. G. T. Allen, to Newnham, Glos.; Mr. T. S. Phillips, to Risca; Mr. W. C. Williams, to Brynmawr; Rev. E. W. Lewis, of Birkenhead, to Swan Hill, Shrewsbury.

Resignations.—Rev. P. Howells, of Jerusalem Chapel, Blaenau Festiniog; Rev. H. Peckover, of Zion Chapel, Toronto.

Baptist.

At the 244th anniversary of the Stalham Chapel Judge Willis was present, and spoke heartily.

The 200th anniversary of the Baptists in Wellington, Som., has been observed with considerable interest.

Miss Jennie Beckingsale, of Cheltenham, has been accepted by the Zenana Society for work in North China.

A series of interesting services have been held to celebrate the bi-centenary of College-street Chapel, Northampton.

Rev. R. H. and Mrs. Kirkland have returned home from the Congo, in consequence of the very serious illness of Mrs. Kirkland.

The address at the New Year's Day prayer meeting, to be held at the Mission House, in Furnival-street, will be given by Rev. George Kerry, the late Indian Secretary.

The Metropolitan Tabernacle, the largest in Great Britain, has 4,487 members. There are no less than 27 Sunday-schools attached, with 693 teachers and 8830 scholars.

Rev. G. Wainwright, late of Bournemouth, writes from Perth, Tasmania:—"My health seems to be almost, if not entirely, restored. I preach every Sunday and suffer no evil consequences from it."

Rev. G. W. Humphreys receives the congratulations of the Free Churches on the completion of his thirty-five years' pastorate at Wellington. The influence for good of his earnest ministry no tongue can tell.

Mr. Thomas Noel Honeybund, a member of the Voluntary Preachers' Union of the West Midland Baptist Association, has accepted an invitation from Zion Baptist Church, Newhall-street, Birmingham, to conduct services for three months.

At Ilderton-road, South Bermondsey, Pastor J. E. Howe baptized five candidates on Wednesday last. Ten others, it is expected, will be baptized at the watch-night service. Saturday, January 1, is Thanksgiving Day. On behalf of the building fund an effort is being made to raise £150.

A biography of the wife of Dr. Marshman is being prepared. Hannah Marshman may be termed the first woman missionary of modern times, having spent forty-eight years in India. She was in many ways the life and soul of the "Serampore Brotherhood," the chief members of which were Marshman, Carey, and Ward.

The ordination of Mr. Charles Fairclough for mission work in China took place last week at Moss Side, Manchester. The charge to the missionary was given by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and addresses were given by Mr. C. T. Studd, Mr. W. B. Sloan, and Rev. Arnold Streuli, the pastor. Mr. Fairclough will be specially supported by the Christian Endeavour Society connected with the church.

The annual statistics of the churches comprised in the Baptist Union of Great Britain, and officially returned to Rev. Dr. Booth, editor of the denominational "Handbook," give a total of 3842 places of worship (an increase of 20), while the membership is given at 364,779, as compared with 360,112, a net increase of 4667. The Sunday-schools report an increase of 1079 teachers and 8390 scholars, the totals being 51,800 teachers and 527,616 scholars. There are 2006 ministers holding pastorates, and 5021 local preachers recognised by their county associations, while in the colonial and foreign fields 147 ordained missionaries are labouring under the auspices of the Baptist Missionary Society. The statistics for the whole world give 50,978 churches, 33,236 pastors and missionaries, 4,705,953 members, and 2,251,022 scholars. Seven years ago the churches numbered 42,650, and their membership 3,786,603.

Calls.—Rev. A. Bremner, of Dumfries, to Lossiemouth; Rev. Walter Wall, of Ellington, Ramsgate, to Bradninch; Rev. F. W. Dunster, of Upwell, to Bombay.

Methodist.

A new chapel is being built in East Dulwich.

Most successful services have been held in Stroud in aid of the London Mission.

A new chapel has been opened in the mining village of Goldthorpe, near Mexborough.

Evangelistic services have been conducted at Mount Zion Chapel, Wolverhampton, by Mr. A. Booth, late of Manchester Central Hall Mission.

Writing from South Australia, Rev. W. F. James says: "The movement towards organic union of Methodism quietly proceeds in the Antipodean Colonies."

A crowded missionary meeting has been held in the Market Hall at North Tawton, when Rev. T. G. and Mrs. Vanstone, late of Yunan, China, gave addresses.

A week of special services for the deepening of spiritual life has been held at St. Paul's, Leicester. A new junior Society of Christian Endeavour has been formed.

The re-opening of Old Lambeth Chapel has proved a success, and Mr. Cooke has succeeded in taking with him to the old chapel a goodly proportion of the congregation he had gathered in the Canterbury Music Hall.

On Sunday special services were held at the Grove Mission, Southwark, and splendidly attended, the preachers being Mr. C. C. Sutch and Rev. A. H. Bestall, from Burmah. On Monday a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. R. K. Causton, M.P., supported by Lady Roxborough, Rev. John Fletcher, and a host of past and present friends.

Presbyterian.

The bi-centenary of John Knox Church, Newcastle, was held last week.

The debt on Leytonstone Church has this year been reduced by £1447.

Rev. James Beattie, the new missionary to Amoy, has sailed in the s.s. Oceana.

Efforts are being made to secure a site for the erection of a church in Devonport, in the neighbourhood of the Dockyard.

The energetic young minister at Westbourne-grove, Rev. G. A. Johnstone Ross, has been laid aside, and is now resting, but hopes to resume work next week.

The members of the congregation worshipping at the Moseley Institute, Birmingham, have decided to build a church at the corner of Alcester and Chantry-roads.

Calls.—Rev. A. C. Welch, of Helensburgh, to Belhaven, Glasgow; Rev. John M'Kee, of Dromara, to Wishaw; Rev. W. D. U. Sutherland, Campbeltown, to Saltcoats Free Church; Rev. M. D. MacGilvray, Glasgow, to Broughton Ferry East; Rev. W. N. Munro, to Muckairn.

Fallen Asleep.

At his residence in Acre Lane, Brixton, Rev. George Eastman, for nearly 40 years rector of Draycot Foliat, Wilts, and well-known in Streatham and Clapham for twenty years as incumbent of St. Stephen's, Clapham Park.—At the Vicarage, Stone, Falmouth, on 14th inst., Rev. C. Cripps, aged seventy-eight, for 49 years vicar of the parish.—In London, on 22nd inst., Mr. Shilton Collin, aged forty-six, a well-known temperance reformer, formerly of Liverpool and latterly of London. In the metropolis his interest in temperance and social reform continued undiminished, and he associated himself with Mrs. Ormiston Chant in her famous crusade.—At Hulme, on 17th inst., Rev. Robert Birley, of St. Phillip's.—At Sydenham, on 18th inst., Mr. F. W. Amsden, aged seventy-one, a prominent worker in Upper Norwood Congregational Chapel.—At Samnah, Mont., Rev. R. O. Evans, a faithful and useful Baptist minister.—At Ripley, aged 81, Mr. David Wilkinson, an earnest preacher of the Gospel.—At Cloughfold, Mr. Henry Scholfield, aged fifty-six, a leader in local work.—At Staplehurst, Mr. Thomas Chapman, aged eighty, a useful helper.—At Wisbech, aged 58, Mr. W. Hutchinson, greatly respected as an earnest Christian and a leading citizen.—At Rochdale, Mr. Henry Matthews, aged fifty-eight, an energetic worker in church, mission, and Sunday-school.—At King's Lynn, Mr. Alfred S. Hart, who was for many years pastor at Wiggenhall, and had charge of branches at Stow Bridge and St. German's.—At Scarborough, suddenly, on 17th inst., Mr. Frank Ness, aged seventy-six, one of the most prominent local leaders, and an earnest Christian.—At Stainland, Halifax, on 18th inst., Mr. Edward Walker, aged seventy-two, a busy worker among the Methodists.—At Maes-yr-haf, Pencoed, Glam., on 18th inst., Rev. E. Meyler, for twenty-five years pastor of the churches at Millin Cross and Burnett's Hill, Pemb.—At Brighton House, Aberystwyth, Rev. John Williams, who entered the ministry in 1860; he was an ardent total abstainer, and for some years owned and edited two Welsh periodicals.—At Belfast, Mr. Joseph Anderson, an earnest Christian worker, and uncle of the Right Hon. Thos. A. Dickson, and father of Rev. Robert Anderson, of Castlewellan.—At Belfast, Mrs. Robertson, the well-known manageress of Lombard Café Irish Temperance League.—At Charlottetown, Prince Edward's Island, Rev. Wm. Scott, Presbyterian minister, formerly of co. Down, aged seventy-three years.

Barcelona Protestant Hospital.—The Lord has supplied all our needs, so that we close the year with praise to Him and a sum in hand to begin the work in the new year. But I would plead for the aged poor, for whom we have no funds, and some of which have been obliged to seek the shelter of the R. C. Almshouses, and become R. C. again. A small home for them is sorely needed.

Anna von Mielecka,

Bridgemead, Englefield Green, Surrey.

DONATIONS

Received by Messrs. Morgan and Scott to Monday, December 27, 1897.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or Post Office Orders, not by stamps.

 Will donors oblige by stating explicitly and fully the titles of the institutions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Further correspondence will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that the Donation List is made up for the Printers on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number of The Christian.

 Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders should be made payable to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., and crossed "City Bank"; this will effectually prevent loss.

☞ Donors are particularly requested to fill in "Morgan and Scott" on Postal Orders, in accordance with the Post Office regulations.
